In Tokyo and its suburbs, according to reports from Dr. William Axling, 119,208 persons are known to have been killed, 33,984 wounded, and 17,366 are reported as missing. The homeless in that city number 638,525.

The Oil Creek Association Baptist Association assembled in annual session at Bradford, Pa., reaffirmed its belief in the scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the Word of God and the only rule of faith and practice, declaring also loyalty to the historic Baptist interpretation as requiring baptism by immersion on a profession of personal faith in Jesus Christ as a prerequisite for membership in a Baptist church.

The large auditorium of the North Church, Camden, N. J., was crowded to hear the Armistice Day address by Hon. Henry C. Wallace, secretary of agriculture and a member of the president's cabinet. He said in the course of his address: "If wars ever stop it will be because of the impulses born in just such meetings as this. It is a good thing for nations to get together and agree not to fight. It is splendid for them to set up courts to settle disputes. But wars will stop only when the impulse for war is crowded out of men's hearts by better impulses . . . The only way to end war is the way Christ taught . . . I am surprised to find this note sounded by so many in Washington, men who are not known as church people but who have lived through the experience of these years and realize it is the only way."

"A Call to Arms" is the militant title of a fifty-page booklet issued by the executive committee of the Baptist Bible Union of America. The first matter of importance is the call for two great mass meetings, the first in New York, Dec. 2-7, and the second in Minneapolis soon after the first of the year. We quote from the document. "The executive committee, therefore, hereby announces its program for the year. It desires to put the issue fairly and frankly before the Baptists of America. . . We have decided that the next Northern Baptist Convention shall be a Mount Carmel convention, when it shall be impossible for any one longer to halt between two opinions. Notice is therefore given that at the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention the Baptist Bible Union members who are members of the convention will submit the revised form of the New Hampshire confession of faith, as adopted by the Baptist Bible Union, to the Northern Baptist Convention for adoption or rejection." This part of the program of the Milwaukee convention seems to be fixed.

Books

"SOME books are lies frae end to end,
And some great lies were never penned,
E'en ministers hae been kenned
In holy rapture
A rousing whid at times to vend,
And nail 't wi' scripture."

This human touch from the poems of Robert Burns finds a ready response in the minds and hearts of all who know anything about books and ministers. The new crop of books on the market is almost equal in quality to a fresh crop of babies, and, like babies, some books are well-born, some ill-born and some born out of due time. A book after all is but the reflection of the pride, the prejudice, the intelligence, the environment, the soul of the man or woman bringing it into existence. This holds for religious books as well as for books in general. Every book goes back of itself to its author and bears the likeness of its author. The mortality among books is high, but not too high. If certain men and women cannot be prevented from writing and publishing books it is just as well that many books, like many babies in China, die early. Here is where the fittest only should survive. There is no place in society for an unfit book, and no effort should be put forth to make it fit. Let it die.

And for the books that live only a short time and fulfill their mission of culture, we should not unduly mourn. Most of the text books on scientific subjects used in schools and colleges are of this variety. Hardly a text book on science in use ten years ago is current today. With new discoveries of truth old books pass away. This fact should calm the nerves of some people who get excited about science and the Bible. A book on science should not be mentioned on the same terms with the Bible, because the scientific book is an evanescent thing while the Bible is eternal. Every text book in our colleges changes every few years, but the Bible is perennial. The same can be said of religious books. Every minister if he grows must reorganize his library frequently by discarding the books that have outlived their usefulness, keeping those that are of permanent value, and adding from time to time as his literary taste and religious needs may require, books with the new atmosphere and outlook.

Books for the household should be as carefully chosen as playmates for our children. This is a difficult task in view of the free public libraries of every city and town and hamlet in which almost everything may be found from the safe to the salacious. But after all, the virile, well-written book with wholesome atmosphere and far horizon and natural beauty of color and perspective has an appeal to normal young people which no salacious literature can overcome. Books in the household should be to us like friends and guests. There is the occasional book like the occasional guest who sits at the family table for a meal and enriches the fellowship of the family with his personality and experience, and then is gone leaving behind him the fragrance of a pleasant memory. And then there are the true friends who are almost members of the family. We could not keep house without them. The great books in the family library take their place alongside of these true friends—the books that never grow up for the juveniles, the books that have inspired and will continue to inspire generations of young men and women, the books to which the more mature always turn for refreshment. And among these books is that unfailing well of water springing up into eternal life—the Bible.

A GREAT dramatist said in our presence the other day that he never read the Bible in his life until a few years ago because he thought it was a book on religion, and as he was not particularly interested in religion he was therefore not interested in the Bible. Persuaded by a friend to read the book he spent four months at it and found to his amazement and delight that it was a book full of real human interest and dramatic power. The reading of the book changed his whole attitude of mind and he was seized with a passion to dramatize some of the inspiration received from its inspired words. The drama thus produced is tremendous in its Christian appeal to the multitudes who have seen it. But the point I am making is that wonderful as the Bible may be as the crown of all literature it must be read through with care as any other worthy book is read if its power is to be released in our lives. This is not a plea for the study of the Bible. It is the intelligent reading of the book that is most needed. Like the dramatist, too many good people look upon the Bible as a book on religion, and as mothers not interested in sports turn the sports page of the paper over to husband or son, they turn the Bible over to the preachers. The Bible, however, is not primarily a book on religion except as religion is interwoven with every human experience. If the proper study of mankind is man there is no better place to conduct this study than in the sustained and reverent and intelligent reading of the Bible because the Bible is mankind at his worst and at his best with God's loving purpose of redemption running through it all and heading up in Jesus Christ.

An Appreciation

ON his own responsibility and without the knowledge or consent of his colleague, the new co-editor of THE BAPTIST, inspired by the spirit of Thanksgiving, wishes to express for himself and for the constituency, so far as he may, sincere and hearty appreciation of the spirit, the ability and service of Mr. Killam in his management of THE BAPTIST since the paper became the property of the denomination.

For nearly four years the entire business management of the paper, and for more than a year of that time the editorship also have been in his hands. His business ability is of such a high order that in the management of the paper he has saved thousands of dollars to the denomination without cheapening the paper either in its mechanical form or news value. Holding strictly to his idea that THE BAPTIST is essentially a newspaper and not a magazine or journal of literature, he has given the denomination during his term of editorship a readable and high-class religious newspaper. No one will ever fully appreciate the burdens carried when through storm and stress of sickness and bereavement in his family and the burning down of his house with the consequent discomfort and loss, he gave the Baptists from week to week a journal optimistic in spirit, cheerful in tone and courageous in every line. Such was the vision and heroism of the man as he passed through the valley and shadow of death in the loss of his companion that it called forth the warmest words of commendation from some of the best religious journalists in America.

For denominational subsidies Mr. Killam has a wholesome fear. For more than a year $15,000 has been in the budget of the denomination against which the editor and business manager of THE BAPTIST could have drawn. But not a penny of that subsidy has been touched. The paper has run on its own resources, and while other religious papers were piling up a deficit THE BAPTIST was building up a small surplus and reserve. Of course this was done at considerable sacrifice to the managing editor, but he never whined or sought for sympathy. While sitting up late and getting up early and performing the task of two men, he worked with all the enthusiasm of play and with all the romance of travel.

Again and again Mr. Killam, pressed to accept executive positions with certain big business concerns at twice the salary paid by THE BAPTIST, has modestly preferred to remain in direct Christian service even at great economic sacrifice. No one can be long in the office of THE BAPTIST without sensing the morale and seeing the efficiency of the assistant force with which the managing editor has surrounded himself.

The Northern Baptist Convention has in Mr. Killam a real leader. He is frankly outspoken but always brotherly; thoroughly democratic but never superficial; eagerly industrious to the last degree, but never too busy to be hospitable and friendly. He is the soul of strictest honesty bound up in charity that suffers long and is kind. He has taken the co-editor in on the ground floor and placed at his disposal every ounce of his splendid editorial resources. If the paper begins to show any marks of improvement, especially in its fine news features, in the coming weeks the readers may with justice to everybody concerned give the credit to Mr. Killam.

He Finished His Task

WE call attention to the display advertisement on another page in which three crosses appear on a barren hill top. The picture speaks for itself, and it is intended to speak for the General Board of Promotion in the heroic endeavor to complete the New World Movement by April 30, 1924, with honor.

It is with some hesitancy that we speak of his task finished on the cross and the unfinished task of Northern Baptists in the same connection. His task was unique and incomparable when he wrought out redemption for mankind on Calvary. The points of similarity or, rather, suggestion between his task and ours is not in the content of the task so much as it is in its spirit.

He finished his task despite the protest of the disciples against his method of completing it, and in the face of a constituency disrupted by strife, and against his own natural shrinking from all the ugly passions that would compass his death. He rebuked Peter when that disciple in ignorance sought to bar the way to the cross, he set his face to go to Jerusalem and crucifixion when his disciples were preoccupied with their desire for place and power, he did not hesitate to push on to the glorious end though the way led through Gethsemane.

If the task to which the Northern Baptist Convention set itself in 1919 is to be finished in 1924, the invincible spirit, the indomitable purpose and the modest courage of Jesus must possess our people in such a degree as shall make failure impossible. No criticism should dissuade us, no indifference should disgust us, no sacrifice involved should dishearten us. By looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, by sharing his anticipatory joy, by following him in the courage and calmness with which he met all the shameful incidents involved in his sublime sacrifice. we can finish our task as he finished his task.

Steel and Idols

"HERE the present-day pagan breaks out that all this talk of the moralization of industry has to give way before actual facts themselves, that modern industry is an intricate science and that its problems cannot be settled by a lot of meddling preachers who have never been inside a mine or a mill," says Bishop Francis J. McConnell in the Christian Century. "Some years ago an irritated industrialist exclaimed that no one had a right to an opinion on the reform of the steel business who did not know steel. There is a sad confusion here. Preachers are not trying to discuss steel in technical terms, but they have a right to discuss steel or anything else in its human and social consequences. When the industrialist talks thus about the primacy of facts we are always fairly sure what kind of facts he has in mind. He is thinking of industrial facts, for there are human facts in industry just as truly as there are material facts. 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians,' shouted the pagans of old. What they really meant was that great is the business which comes out of the worship of Diana. What the fact-worshipers of old would have said if they had been approached would have been that if the making of idols is stopped wages would be stopped, and the widows and orphans who make profits out of idol manufacture will starve. They would have said also that nobody should make suggestions about the idol business who doesn't understand idols, who doesn't realize the necessary part that idol worship plays in the Ephesus type of community, who doesn't see how idol-making is interwoven into all the industrial life of Ephesus, who is not willing to trust to the regular processes of education first to call for a better type of idol in Ephesus, and after that gradually to do away with idols. It would not have been likely that any Ephesian idol-maker would have put the doing away with idols within his own lifetime.

"Of course I know that a great modern business which furnishes food and clothes to millions is different from an idol business. The world is indeed dependent on food and garment production upon a colossal scale. We can get along without idols but not without meat and clothes. All the more reason, then, why the meat or clothing producer should hold himself to a high ideal of Christian service. The instant he begins to think of things indispensable to human life merely in terms of what he is to get out of them that instant he sinks into heathenism. To the degree in which he allows the merely material, technical side of the production of goods for men, women and children to outweigh the larger human welfare of men, women and children, to that degree he falls from Christianity into paganism."

News and Propaganda

CHARLES W. WOOD in a recent issue of the World Tomorrow considers that the big successful dailies are not newspapers, but entertainment bureaus and the best bureau is the most successful "newspaper." The lack of understanding of the public mind rather than any conscious desire to be unfair, is responsible for the condition of the newspapers. "It is true that they are not fair. It is true that they represent special interests. It is true that they are afraid to tell all they know about certain situations. But all this is as true of the labor press, the radical press and the revolutionary press as it is of the great 'organs of privilege.' The New York socialists have sent at least a hundred men to Congress—before election. The workers have won every strike—before they had to give up. The attendance at every mass-meeting has generally been from three to six times what it actually was. More significant yet, the friends of the Russian revolution have vied with its enemies in circulating downright lies about it. This was all propaganda, not news, but it was propaganda which defeated its own aim, as propaganda is very apt to do. The most violent enemies of the revolution today are those who were kept in ignorance of its actual progress and fell in love with one of these radical realizations."

"News," say Mr. Wood, "is the story of what life does under its ever-changing conditions and limitations. Its great value is that it enables human beings to understand its mysteries and to govern their creative efforts accordingly."

Whose Business Is It?

WHOSE business is it that 1,060,858 boys and girls are robbed of their rights in the United States? Who bears responsibility in this matter? Surely, it is the concern of all high-minded Americans, but also of every one who uses the products of factories, canneries, collieries, cotton plantations, oyster beds and many other fields where these little hands do the labor. Very often a fine dinner is enjoyed with never a thought that some child's hands, never given the opportunity to play, shucked the oysters and snapped off the heads of the shrimps used in the salad and, in some stuffy home, shelled the nuts.

What can be done to liberate a million child laborers in the United States? If the nation is not to be half-slave and half-free in this matter, the only course now open is an enabling amendment to the Constitution which will permit Congress actually to do what it has twice endeavored to do. Those in favor of emancipating the children—if they will, can secure the necessary action in the sixty-eighth Congress.

Is the Trend of Literature toward Religion?

No thoughtful Christian, and least of all a Christian minister, will look to contemporary literature either for the substance or the evidences of his gospel

By Charles W. Gilkey

THE question recalls a beautiful story told of A. J. Balfour in his native Scotland. As all the world knows, Mr. Balfour has attained an eminence in the philosophical thought of his generation hardly less than his world-wide fame as a statesman. Like every real golfer, however, he is doubtless as sensitive to his standing on the links as to his reputation in either philosophy or diplomacy. He was once playing golf over a Scotch course with a caddy who did not know who his distinguished player was. Finding his ball in a very difficult lie, Mr. Balfour asked the caddy's advice, which was given with that professional air and skill for which Scotch caddies are famous. The result was notable; the ball arched perfectly to the green and dropped within easy distance of the hole. Turning to the caddy with a smile of satisfaction, Mr. Balfour remarked that the advice had certainly proved itself good. "Yes," said the caddy, "and if one of us, sir, only had my brains and your strength, what a golfer he would be!"

Three Men Required

To give an adequate answer to the question of this article would similarly require the brains of one man, the time of another, and the well-poised perspective of yet a third. No parish minister that is keeping within sight of the multiplying demands and duties of the modern ministry can have time enough at his disposal for reading to speak with authority on the trend of modern literature; least of all can the present writer. And even if one's first-hand acquaintance with the flood of contemporary production in prose and verse were sufficient to justify an attempted answer, it would still remain a fair question as to whether any one mind and heart has the breadth and depth of understanding necessary to interpret fairly the direction of the main current of modern literature.

Every visitor to Niagara Falls who has taken the gorge ride up and down the miles of river bank below the falls, will recall vividly the strange movements of the water long after it has flung itself over the great precipice. Now it is tossed into rough white fury in the rapids; now it slides smooth and green and deep in the quiet of a steady current; now from its mysterious depths there eddies up a great, twisting whirlpool, to circle on for a distance within the general stream, and then to disappear again below the surface. So has it been with the mind and heart of our troubled post-war time. Flung suddenly over the cataclysm of the Great War, the subsequent movement of its thought and life, especially as manifested in its literature, is likely to continue for many years as confused and rapid, as full of eddies and cross-currents, as the Niagara River below the falls.

Most thoughtful persons are no doubt wondering, five years after the Armistice, whether we did not expect altogether too much from the Great War; and many of us are asking now whether war can in the nature of things ever give us what we so fondly hoped and perhaps foolishly expected in 1917-18. There was to be a new world after the war; on that our leaders and our own expectant hopes were confidently agreed. But he who looks abroad in 1923, either upon the state of the world or the minds and hearts of men, will find many temptations to the possibly premature conclusion that the world has been worsened rather than bettered by those four terrible years. The old Romans had a proverb that in war the conquered frequently imposed their manners and customs on the victors. He who studies the contemporary manifestations of the militaristic mind and attitude will often find himself wondering whether this ancient proverb has not again proved itself true before our eyes. Similarly the churches were counting confidently upon a religious revival to follow the war; but whatever the hopeful aspects of religious life and work in these last five years, signs of a spiritual awakening are hardly prominent among them. The war was likewise to give us a larger and better supply of men for the ministry out of the ranks of those who had learned in the trenches and camps a deeper view of life; but perhaps the mood of disillusionment, rather than of insight, has actually characterized the world's returning soldiers. Certain it is that the scanty stream of supply for the prophetic office has not received conspicuous reinforcement in the last decade.

Effects of War

One notes at once the same marked contrast between high expectation and small result in the effect of the war on literature, especially in its relation to religion. In 1912 signs of the promise of a coming Christ-age in literature were hopefully described by a certain Mr. Mosher, and he gathered considerable evidence in support of that expectation. Those of us who remember our first reading of Martha Foote Crow's "Christ in the Poetry of Today," published in 1917, and the apparently justified claim of its preface that the poetry of the twentieth century was more and more concerning itself with Jesus, will doubtless have wondered whether that marked eddy in the stream has not completely disappeared below the surface again in the confused movement of post-war poetry. We all hailed "Mr. Britling" as similar evidence that the war-time novel was concerning itself anew with the deeper hopes and faiths of religion, and guiding the minds and hearts of an overstrained generation toward personal experience of its vitality and power. But it would appear now that not only the versatile Mr. Wells, but even more the characteristic modern novel, has passed rapidly on to decidedly other preoccupations than those of personal and social religion. Nor is it only the modern novel that has thus failed to fulfill the great expectations of those far-away war-time days. Contemporary social thinking and writing is by no means overweighted on the side of religion. That very uneven but interesting collaboration of our younger intellectuals entitled "Civilization in the United States" contained no chapter on religion and very little concern about it. Graham Wallas concluded his last book, "Our Social Heritage," with the serious question whether Christianity is destined to survive at all, at least as a creative factor in modern civilization. And now Mary Austin in a recent number of the Century inclines to answer the question "Do we need a new religion?" in the affirmative.

The Gospel Direct From Christ

It will not do, therefore, to conclude hastily from war-time eddies and pre-war hopes, that the trend of modern literature is toward religion. But it is worth-while, nevertheless, for every generation to reexamine the relationships between its literary tendencies and its religious life. A British religious leader who has recently spent some little time among us said in print, on his return, that his chief disappointment in American religious life was in its intellectual aspect. He had hoped and expected to find more contacts between the nation's best thinking and its deepest faiths. No thoughtful Christian, and least of all a Christian minister, will look to contemporary literature either for the substance or for the evidences of his gospel. The gospel comes to us, as it has come to every generation of Christians, direct from Jesus Christ as we learn of him through the New Testament, illuminated for us by the light of the living Spirit within our own hearts. But that gospel has to be continually restated in terms that will make it intelligible and convincing to the mind and heart and conscience of each generation. We ministers particularly need to remember that nothing ever becomes a "gospel"—good news that is—until it relates itself as a revealed answer and discovered supply to the deeper needs of men. It may continue to be as true in our time as in every previous age; but if it is not brought to bear directly on the moral and spiritual needs of which our generation is most conscious, our contemporaries will not realize it as a "gospel," and may hardly stop to listen to it at all. A modern preacher may pound his pulpit and shout himself hoarse with the insistence that what our age needs is "conviction of sin"; but if there is not in the hearts of his hearers and in the life of his time that spiritual sensitiveness and sense of shortcoming which our grandfathers so keenly felt, his message will hardly find answering echo in their hearts, nor will they then receive it as a "gospel." We preachers must remember that according to the New Testament it is the unseen working of the divine Spirit, rather than the exhortations of men, that "convicts the world of sin." But though our age be not characterized, as Dean W. L. Sperry has so strikingly pointed out in one of the inimitable essays of his "Disciplines of Liberty," by the traditional sense of sin, it is acutely conscious of its spiritual need at other points. The preacher who can bring it a gospel of salvation from its characteristic tendency to worry about the unknown future, its deepening racial and social cleavage, its sense of disillusionment and threatening despair, will not lack for eager hearing. It is here that the study of contemporary literature becomes of great value both to the Christian minister and the thoughtful Christian layman. It does not give him his gospel: but it does reveal to him the mind and heart of his generation, the needs of which that generation is most conscious, and the nearest points of contact between those needs and the eternal gospel of Christ. It will help him to master the vocabulary in which that eternal gospel must be restated if the minds of contemporary men are to understand it afresh, and their hearts are to respond to its perennial power. The Christian of today will keep in touch with contemporary literature in order that he may better understand the people and the generation whom he seeks to help, and may make more real to them the message which Christ has given him.

Day of Fleeting Vision

What now, from this point of view, are the characteristics of the mind and heart of our age that stand out most clearly in its current literature? Secretary Hughes, speaking recently at Brown University, has put into words that have found wide attention one marked characteristic of modern literature, as well as of modern life. "It is the day of the fleeting vision. Concentration, thoroughness, the quiet reflection that ripens judgment, are more difficult than ever." Not only the work of the modern public servant, as Mr. Hughes describes its endless distractions, but also the life of the modern business or professional man, and not least of the modern minister, have been speeded up by the accelerating pace of American life, and distracted by its multiplying interruptions, until mature thought and really good work are more difficult than ever. Not only our modern life, but our modern literature as well, reflects this hasty and distracted mood. In a significant article in the August Atlantic, Philip Cabot has well described the situation thus: "In literature, painting and music, the classics of our grandfathers are pronounced dull and slow today and things with 'more snap to them,' as we phrase it, have taken their place. Not beauty but excitement is what we crave. . . . If these things be relaxing to the nerves and elevating to the spirit, human nature has changed indeed! They have the earmarks of stimulants, not sedatives; of the fear of life, rather than the love of it. Foreign observers have often remarked with a touch of humor that Americans work hard and hurry over their play. But this is not hurry; it is hysteria—a sort of spiritual madness."

> THE novels of the present year offer, so far as I am aware, no work of outstanding significance, although there are several stories of considerable merit. The most of these are by women, and are characterized by a sympathetic effort to fathom the depths of the psychology of the individual. In each case the chief interest lies in a more or less detailed portrayal of character. The element of plot is less stressed. The life story of the hero or heroine is usually drawn against a background that continues to savor strongly of Main Street. There is an end, but rarely a definite conclusion. "Youth in revolt" attempts to jazz through the "waste land" in the hope of catching fleeting "glimpses of the moon;" a breeze of satire stirs up the rather germ-laden dust of Main Street; echoes of the great war and of battles that seem already far away and long ago, are heard. New York society suffers the annual exposure, and a gland-child of the "age of innocence" fails to keep time to the syncopated measures of the "age of jazz;" another "son of the middle border" becomes involved in the political ring of a small town in the 70's. Through all, an intangible idealism seems to be hiding just around the corner.—L. E. Cannon in a review of "The Trend in Fiction."

It is curious that in a very illuminating article in the same number of the Atlantic on "The Literature of Disillusion," this interesting account appears of the new partnership of science and literature in the direction of the modern psycho-analytical novel: "A quaint suggestion of the new collaboration is to be found in a newspaper account I read the other day of a well known American author and his bacteriologist friend in the London apartment in which they are now living. The reporter pictures our author as striding restlessly up and down the room, pouring forth a copious monologue. 'The bacteriologist,' he writes, 'an impassive fellow by comparison, sits on the floor beside the fireplace reading, to be interrupted whenever the author wants a correct scientific term, which is about once every twenty-five seconds.' Perhaps this is suggestive of the way novelists of the future may be imagined as going about their business." Whether this picture is overdrawn or not, it is certainly true that much modern literature, like most modern preaching, echoes the nervous click of the typewriter rather than the quiet ongoing of the pen.

This is not to say that work of a high degree of mature insight and finished style is not being done in our time. Those who have read Willa Cather's "A Lost Lady," or who have lamented the premature death of Katharine Mansfield across the Atlantic, the more because it cut off an artist with an unusual conscience for finished work not only in style but in substance of thought, will know that not all our contemporary fiction is being dashed off at high speed. Mr. J. M. Murry, in a recent penetrating essay on the present state of English poetry, points out that much modern verse has been so highly polished that it has lost the fresh emotion without which poetry always lacks power; but he concludes this essay with a sentence significant for preachers and patriots in our time, as well as for poets, "To be muddled yourself is not loyalty, but treachery, even to a muddled generation."

The fact remains, however, that contemporary literature as well as life suffers somewhat from "the fleeting vision" of which Mr. Hughes spoke.

A Sense of Frustration

A second characteristic of contemporary literature, not less significant from the religious point of view, is its deep sense of frustration. Doubtless this is inevitable among the thinkers of a generation that has endured and fought the Great War for the sake of certain faiths and hopes that now, after a complete military victory, seem further away than ever. Such pictures of army life as Dos Passos' "Three Soldiers," and such bitter indictments of profiteers at home as Montague's "Disenchantment," reveal the depths of the soldiers' disillusionment, and put into sharp statement the widespread sense of the futility of the war to gain the moral aims that Britain an America at least had so much to say about during the struggle. The same note is struck even more sharply in such recent poetry as T. S. Eliot's "The Waste Land" and A. E. Housman's "Last Poems." The dark and paralyzing pessimism of the latter, under an extraordinary beauty of phrase and cadence, is certainly not religious in its trend, though superbly stoic in its invincible defiance of the evil which it holds far outweighs and constantly overcomes the good in life.

Every reader of recent fiction has felt its preoccupation with the ancient problem of the divided self; though the language of its psycho-analysis is highly modern and Freudian, and the clue by which it seeks to unravel its tangled personalities is predominantly that of sex. As one writer has remarked, the recent work of D. H. Lawrence and James Joyce in England, and Sherwood

Anderson in this country, is "as single-minded as a scientific paper in its concern with one function." Most of the younger writers of fiction have felt the influence of this characteristically modern school of thought. Perhaps its substance may not be so novel as its technique often seems. There is much point in the comment of a recent reviewer in the Atlantic who says, "It must have occurred to most readers that many of the alleged new psychological equations in our novels are really classic. Some have been used over and over again by writers as far back as Shakespeare, or Sophocles, or the recorders of the earliest folk-myths. Probably the Freudians did not tell Shakespeare anything that he did not know when they psycho-analyzed Lady Macbeth. Nor could they tell Wagner much about Kundry. A considerable part of recent psychology—at least of what filters into fiction—seems to me largely a matter of restatement. Therein also lies a good deal of its charm for the novelists. One can have an interesting time pouring old wine into new bottles."

It is not without significance that biography as well as fiction has been both stimulated and deeply influenced by the modern interest in the analysis of personality. Lytton Strachey in "Eminent Victorians" and "Queen Victoria" has blazed the way for a new type of biographical writing that, whatever its limitations, has made biography more interesting to the average reader than ever. Gamaliel Bradford's "Damaged Souls" is a less ambitious but very interesting recent American adventure into the same large field—well worth the reading of any minister or teacher who has to deal with "human nature and its remaking"—to borrow the title of one of Professor W. E. Hocking's best books. The same interest in personality and its reaction to great events partly explains perhaps the perennial attractiveness of such personal reminiscences as these of Mrs. Asquith, the "Crowding Memories" of Mrs. T. B. Aldrich, "Memories of a Hostess" by Mrs. J. T. Fields, and such notable contributions to American life and history as the letters of Franklin K. Lane and Walter H. Page.

Along with this new interest of our literature in the problems and varieties of individual personality, goes a characteristic desire for a wide view of the total processes of human history and civilization. Perhaps it is the desire to gather up the details of historical and scientific scholarship in an outline which the average mind can grasp and understand; perhaps it is the desire to check our own sense of disappointment with current events by a longer look at the slow march of progress; in any event no one can miss the extraordinary interest in such outlines of history as have been given us by Wells and Van Loon, such outlines of science as the masterpieces by J. A. Thomson, and now an outline of literature by John Drinkwater. It is certainly a great gain to have the results of wide scholarship thus brought within the reach of the man in the street.

Not even this brief review of current literary tendencies would be complete without a final emphasis on the note of spiritual quest and wistfulness that constantly appears in modern literature as in modern life. Mrs. Asquith once remarked that the great vogue of "If Winter Comes" was chiefly due to the fact that its hero, Mark Sabre, was not altogether unlike Jesus. Sir Hall Caine, who certainly knows what people like to read, has recently stated with great emphasis the need of a strong spiritual message for the modern world. Such recent novels as those of Norris and Bachellor are a frank protest against the dangers of modern commercialism and irreligion. Pappini's vivid and original "Life of Christ" has significantly enough been one of the best sellers of the year; and Professor E. J. Goodspeed's "American Translation of the New Testament" is not only being broadcasted by radio, but outselling many novels over the counter. Even if the trend of contemporary literature is not markedly toward religion, it reveals a spiritual groping and wistfulness that are religion's opportunity.

In no recent book are these characteristics of our modern time more winsomely and vividly set forth than in that extraordinary allegory by Christopher Morley entitled "Where the Blue Begins." It would be well for every preacher, and for thoughtful Christian people as well, to read that remarkable combination of genial satire and keen insight. Its delightful humor finds fair game both in the big business and the conventional religion of our time; but beneath the humor and the fantasy is a keen sense of some things that modern America greatly needs.

This inevitably hasty and superficial glance at the characteristics of our age as revealed in its literature, recalls one of the last and the wisest things that the sainted Charles Cuthbert Hall, president of Union Seminary, ever said. He remarked to one of his students that Christianity in America was in critical danger of falling between the Scylla of an unreligious liberalism and the Charybdis of an unintelligent conservatism. There are plenty of men in the latter group, he went on, who have a message which our age needs, but they do not know the language of the time, and therefore men do not listen to them. There are an increasing number of younger men in the former group, he continued, who know perfectly the language of their time, but have no real gospel for its deeper needs. The great need of the modern pulpit, he concluded, is for men with a deep understanding of the age-long gospel of Christ, and an ability to translate it into terms which their age will understand and appropriate. The really important question is therefore not so much whether the trend of modern literature is toward religion, as it is whether the present representatives of religion can catch from modern literature a new sense for the needs and the problems of our present-day life, for which we Christians believe that the gospel of Christ is the only adequate solution.

The Song of the Satisfied Sheep

By Rhys R. Lloyd

IN translating and interpreting this far-famed poem, I have been governed by three great principles: the poem was written by a man of good sense, for men of good sense, to be interpreted in harmony with good sense. After a study of the poem in the Hebrew, and in the Septuagint, its Greek translation, I am fully convinced that the author was a man of extraordinary mental power. He was a poet of marvelous capacity, and a soul whose trust in God seems to be almost ideal. Would to God that every man had a faith so simple, so sincere, and so attractive! God surely deserves it.

My translation has tried to convey the Hebrew thought to the English reader; consequently I have sometimes abandoned the literal meaning of the Hebrew words, because it is possible to translate the words of a language without transferring its thoughts. For example, think of the words of the Saviour—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have not life in yourselves."—John 6: 53. These words accurately translate the Greek words, but they do not transfer to the English reader the thoughts which the Greek words conveyed to that Greek reader. On account of that failure, that translation of the Greek words is not the best kind, the most valuable translation. Words do not save men. Thoughts alone do that. But we are sure that Jesus did not expect men to "eat his flesh" or "drink his blood."

A transference of the thought is what we need. In the poem the translation of the Hebrew words "Water of rest" (v 2), and "paths of righteousness" (v 3) convey not the thought of the author; consequently, if we desire to transfer his thought to the English reader, we must adopt other words. That is what I have tried to do here for his benefit.

The Names of the Poem

The popular name of this poem is, "The Twenty Third Psalm." It is a most unfortunate title. The words, "Twenty Third," tell only that there are twenty-two "psalms" before it; but it gives no hint about the contents of the poem. And the term, "psalm," conveys no clear idea to most of the English readers; for they have no dictionaries to consult. Such a name, then, for this celebrated poem reflects no honor upon Christian scholarship. The other name given to it is "The Shepherd's Psalm", but it is not a shepherd that is singing; it is a sheep, a satisfied sheep that sings; hence, I have called it, "The Song of a Satisfied Sheep."

The Song Itself

Yahweh is my shepherd,
My needs are all supplied.
He maketh me lie in a pasture of tender grass.
He gently guides me to waters that refresh me.
He restores my life.
He guides me in the right paths for the honor of his name.
Yea, though I walk through a gorge of gloom,
I fear no harm.
Thy club and staff make bold my heart.
Thou preparest a pasture before me in the sight of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil.
I have more good things than I need.
Nothing but goodness and kindness shall chase me
All the days of my life.
And I will dwell in the fold of Yahweh days without end."

As a sheep it begins to tell its reader about its shepherd. "Yahweh is my shepherd." "Yahweh" is a more accurate representation of the Hebrew name than "Jehovah." For that reason I use it in my translation.

"Yahweh" is the God of the Jews, the creator and ruler of all beings and things. As such, he can easily supply all the needs of all men and beasts. This sheep is fully supplied.

Observe that the sheep, throughout the poem, is singing only about its shepherd and itself. Other sheep may have other shepherds. Yahweh is its shepherd. ("My shepherd"). The pronoun, "my", I believe is emphatic. Note also that in saying that "Yahweh" is its "shepherd", it means to teach that he owns and supports, controls and protects it. These thoughts the reader must keep before his mind as he reads the whole poem, otherwise he will not fully understand and appreciate its beauty.

After telling us that its shepherd is Yahweh—the creator, owner, and ruler of all things, the sheep tells us that it "shall not need." That is just what we expected the sheep to say. An animal seems to care more about its food than about any other thing; hence it refers to it at the beginning. As evidence to support its statement, it speaks about its daily experience. It gives us facts, and it presents them in a simple clear manner. Notice how it begins.

"He maketh me lie in a pasture of tender grass.
He gently guides me to waters that refresh me.
He restores my life."

Through these words, we see that the shepherd has led the sheep to a pasture of green, "tender grass." There he "caused it to lie" and nibble at leisure—of course "lie" down, because it could not "lie" up. By being made to lie in that pasture, the sheeps gets rest, and food at leisure—gets both at the same time.

After enjoying rest and food, the sheep is led to fresh, pure water, which will refresh it. The water is called "water of rest," because it may have been in a trough or a pool, or it may be "water which caused rest." It is impossible to determine why it was so designated. It is easy to make bold assertions, but evidence is lacking.

But, after getting that drink, it feels as a new sheep. Before it got that rest and food and drink it felt as if it were near death. Now it feels as a new sheep. Its "life is restored."

Let us be wise and avoid talking about the "soul" of a sheep. Sheep have no "souls." The Hebrew word means life. A sheep has a body with life.

After singing about the effects of the rest, food and water, the sheep proceeds to tell about some other deeds of its shepherd:

"He guides it in the right path," from the fold to the pasture, from the pasture to the water; and then back again either to the pasture or to the fold. He never misleads it His knowledge is accurate and sufficient for all purposes. To mislead the sheep would have ruined his reputation as a shepherd.

Let us not talk about leading "a sheep in the paths of righteousness." For a sheep there is no "righteousness" or "unrighteousness." The Massoretic (Hebrew) text has "straight paths." But very few Palestinian paths can be called "straight." "Right paths" seems to be the poet's thought.

Sometimes the shepherd is compelled to lead his sheep through valleys deep, dark, and dangerous. But his care and skill fills the sheep with boldness; hence it sings:

"Yea though I walk through a gorge of gloom, I fear no harm.
Thy club and staff make bold my heart."

In going from the fold to the pasture, or from the pasture to the water, the sheep was led through a deep, narrow valley. It is this that is called "the gorge of gloom." It was so deep and narrow that the rays of the sun seemed afraid to enter into it. Instead of being full of light, it was filled with "gloom." On account of that gloom robbers and wild beasts were wont to dwell in its caves. From these caves, they would rush at helpless sheep and men. But the heart of this sheep, led as it was by a shepherd whose club was death to a wild beast and to a robber, was bold and at ease. One blow with that club, as wielded by the shepherd, would prevent the enemy from coming near to the sheep. That club, bear in mind, was a young sapling of hard wood, about four feet long. It was dug from the ground, root and all. That root was a round lump like a ball; hence it fitted it for "a club" and "a walking stick." These were the two uses to which the club was put, not two sticks. A Palestinian Jew was too fond of easy living to carry two sticks when one would meet all his needs. The club which I have described was my own; but had been owned by a Palestinian shepherd, and used by him for three years on the hills of that country. Real life and common sense agree in teaching this interpretation.

The Table

After singing in the previous six lines about the shepherd's leading, the sheep now starts again, as experience teaches it, to the food which the shepherd furnished.

"Thou preparest a pasture before me in sight of my enemies."

The only "table" which "a shepherd" prepares for his "sheep" is "the pasture." That is wisely called "a table," for upon it the food, the grass, rests while the sheep is eating. This "pasture" was "in sight" of the wild beasts and robbers. On the one hand, in the distance, can be seen a lion; and, on the other hand, the head of a robber, now and again, can be seen peeping at the sheep. Both of these enemies are longing for an opportunity to leap at the grazing sheep.

Note that the sheep speaks of "the pasture" as having been prepared by "the shepherd" himself. No servant intervenes. How true to a sheep's experience. The shepherd does everything for its welfare.

Despite all of the foresight and care of the ideal shepherd, the sheep, as it wends its way through the pasture, sometimes scratches its head until it bleeds. To meet this and similar needs the shepherd has provided "olive oil." This he pours, and sometimes rubs, over the head of the sheep. This "pouring" is described by the poet as an "anointing."

"Thou anointest my head with oil."

The shepherd did not pour oil upon the

Books That Breed the Dream of Ages

BOOKS that breed the dream of ages,
Let me live my life in thee;
Let me walk where ancient Sages
Shot the skies with liberty!

Books that sowed the seed of dreaming
In the soil of eons old,
Let me live within thy gleaming
Pages, rich with gold!

Books that pour a stream of power
Down the mountains of the past,
Let me live my little hour
Where the ancient ages last!

Books that light the flame of living
All along the world's highway,
Let me feel thy lamplight giving
Brighter luster to the day!

Books that set new stars to gleaming
In the darkest midnight sky,
Let me live within thy dreaming;
Live in light and let me die!

Books that lift like snow-white mountains
Where may climb the valiant few,
Let me plunge into the fountains;
Wash me, cleanse me, through and through!

Books that made our mighty Lincoln,
Books that set the Vision there,
Books that wrought from common homespun

head of every sheep, every day. Such a custom would have called for more oil than he could have possessed. And the daily pouring would have been too wearisome a task for a work-hating Oriental. The shepherd used the oil only when the injured head of a sheep called for its service. Then he used it most carefully.

On looking back over all its experience, this sheep is now moved to sing in loudest, sweetest tones.

"I have more good things than I need."

That is what the poet means by the words, "My cup is running over." This sentence accurately translates the Hebrew words; but it does not transfer the thoughts of those figurative words to the English reader. And a real practical "translation" is the transference of the thought from one language to another. That is what I have tried to do. Note that "a sheep" has no "cup."

In the next graphic, beautiful sentence the sheep sings about its future life.

"Nothing but Goodness and Kindness shall chase me all the days of my life."

In the past, wild beasts and robbers may have "chased" or tried to chase it; but hereafter only these two virtues shall chase it. Notice that both "goodness" and "kindness" are personified, pictured as though they were human beings running, as fast as they could after the sheep. They are eager to convey unto it their valuables. What a charming picture! Can you see the chasers? These two virtues appear perhaps as though they were servants of Yahweh, the Shepherd.

The closing words of the song express the determination which the sheep has formed in view of the treatment which it has received from its shepherd. "I will dwell in the fold of Yahweh, days without end."

The only "house" which a sheep knows is "the fold." And that is the only "house" in which it dwells." That was built for it by the shepherd; hence it is called "The house of Yahweh."

The words "the house of Yahweh" is an ambiguous expression. Does it mean "the house" in which the Lord lives, or the house which the Lord has provided for the sheep? I have taken the latter as the thought of the poet.

Only sick sheep were ever taken to the house, where the shepherd and his family lived. But this sheep was far from sickness; hence it would live in the fold, "the house" prepared for sheep. "Living in the fold" is only another way of assuring this shepherd that it will never wander from him.

For these wonderful words of trust and gratitude millions of hearts have gladly expressed their joy and thanks to God, and many more millions will say in the future: "Thanks, thanks unto God."

From Chitambo's Village to the Sea

BY R. B. ELEAZER

"Brought by faithful hands over land and sea, here rests
David Livingstone,
Missionary, Traveler, Philanthropist."

This inscription on a black marble slab in Westminster Abbey suggests but faintly the story of heroic devotion that lies back of it. Little has the world heard of that strange funeral procession of black men which for nine months braved the terrors of the African jungle as they bore the body of Livingstone to the sea, to be sent back to his home by ship. It is a story so significant and so surprising in its revelation of loyalty, of courage, and determination, of thoughtfulness and delicacy of feeling on the part of the great explorer's untutored followers that it deserves to be recorded among the world's golden deeds.

When in May, 1873, after years of missionary exploration in Central and South Africa, David Livingstone's worn body was able to go no further, his native attendants hurriedly built for him a hut in the village of Chief Chitambo, near the shores of Lake Bangweolo, in the heart of Central Africa. There at dawn a few days later they found him kneeling in death.

One might have expected that these simple children of nature would speedily inter the body and hurry away to their distant homes. Their great friend and leader was dead, his work was ended, his home was 10,000 miles away, all hope for them of further employment and gain was gone—why should they remain longer than was necessary to give his body decent burial? At most they might have been expected to mark his last resting place and await opportunity to send word to the outside world, that his friends might come for the body if they chose. What, as a matter of fact, did these black "boys" do, these jungle people whose only contact with civilization had been their brief acquaintance with Livingstone?

They held a council. They decided that every effort should be made to carry their master's body to the coast, that it might be sent back to England. The perils of the undertaking they fully realized. It was 1300 miles to the sea. There was no means of transport save their own broad backs and willing limbs. Between them and the distant goal were trackless jungles, ferocious wild beasts, fever-laden swamps, wide rivers and hostile tribes rendered more menacing by the dead that everywhere prevailed. Yet the little band never questioned or hesitated. Their beloved leader had kinsmen and friends across the seas; they would want his body. He was a great man, he belonged to the world. His remains should sleep among the honored dead of his race. Thus they reasoned and thus they proceeded to act.

They collected all his personal belongings, his instruments and his notes, and carefully packed them for transit. They removed the heart and other viscera and buried them, erecting a marker over the spot. They cautioned the chief to keep the grass cut about the marker, that it might not be destroyed by fire. For fourteen days the body was dried in the sun. Then it was carefully wrapped in calico and inclosed in a large, cylindrical piece of bark. Over the whole a sheet of sailcloth was sewed and the package was lashed to a pole.

When all was in readiness, two men shouldered the burden and the little band set out on the long, perilous journey. Already weakened by exposure, it was not long till they were stricken with jungle fever and compelled to lay down their load. When the disease abated and strength returned they went on again. They crossed the Luapula River where it is four miles wide. They fought their way through a hostile village. Their progress was disputed by a tribe that refused to permit the passage of a dead body, but by a ruse they were able to proceed.

Some hundreds of miles from the coast they met a party of Englishmen who had come out in search of Livingstone. "Give us his things," said the Englishmen, "but bury the body here, and go home." Accustomed as they were to obey the white man without question and exhausted by their long, hard journey one might have expected that they would eagerly embrace the offered opportunity. But not so. Without objection they turned over the instruments and notes, but with regard to the body they were inflexible. They would not bury it. They would not surrender it to others. It must go on to the sea. And go on it did.

At last in February, 1874, the little cortege reached the coast and the sacred burden, which for nine months they had borne on their shoulders and guarded with their lives, was put on board a ship bound for England. Then back into the jungle the brave band went, without other reward than the memory of their great good friend, and the knowledge that they had been faithful to the last.

Thinking upon that story I am constrained to hold in deeper respect and confidence a race which, even in its savage and untutored state, was capable of sentiments so fine and of a deed so heroic.

Dr. Charles E. Goodall of New Jersey wires: "The Bible and Missionary conferences held in Camden and Newark were well attended and resulted in great spiritual uplift for New Jersey. The Bible expositions were inspiring and the missionary addresses searching and convincing. The conferences will assist not only in arousing missionary interest but will give evangelistic impetus to the state work." Then they were well worth while.

The Bible and Its Message

By Milton G. Evans

THE Bible has as many dominant messages as it has books. The purposed message of each book is the message designed by the author. If he has not expressly declared his message, the reader must find it out by careful study of the book itself.

The earliest readers of the book are the ones most likely to have known the author's intention; later readers must by common-sense use of the imagination make themselves contemporary with the earliest. But the Bible, conceived as Old and New Testaments, has two controlling messages, and these messages have one all inclusive purpose. The writer of the words: "And this is eternal life, that they know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou didst send," describes in briefest possible fashion God's purpose in human history as disclosed in the Bible. A life eternal as God and a life that is God's is the only good worthy of one made in God's image. Divine life is more than conscious existence; a feeling of values in attaining the highest ideals in ethics.

Social Relations and Character

God and man were made for social relations, and through social relations only can character be developed. Hence in religion, revelation and faith are necessary reciprocal facts. God comes into the experiences of man and man recognizes and appreciates God. Faith is the human response to the self-revealing God. God lifts man into fellowship worthy of himself, and man rejoices in the uplift, and longs for the time when he himself shall be holy as God is holy. The Old Testament illustrates the process—Abraham's faith prompted the question, "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" God answers by calling Abraham into fellowship for the purpose of teaching the divine character and demands. "For I have known him, in order that he may command his children and his house after him, and they keep the way of Jehovah, to do righteousness and justice." The father of the faith was a moral teacher, and the sole purpose of God in the discipline of Israel was to produce moral character in his worshipers. Worship is the most effective way of forming character, for worship implies admiration, awe, veneration, imitation. Hence Israel's object of worship must be a Person embodying in himself the worthiest ideals possible to the worshiper. No other than a redeeming God, possessing the noblest ethical character, could be worshiped. "Jehovah, Jehovah God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty."

The net result of thus conceiving God was to produce a group of worshipers who cared more for civic virtues and social righteousness and kindness of feeling than for ritual and formulated beliefs.

> THE all-inclusive message of the New Testament may be expressed in the words of one who knew both God and Christ in a most intimate way: "My little children, these things I write to you, that ye may not sin. And if any one does sin, we have a Helper with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is a propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world. And in this we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that says, I know him and keeps not his commandments, is a liar, and in him the truth is not. But whoever keeps his word, truly in him the love of God is perfected. In this we know that we are in him. He that says he abides in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked."

"He has told thee, O man, what is good;
And what does Jehovah require of thee,
But to do justly, and to love mercy,
And to walk humbly with thy God?"

"The earth is Jehovah's and the fullness thereof;
The world and they that dwell therein.
For he founded it above the seas,
And established it above the floods.
Who shall ascend into the mount of Jehovah,
And who shall stand in his holy place?
He that has clean hands and a pure heart;
Who has not lifted up his soul to vanity,
And has not sworn deceitfully,
He shall receive a blessing from Jehovah
And righteousness from the God of his salvation."

It is no wonder that to know such a God is to have assurance of values that extend beyond overthrow of royal house and of temple and desecration of holy land by Gentile powers. The one who by worship of a spotlessly pure God has built for himself a like character outlasts all changes in human history.

"Behold, swollen and not upright in him is his soul,
But the righteous by his faithfulness shall live."

The Old Testament revelation and the consequent character are only the direction of God's purpose, not the goal. The discipline within Israel prepared the way for fuller teaching in and through Christ. Jewish ethics are preserved in Christian ethics, but a new flavor is given them. The earliest Christians carried over the best in Israel and added to it the character acquired by companionship with Christ. Because they both preserved what was inherently worth preserving and gave a new quality that made it acceptable, they were called the salt of the earth. Through the disciples of Jesus the world found an ethic that was attractive.

Jesus' purity in some strange way won people. His goodness did not repel; it attracted. He invited rather than commanded; he personalized the holy character of God in human society; he made the ideal actual; he exemplified the possibility of stainless character open to all; he was in himself the living illustration of the divine in the human and the human in the divine. In short, he was God incarnate. Those who knew him best knew that to have seen him was to have seen the Father. They knew that by association with him they had an experience of good that could be adequately described by the words "eternal life." In later years memory recalled the astounding facts of actual companionship with Manifested Life, and the joy of it made a life of toil and of persecution glad. "And the life was manifested, and we have seen, and bear testimony, and report to you the eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested to us; and that which we have seen and have heard we report to you also, that ye may also have fellowship with us; and our fellowship also is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." Fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ! But God is light and in him is no darkness. Fellowship in the light makes sin impossible, or if possible, hateful—a thing to be repented of and shunned. Fellowship with Christ makes it seem possible to be as powerful over temptation as he was. By strange contrast fellowship with the Sinless One in the light reveals our own weakness and sinfulness. But we are not in despair, for our Companion cleanses while condemning. Self-condemnation issues in hope when we know him whom God hath sent. "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness we lie, and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanses us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to for give us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

The all-inclusive message of the New Testament, then, may be expressed in the words of one who knew both God and Christ in a most intimate way: "My little children, these things I write to you, that ye may not sin. And if any one does sin, we have a Helper with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is a propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world. And in this we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that says, I know him, and keeps not his commandments, is a liar, and in him the truth is not. But whoever keeps his word, truly in him the love of God is perfected. In this we know that we are in him. He that says he abides in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked."

The Bible message is a summons to achievement in the realm of conduct. It reveals the ideal in God disclosed in the Old Testament, the realization of the ideal in the New Testament. The presentation of these records make permanent in human history the actual achievement in Jesus Christ and the possibility of like achievement for all who care to live in daily communion with the Father and with the Son. In the Bible man finds motive power sufficient to acquire citizenship in that heavenly Jerusalem, into which nothing shall enter that is unclean, nor any one that works abomination and falsehood. With the glad consummation in view we slowly climb the "great stair of time," lured to the ascent by the God of the Bible and lifted step by step by the power of the Christ of the Bible.

"Wait there, wait and invite me while I climb,
For see I come! but slow, but slow,
Yet ever, as your chime
Soft and sublime
Lifts at my feet, they move, they go
Up the great stair of time."

Giving Student Youth a Fair Chance

The tower of a worth-while life does not grow up in the night like Jonah's gourd. To build that tower costs steady, patient and honorable effort.

BY CLARENCE A. BARBOUR

SOME of us are especially interested in the bearing of this question of law observance upon the present life and the future service of the undergraduate student bodies of the land. I am thinking not only of the colleges and universities, but of the secondary schools, both the public high schools and the privately endowed preparatory schools. The undergraduate student body constitutes a great host in America. In recent years that growth has been phenomenal. Practically every college and university is crowded; the problem is the limitation of numbers. The same is true of the privately endowed academies and schools like Andover, Exeter and many more. The public high-school bodies have multiplied several fold in recent years—an extraordinary increase.

The vast mass of youth in the secondary schools, the college and the university, is plastic. It can be molded; inevitably it is molded. There is said to be a little spring in western New York where two streams flow from one source. They go on either side of a stone that lies at the edge of the spring. The stream on the right flows into the Genesee River, into Lake Ontario, into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The stream on the left flows into the Monongahela River, into the Ohio, into the Mississippi, into the Gulf of Mexico. Two drops of water, parting from one another where that stone lies, will find their goal, apart from the possible result of evaporation, as far apart as the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Gulf of Mexico. Inevitably student life can be turned, and is turned. You can determine the direction of a drop of water. You cannot do that with a human personality, but you can influence the direction. Influence is of two kinds, the direct and the indirect. Of the two the indirect is the more potent. Why? Because against the direct influence the personality may and does set itself in opposition. Against the indirect influence, against the atmosphere, so to speak, it opposes no barrier, and the effect is certain and inevitable.

It is trite to say that the future of the country is in the hands of the youth of today, and it may call for no argument when I say that the future leadership of the nation is in the keeping of the undergraduate student body in its institutions of learning. Upon that body what will be the unavoidable effect of the condition and atmosphere of the non-observance and non-enforcement of law, particularly that law of which we especially think during these days? Positively disastrous beyond the shadow of doubt. And how disastrous? In what respects disastrous?

In some cases the effect will manifest itself in the absolute destruction of life and of useful service. You doubt it? I will cite you one example out of countless multitudes. When I was a boy I saw a man thrown out of the front door of a saloon then doing business on North Main Street in the city of Hartford. I saw him with my own eyes, thrown out like a bag of rubbish. And I knew him. That man had been the valedictorian of his high school and a graduate of one of our greatest universities. He had taken first place in one of our most noted law schools. He had been a member of the most prominent legal firm in the state. But he had gotten something out of his school years, during his school years, beside the acquisition of learning. This thing of which we here are thinking had gripped him, and not many years after his graduation from the law school I saw him, as I have told you. That was in the autumn. In the February following, in the great blizzard that swept over New England, this same man was caught by the storm, intoxicated in the street, fell unnoticed, was covered by the snow, was picked up with hands frozen and feet frozen, was taken to a hospital, an amputation performed on his hands and feet, and, mercifully, under the operation he died. And this thing does the same kind of work today. Do not you doubt for one moment that it works the same process, not once nor twice, among our student bodies. Still it "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." In some cases, I say, it means the absolute destruction of the life and the useful service of our youth.

In other cases it means the dimming or the blinding of life's vision. Vision largely determines life. The ideal of a building, vision seen in vision before ever a spade is put to the ground or a trowel to the laying of stone or brick—that ideal is one of the chief factors in the development of our student bodies. Under the conditions of non-enforcement and non-observance of law, the constitutional and statutory law of the country, the conception of life tends to become in youth a crippled and distorted thing. Such a condition destroys the highest and noblest ideals of life.

Again, there is presented the insidious temptation of the spectacle of easy money, of material success by unlawful means. That was one of the curses of the great war. At the end of the war there were too many newly made millionaires and half-millionaires in America, as a consequence of war, fattening on the blood and wretchedness of a war-torn world. There are too many men riding in limousines today as the result of law trodden under foot. The student world needs to learn nothing more certainly than this—that the tower of a worth-while life does not grow up in the night like Jonah's gourd. They need to learn that to build that tower costs steady, patient and honorable endeavor. And this thing of which we speak destroys the conception of true success, and leads to an unworthy pursuit of easy money. That is no small count in the indictment which I bring.

Again, it is tending to weaken or to destroy in our student youth the power of that great group of character facts which have to do with the stewardship of life—obedience, and duty, and debt, what we owe to our homes, what we owe to the nation. The whole condition and atmosphere of the non-observance and non-enforcement of law by criminals who sell and by participating criminals who buy breeds carelessness and irregularity and reckless bravado and enervating self-indulgence among the youth of the land. There are parts of this country which may remind one of the great painting of Couture, "The Decadence of Rome." It is a scene of bacchanalian excess. Off at the side of the room there are two men whose faces show their realization of the meaning of the scene. Holding the student world in our very heart of hearts, as some of us do, there are not lacking from time to time the most direct evidences of the effect upon the student world produced by conditions in some parts of this land at this very time. I charge that it tends to breed, and does breed, carelessness and irregularity and reckless bravado and enervating self-indulgence among the youth of this country. This is no blanket denunciation of the student world. Every representation of it as such a denunciation is utterly unwarranted. But that there is ample ground for what is here said will not be denied by those who know the facts.

Last of all, the thing against which we give battle is surely eating out the power of the appeal to the heroic. I speak as a lover of these youths of ours. Like some of you, I lived with them in the heavy days of war. Our educational institutions have their rolls of honor—shining rolls of honor. How wonderful our boys were in those fateful days! I sat one night in Camp Wadsworth, in a little tent with a group of them around a bit of a fire to help against the chill of the night. By and by one of the boys and I were sitting apart from the others and were talking in an intimate way. Of his own accord he brought up the subject of casualties—the question of coming back when the war was done. Somewhere he had got the figures that the loss by death was likely to be about nine to a hundred. Probably he was far astray in his figures, but that was not the point. Here is what he said, this American boy: "Nine to every hundred; that means eight and me." He had no thought of coming back. He had deliberately laid his life upon the altar of his country. You know those lines, "The Spires of Oxford"—

"I saw the spires of Oxford
As I was passing by,
The gray spires of Oxford
Against a pearl-gray sky;
My heart was with the Oxford men
Who went abroad to die.

The cricket field, the quad,
The shaven lawns of Oxford
To seek a bloody sod.
They gave their merry youth away
For country and for God.

God rest you, happy gentlemen,
Who laid your good lives down,
Who took the khaki and the gun
Instead of cap and gown.
God bring you to a fairer place
Than even Oxford town."

Those were English boys, those Oxford boys, but we had the same kind in America. Now I say this: The thing of which we speak here today is destroying the sense of the heroic, destroying the likelihood of successful appeal to the heroic. We have gone back, and no small part of our loss is directly due to the fact of lawlessness, the supine and shameful indifference or surrender to the forces of greed and anarchy, and the effect upon our student bodies is as certain as the working of the law of gravitation.

Unless we have a care we are going to miss the mark. Rome missed it; Greece missed it; the Holy Roman Empire missed it; France, back yonder, when she drove out the Huguenots, missed it; Spain missed it; and this country may miss the mark. A great future for this nation is not of automatic certainty. We have undigested and un-American foreign peoples; we have unfair and irritating distribution of profits; we have extravagance and indulgence in luxuries, and a mad and silly excess of so-called amusement; we have widespread and flagrant contempt for law and disobedience to law. These are among the things which may steal away our birthright, and of the last of these things we now think and speak. I want to quote just this word from the most widely circulated journal in America, in an editorial on "Laws and Criminals":

"As a result of the war, or perhaps as a part of the hysteria that comes of wealth quickly and easily acquired, there is now in America too much contempt for authority—a spirit of lawlessness that pervades every layer of society.

"As government extravagance encourages private extravagance, so the cynical lawlessness of citizens who feel respectable encourages crime among those who know no other restraint than fear of punishment.

"One need not be a moralist to perceive that the rats are gnawing the floor of his house; and even a fool may understand that flippant, contemptuous, casual and universal violation of law does not add to the security of either life or property."

Yes, the rats are gnawing at the floor of the house, and some of our citizens, who pride themselves upon their citizenship, do not seem to hear the rasp o destroying teeth. As Nero fiddled whil Rome was burning, unless we have a care, among that which may be lost in irrevocable ruin may be the finest character and priceless service of our student youth, in which resides so largely the hope of the republic.

Miss Frances E. Willard was the first dean of women at Northwestern University. The girl students of that institution recently paid tribute to her memory.

We now have a "wheat council" of the United States. This council has a new slogan—"Eat it with toast." The movement is patriotic in the interest of the impoverished wheat farmer. It has been found that the American people are not eating as much wheat as they did before the war. For four years we were exhorted to save the wheat and we are still saving it. Our domestic consumption of wheat is only 4.7 bushels per capita, which is less than in any other of the leading countries. By the time this slogan does its work we will face a "meat council" and be exhorted to eat more meat. It's easier to start a movement than it is to stop it. Let us remember this before we adopt new denominational slogans.

The Lehigh Avenue Church of Philadelphia was recently presented by Mrs. Mary Martin, in memory of her husband and daughter, with a large electrically illuminated cross.

The First Church, Stamford, Conn., celebrated early in November its one hundred fiftieth anniversary. The souvenir program contained a most interesting historical review of the life of the church. Rev. W. J. Barnes has been pastor of the church since 1920.

A number of pastors are changing their fields of labor this fall. In Massachusetts we find that Rev. E. L. Mield has recently become pastor of the church at Littleton. Rev. John M. Maxwell becomes the first pastor of the Calvary Church, Springfield. Rev. L. G. Van Leeuwen has been called to the church at Norwood.

Desiring to do nothing that will interfere with the fullest completion of the seventy-five million campaign and to await fuller opportunity for the southwide missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises to survey their needs for 1925 before making up a definite budget for that year, the committee on future program of Southern Baptists will defer until its spring meeting the fixing of the financial objective for 1925.

To those who love to count noses, it will be of interest that the most recent figures show a total of 6,476,759 Baptists in the South. E. P. Alldredge, secretary of survey, statistics and information of the Baptist Sunday school board, is authority for the statement. This indicates that there is one Baptist to every 5.7 person of all ages in the South. Georgia is the banner state with 977,071. Mississippi is second with 640,978, Texas follows with 679,247.

The October number of "World Tomorrow" is devoted to educational questions. A survey made by Jessie W. Hughan yields the following facts with reference to ethics in our public schools. She says, "I have formulated a code which I believe represents that of 90 per cent of our young citizens. 1. Stealing physical property is always wrong. 2. Cheating in general or local examinations and forging a parent's name are ideally wrong but excusable under stress of circumstances. 3. Cheating in daily school work such as the copying of another's composition or problem and handing it in as original does not stamp a boy or girl as dishonest and is occasionally indulged in by all but saints or eccentrics. 4. A lie is only wrong when it is told to injure someone. Every one tells lies to save himself or others from unpleasantness." The author adds "the above generalizations do not mean that the present day pupil is morally inferior to us of the past generation. His code only is different; he is frank in acknowledging it and often shows deep interest when told of more exacting standards." This summary should elicit the deep interest and concern of all parents and teachers.

SOME ANCIENT HERESIES

The dictionary says that heresy is a "fundamental error in religion, or an error of opinion respecting some fundamental doctrine of religion." If this be true, then any departure from the foundation teachings of our faith is heresy. The word has been often used particularly with reference to differences of interpretation of the theological aspects of the gospel quite to the exclusion of some of its ethical teaching. It may be worth while to enumerate some of the latter.

One of the earliest questions recorded in the Word is Cain's, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The teaching of the prophets and of our Lord answers that question in the affirmative. Yet how often did the chosen people, and, in its turn, the Christian church, utterly forget this fundamental teaching of our faith. Following the first and great commandment is and has ever been the second, "and thy neighbor as thyself." It is fundamental and necessary to Christianity as the first. According to Jesus' basis of judgment as recorded in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, to fail to regard it is fatal. If it means anything at all, it means good-will plus real ministry to people about us. How incongruous are many of our social conditions with this teaching. The desperate living conditions, for example, in many sections of the East side of New York City, where sunlight and fresh air are more precious than rubies, where filthy streets are the playground for filthy children, where great populations of various peoples live in unlivable ways. And the church of Jesus Christ, who was the lover of mankind, retreats before the tide, choosing the easier and pleasanter tasks of up-town and suburban sections. What heresy is this?

And then, there is the age-long pride of race that still persists. America, the home of the free and the land of the brave, not free yet in many places for the negro to vote, nor brave enough to give the yellow man or the black man a place "alongside" in the matter of franchise and citizenship, while our religion has something in it that says: "Where there cannot be Greek nor Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman; but Christ is all, and in all." Deep down in the heart of so many orthodox and professing Christians there is a feeling of aloofness, if not positive repugnance, for the folk of another race than themselves.

We have been wont to think that the kingdom of our Lord was ultimately to triumph, that it was destined to cross seas and mountains, to penetrate forests and to brave the desert and the waste place in its effort to find the last man and to tell him the story. But this has not been accomplished as yet because all too many followers of his have not believed in the "Go ye" of the Great Commission. There have been too many weak-kneed brethren detailed to camp duty, too few to man and support the front line trench. This, too, is another old heresy.

Would it not be well to lay a little more stress upon the matter of Christianity in its real application to life in the face of facts as they are? Is not unfaithfulness here a greater heresy than unquestioned conformity in matters of theological interpretation? There certainly can be no doubt as to our duty in the first, while there does seem to be considerable room for differences of opinion in the latter.

STRAINING AT STRAWS

In the Baptist and Presbyterian denominations, at least, the question of the inspiration of the Bible is a burning question. The Southern Baptist Convention seems to have been very happy in its statement of belief on this point—"The Bible is God's revelation of himself, through men moved by the Holy Spirit, and is our sufficient, certain, and authoritative guide in religion."

The statement adopted by a small majority in the Presbyterian Assembly is this: "The Holy Spirit did so inspire, guide, and move the writers of Holy Scripture as to keep them from error."

In the Presbyterian Assembly a large minority objected to this statement. Just what is meant, or may be understood by the statement that the writers were kept from error? Were they kept from all inaccuracies, in things not affecting in the least its religious teachings? Some seem to take that ground, and further to teach that if there is the least error, even in that sense, the Bible is not a trustworthy guide in anything.

An illustration from the Karen Bible may help to a better understanding on this point: In the Brve Karen School, Toungoo, many years ago there was a debate on the question, "Is the Earth Round or Flat?" Before they received Christian teachers, the Karens believed that the earth was flat, but our pupils had accepted the teaching of their geographies, and it was evident that those who argued that the earth is flat, were simply rehearsing their old beliefs which they no longer held. But one of our best pupils rose and said most emphatically, "The earth is flat. I know it is, the Bible says so." The Karen Bible does not say the earth is flat, but it does call the earth the flat earth, for that is in the Karen language.

Take the verse "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" The adjective "whole" in Karen is "daw bay," and "bay" means "flat." Let us suppose the translator is an extremist concerning the inerrancy of scripture, and believes that this geographical error will utterly destroy the value of the Bible. What is he to do? Shall he insert "the earth is not flat it is round?" He will be adding to scripture. Shall he violate the Karen language and call it the round earth? He would divert attention from the great question, and probably cause the reader to throw down the book in disgust and exclaim, "That book tells lies, it says the earth is round, and any one can see it's flat."

When it comes to the question of the loss of a soul, and the worth of that soul as compared with the whole world, does it matter one straw whether the whole world is round or flat? The writer is not teaching geography, he is teaching the way to heaven, and the infinite importance of following that road.

When God undertook to reveal himself to men so little prepared to know him, and most of them with so little desire to know him, through men who though wonderfully moved and guided, were still only men and not infallible, through human language so inadequate to express the things of God, he undertook a tremendous task, and wonderful has been its accomplishment.

But we have need to "take heed lest in attributing to scripture more than it can have, the incredibility of that do cause the things which indeed it hath most abundantly to be less reverently esteemed." If we who believe and love the Bible claim for it more than it claims for itself, if we claim that it is free from all human imperfections, and such imperfections are found in it, we will confirm those who do not wish to believe the Bible in their unbelief.

It has been said that Catholics worship an infallible church, Protestants an infallible book. Let us see to it that we do not justly fall under that reproach. We have a wonderful revelation from God; let us use it under the guidance of his spirit.

The whole Bible from the first promise, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," to the last verse of Revelation, is full of Jesus Christ, who is the perfect revelation of the Father. Let us seek to know him, and to make him known to others.

International Sunday School Lesson for December 16

WORLD-WIDE MISSIONS

Lesson Text: Acts 16:1-28:31., Rom. 15:18-21., Eph. 3:2-9.

Golden Text: Rom. 1:16

The last three lessons, including this one, cover the entire book of Acts. The power of the early church reached out until it took in the whole world. That is the story of the Acts. This lesson begins with the extension of the Christian religion into Europe. From Asia to Europe then, from Europe and America to Asia now. In the three portions of scripture constituting the lesson text we have the revelation, the review and the restatement of world-wide missions.

Revelation

The man of Macedonia was a revelation. Some things are discovered by reason, and some things are uncovered by revelation. Paul did not arrive at the decision to enter Europe with the gospel by reasoning it out. Of course he could hardly refrain from trying to think through what the preventions meant when they tried to enter Bithynia and were stopped. But reason gave no solution to the problem. Under the circumstances he could only wait at Troas for light. "Trust in the Lord and he shall bring it to pass." In a vision of the night the solution came. Sometimes God can do more for men while they sleep than while they are awake. The psychology of sleep is a land where borders only have been explored. "He giveth unto his beloved in sleep," said the Psalmist. It is an interesting study to run through the Bible and mark the instances where sleep was the medium through which vision and understanding came to men. In this case the vision of missionary extension came to Paul while he slept. The man of Macedonia was visualized to the apostle through his subconsciousness. So long as Paul was conscious of his surroundings, limitations and preventions, God could not reveal his will and purpose to his servant. But when the cerebro-spinal nerve system was at rest, and the sympathetic nerve system awake, God photographed upon that sensitized surface the revelation of his will. Therefore we owe to a subconscious state the beginning of missions in Europe, and from that humble beginning the girdling of the earth with the gospel today. Often to the dreamer we owe the revolutionary truth that changes the political and social map of the world.

Review

Philippi was the gateway to Thessalonica and Athens and Rome and Berlin and Paris and London and New York and San Francisco and Tokyo and Pekin and Calcutta. A large part of the New Testament is due to the missionary efforts by which churches were established in Philippi, Thessalonica and Rome. Paul has this in mind when he reviews his missionary work in Rom. 15:18-21. He had gone the rounds making it his aim to do strictly pioneer work among the heathen or Gentiles. He looked back upon his mission with pardonable pride and reviewed it with modest enthusiasm when he said, "I have made it my aim to preach the full gospel of Christ, not where Christ was already named, that I might not build upon another man's foundation." This is the essence of the true missionary passion. Livingstone, Carey, Judson, Morrison, Gilmour, Paton, are among the modern names that embody that passion. All missionaries cannot be pioneers in the sense of exploring new territory, but all may be pioneers in the better sense of doing their own task in their own way no matter who has preceded them. Nothing is more satisfactory than for a man to be able to say modestly yet truthfully: "I will not dare to speak of any things save those which Christ wrought through me for the obedience of the heathen, by word and deed, in the power of signs and wonders, in the power of the Holy Spirit." It is well to check up on ourselves frequently and review with honesty and care the results of the revelation which came to us when we entered the ministry or took a class in the Bible school or an office in the church.

Restatement

When Paul wrote his restatement of world-wide missions to the Ephesians he was in prison at Rome and his active days were at an end. He reminds the Ephesians that he is in prison on account of his passion to preach the democratic gospel of Christ, and to treat the Gentile as he would the Jew. The Jews hated Paul for his democracy. They had secured his arrest and imprisonment because they charged him with violating their sacred temple rules in taking an uncircumcised Gentile into the temple. Of course the charge was false. But in spirit Paul saw no distinction between Jew and Gentile. The mystery of which he speaks so much in his letters is the open secret to him that God is no respecter of persons or races, that in Christ Gentiles are co-heirs and co-partners in the Promise.

This restatement of his position is the Magna Charta of missions. The religion of Christ is essentially a missionary religion not in the sense of patronage or propaganda but in the sense of brotherhood. It is an ideal which neither the church nor the world has yet realized. The divine secret, as Paul called it, is still hidden from the uninitiated. The real missionary has been initiated. He lives with the pagan on the basis of brotherhood. It is only by this spirit and method that missionary work can succeed.

What Is Religious Education?

By John L. Rae

The second element needed in the improvement of religious education is what we might call the mental or intellectual or academic element. I refer here to departmental organization, courses of study, examinations, graduation, etc. The departments should be so well organized and supervised, the courses of study should be so carefully planned and adapted, the examinations should be so inspiring and helpful, and the graduation should be so dignified and significant that religious education would compare favorably with general education in our public schools and colleges.

The third element in the improvement of religious education is the personal element, and this is the element of highest importance. The teacher is by all odds the king-pin in the whole system of religious education. The equipment may be poor, the courses of study may be conspicuous by the very absence of any graded lessons consecutively planned, and yet the live, wideawake, efficient, consecrated teacher can get wonderful results in the development of the pupils in Christian knowledge, character and conduct. The teacher first of all must be the very embodiment of the things taught. Teacher and truth must be inseparable. In this way the truth will be interpreted not only by the academic process in the class room but by the living process on the street and in the home and in the social circle and wherever the teacher is found. Jesus, the great Teacher, said a significant thing which every one of us who teach should weigh carefully: "For their sakes I sanctify myself." For the sake of the pupil the teacher must always embody the truth in his daily life. The pupil will forget nearly everything the teachers says, but he will never forget what the teacher is.

But the teacher must also know a good deal more than the pupil and know it so well that he can always be free in his teaching to catch the inspiration of the class hour in the presence of his pupils without being hampered with the consciousness of a lesson only half learned. The teacher must know the Bible, and that is saying a good deal more than I have time to say at large; he must know his pupils; he must know the art of teaching. Therefore the teacher must be a student. He must avail himself of every aid within his time and power to become a well-equipped, well-prepared teacher, and then he must teach with all the enthusiasm of play and with all the seriousness of a responsible task.

Old Mrs. Newspaper Makes a Clean Sweep

By Margaret T. Applegarth

OLD Mrs. Newspaper had no more idea that she was really a newspaper than you have that you are a perpendicular biped, for the simple reason that she had never heard of such a thing! She would have said that she was just a poor old sweeper-woman going around from house to house, sweeping it clean: and that is actually all she ever did do; that, and talk. But when a sweeper-woman is the Walking Talking Society Column of a little Hindu town, do consider the news she will have to tell to the shut-in ladies.

For there would sit little Mrs. Silk Merchant on a sofa cushion looking very glum and tired, as anybody would look who had been cooped indoors for four long years with nothing much to look at but a blank wall and a high window and a very glum, cross mother-in-law. In would come Mrs. Newspaper with her broom of twigs and splints; and immediately a bit of the glumness would lift from little Mrs. Silk Merchant's face.

"Well, here you are!" she would cry, clapping her hands until the bracelets tinkled.

"Salaam, my little lady," old Mrs. Newspaper would reply. "Yes, here I am. But I'd have you know I'm not at all the same old woman who came here yesterday morning, for great doings went on in town last night, and there I was right in the front row!"

"Oh, goody-goody!" cried little Mrs. Silk Merchant cheerfully; for after all, she was only fourteen years old and she had been cooped in Mr. Silk Merchant's stupid house for four long years, so this was quite the nicest thing that happened —to have Mrs. Newspaper come to clean!

"Yes," said the sweeper-woman, forgetting to sweep, "it was something to see last night when the white sahib came to town. Can you picture a man with white face and white hands?"

"No, I can't!" breathed the horrified little Mrs. Silk Merchant. "How did the poor man ever fade to such a color? And why did he come to town?"

"He says he came to bring us God."

"Oh dear," sighed little Mrs. Silk Merchant, "another one? We have so many gods already. Is this new one wood or stone? Is it the kind you have on a shelf in your home or the kind they put in the temples where men like my merchant-husband carry offerings?"

Old Mrs. Newspaper swallowed three times in an embarrassed sort of way: "Well now, I find it hard to tell it properly, I'm so old and so stupid, but certainly I heard that man correctly, and certainly he said that this God was already in everybody's heart."

"Oh, stuff and nonsense!" growled the glum mother-in-law. "You don't know what you are talking about. Sweep, woman, sweep! That's your business in life. What does an ignorant old sweeper know about idols, anyhow? And who ever heard of an idol inside a person's heart? You're daft! You're crazy! You're stupid!"

"Maybe I am! Maybe I am!" acknowledged old Mrs. Newspaper sweeping away for dear life. "I'm just telling you the things I heard last night, that's all."

And although little Mrs. Silk Merchant thought it the queerest story she had ever heard in all her fourteen years of life, there sat her mother-in-law in stiff silence, and there swept the sweeper-woman in a cloud of dust, afraid to utter another word.

But all day long as little Mrs. Silk Merchant sat on her cushion looking at the uninteresting blank wall, she never really saw the wall at all, for she was far too busy wondering how in the world a man would look who was white all over. "I fancy the whiteness must stop at his neck and his wrists, don't you think so?" she asked. "I don't suppose any mortal man could live or breathe or move if his arms and his neck and his whole body were white! Wouldn't he be a comical sight—white arms and white feet! I should think being white would hurt. . . ."

"How you babble on and on," snorted her mother-in-law. "You make me wonder anew how my dear exalted son ever had the misfortune to draw such a foolish addle-pated little simpleton as you! Hold your peace, child; you should be ashamed to listen to that old ignorant sweeper-woman. Sweepers are such low caste, brainless people, 'way beneath the notice of a high caste merchant family."

"Yes, but how else would we ever hear what's happening in town if she didn't tell us?" asked little Mrs. Silk Merchant wisely. And her mother-in-law was silenced, for how else would news ever reach such zenana ladies except through the broom of some Mrs. Newspaper?

Therefore, the next morning, they listened eagerly for the patter of Mrs. Newspaper's bare brown feet and for the whisk of her scratchy broom: "Well," they inquired, "did you find out anything new about the God that the white sahib is bringing to town?"

"Indeed I did," said old Mrs. Newspaper, delightedly, "and it's all exactly as I said yesterday. For I went again last night, and oh! the questions I asked! He's a very kind sahib, and he certainly makes it clear. His God is Everybody's God; and Everybody's God is everywhere. He's in my hut. He's in your zenana. He's here now."

"Where?" breathed the two astonished merchant ladies, peering around the dark room in complete surprise.

"In your hearts," answered Mrs. Newspaper softly. She clasped her tired brown hands reverently: "All you've got to do is to say: 'Come into my heart, Everybody's God,' and he will come in; and you will be very happy always."

"Dear me!" cried little Mrs. Silk Merchant, excitedly.

"Stuff and nonsense," quothe old Mrs. Silk Merchant, crossly. "Stick to your sweeping, woman; you've surely got the whole story crooked. Sweep, and keep quiet."

So the old sweeper swept and swept; but the next morning when she came back, her face was shining: "I can sing a song about Everybody's God," she said proudly. "I learned it last night at

Sympathy

I KNOW what the caged bird feels, alas!
When the sun is bright on the upland slopes;
When the wind stirs soft through the springing grass,
And the river flows like a stream of glass;
When the first bird sings and the first bud opes,
And the faint perfume from the chalice steals—
I know what the caged bird feels!

I know why the caged bird beats his wing
Till his blood is red on the cruel bars;
For he must fly back to his perch and cling
When he fain would be on the bough a-swing;
And a pain still throbs in the old, old scars
And they pulse again with a keener sting—
I know why he beats his wing!

I know why the caged bird sings, ah me,
When his wing is bruised and his bosom sore,—
When he beats his bars and would be free;
It is not a carol of joy or glee,
But a prayer that he sends from his heart's deep core,
But a plea, that upward to heaven he flings—
I know why the caged bird sings!

—Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

the meeting. This is the way it goes

"I love to tell the story
Of unseen things above,
Of Jesus and his glory,
Of Jesus and his love,
I love to tell the story
Because I know it's true;
It satisfies my longings
As nothing else would do."

"That's a very nice tune," smiled little Mrs. Silk Merchant, humming it, "just tell me those words once more."

So all through that long stupid day as she sat on her cushion, facing the blank wall, she hummed that little Christian tune, and the blank wall was not a blank wall, for it seemed to be peopled with white sahibs and singing Hindus.

Then on the following day, old Mrs. Newspaper had a story which she remembered about Everybody's God: "I may be a pretty stupid old creature," she admitted, "but I couldn't help but remember this: How once when Everybody's God was here among men he was so tired one day that he sat down by a well, and he was so thirsty that a woman drew some water from the well and gave him some of it to drink. So he talked with her all afternoon about peace in her heart."

"A woman?" asked little Mrs. Silk Merchant. "Do you mean to tell me that Everybody's God talked with a woman?"

"I don't believe it!" said her mother-in-law, crossly. "Just you sweep, you stupid old creature. You can't get things straight, that's sure, for no God would ever waste time on a woman, that's sure."

Old Mrs. Newspaper clasped her broom in her arms: "Oh, but I have gotten this straight, indeed I have! Over and over the white sahib told us how Everybody's God feels toward women exactly as he feels toward men. There is no shadow of difference in his love."

"Dear me," smiled little Mrs. Silk Merchant, "you do hear the nicest things every night, don't you?"

"Entirely too nice to be true," snorted the mother-in-law.

"Maybe it does sound that way," agreed old Mrs. Newspaper, pleasantly, "but all the families where I go to sweep have doubted me just as you doubt me, until some of their men-folks have gone to hear for themselves."

"Well, and did they hear just what you heard?" asked the mother-in-law.

"Yes, they did!" nodded old Mrs. Newspaper. "Oh, there's no doubt that nothing like this has ever come to town before."

"So it seems!" agreed the two poor shut-in ladies. "You just keep your ears wide open, won't you?" they implored. And all afternoon they sat on their cushions humming Mrs. Newspaper's tune and re-telling Mrs. Newspaper's stories. until the first thing any one knew they began to believe every word of it and could hardly wait for her next appearance.

Then one day she came with some really upsetting news: "This will be the last day that I can come to sweep."

"What?" cried both the ladies, broken-hearted to lose their only newspaper. "But how can you possibly stop being a sweeper-woman? Weren't you born into a sweeper family? Mustn't you be a sweeper until you die, therefore? Oh, how dare you stop? How dare you? What will the gods think to see an old sweeper-woman dare to stop sweeping?"

"It's this way," smiled old Mrs. Newspaper serenely, "you see, I have been going from house to house to sweep just as sweeper-women have to do, but I really hardly noticed how interested all you people were getting in the news I brought until, one by one, somebody from these various families began to go to the white sahib to inquire if this story about Everybody's God could possibly be true. An old sweeper-woman had told their wives—of course she probably got it all wrong. But no, it was true! True! True! Every single word of it; and finally so many people came that the white sahib called me to his bungalow. He explained to me that I had a talent for telling news, that Everybody's God could use that talent! So that if I would become a Bible woman I could go from house to house just the same as ever, but not to sweep, just to sit in the zenanas to tell Bible stories as long as people would listen. Wouldn't I like to do this beautiful service for Everybody's God? Of course I said 'Yes.' I am very happy. I did not know I had a talent! Imagine a stupid old creature like me with a talent!"

"But that is a wonderful idea," said the older silk merchant lady. "I invite you now to come and sit in my zenana all day long, every day in the week!"

"Oh, but I don't know enough yet," Mrs. Newspaper objected, "I must go to learn how to be a Bible woman, and then I can come back to sit in your zenana, but only for a little while, because there are so many other people who are hungry for Everybody's God that I couldn't stay all day with you."

"Well, I'm sorry for that; for I've been hungry all my life for happiness such as these new Christians have," said the little mother-in-law.

"I'm hungry too," sighed small Mrs. Silk Merchant.

And I thought that you might love to know how today, through your money and the New World Movement, God is using this Mrs. Newspaper to bring to pass in the lives of India's poor caged women the truth of the Bible verse: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

Letters for You to Share

It always seems to your editor that you ought to have a chance to see some of the letters which come to her desk, both because they are interesting and because they may put new ideas into your head, and also because they may make you want to write also.

Detroit, Nov. 10.

Dear Miss Applegarth,

Do you remember the time you put in the thing about discovering the Baptist world? Well, I tried to guess all those places you misspelled on purpose, and I thought it would be easy because I loved geography best in school. But you twisted the names in a comical way, I had to laugh over "Limawil Yearc" because I simply couldn't guess it. The funny part of it is that you sent me a copy of "The Career of a Cobbler" as a prize for a Young Reserve contest last year, and I certainly ought to know William Carey's name no matter how twisted he is. I hope I will never grow up too old to be a Young Reserve, although mother says she's older but she has the other Chimney Corner page, and so can I. As a matter of fact, I read it now. I read all the love story about "The Home of the Brave," but I think it stopped in an awfully interesting place. You must have a good time with stories. My brother won a $15 prize for a story once, and we hope he's going to be a second Dickens, but just now all he cares for is a radio. Have you got one? Ned made ours, I mean he matched things together from cheap parts. We hear all right though. I read Everyland every month too. . . .

Irma S. Snow.

Denver, Colo., Oct. 17.

Dear Young Reserves,

I am ten years old and I never wrote to you before. I never competed in any of the prizes because I thought I wasn't old enough. I have a dog who won a prize, he has a half of his head white and the other half brown. He is very nice to play with, but he chews things up. He chews rubbers and gloves, but he is sorry about it when you scold him. I read the story about Mrs. Ingalls' Iron Dog and I knew that my Scamp would never do what her dog did, but then we have no heathen to convert in Denver either. I live with my grandfather. He takes THE BAPTIST all the time. I have climbed Pike's Peak. No more for now as you may get tired of reading this pink paper. It belongs to my sister but she kindly let me have it for such a good cause. I must stop now. Tredlow E. Turner.

And last, but not least, Young Reserves, we have had a poem written to us! Yes indeed we have! It came signed by E. A. Armstrong, eleven years old, of Springfield, Mass. Whether "E. A." is a boy or a girl we know not, but we enjoyed the verse:

"I read THE BAPTIST every day
Our page grows better every way
Because I like the stories here
I can't wait till they appear
And so I wrote this little verse
To hope THE BAPTIST won't grow worse."

BIBLE PASSAGES WE SHOULD MEMORIZE AND WHY

By Guy C. Crippen

A few weeks ago I attended the graduation exercises in the primary department of our Sunday school. One number on the program interested me exceedingly and gave me no little satisfaction; it was the recitation of scripture verses by the graduating class. I wondered how many adults in our churches could repeat accurately between twenty-five and thirty different verses. Can you? Try it.

Of course some one will rise up at this point and inquire, "If one knows in a general way what is in the Bible, what advantage is there in memorizing verses or passages?" In answer to that question will you consider the following points:

1. There is a cultural advantage in familiarity with the Bible and especial value in knowing it so well that one holds its very words in mind. The Bible is the most widely purchased, read and quoted book of all literature. Writers, dramatists, lecturers, teachers and orators refer to it more frequently than to any other body of literature. Master musicians and painters have gone to it for their themes. To understand the great works of art, to know what men are speaking and writing about, one must know the Bible. And really to know the Bible one must hold vast portions of it in mind.

2. There is a distinct spiritual advantage in storing the memory with Bible verses and passages. To us who believe, the Bible is the Word of Life. It contains precept, promise, example, exhortation and command for mankind's spiritual needs. This Word of Life is not something to be read and then laid aside. If it is to function in the making of life, it must enter into life by way of the mind and heart. Its truths must be absorbed and expressed. Memory holds the words while the heart digests the truth. Who has not found new beauty and meaning in passages long held in memory?

Memorized verses also serve special occasions. Here is a person who is tempted to do evil and is strengthened to resist by an appropriate verse. Another discouraged and disheartened by adversity is lifted and gladdened by a promise or word of exhortation. Or perhaps one is in the midst of heartbreaking sorrow, when lo! comes like sweet balm some passage fragrant with comfort and sympathy. All of us sooner or later have these experiences and blessed is he whose memory is so enriched by the Word of Life that in the greatest danger or the keenest pain the right verse or passage will come like a ready friend to his aid.

But what portions of the Bible should one memorize? Here are a few suggestions which of course do not cover all the verses and passages a well-informed Christian ought to know: Exodus 20:1-17; Psalms 1, 19, 23, 24, 27, part of 42, 46, 90, 91, 103, 119 (Aleph & Beth), 121; selections from Isaiah 40, 51, 53, 55; Micah 6:6-8; Malachi 3:7-10; Matthew 5-7; 25: 31-46; Luke 10:25-37; parts of John 1, 3, 10, 14, 15; Acts 2:1-7, 38-42; 8:26-39; Romans 5:1-8; 8:12-17, 35-39; 12:1-2; I Cor. 12:27 to 13:13; Philippians 3:7-16; 4:4-7, 8-13,19.

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

Detroit—In connection with the local union study of the November topic of the Christ-Centered Program, "How We Got Our Bible," William L. Mainland, president of the B. Y. P. U. of Detroit, has succeeded in arranging with the Detroit public library commission for two special Bible exhibits which are proving of great help in making the meetings with this as a theme most interesting and instructive. One exhibit is a glass-encased collection of about fifty old Bibles from the oldest procurable down to that of modern usage. The other is a collection of about fifty books dealing with the subject which may be taken out for reading by B. Y. P. U. members in the regular way. In addition to having individual members inspect the exhibit, which is at the main library, local union leaders have also been encouraged to arrange to visit in groups on Sunday afternoons if possible with their pastor or educational director accompanying them.

In the recent Bible and Missionary Conference held in Detroit the B. Y. P. U. took an important part. A young people's committee was created with the City B. Y. P. U. president as chairman and this committee directed the cooperation of young people's committees in each church with their local registration chairman in canvassing the youth of the church for registrations, directed a city-wide distribution of posters, promoted the conferences in general and especially Tuesday, "Young People's Night," when the City B. Y. P. U. had charge of the first half-hour on the program and at which there were about 400 B. Y. P. U. members in attendance.

Cleveland—Prior to the Bible and Missionary conferences held in Cleveland, the B. Y. P. U. of Cleveland Association sent visitors from their ranks to every society during the month of October. The conference speakers and programs were announced, and early registrations were urged. Two or more members of each society served in the registration and publicity committees for their own churches. The "B. Y." organization had a representative on these committees for the city wide work. Our annual fall rally was held on Tuesday, Oct. 30, the night preceding the conference. The speaker was Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, president of the B. Y. P. U. of A. In this way the young people were given an opportunity to start the week right and make it a real "Baptist Week in Cleveland." On Oct. 31 the pageant "On Trial" was presented and many of the young people took part. It was an impressive program and one that every one present is still thinking about. The Bible and Missionary conferences have given new inspiration to go "Forward with Christ."

"That Race!" is the title of an interesting paragraph on the B. Y. P. U. page of the Georgia Christian Index. "When we met in Atlanta June 21-23 we set as one of our aims for the year to organize and report to the state office 366 new unions. This, you see, was an aim of one for every day in the leap year. By count there have been 133 days to pass since we met in Atlanta. During this period the number of new unions reported to the state office is 188. Do you know a more interesting bit of news than this?"

Marion County Federation of Baptist Young People, Indiana, held its second rally this fall on Monday, Nov. 26. Judge C. J. Orbison spoke on the subject, "Young People and Present-day Problems." The more than 500 young people who heard him and joined in the songs and yells were unanimous in their decision that they had a good time.

The annual Memphis city-wide training school, according to the Reflector, was held the third week of October in the First Baptist Church. It proved to be one of the best held there in recent years. On Monday night Rev. J. C. McCoy led the devotional period—the Central Church put on a stunt between class periods depicting the needs of a B. Y. P. U., and Dr. T. W. Gayer brought the evening address on "The Product of the B. Y. P. U." During the following nights other churches had charge of special features. On Tuesday night Mr. E. E. Lee spoke on "Giving." The Wednesday evening address was delivered by Mr. Frank H. Leavell, his subject being "My Observations in the Holy Land." Dr. John L. Hill came from Nashville to give the consecration message Thursday evening. The closing night address on "Giving Our Talents," was delivered by Dr. Harry Clark

Oregon Letter

By Leonard W. Riley

Nearly two decades have now passed since Dr. Alexander Blackburn returned East from the White Temple and the writer became his successor as the Oregon correspondent for The Standard, then under the able editorship of Dr. J. Spencer Dickerson. For a decade and a half it was his pleasure to endeavor to keep the eastern readers of that paper informed concerning their brethren in Oregon. At the request of the editor of The Baptist, this responsibility is again assumed.

The task is more difficult today than it was ten or fifteen years ago. The Pacific Baptist was then in the field and quite largely furnished the basis of the letters written. Dr. C. A. Wooddy was superintendent of missions, covering the whole Pacific Coast and serving as medium of communication between the various convention fields. He, too, was a fruitful source of information concerning our pastors and churches and the movements of the denomination. These connecting links are no more. There is a question in the minds of some as to whether the present situation without either a coast paper or a coast superintendent ministers to the interests of our cause as well as it was done in those days.

Great Changes

Those were the days of small things compared with the present. Our population has rapidly increased. Church buildings with few exceptions were pitifully inadequate and cost but a few thousands apiece. Today church buildings are everywhere going up at a cost of anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000 and in a few cases very much more. Pipe organs, chimes, swimming pools, splendid Bible school equipment are no longer unknown in our western churches. Transportation facilities show marked improvement. Roads with mud to the hubs have given way to hard surfaced roads leading in every direction. Contributions are counted by the thousands and the tens of thousands instead of by the hundreds and thousands. We had good men in those days and we have good men today. They labored under tremendous difficulties in those days; they labor under more trying circumstances today. Sacrifices were necessary then; they are still quite necessary. It took genuine men to succeed then and it takes real men to deliver the goods today. The Lord is still looking for those whose hearts are perfect toward him and still occasionally he finds them.

There is but one man today in the same position which he held when the writer came to Oregon in the spring of 1901. Rev. Jacob Kratt, is still the greatly beloved pastor of the First German Baptist Church of Portland. He has wrought a good work. He has been a source of strength in the city during the period of its growth from 90,000 to more than 300,000 population. Every other position in the state has meanwhile held various and sundry occupants. The results of his labors compare quite favorably with those of men who have constantly travelled hither and thither. Meanwhile he has rooted himself in the affections and confidence of a people and a city in a way which yields rewards which the itinerants are never permitted to enjoy.

The Bible and Missionary Conference

This conference was held at the White Temple, Portland, Nov. 7-9. The team was composed of Dr. F. W. Padelford, leader; Dr. W. H. Main, Dr. Frank Peterson, Rev. Thomas Moody, Miss May Huston, Miss Mabelle McVeigh, Miss Alice Brimson, Miss Ina E. Burton, Mr. Corwin S. Shank, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and other local speakers. The attendance reached 850, there being 722 paid registrations. Doctor Padelford stated that this was the largest conference held thus far. It exceeded all our expectations. The conference secretary was Rev. R. H. Moorman, pastor of the First Church, Cheyenne, Wyoming. The chairman of the general committee was Mr. Fred G. Leary. With few exceptions all the churches of the state were represented. The spirit was most excellent. The addresses by both the local and the visiting speakers would have done credit to a Northern Baptist Convention. The vision of the world situation and the responsibility which rests upon us as followers of Jesus Christ could hardly have been more clearly and forcefully presented. If all these conferences prove as successful as the one held in Portland, we may expect the last year of our five-year program to round out the New World Movement in a most commendable way.

Hoosier Who's Whos

By U. M. McGuire

Indiana had one of the Northern Baptist Convention's Bible and missionary conferences Nov. 14-16, at Indianapolis. "Team 3," the group of men and women who filled the program included Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, home secretary, A. B. F. M. S.; Dr. Emory W. Hunt, president, Bucknell University; Dr. W. A. Hill, secretary, department of missionary education; Mrs. George W. Coleman, president, W. A. B. H. M. S.; Dr. C. L. White, executive secretary, A. B. H. M. S.; Mrs. Nathan R. Wood, vice-president, W. A. B. F. M. S.; Dr. Douglas Haring, missionary to Japan; Dr. C. M. Dinsmore, general superintendent, Indiana State Convention; Mr. E. H. Rhoades of Cleveland, representing the laymen's movement, and Dr. Frederick A. Agar, "everybody's efficiency expert." For two days these prophets of the kingdom saturated the crowd with Bible expositions, addresses on the theory and practice of Baptist world service, conferences, luncheons—all the known devices for getting into the minds, hearts and stomachs of the saints with a view to an ampler life and cooperation.

And the crowd was on hand to see, hear, eat, enjoy and catch inspiration. Enrolment ran up to about 700, not counting the unregistered attendance. Originally it was thought that the main appeal of the conference would be made to the people of "the Indianapolis area," with a radius of ten miles. But an effort was also made to enlist attendance from a fifty-mile radius. When the counting was done, it was found that the outer radius had contributed a third of the attendance, and groups had come from churches 100 miles distant.

The conference is to be followed up by "echo luncheons," associational conferences and church institutes throughout the state. Superintendent Dinsmore has already enlisted nearly fifty pastors who will be ready upon call to assist in putting this program through.

Much praise is due to the Rev. Robert I. Wilson of Pittsburgh, the conference secretary, who performed the drudgery of working up and organizing the conference. For the intelligent direction, energy, insight, tact, courtesy, winsomeness and all that, his praise is in the mouths of all who came into contact with him. He had a difficult job, and right well he performed it. Indiana covets him.

The Building Boom

About the time the press is humming over this copy, the writer expects to be humming an equally joyous note over the matter of this paragraph. It has to do with Anderson. During the week of Nov. 25-Dec. 2, the Rev. E. Laurens Hamilton, pastor of the church there (by the way, a lineal descendant of Alexander Hamilton) will be carrying through a dedicatory program to celebrate the completion of a new house of worship costing about $100,000. This writer, who has been invited to participate in the program, organized that church as a little mission thirty-one years ago. Now, Anderson is one of the best churches in Indiana, and imagine the joy of sitting in that splendid temple in reminiscent dreams.

A building boom is characteristic of the era through which Indiana Baptists are now passing. Churches just completed or in process of construction include Temple, Emerson Avenue and Thirty-first Street, in Indianapolis; Anderson, Newcastle, Goshen, Bloomfield, Greencastle, Tell City and others. And all are building architecturally and educationally modern houses. The day of building merely rectangular shelters is over in this part of the world. One of the principal factors of this remarkable development is the Rev. Silas G. Huntington, a genius in church financing. Personally, in all of his rangy length and unique pulchritude, he is a Hoosier of the very soil and spirit, and utterly indispensable. During the last year his financial campaigns have added to the local church treasuries between $300,000 and $400,000.

Not a little of the credit for adaptability, beauty and economy in the new Baptist buildings is due to Mr. C. E. Bacon, who as consulting architect, has placed a high technical skill at the service of the churches.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

The Associations

During the past ten days a team of the state convention workers headed up by Superintendent LeGrand has been making the round of the state, attending the fall meetings of the associations. Two things were in mind. First, to reorganize the associations on the basis of their new alignment, and second, to re-echo the messages of the state convention and try to arouse interest in the New World Movement campaign. The associations from now on will have their meetings in the fall, and have been somewhat changed by the new arrangement. It is hoped that they have been strengthened. The reports indicate that good meetings have been held, and that they have been fairly attended by the churches.

Young People's Convention

The Fox River Valley Young People's Association met with the First Church of Oshkosh, Nov. 3-4. A large representation of young people was present from the various churches. The attendance was estimated at 200. The speakers the first day were A. L. Drake of Waukesha, E. M. Salter of Appleton, and E. W. Palmer of Berlin. Keith Alcorn, president of the Young People's Convention was present and gave an inspiring message to the gathering Sunday evening, H. W. Bardenwerper gave an illustrated address. Pastor E. G. Mintz preached the sermon Sunday morning on "The Lure of the Unattained." Those who were present speak of it as one of the outstanding meetings of the fall.

Conventions, Et Cetera

Speaking of conventions there seems to be a feeling among many of the brethren up this way that we are being "conferenced" and "conventioned" to death. Within a period of six weeks the Milwaukee Baptists have been called upon to attend four rallies, conferences, conventions, etc. Preceding those there have been several setting-up gatherings, all of which have taken time of pastors and leaders. What seems to be needed more than anything else is an opportunity for local churches and the leaders of the local churches and organizations to work out plans and programs which will promote the efficiency of the local church and the organizations within the church. As it is, about the time we get ready for some constructive work in the local church we are urged to side-track it in the interests of a larger gathering which in no way tends to promote the efficiency of the local church but which may be very important for other interests. The question pastors are asking is this, "What is my job? Is it always to have in mind the denominational task and make all the work of the local church head up in that direction, or is it to make the local church strong, and thereby make the denomination strong?" Let a wise man answer this for there are many who would like to know.

Week Day School

The First Church of Waukesha is starting a week-day school in religious education. The school is under the direction of Pastor Drake who has had ten years of teaching experience. He has two assistants. For the present the work is being done with the fourth, fifth and sixth grades, for one hour a week, meeting on school time. The enrolment at present is about thirty-five, of which one-half have never been connected with the Sunday school of the Baptist church, or any other Sunday school for that matter.

Other Notes

Dr. Henry Clarke, formerly pastor of the First Church of Racine, is open to supply such churches as may need a preacher for a Sunday or for a number of Sundays. At present he is supplying the First Church of Janesville, while they await the coming of a pastor to succeed Raymond Pierson. The church is looking forward to the securing of a brother who was formerly a pastor in this state.

Edwin Aubrey of Kingston, Pa., has accepted the call to the pastorate of the First Church of Dodgeville. He is highly recommended as a scholarly and forceful preacher, a devoted pastor and as being interested in denominational lines by a resolution of the ministers' conference of Wilkes-Barre.

Chas. E. Bowen of Spring Valley, Ill., has been called to the pastorate of the churches at Whitehall and Blair. He is of Wisconsin stock and comes from an old Baptist family.

The Milwaukee Baptist pastors and their wives recently dined together as the guests of the North Avenue Church. This is one of the ways by which the pastors of this city keep up their fellowship.

Our Baptist Women

God bless them! Let us also bless them. They deserve full appreciation and constant backing, especially when they back us so superbly. I wish every Baptist man could have seen 800 of them in Ford Hall at their "Loyalty luncheon." Our men need to feel the solid impact of their unity, and indomitable purpose as expressed in their remarkable assembly. They know how to assemble better than men. They have no fiascos. Things are planned, purposed, worked out beforehand, and each woman in the groups from over 200 churches has been buttonholed, and filled with the purpose of the assembly, long before it assembles.

When they are gathered they are like connected units waiting for the spark. There is energy, precision, heat, light, moral enthusiasm and spiritual inspiration. The sisterhood greatly influences the brotherhood. So it was in the nature of things for the men to come in the evening. Was it in obedience to wise command? Do the men generally exceed the women in obedience? Are they supple in following the example of the women? When you look over these 800 women at their "Loyalty luncheon" such queries come pelting in. Anyhow to touch this live wire is a rare opportunity to well meaning "men folks."

Leadership and an Objective

The women look responsive, and hungry for a definite objective. With Lucy W. Peabody and Helen Barrett Montgomery among their leaders, this is easily accounted for. They usually know what the women ought to want, and just how they can get it. "Save America!" is the slogan. And they mean it. If America is saved perhaps the women will have to do it. The men are too busy saving the politicians. There is something snappy about Lady Astor's dictum: "I don't say the women will change the world, but I do say that they can if they want to." Think of eighty such "Loyal-y luncheons"; and the innumerable 'echo luncheons" covering the country! Evidently the women "want to," and ire just beginning. What wonder that when the "might boxes" were opened, ibout $5,000 appeared!

There was a great deal packed into in afternoon and evening. Plenty of eal fellowship, intimate and kindling peeches, responsiveness quick and joy-us, and a pageant thronged with ani-nated young people. With all these Loyal luncheons and their "echoes" verywhere, our women will give a trong impetus to a plan of far-reaching urpose and achievement.

Mrs. Alvah Hovey

The recent passing of Mrs. Hovey in er ninety-second year, will bring tender nd grateful memories, especially to hose who recall her and her husband n the years of their largest service. hey were a noble and talented couple, lways devoting their rare powers to he highest interests of the kingdom. frs. Hovey, entirely apart from her lentification with an illustrious Baptist cholar, had the qualities of mind and pirit that gave her a distinctive place n our Baptist councils and movements. he was virtually the mother of our Voman's Foreign Mission Society, eing the first to rally and lead in that ork which was so destined to grow. lothing in Christian privilege, obliga-on, or mercy, was foreign to her. Hers as a large and influential consecration, nd it found full and winsome expres-on. She blessed the churches, she elped to develop the Baptist hospital, ie was a power in the "Seminary on ie Hill." The passing generations of udents felt her strong and gracious mpathy and support, and many a mis-onary and minister will recall her now ith grateful and brimming eyes. Truly frs. Hovey was a "mother in our rael!"

Arlington

The First Church in Arlington is gorously expanding. Dr. Henry S. otter is an able leader with large work-g power. In directing and developing is strong church he has as an asso-ate Rev. G. F. Currier of the middle ass at Newton, who assists in teach-g and in parish activities. Strong ngregations both morning and eve-ng are the rule. The Sunday school reatens, by its rapid growth, to de-and an annex to the church plant. The ening of a large estate nearby, will d nearly 100 dwellings, making Arling-n more like a city than a quiet, burban town. There are constant ins by incoming families, and by bap-ms.

Sermon Tasting

The noon day sermons at Kings apel afford a welcome opportunity of mpling preachers to those who are so posed. You get an impression that ere are different brands of modern eaching. Many sects are selected m, but no sectarianism appears. And ere are different brands of modernism. ie brand has the journalistic manner. is "paragraphy," dexterous, suggestive of cartoons, and scareheads. Yet it has a smooth surface of grace and propriety —not out of form in the high pulpit. We've had nothing yet so modern as Jesus was. Nothing provocative of mob violence or crucifixion. Curious how long it is taking us to catch up with the Original Modernist.

The First Church

Not for years has the First Church, Boston, faced so encouraging an outlook. The recent annual roll call was a happy and hopeful occasion. All the reports were gratifying, and described a busy and achieving church. It was a new experience to have no deficit reported, and financially to see nothing but the bright side. Doctor De Blois diffused a well grounded optimism, and made the gathering an infusion of courage and hope. The field of the First Church is far from an easy one. Any sign that the Back Bay has possibilities for evangelical religion is heartening. But they are being found and firmly seized upon. Doctor De Blois never preached so well as now. His evening sermons are gripping growing congregations. Student-pastor Fetter, with well directed and varied activities, is enlisting a large following of young men and women from what might be called the "Student District" of Boston. It is good to see and feel young life in the old church.

Social Unions in Ford Hall

The proof that Ford Hall is ideal for large banquets is found in the fact that it is regularly used by the social unions and clubs of the other denominations. It is a popular and spacious forum that invites a widely variant constituency. Solid and compelling oratory comes when the Congregationalists and Methodists bring on their great spellbinders, but for pungency, sparkle, spice, and range of hard hitting, we will have to yield the palm to Coleman's "Ford Hall Folks," who pack the spaces every Sunday night, and put the noble hall to its fullest use.

Burma Letter

By J. Herbert Cope

It has been a remarkable year in Burma as in other countries. They say there were more business failures than in any previous year. The rains have been unprecedented. Floods have been bad. In the delta dikes are built to keep the river in its proper channel. But the heavy rains resulting in high water burst them in places and thousands of acres of rich paddy land have been flooded. It is estimated that 50,000 houses have been partially or wholly wrecked, that 20,000 people were without food, and miles and miles of road and railroad destroyed. Fortunately in this country of warmth and easy living the rebuilding will not take long. There have been earthquakes, although no damage has been done.

Doctor Hanson is reporting the completion of the revision of the Kachin New Testament, the first printing having been done some ten years ago. And that reminds one of the work done by the Burma mission in Bible translation. One may well be proud of the results. Beginning with the pillars — Judson, Mason, Cushing and Brayton—the work has been carried on by others and the end is not yet. Of the fourteen million people of Burma with their many dialects and languages a mere handful of people only are unable to read the scriptures in their mother tongue. Judson's work is the first and greatest. It is being revised now and the New Testament is complete. Then Mason gave the Sgaw Karens the entire Bible and Doctor Brayton did the same for the Po Karens. Although there are a mere handful of Shan Christians they have the Word of God in their own tongue. Hanson's work in Kachin has just been mentioned. Mr. Halliday is pushing his work in Talain to a conclusion. A Karen missionary has translated the entire New Testament in the Lahu where there are thousands of Christians although it is not yet printed. A missionary in China is working in Lisu, one of the Kachins dialects which work we are using. In one hill station Gospels have been translated into three dialects and the entire New Testament is finished in one of

Theme
THE BIBLE
REMAKING THE ORIENT

Purpose
The earthquake in Japan has made large areas of the Far East practically Bibleless. Thousands of Bible printing plates in 25 languages and dialects used in Yokohama have been totally destroyed. They must be replaced at once or the whole missionary program will be seriously handicapped.

Need
The American Bible Society needs immediately $289,000 with which to make good the actual losses, to say nothing of the enlarged opportunities.

Responsibility
is definitely upon the Churches of America, whose agency for Bible work in the Far East is the American Bible Society.

Opportunity
is one of unusual significance and every Pastor, Sunday School Superintendent and Young People's leader should utilize Bible Sunday on December 9th (or nearest convenient date) for the promotion of interest in the distribution of the Scriptures in Japan and the Far East.

them. Doctor Henderson is, I believe, at work on the New Testament in one of the dialects spoken in the Shan States. I know of but one missionary in Burma working in a distinct race who has no scripture to aid him and his people are becoming Burmanized so fast that a separate translation is not necessary. In all there are about a dozen languages into which the Word has been translated in whole or in part by the Burma mission.

One of the saddest things to record is the sudden death of Mrs. Woodbury of Kachinland. Four days after the birth of her third little one she passed away suddenly one night before aid of any kind could be summoned. It was her first term and both she and her husband were so happy in their work. The hearts of all will go out to the husband and father and the three little ones.

They say two families are coming to Burma this year, the single ladies I do not know. It is a pitiably small force. They will be welcomed royally and we hope for more next year.

The Curries have had to go home from the college. They have made an enviable reputation there and will be greatly missed.

RHODE ISLAND

The Pawtucket Church loaned its pastor, Raymond W. Cooper, to the Mt. Pleasant Church, Providence, to conduct a two weeks' evangelistic campaign which closed Nov. 11. Thirty-eight persons asked for baptism and many were reconsecrated. Mr. Cooper endeavored to be a help to sinners, edify the saints and rejoice the pastor. Rev. Elmer E. Loux is the able pastor of this live church, and a group of earnest workers are behind him.

MASSACHUSETTS

Calvary Church, A. W. Jefferson, pastor, was organized two years ago through the union of the Free and Second Baptist churches of Lawrence and a building enterprise immediately begun. Through the courtesy of the mayor, the City Hall was first used as a place for meeting, later, the First Baptist and Trinity Congregational churches graciously opened their doors. For nearly a year union services have been held with these churches. Although Calvary Church has thus been for many months without a house of worship of its own, it has maintained the finest spirit of loyalty and devotion. A practical demonstration of its morale was shown on Sunday evening, Nov. 11. The Second Baptist Church School had for many years celebrated its founding with an anniversary thank offering. Since the union the date has been changed to commemorate that signal event. The contribution this year far exceeded any previous record. All the departments and organized classes made credible showing. Even the cradle roll helped to swell the grand total of $5,900.00. The church is expending about $175,000 in the erection of its new edifice. The building is especially adapted to the work of a large and growing church school and is modern in every appointment. It is hoped that it will be ready for occupancy by the first of the year and plans are under way for a most aggressive church work.

NEW YORK

The Protestant Teachers' Association and the Brooklyn Federation of Churches have opened a Week Day School of Religion at the Central Y. M. C. A., Brooklyn. Eight-five children attended the first children's hour and enjoyed a motion picture Bible story of "Israel's release from Egyptian bondage."

The First Church of Poughkeepsie, Clarence Hill Frank, minister, has set aside Sunday, Dec. 2, for "home day services." Dr. Howard B. Grose will preach at the morning service.

Dr. John A. Lichty, a leading physician of Pittsburgh, and a prominent member of the Baptist Church in that city, and a trustee of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y., on Nov. 15 was installed superintendent of the Clifton Springs Sanitarium, founded by the late Dr. Henry Foster. Dr. Lichty, who was professor of medicine at the University of Pittsburgh and medical chief of the staff of Mercy Hospital and Columbia Hospital, Pittsburgh, was a former member of the sanitarium staff, and has been a trustee of the institution for several years. Other members of the board of trustees are Dr. J. H. Franklin, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Frank Mason North, New York, and Bishop Charles H. Brent, Bishop William Burt, Buffalo, N. Y.

Sunday, Nov. 11 was a memorable day in the history of Calvary Church of Syracuse. It was the first anniversary of the coming of the pastor, Rev. W. S. Terrell, from Haddonfield, N. J. At the morning hour Mr. Terrell baptized nine persons, seven adults and two boys in the middle teens. At the communion service which followed, said to have been the largest in the history of the church, Pastor Terrell gave the hand of fellowship to thirty-two. At the evening hour other churches of the seventeenth ward united with Calvary in an Armstice Day service. Pastor Terrell spoke on the church and the present world crisis and Prof. Thomas B. Crafer, of Syracuse University, on America's obligation to the world. Calvary is the nearest Baptist church to Syracuse University with its 8,000 students, and under Pastor Terrell it is making every possible effort to discharge its responsibility to the university group. A college class has been organized in the church school and the church has established a collegiate membership open to students.

ILLINOIS

Rev. W. H. Cossum, a missionary to China for many years, is on his new field as pastor of the Ravenswood Church, Chicago.

Evangelists Hoskins and Fleming closed a series of meetings at Mt. Vernon, Nov. 25. There have been a number of conversions and an awakened interest in church work. Nov. 27-Dec. 23 Mr. Hoskins and Mr. Fleming are conducting services at Princeton, Ind.

The First Church of White Ha closed a special campaign of three weeks ending Nov. 18, which is the most telling revival ever held in this church and community for the spiritual depth and consecration manifest. The building was filled to capacity night after night, and at some services many were turned away. Pastor L. E. Ellison proved himself to be an evangelist of spiritual force and devotion. He was ably assisted by Rev. Harry Clarke, Baptist preacher and gospel singer rom the Moody Bible Institute. Some ighty souls were born again, or restored o the joy of their salvation. This meet- ng is marked by the fact that so many of hose saved are adults. Several young eople dedicated their lives to definite serv- ce and the church will send three away to chool. The men's Bible class of 150 mem- ers is a strong force for strength and plift to these men converts.

OHIO

In cooperation with the department of vangelism of the Ohio Convention, the irst Church of Gallipolis, together with en other churches in the Pomeroy Asso- iation, held simultaneous evangelistic eetings for twelve days. The pastor of he Gallipolis church was assisted by Dr. . R. Stark of Cambridge, who brought spiring messages night after night. There ere a large number who made professions f faith. The church was quickened and nriched. The pastor baptized eight at the st prayer service, and others will follow baptism. Rev. Robert W. Peirce, is com- leting his fifth year as pastor of the Gal- polis Church.

MICHIGAN

The fact that Rev. W. L. Sharp, pas- or at Coldwater, is temporarily giving sychology instruction at Hillsdale col- ge three mornings a week until a per- anent instructor is secured, has led to report of his resignation of the Cold- ater pastorate. The Coldwater Baptist ulpit is not vacant and Mr. Sharp has ot resigned.

KANSAS

The James Rayburn evangelistic party f Newton held union revival meetings in offeyville for four weeks. There were everal hundred conversions and reconse- rations; 110 cards for membership in the irst Church were signed. At the close f the service on the Sunday evening fol- wing the revival 110 new members had en received into the Baptist church. Mr. arl Riney is in his second year as pastor this church. Two hundred and sixty- x members have been received during his astorate. The church work in all depart- ents is going ahead in a splendid way.

OKLAHOMA

COLORADO

Rev. Walter I. Fowle enters on his second year as pastor of First Church, Greeley, with many encouraging signs. One hundred persons united with the church during the year. The church rejoiced in the largest Sunday school and largest gifts to missions in its history. Miss Minnie Bush has been employed as church missionary and is being blessed in her labors. The church released Doctor Fowle for one month that he might be secretary for the Seattle Bible and missionary conference. During his absence able supplies and redoubled efforts on the part of the church workers kept the work going in a large way, ready for a good advance on the pastor's return.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

On Friday evening, Nov. 30, the West Washington State Convention secretary, Dr. J. F. Watson, recently returned from the Baptist World Alliance meeting, and a tour of Europe, lectured relative thereto in the First Church of Spokane, by the joint invitation of the Spokane B. Y. P. U.'s, Dr. J. N. Garst, minister of the First Church, and Dr. A. H. Bailey, secretary of the East Washington-North Idaho Baptist Convention. This occasion was planned in harmony with and as a booster for the more successful observance of Dec. 2 as "Baptist day," which is the beginning of the adopted plan for the successful completion of the New World Movement.

Many Are Open!

Years ago we used to pray for wide-open doors for missionary endeavor, especially in the newly entered Spanish-American fields. Today our prayers have been answered for doors stand everywhere ajar.

But Few Are Entered!

Unfortunately we cannot take advantage of all the new opportunities in these lands. Someone must push open the door which stands ajar and that costs money.

MEXICO

Our splendid school in Pueblo makes gratifying progress. Equally good work is being done in Monterey, our oldest school in Mexico, but it is housed in a rented, inconvenient, unattractive building. Here a new building and the enlargement of our small school in Mexico City as well as other day schools in connection with our stronger churches, represent Mexico's pressing needs if the open doors are to be entered.

PORTO RICO

The reduction in the number of missionaries and teachers has had a serious effect on the work. The remaining workers are carrying a double load. Two stations today have no American missionaries, where work was in full swing two years ago before the 25% cut. Another missionary has had to leave because of broken health.

CENTRAL AMERICA

Our school in Managua is the best in the republic, but it should be enlarged and its curriculum extended to high school subjects. In Santa Ana pupils are turned away because of lack of room. A strong school is needed in San Salvador with a normal missionary training department for men and women. Because of untrained leadership, the work is retarded, yet the opportunities are unlimited.

How important do you consider the responsive readings in your church? RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES supplies a need long experienced. Rev. C. They are too long and are selected with so little consideration for appropriateness that I have felt something better ought to be provided. I like very much not only the selections of RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES, but also the topics, which greatly facilitate the securing of appropriate and timely readings." THE LARGEST OF THE chain of Loyalty luncheons was that in Los Angeles, Wednesday, Nov. 14, at the Elite, with an overflow at Hotel Clark, over 800 women in all being present. Mrs. M. Grant Edmands, president of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Southern California, presided at the Elite, and Mrs. Richard E. Day, first vice-president, presided at the Clark. The World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade each had its table. The team from national headquarters who spoke were Miss Ina E. Burton, organization secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society; Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, foreign secretary of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society; Miss Alice S. W. Brimson, Christian Americanization secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society; Miss Helen W. Monroe, formerly at the Mary L. Colby School for Girls in Yokohama, and Miss Louise Carter from Central America, principal of the Baptist school for girls at Santa Ana, El Salvador. At the speakers' tables were many of the state and district officers, among them Mrs. John E. Scott, honorary president of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. In the evening Mrs. Edmands announced a continuation campaign offering from the women of Southern California, for the first six months of the fiscal year of over $28,110, towards the $80,000 which is the year's quota.

Bishop Edgar Blake, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, after visiting Russia, felt that it was the wise thing to encourage the "Living Church" which has come out of the old Orthodox Church body. He pledged fifty odd thousand dollars for the education of a ministry in Russia. At the annual meeting of the board of Methodist foreign missions that body refused to cooperate officially in the raising of Bishop Blake's fund. Editor L. O. Hartman, of Zion's Herald, concurred in Bishop Blake's pledge and the editor and the bishop say that their pledge will be met. The bishop reports that he knows where $27,000 of the amount now is.

The Home Mission Society has under appointment 891 missionaries including 288 teachers in the mission schools and colleges in the United States and Latin North America. There are 163 missionaries speaking twenty languages, distributed in thirty-one states and 110 cities with forty-seven English speaking pastors and eighteen workers in nineteen Christian centers. Twenty-two general evangelists carry forward the work of the department of evangelism throughout the Northern Baptist Convention. The colporter-missionaries under joint appointment of the Mission Society and the Publication Society number fifty-two; chapel car missionaries, seven. The work of the Home Mission Society has been established definitely in Jamaica and Haiti.

Our Methodist friends are by no means a unit in the matter of Methodist work in Russia. Bishop Nuelsen, Bishop Blake and others have brought back reports from that country which have led to a movement to secure considerable sums of money as designated gifts for that work. Several of the Advocate favor and several oppose the movement. The Pacific Advocate in a recent issue says: "Our own thought is that the Methodist Episcopal Church ought not to stress direct missionary work at present except perhaps to put in a few institutional churches in strategic centers modeled after the Good Will industries in this country and the Jerusalem church at Copenhagen. The direct securing of church members might well fall to the Baptists, who are providentially strong. The editor then quotes from THE BAPTIST concerning the rapid growth of our Baptist work in Russia and adds, "With the Methodist sort of evangelicalism percolating down from the top and the Baptist brand coming up from beneath there is bound to be something doing spiritually in the erstwhile land of the Czar." What does the editor mean by evangelicalism "percolating down" and "coming up?"

e Constructive Revolution of Jesus, by Samuel Dickey. New York: Doran. $1.60.

In the flood of books dealing with the achings of Jesus and with social ques-ns, now and then a volume of unusual rit and original thinking appears. is is the case here. The author recog-es fully the revolutionary nature of sus' message and idea, that Jesus ex-cted the passing of the old social or-r with its selfishness and injustice, d the coming of a new order called kingdom of God. His idea implies transformation of the unbrotherly nomic organization of society into w structures which shall embody the nciples of universal love.

The author follows Jesus in the con-te situations of his day and in rela-n to different parties and problems t he met. He endeavors, first, to d the attitude of Jesus, and in this he covers the truth revealed and the rse suggested. The author considers h questions as these: "Jesus and the rties of His Day;" "Jesus and the saic Law;" "Jesus and Rome;" sus and the Economic Order of His y." It is a book of careful scholar-p, of fine insight, of real courage and gressive spirit. It ranks beside the t books of our day on these vital jects. The book may be most heart-commended to all who would know at Jesus' view of things, what kind a world he expected this world to ome, and what we can do to get the gdom established.

Shelton of Tibet, by Flora Beal Shelton. New York: Doran. $2.

In 1903 Dr. A. L. Shelton was sent as missionary to Tibet under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He labored faithfully in that "unknown country" for twenty years. He was written about as the "Livingstone of Tibet." Feb. 16, 1922, he, with his followers, was waylaid and ambushed by bandits. He alone was shot and died that night of the wound. He had been a most successful missionary. This volume is not a personal biography so much as the story of his life and work in Tibet written by his wife with letters from fellow-workers and friends. Seldom have we read a more interesting volume. It is not only an epic of a great missionary and his work, but it is as entertaining as it is informing of the life and conditions in all but an undiscovered land, and the results of mission work among the inhabitants. The Gospel in the Ten Commandments, by J. C. Massee, New York: Revell.

This is not an offhand, popular treatment of pulpit themes but a careful, studied examination into present tendencies in modern society, and, couched in thoughtful language, a rational and practical effort made to meet these evil tendencies. It takes a brave man and at the same time a prudent and cultured man, watchful of his speech, to discuss, for example, the seventh commandment in the modern applications but Doctor Massee with rare tactfulness but needed outspokenness issues from the standpoint of his Christian pulpit solemn counsel and warning that needs much to be uttered. As a homilist the Tremont Temple pastor is unsurpassed, and he is true to his subject, as is well illustrated in this treatise. He finds the right consideration of the law of God to lie at the basis of the efficient influence of the gospel of God, the law thus being a school master to lead us to Christ.

One Man's Religion, by Robert Quillen. Macmillan: New York.

"One Man's Religion," a book of less than 100 pages, is brimful of suggestions on a dozen topics like conversion, repentance, forgiveness, prayer, and others. The author is a man who thinks for himself and has the happy way of putting his thoughts in an original form which sustains the interest of the reader.

Finding God, by Russell H. Stafford. New York: Macmillan.

"Finding God" is the title of a new book by Rev. Russell H. Stafford, a Congregational minister. It is an attempt to reach studious young men and women in university circles, and is written in a conversational style. "The Liberal Point of View" is the topic of the first chapter and points the way for the succeeding chapters. The author is always reverent, constructive and suggestive, but never dogmatic.

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide for 1924. New York: Revell.

This manual is up to its usual high standard. It is a compendium of facts culled from a wide range of reading. For the pupil or teacher who desires help on the lessons covering the background of history and geography and furnishing ready outline and illustrations for any department of the Bible school this "guide" is indispensable.

The Children's Six Minutes, by Bruce S. Wright. New York: Doran. $1.25.

Here is a series of fifty-two brief and original sermonettes for boys and girls. They have been used with telling effect by the author in making the regular morning service of the church attractive to young people. A fine memory verse is given with each sermon and a memory hymn is suggested that is in keeping with the thought of the sermon. Parents and teachers as well as pastors will find this book of great help in encouraging and instructing young people.

The Coming King, the World's Next Great Crisis, by William Evans. New York: Revell. $1.50.

One cannot skim over the pages of this volume on what stands so prominent in the body of scripture and in the experience of the Christian. For it is not a speculative theme, but one central in the Bible and fundamental to the highest Christian living. Doctor Denny said, as to the thought in general of our Lord's return, that it "more than anything else gave its color to the primitive Christianity, its unworldliness, its moral intensity, its command of the future even in this life."

No Christian can afford to ignore it today, and if one desires a fair, broad treatment of the subject, considering all ways of looking at it common in the Christian thinking of today, he will find in Doctor Evans' study of the great theme that which will satisfy and reward one seeking after the truth. It is considerate and at the same time clarifying and conclusive. We commend it to Bible students as a thorough-going and illuminative discussion of one of the greatest and most insistent themes of revelation.

HELPING SANTA CLAUS!

Christmas is coming and many little children on home mission fields will go without gifts if Santa's friends in Christian homes don't come to the rescue. Toys, inexpensive new articles of clothing, books and pictures—anything you liked as a child—will make glad their beauty-starved hearts.

In the Service of the Cross

Hundreds of Baptist women are enlisted in joyous, sacrificial service under the sign of the White Cross. They are busy supplying the material needs of many fields—a warm coat for some underclad boy, bandages for some mother's scalded arm, a dainty layette for some new baby, and just now these special Christmas gifts.

The Prayer Life of Jesus, by Rev. M. E. Dodd. New York: Doran.

A most helpful and sympathetic treatment of an important subject. If there is one phase of our Christian life that needs development more than any other it is the prayer life of the average Christian. This book, if the reading of it can be brought to pass, will be a great help to all who lack a developed prayer life.

The Revival of Wonder, by Malcolm James McLeod. New York: Revell. $1.25.

The revival of wonder and other addresses is a book filled with apt illustrations drawn from every day life. Doctor McLeod is a student of literature and human nature and gives a most forceful moral and spiritual application to the varying experiences of men. Those who have read his book entitled "A Comfortable Faith" or "Earthly Discords and How to Mend Them" will welcome this another demonstration of choice literary expression and simple, forceful, spiritual thought. Sixteen addresses are set forth all together in an attractive covered book of nearly two hundred pages.

Folk-Lore in the Old Testament. Studies in Comparative Religion, Legend and Law, by Sir James George Frazer, Abridged Edition. New York, Macmillan. $3.

As originally published several years ago, this work filled three thick volumes at a correspondingly high price. It now appears in unabridged form in a single volume, containing the substance of the work offered in 1918. The author's plan of dealing with his subject remains what it was at first, though some chapters have been entirely omitted and others greatly condensed—but so well does the material come out under this sifting process that it seems just another example of the good that "boiling down" can do.

The author selects salient folklore incidents, beliefs, customs and practices from the scriptures and compares them with similar phenomena gathered from the records of all races and peoples, savage, barbarous and civilized. The impression conveyed is that of a widely ranging grasp of the pertinent material and of remarkable skill in setting forth their significance. In his preface to the work the author admits that he has been compelled to dwell chiefly on the lower side of ancient Hebrew life as revealed in the Old Testament, on "the traces of savagery and superstition which are to be found in its pages. But to do so is not to ignore, far less to disparage, that higher side of the Hebrew genius which has manifested itself in a spiritual religion and a pure morality, and of which the Old Testament is the imperishable monument. On the contrary, the revelation of the baser elements which underlie the civilization of ancient Israel, as they underlie the civilization of modern Europe, serves rather as a foil to enhance by contrast the glory of the people which from such dark depths of ignorance and cruelty could rise to such bright heights of wisdom and virtue."

Dictionary of Religion and Ethics, Edited by Shailer Mathews and Gerald Birney Smith of the University of Chicago. New York: Macmillan. Reprinted edition, $3.

The jacket blurb says better than can the reviewer that the volume "sets forth in compact form the results of modern study in the psychology of religion, the history of religions, both primitive and developed, the present status of religious life in America, Europe and the most important mission fields, and the important phases of Christian belief and practice. It also covers both individual and social ethics.

"The overburdened parish minister has the experience time and again in his reading of finding that he has lost his bearings or has gotten beyond his depth. Sharper definition of some of the terms used by his author is his quickest method of setting himself right. It is safe to say that with the assistance of this dictionary he can journey up and down the territory covered by the majority of the new religious books that he will buy, with the mental equivalent of the speed and assurance with which an automobile goes right on through the night, no matter how pitch black, when it is equipped with a good searchlight."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

ON THE PLAYING OF HYMNS

At sundry times on this page I have reprinted articles from various sources giving consideration to the matter of hymn playing, especially with relation to the practical point of doing the utmost to aid the cause of hearty congregational singing. Probably no other subject is so much discussed and dissected in the professional journals of the church-musician (such periodicals as the New Music Review and the Diapason); and there is no other subject which is such a marked source of dissent and disagreement! Various methods of insuring clean attacks and definite starts on the stanzas have been dealt with in detail, from the "cathedral" way of anticipating the first bass note of the tune on the pedals (thus getting things under way with a warning grunt), to the other extreme of preparing the way for the sopranos by soloing the first note of the melody. Other suggestions range from rolling the first chord to what is familiarly dubbed "beating the congregation to it" by starting a beat ahead of them.

In my opinion, such artificial devices simply make for more confusion. Certainly, if the player in announcing the hymn, yields to temptation and solos the melody, changes the definite pattern of the rhythm to a rubato monologue in a feverish attempt to make it temperamentally expressive and loses unity of statement and coherency of stanza—formed by too much change of stops—then some drastic means will have to be used in order to get the congregation under way! Even with a large, adequate choir "on the job" to lead off the audience below, such elaboration of hymn statement is a risk and an error.

One of the foremost choir-leaders in Chicago was bemoaning his troubles with a new organist, mostly in this matter of the playing of the hymns. His congregation has been accustomed to have the announcement of the number by the minister, with the occasional reading of a stanza, if especially potent to the occasion; then the organist, on his swell manual, set quite full, played the hymn-tune through at the exact speed to be used, taking pains to make clear the pulsation, the phasing and any divergencies from the usual straight tempo. The closing cadence was given special attention, great care being taken to see that it was kept rhythmical, and that the last chord was held in strict time. Then one clear measure—exactly was figured on as interlude. This way no warning was required. The huge choir, the expectant congregation, the director, and the organist, all knew that they had only to count the necessary beats, the speed and accent of which had been given them—then let loose with whole-hearted energy at the appointed place. The breaks between the stanzas were treated in the same way. Is it any wonder that the congregational singing in this church has always been noted for enthusiasm and general participation? Even the rising signal to all was given by the organist. When he moved from his swell keyboard to his heavier great manual, that was the signal to rise. Once a congregation is used to such a system it works like a well-oiled machine, and those annoying and unnecessary hesitations so often seen, caused by lack of agreement between the minister, the chorister and the organist (a confusion then extending to the long-suffering congregation), are noticeable by their absence.

This new organist preferred to do things up in more elaborate style. The hymns must now be announced on solo-stops, colored to suit the changing motives of the text; tempos must likewise be adjusted to fit the passing variants of thought; the former simplicity of square-cut, straight-from-the-shoulder positiveness must give place to a greater finesse of interpretation. During his first month, the choir has lost its assertiveness, the immense congregation prefers to play safe by not participating until the second line of each stanza, and the whole business has become a sort of guessing contest; to the resultant injury of the service-music. Now, they are to go back to the former way, with its assured success.

It is a platitude that the object of hymn-singing is, musically, to produce mass results. What we musicians must realize is that the intrinsic value of any particular hymn-tune lies in just how much it encourages every one to join in chorus; if we can get the result with good, theoretically sound music, that is much to be desired! But all the fine writing will have little influence or value unless it "sings" and calls on all of us to sing. Simplicity, modest technical demands, easy range, straightforward harmonies, diatonic outline as to the tune, and rhythm regularity, these are the prime essentials of a good hymn tune; ingratiating melody, sentimental appeal, fitness to text, and perfection of writing can and should be additional, but are not substitutional!

Every church should work out its own salvation musically, care being taken to study out each individual requirement, resources compared to needs. Then the definite program should be worked out and accomplished in minute detail. Too often a church installs a professional, trained quartet (the two adjectives used are not synonymous!) because some other church has done so, when local conditions would have been served much better by the organization of a volunteer chorus, with perhaps a paid soloist. Each case must be diagnosed and treated as a separate problem.

One closing suggestion: Much of the hymn-playing I hear lacks character and urge because it is encumbered with too much of the traditional organ-legato. If the organist will judiciously use detached chords freely, or legato melody (perhaps pedal too) with sharply-defined inner parts, the tempo and movement of the hymn will gain immensely in life and energy. A too-continuous pedal is to be avoided. Clearness and sufficient support are the desired end.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

A Journal of Religion

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON and HERBERT L. WILLETT, Editors

Published Weekly Four Dollars a Year

The Religious Revolution

GREAT and vital changes taking place in men's thought as to what religion is and what its function is in personal and social life—new assessment of old doctrines—fresh conceptions of God and destiny and duty demanding room in the realm of faith—Jesus Christ assuming a new role in the lives of his followers—the ancient Bible undergoing revision and reinterpretation—the church challenged as to its competence to carry on the spiritual business of mankind—the missionary enterprise at a crisis—denominationalism losing its hold and confessing its futility—science and social passion saturating traditional creeds and churchly virtues with new convictions and ideals—religion under our very hand and eye is passing through an epoch of change more profound and revolutionary than the Protestant reformation of the sixteenth century!

—and never in history so interesting as right now!

THE Christian Century is a free journal of religion. It is under obligation to no denomination, no society, no board, no ecclesiastical or other interest of any sort, and is therefore in a position to speak its convictions concerning events, or personalities, or doctrines, or institutions without let or hindrance from any established interest whatsoever.

Within the past five years The Christian Century has come into a unique position in the journalism of America. Its influence now extends into all communions of the American church. It is equally at home among Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Disciples, Baptists, Episcopalians, evangelical Unitarians and liberal Jews; and not a few of the liberal leaders of the Roman Catholic church are among its readers Its readers now extend to every country on the globe.

Besides, it is gripping the minds of thinking men and women who have no church connection. They are astonished that from within the church, which many supposed had become moribund and incurably denominational in its vision, there should emerge a journal in earnest with the church, devout and evangelical, and at the same time as free as a university classroom. Such people stand amazed to find themselves actually enjoying a religious paper!

A glance at its pages will reveal the fact that it conceives its field and function as something quite different from other religious papers. It seeks—and it finds—the leader-like minds in all walks of life.

There probably does not exist anywhere a more remarkable and adequate roster of America's religious and moral leadership than the present subscription list of The Christian Century. The most vital minds in church life, in social action and in educational service make up its readers. It does not solicit subscriptions from the thoughtless or superficial—such persons would not long remain subscribers to a periodical that deals as earnestly and candidly with moral and religious issues as does The Christian Century.

And besides, the very presence on its subscription list of readers of a dependent type of mind would inevitably color and tone down its treatment of living issues. If its editors had to consider the reader whose faith is likely to be injured by a frank facing of issues which today try the souls of all of us, they would have to produce a paper quite unlike The Christian Century. For such minds plenty of other religious reading matter is available.

But it definitely and purposely restricts itself to another field. The constituency which it seeks to serve is that of the thoughtful, mature and independent leaders, particularly from the laity, inside and outside the churches, who desire to follow the free and untrammeled discussion of living issues in the light of the mind of Christ.

This is a field which no other weekly journal of religion has undertaken to cultivate. The Christian Century is not made for children, it uses no pictures, and its editors and contributors feel no need of toning down their utterances lest the "weak brother" be offended. Our invitation is for a reading constituency of strong minds which grow stronger by participation in free discussion.

Yet this journal of religion is no high-brow, technical, academic affair. It grips the interest of the average man and woman of intelligence. Its genius is that it makes ideas interesting. And religious ideas, at that! Its discussions and editorials are not intended merely for professionals, but for the man in the street and pew—lay leaders from the rank and file. The intelligent layman and woman are in the editorial mind continually, and the paper is produced for them. Perhaps it is just this fact that explains why The Christian Century is so widely read by teachers and ministers and other professional folk.

And its readers have been grateful to find that The Christian Century speaks not as a detached and irresponsible outsider, but as a sympathetic and loyal insider from the bosom of the church itself. This discovery of a journal that is free without being a freelance, that is loyal without being servile, and that is always interesting and vital without being sensational, is the secret of the great joy our readers take in The Christian Century.

International Affairs—The World Court, Outlawry of War, etc.

The Mind of Jesus and Modern Science.

Modern Sex Morality.

What Is There Left of the Bible?

Is Evolution Inconsistent with Religion?

The Future of the Community Church.

Is the Denominational Church a Competent Organ of Religion?

The High Art of the Spiritual Life.

Do We Need a New Religion?

Is Sin Obsolete?

The Menace of Millenialism.

Jewish Fundamentalism.

The Chicago Tribune as a Breeder of Anarchy, and a hundred other subjects covering the delicate but urgent problems involved in the modern attempt to discover the mind of Christ and to apply his ideals in our actual workaday world.

Space forbids calling attention to certain interesting features for the immediate future. We can only mention the vigorous and illuminating discussion of the modern sex debacle, just beginning. Or, take that remarkable series of articles by a dozen or more social service leaders of all the churches of which Bishop McConnell fires the opening gun in the current issue. The articles are dealing with this question: After nineteen hundred years has Christianity seriously modified the pagan character of human society? These articles, we promise, will lay the axe at the root of the tree.

Dear Sirs:-

Your Mr. Little has spent several days working faithfully upon our "Edwin Nelson Memorial Chimes" and the results are most pleasing to all of us. Mrs. Nelson and I are most enthusiastic. Our musical director, who is conductor of the strongest male chorus in the entire south, in addition to his work with us, and who was chime ringer for one of the best sets of bells in the middle west for many years, says that he has never heard such beautiful quality of tone in any other chimes, bells or tubes, as is now produced on our set. During the testing yesterday a number of musical people stopped their cars to listen and to give most hearty expression to their commendation of the music produced by them.

We wish to thank you sincerely for what you have done to give us the best chimes in the entire south, and many say, the best toned in the entire country.

Very truly yours,

W. A. Merrill

DEAGAN Tower Chimes have revolutionized Chime building. They are electrically played—no tugging at ropes. Your organist plays rich melody on them and blends chime music into the services.

Daily use of chimes brings a spiritual awakening that means much to the prosperity of your church. They are truly a Memorial Sublime which lives through generations to come and for all time perpetuates the memory of both the donor and the loved one in whose memory and honor they are placed.

Deagan Chimes are superbly musical, stately, dignified, perfectly tuned and flawless in pitch. They are a blessing on the entire community.

Our new Community Memorial Plan will enable you to secure Deagan Tower Chimes for your church. Fill out and mail the coupon for particulars.

The Proper Study of Mankind

"THE proper study of mankind is man. And the more profitable study of man is self. If a man cannot know and understand himself, how can he hope to know and understand his fellows who at all times conceal from him their processes of thought and their motives? But if he has learned to know and understand himself; to speak the truth to himself and require the truth in return; to follow his motives back to their source and face the fact of their parentage; to recognize his prejudices as such, and to sift and weigh his beliefs without fear; then he may study himself with profit for he is Mankind. When he bares his own soul to study it, he has bared the soul of the race. Every quality and potentiality in man today must have been in the first man who walked upon the earth. Why then should I doubt that these qualities and potentialities are in myself today? Therefore when I see an arrogant man strutting with chin in air, or a thief led away to pay the penalty imposed by justice, or a man making a fool of himself, I feel a shame almost wholly personal, for I am that arrogant man, that thief, that fool."

—From "One Man's Religion"

Fresh from the Field

It would be well for our pastors to be canny in the matter of cashing checks for a certain bogus parson who usually introduces himself as Rev. J. W. Patterson. There are some pastors in Detroit who could give you pointers in this matter. Let "Mr. Patterson" cash his own checks.

Mrs. Ethel Gurney Chappell, wife of Rev. W. C. Chappell, secretary of the Pittsburgh City Mission Society, died after a long illness on Nov. 26. Mrs. Chappell was the daughter of Professor Gurney, a member of the faculty of Hillsdale College for many years. The burial was at the old home in Hillsdale, Mich.

At the November meeting of the ministers and missionaries benefit board, 101 new applications for membership in the retiring pension fund were approved. The board voted to increase the amount it provides in the second year of membership for reduction of the annual dues from 65 to 70 per cent. The board also approved twenty-eight new applications for beneficiary grants.

Mount Morris Church, New York City, Henry G. Weston Smith, minister, has completed minor alterations on the second floor of the east half of the building, resulting in an efficient though not quite full size gymnasium. Standing on upper Fifth Avenue, the church faces an imperative command to provide club and athletic facilities for the wise use of leaders in boys' and girls' work or else a crumbling foundation for its future aggressive ministry. The gymnasium was formally opened Nov. 12. The following paragraph clipped from the weekly paper of the church, reflects something of the point of view of pastor and people regarding the church and its young people: "The Christian church in the past and for that matter in the present as well, has been guilty of at least two sins with respect to its attitude toward the younger generation: On the one hand it has wholly failed to regard the point of view of its young people, and has neglected to furnish them that sort of recreation and sociability that is as much a part of life as is breathing. On the other hand it has seen this first sin and then has gone to another extreme which has involved as great a sin; for it has sometimes chosen to throw open the doors of the pulpit and the parish house alike to a policy of 'giving the people what they want.' In this latter case the result has been that the whole work has lost sight of what it was really after; and there has been a large amount of striking in the dark. 'The people,' many of them, have wondered if the church knew what it was doing. God grant that our work may not 'lose the way.' There is a wise middle ground that some few choice leaders succeed in finding. This is what we wish to find. The instincts must be used as a means to the building of character—not regarded as problems that continually irritate."

We are in receipt of the Golden Century Bulletin of the American Baptist Publication Society. It is a fine bit of printing containing interesting articles on the history and growth of the society with some sidelights on religious education.

.."The Teaching Pastor" is the title of a book just from the Judson Press. Its author is Rev. William C. Bitting of St. Louis who delivered the lectures on this subject before the Crozer Theological Seminary on the Samuel A. Crozer lectureship foundation.

The church fraternity for boys known as the Order of the Knights of King Arthur has been conducted by its founder Dr. William Byron Forbush and his family for nearly the whole of the thirty-one years of its existence. It is now to be controlled by a board of directors. It has enrolled over 140,000 members and is believed to have been the direct means of bringing into church membership upward of 50,000 boys. The organization will continue to be self-supporting. Information can be secured by addressing Box 169, Boston.

Doctor Norwood in the course of his Armistice Day sermon in the City Temple, London, referred with disapproval to Lord Birkenhead's pessimistic speech at the University of Glasgow. Doctor Norwood said, "I could not keep Armistice Day without protesting against that cynical utterance. We are told that idealism in international politics is impractical; that human nature does not change. No, human nature does not change; I don't want it to change. The man in the street when faced with a big task, if only it seems big enough to him, is ready to go and struggle and even to die. And when it is all over he is willing to stretch out the hand of reconciliation. I stake my hope on the plain man; I like plain Smith better than Lord Smith." We have some untitled pessimists in America.

Since Rev. Ralph W. Hobbs began his work as pastor of the First Church, Lansing, Mich., a church secretary has been employed and also a director of religious education. On a recent Sunday the pastor surprised his congregation by stating publicly that in spite of these valued workers he felt that he should have still further assistants. He then presented the merits of THE BAPTIST, Missions and the Michigan Baptist, and the church is conducting a systematic canvass of its membership. Immediately after giving us the above facts Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs were called downtown where they were presented with a new sedan thoroughly equipped and with it this little note, "To Ralph W. Hobbs and family with best wishes for your service for the Master. Sincerely, your friends Smith G. Young, and Chris J. Rouser." We do not say there is a direct connection between the two items above mentioned. We do say that live pastors do not pussyfoot in the matter of denominational periodicals.

Captain G. L. Hall, formerly of the missionary cruisers "Life-Line" and "Robt. G. Seymour," is again doing a similar work, this time on land and without salary. He works in churchless and pastorless fields, holding services in schoolhouses, barns, dancehalls, camps and homes. With his new Dodge "Life-Line" land boat, he is able to reach the spiritually destitute fields in the great state of Oregon.

Denison University at Granville, Ohio, is having the most prosperous year in its history under the administration of President Clark Chamberlin. About 1,000 students are enrolled in all departments, a fine spirit of enthusiasm and good-will prevails, the new Swazey memorial chapel is nearing completion with its splendid proportions and colonial lines, and the religious life of the students was never more wholesome and spiritual.

"What is the matter with Methodism?" asks the Michigan Christian Advocate. Everybody has an answer, from the Christian Century to the Pentecostal Herald and from the bishops to the janitors. They are good, but long. Here is one more, an old and tried remedy, and the recipe is not long. Let's all begin on ourselves—'What is the matter with me?' My prayer life, my personal work with others, my study of the Word, my hidden sin, my unforgiving spirit, my unconfessed wrong, my selfishness, let me check up on them. 'Lord, send a revival and let it begin in me.'"

At the recent constitutional convention of the Y. M. C. A. of North America, a number of important organizational changes were decided upon. We are especially interested in the fact that the convention made no change in the basis of membership in the associations. The preamble of the new constitution makes it clear that every effort is being made to strengthen the relation of the association movement to the churches and their program.—"We the Young Men's Christian associations of the United States and Canada, through our representatives in Constitutional Convention assembled, reverently and joyfully confessing our faith in Jesus Christ our Lord and only Saviour and our unswerving allegiance to his church, recognizing humbly the creative hand of God along the pathway of three-quarters of a century of corporate experience, and dedicating ourselves afresh to our great mission of bringing under the sway of his kingdom the young manhood and boyhood of North America and of the other lands served by our associations, and with the desire of conserving all the values of our past and likewise of unifying and strengthening our work so as to enable the North American associations to meet the requirements of the modern age and of the coming day, hereby adopt the following constitution of The National Council of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States of America."

Amen Brother

The Michigan Christian Advocate states editorially that it has installed "a new compressor and eliminator." So has THE BAPTIST. The editor of a religious newspaper functions largely as "a compressor and eliminator." "Still we want the news and nothing but the news. No, not quite that, for we want the opinions of everybody on the big questions before the religious world. We do not care much what you say if you will say it in a few words." THE BAPTIST has no reportorial staff except about 10,000 preachers, a lesser number of evangelists and about a million laymen. Again in the words of the Advocate.. "If you get no publicity for real events, blame yourselves. If you get too much, blame us." Amen, brother!

Killam's Kollum

A Bit Exaggerated

When a paper carrying the news of his decease was handed to Mark Twain he read it and quietly remarked that he believed the report to be somewhat exaggerated. We know how he felt. We read our "obituary" in THE BAPTIST of Dec 1, under "An Appreciation." We must be dead. Only dead folks have so many virtues. If not the report must be somewhat exaggerated.

Why Go to Mexico?

"The first thing that struck me in Mexico City was the Ford," writes Rev. Edwin R. Brown in "Impressions of Mexico." But why go to Mexico for such an impression?

It Couldn't Happen in Baptist Circles

According to the Expositor "an editor of a daily paper in a small city wanted a month in the woods, and he hired a bright young fellow to edit his paper during August. But within a week the new editor had gotten into a terrible newspaper row with the competing daily of the town. The fight grew fiercer and fiercer; there were published threats of personal violence; the editor of the other paper actually challenged our young editor to fight a duel. The brave youth responded by announcing that he had armed himself with automatic revolvers and would shoot the other editor on sight, whether on the street, at the postoffice, or in the theater. Meanwhile the excitement in the community grew more and more tense; both papers were bought by the thousands as soon as the newsboys appeared on the streets; and the fever reached white heat. Our editor in the woods, thoroughly alarmed, broke camp and rushed home to prevent bloodshed—and found that the editor of the competing paper had himself gone away Aug. 1 on a yachting cruise, and had by chance engaged this same young man to edit his paper. Two papers, one editor, one big fight; circulation of both papers boomed to five times normal; and only a sham battle after all!"

The circulation of THE BAPTIST is not built upon sensational and partisan foundations. It is secured on the ground of service rendered. The majority of those who subscribe for the THE BAPTIST do so not because it perfectly reflects their thought, but because it faithfully represents their Christian tasks.

For the purpose of studying international relations, social economics, and racial problems, six Hillsdale College students will attend, as delegates, the Student Volunteer Quadrennial Convention to be held Dec. 28-Jan. 1 at Indianapolis. Professor Willfred O. Mauck will go as faculty delegate.

The death of Dr. John Clifford was announced at the meeting of the board of managers of the Foreign Society and the board immediately despatched the following cablegram: "Board of managers of American Baptist Foreign Mission Society mourn loss of John Clifford. Grateful for his life labors, world-wide influence and valiant fight for truth and freedom. Christian forces have lost great and beloved leader. Convey our sympathy family and denomination."

More than 5,000 young ministers have received instruction under Professor Sampey and Robertson of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary during their service in that institution. The former has taught thirty-eight and the latter thirty-five years. Dr. Ira M. Price of the University of Chicago spoke at the meeting commemorating the long and distinguished service of these men.

That pastors are facing the responsibility of the church to supplement the work of the home in shaping the ideals of its young people is evidenced by reports of sermons which we find in the press of the country. We find very few of the sensational type. From the calendar of the Mount Morris Church, New York, we quote Pastor Smith: "Courtship is an institution of a more or less democratic state of society. It is recognition of the right of a girl to choose her own life companion. She is not an unthinking child or a slave or a piece of property to be bargained for as in more primitive life. She is a free, thinking person who wishes to live happily and usefully; and therefore wishes to have her affections honorably won by a young man who will give evidence that because of his ideals and conduct he is worthy of her. Courtship, then, in the truest sense, is a tribute to the worthiness of womanhood. Viewed from the other angle it is of course also a recognition of the proper right of a young man to exercise his judgment in the important process of selecting a life companion. When it functions properly, it is not a time for the lavishing of extravagant gifts and extravagant amusements. It is a time for preparation for life. It is a time for each to educate the self in the direction of the other's best ideals; a time to plan and, at least to a limited extent, prepare the home; a time of making sure that there are enough common interests and aspirations to bury the interests and aspirations that are not held in common. Better break an unwise engagement than an unwise marriage."

Rev. Carey S. Osborn, superintendent of the week-day church schools for Kansas City, Kansas, reported an enrolment of 8,700 children in the week-day church schools out of a possible 10,000. Of this number 3,500 are enrolled as Baptists. Mr. Osborn is the pastor of the Argentine Church of that city.

God's Own

TO God's man the supernatural is just as natural as is the natural. To God's man the impossible is just as possible as is the possible. All things are possible to the man whom God takes up as a trumpet and through whom God speaks. All things are possible to the man whom God takes up as a tool and with whom God works. All things are possible to the man whom God takes up as a weapon and with whom God fights.

We marvel at and condemn men who do not believe in foreign missions. But what have they to believe with? Before you can believe in anything you must have something to be believe with. How can a man see who has no eyes? How can a man love who has no heart? How can a man believe in the principle of the cross of Christ unless he has the spirit of Christ in his heart? Missions living for others, the world my parish, that is a sacrificial truth and it is spiritually discerned. To God's man missions are easy, for the man with whom God is at home is at home in the things of God.

Yes, God has his own. In every church I meet them. They are all too rare, but how rich is their lives. They walk with God, as it were, a bit apart. On them and about them is a strange, sweet light. A subtle gentleness and a radiant cheerfulness seems native to them. Saints they are, here and now, in the midst of sin, of sorrow, and of struggle. They play me right off my feet in heroic devotion. Their loyalty gives me the blush. They pass on and leave me way behind in the dark. The latchet of their shoes I am not worthy to unlace. I have so many luxuries, so many vacations. They bear with a smile what I have never known. They give way and beyond any standard of giving I have ever attained. They love Jesus Christ with a passion that rebukes with a sting my dry eyes, my dull mind and my cold heart. Such are the hope of the world—of whom the world is not worthy. God's work goes forward in this world on the feet of those who are his own. Whether I will or whether I won't, God's work goes forward. God still has his own. And how easy is God's work when God works.— P. H. McDowell.

Tabernacle Baptist Church of Waco, Tex., began its annual revival meeting Sunday, Nov. 18-Dec. 16. Dr. J. E. Conant, evangelist of the Northern Baptist Convention, is doing the preaching. Mr. James Entzminger, of Cincinnati, directs the Sunday-school campaign of the church, Nov. 23-Dec. 9. A. Reilly Copeland is pastor.

Columbia University has provided for a home study course in scoutmastership. By means of this course it is hoped that real service may be rendered to scout masters and other leaders of boys. The course is conducted on a non-commercial basis and the fees are nominal. Levering Tyson is in charge of the home study work.

International cooperation, prohibition and evangelism will be three chief subjects for discussion and action when representatives of twenty-nine Protestant communions meet in Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 11-14. Senator Borah will speak at one of the mass meetings on Christian citizenship, Dr. Fred B. Smith and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the Christian Endeavor are other speakers. Several dignitaries of the Orthodox Eastern Church will be the guests of the executive committee of the Federal Council.

In Columbus, Ohio, a number of meetings have been held during the month of November. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan led in a two weeks' mission under the direction of the Columbus Council of Churches. There was a hearty response upon the part of the churches. The Bible and Missionary Conference brought Baptists from southern and central Ohio for a two days' meeting. The board of managers of the Ohio Baptist Convention met in Columbus on the twentieth and the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America will hold its annual meeting in that city, Dec. 12-14.

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke sends us the following notice from the Der Wahrheitszeuge, the organ of German Baptists. It is a call for a day of united prayer, repentance and thanksgiving. The call is issued by B. Weerts, president of the Baptist Union. "Germany has to go through deep waters. Humiliation follows upon humiliation. We are a disarmed, powerless and poor nation. We have looked about for people ready to help, but we found none; some could, others would not help us. What are we to do now? Let us deliver ourselves and the cause of our people into the hand of our God. As a part of our people we must suffer with the whole of our people. Not before our adversaries will we bow in our innermost, but before God who reigns over all we bow willingly. We bow before him whose hand rests heavily upon us to make intercession with our people and for it. Like Daniel let us confess, "we have sinned." (Dan.:9-5.) God grant us the spirit of repentance and prayer! Perhaps there is enough chiding going on about the Godless, the profiteers and the sweaters, who make profit upon the people and have no conscience. Let us now pray that God may open their eyes

The Gift without the Giver

THE gift is desirable, necessary, imperative. The small gift as well as the larger gift must keep flowing in a constant, undiminishing stream. Missions, education, philanthropy and all that enters into the adequate support of the local church call for gifts of money and time and service. The call is insistent and insatiable. Vital interests and institutions covering a world area are involved in the demand for gifts. The far-flung battle line of foreign missions, for example, waits upon the home base of supplies. If ammunition is withheld, if recruits are not trained, if reserves are not sent, the morale of the regiments in oriental and tropical battle-fields breaks down and retreat is inevitable. The base of supplies is the local church, and the whole line of occupation and defence and advance in evangelism, in Christian nurture, in the care of the sick, and in all the other organized activities of the denomination depends upon the gifts from the local church.

The pressure therefore upon the local church to produce the gifts is tremendous. The United States government has the power to levy taxes for the adequate support of the manifold service in which the government is engaged; but no Christian denomination can assess the incomes and property of its members and collect on the same without a revolution. The gifts in support of the work of the Baptist denomination must be voluntary, and because of the voluntary element in a democratic body like the Baptists, the tendency to emphasize the gift is almost irresistible. It is this freedom and the need for money to keep things going that account for feverish drives, commercialized campaigns, and all other high-pressure methods of getting money. The gift is stressed at the sacrifice of the giver, and the loss in the long run is disastrous.

In all intelligent, constructive, sustained and progressive giving, the giver gives himself with his gift. The emphasis of true Christian stewardship is always upon the giver and never upon the gift. Tithing is sometimes beset with the danger of losing sight of the personal element in stressing the proportional element. The educated, consecrated, elated giver is the standard and norm and end of all efforts to increase the gifts of the church to local and benevolence budgets. All denominations have failed at this vital point, and the failure is in no small measure due to the fact that the gift has been sought without the giver. A better day is dawning and a better way is coming. It is a slow process as all worthy education is a slow process; but it is the only way. One church, which may be and should be a sample of all churches, trains all of its members to give in proportion to their income. Each member is given to understand that giving is vital, and by an approach that is sensible, sustained and supported by action of the church, he is led to give to all objects in the church budget as largely and regularly as his income will permit. Failure to do so is cause for discipline. This church is prosperous both spiritually and financially, and discipline never needs to be resorted to because all the members see the sweet reasonableness of this arrangement.

Therefore the problem of the local church is not the gift but the giver, not the tithe but the tither, not the subscription but the subscriber. One down-town pastor who has held a church for twenty-nine years in one of the great cities of America amidst all the changes incident to the growth of a metropolis says: "It is not money I need but men." This is simply another way of stating the same problem. The loss of the gift is small when compared with the loss of the giver. Endowed churches usually have gifts enough to pay all current expenses, but for want of man-power many of them are only marking time. For two years a certain college president has traveled up and down his state getting acquainted with the people, preaching in churches, speaking in high schools, visiting the farmers, calling on the merchants; but not once asking for money. Having wisely cultivated the givers, he will get the gifts in due time. There is no better way. The denomination must return to it, the local church must adopt it, civic bodies must see the wisdom of it in all drives for charity, the individual himself must cease giving his gifts without giving himself with the gift. "For he that gives himself with his gift feeds three,—himself, his hungry neighbor, and Me."

The Longest Way Around

LOVERS take the longest way around but many others take the shortest way across. Juvenility leaps the fence and runs across lots to avoid the longer way home. The short cut is always a sign of immaturity and haste. This is true of the grown man who trys to find a short cut to wealth. Were he less of a child he would follow the road of thrift, industry, frugality and honesty and avoid the gambler's route and the criminal's path.

But the higher we go in the scale of values the more distressing is the attempt to counterfeit the gold of culture and religion. We expect the love of money to breed contempt for things which represent the long, slow processes of nature and art; but when the fine spiritual value of true culture and vital religion are cheapened by methods as ruinous as the German attempt to maintain the value of the mark by the accelerated motion of the printing press we are shocked beyond words to express our feelings.

The Christian religion is the religion of the longest way around. The fullness of time which marked the hour of the arrival of the Messiah came out of an eternity of plan and preparation. The Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world, and the cross was but the historical emergence of the eternal purpose of redemption. Jesus was never in haste. To his brothers who urged him to declare himself, he replied: "Mine hour is not yet come." And even when his hour did arrive it was only the crisis which issued in an age-long process of testimony and service and Christian nurture. The slow method of teaching was to accompany the more rapid method of preaching. To the eager expectancy of the sudden restoration of the kingdom lost to Israel, Jesus calmly said: "It is not for you to know times or seasons which the Father hath set within his own authority; but ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses."

The speed mania is epidemic, but they that trust in the Lord shall not make haste. The weariness and monotony of deliberate well-doing, the unromantic treadmill of genuine educational processes, the obscure and patient method of Christian nurture, do not appeal to those religious leaders who are looking for sensation and dash. Quick and big returns on small investments is their aim, and for a time they dazzle the honest plodders with newspaper reports of phenomenal success. But the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. The long process of building with fireproof, windproof, earthquake-proof materials is best in the end.

Therefore we should rid ourselves of short-cut evangelism, across-lots Christian education, speeding-up methods of missionary work and high-pressure campaigns for money; and with deliberation take the longer, safer, better road of preparation, development and growth, following the fine biological process illustrated by the parable of the corn—first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear; or by the parable of the rosy apple which is the full fruition of the long, slow maturing of the tree.

On Sawing Wood

"SAWING wood" is a phrase which needs to be interpreted to the present generation, because wood is no longer used for fuel except in rural communities where it is plentiful. But to those of us who were born in the nineteenth century "sawing wood" needs no glossary. The woodpile in the backyard brings up memories both trying and tender. Father's stern command to "saw wood" reechoes in our ears to this day. The call of the wild was never so insistent as when we were compelled to saw wood; the wanderlust was never so strong as when we bent our reluctant backs over the sawbuck in a heroic attempt to provide the kitchen stove with necessary firewood; the other boys of the neighborhood never seemed so free as when we had to stay in the backyard and try to reduce cordwood into stove-lengths. There was no romance in a bucksaw, no excitement in a woodpile, no adventure in a backyard. Something more sensational appealed to our native instincts, and sawing wood was a civilized practice for which the cave-boy had the deepest disgust. Father seemed to think that industry, thrift, punctuality and other good habits lay bound up in the woodpile, and that by sawing the wood we could release these fine spiritual things. We did not appreciate his convictions in that direction then, but since we ourselves have become mature we see the wisdom of it.

The application of this parable is unlimited. If the nations could be led to the woodpile and each one of them taught again to saw wood in its own backyard, economic stability would again soon return. If the youth of the world could be given a physical equivalent for the old bucksaw the social excesses which now shock us would disappear. If the evangelical denominations would again begin to saw the wood of constructive evangelism, and furnish the fuel for personal and social regeneration, they would have no time for playing Indian and flourishing the tomahawk and scalping knife. Boys'-play with hot-air guns and sling-shots and other weapons of offense and defense has nearly ruined the serious missionary work of several Christian denominations. Some of us have found more fun in the excitement of destroying property on Halloween night than in the unromantic task of sawing wood. "Let's saw wood" is a good motto for Baptists, and though inelegant it is certainly expressive and fitting.

A Famine in Bibles

BECAUSE Yokohama was the center for the printing of the Bible for all the Far East there is danger of a famine of Bibles in Japan, China, Siam and the Philippine Islands. The loss sustained by the American Bible Society in the recent earthquake amounts to more than a quarter of a million dollars. Printing plates, books, papers, office and personal property were destroyed, thus causing the greatest loss in the history of the society. To meet the famine for Bibles the society will resort to the emergency method of producing at once half a million copies of the Gospels in Japanese made from photographic plates taken from books on hand in the Bible House in New York. But this is far from adequate to meet the need. The Bible is the basis of all missionary work and must be kept going at an accelerated rate if womanhood is to be uplifted, if children are to be taught, if public opinion is to be moulded, if men and nations are to be saved. December 9 has been set aside in the churches for an appeal for funds to prevent this spiritual famine which threatens the Far East. Baptists cooperating with the American Bible Society will surely do their share.

The Scarlet Beast

"AFTER the war," said an Italian writer, Signor Enrico Corradini, a few weeks ago, "a new fact arose in Europe, a terrible fact, and it was called Moscow; today another new fact has risen, and its name is Rome. Moscow is the home of the Red International, Rome is the home of the Black International, but in Rome, the final home of both, the Black will be murdered by the Red. Both these cities are the head-centers of two recent revolutions, as remarkable as any in the history of mankind. Both cities are in the throes of the creation of autocracies the most absolute and merciless the modern world has seen. Both cities are the cradles of international movements destined to meet in a final death-grapple. Both cities are cast by prophecy for roles gigantic and sinister, only less so than Babylon and Jerusalem. Both cities are becoming embodiments of the Scarlet Beast."—D. M. Panton, in Record of Christian Work.

Has the Church Defined Marriage Correctly?

"PERHAPS in no realm of human relations has the Christian church been more confident that it was setting forth true doctrine than in its treatment of marriage. No one would count lightly the enormous influence of Christian teaching in elevating sex relationships. But the problems growing out of these relationships are by no means all solved by the convenient Christian conception of marriage. In a recent issue of the Atlantic Monthly, Miss Maude Royden clears the air of much prevalent sophistry by her challenging article, 'What is marriage?' It is the contention of the church that what God hath joined together man may not put asunder. Accepting this as a valid principle, the question of fact remains: just what constitutes such a joining that we may say that it is divinely sanctioned? None but a hopelessly ecclesiastical mind would say that God is more concerned with the technical correctness of the marriage ceremony than with other factors. Miss Royden seeks to bring to the front those spiritual values which make a real marriage so precious.

"It would seem that preoccupation with the recorded words of Jesus concerning divorce has driven the ecclesiastical mind into an unfortunately narrow interpretation.

" 'Those who hold, for example, that divorce may be allowed, however reluctantly, for adultery and for adultery only, because adultery destroys the very essence and character of marriage, appear to overemphasize the physical element in marriage, to an extent which to others seems to degrade it to the level of animal mating rather than human marriage .....However we may camouflage it, the present position is that marriage consists in a legal contract, followed by sex relations; and it is maintained that this is "marriage," even though not one single respectable element of true marriage remains. By what amazing sophistry is it claimed that this is to uphold a high ideal of "marriage"? It is, on the contrary, to degrade it. It is as immoral as it is dishonest.'

"Miss Royden turns the keen edge of criticism on the spirit which insists so rigidly on the literal carrying out of the words of Jesus on this topic, but which fails to insist on a similar literalness in the case of such injunctions as those forbidding the taking of oaths or resistance to evil. She insists that true marriage involves the sharing of spiritual purposes. To ignore these in favor of the physical aspects of the union is to create moral confusion. She would have Christian sentiment favor such a procedure as would permit other impediments to a true marriage to be taken account of as frankly as the 'scriptural' one. The disgraceful practice by which 'evidence' of adultery is manufactured out of whole cloth in order to secure divorce should be made impossible."—Journal of Religion.

Why Men Side-Step the Church

"THE modern prophet will certainly have somewhat to do with economics and politics, since these stand or fall by their morality, and Christianity certainly has its social implications. But not every minister is a prophet, nor even an understanding observer of local politics. The grievance of the intelligent churchgoer is not that the ministry gives itself so much to secular topics, but that it is generally so unfitted to handle such topics. The curse of 'topics' has been the ruin of the pulpit. This year has seen a rush of ministers to Europe and every city in the country is deluged with series of sermons on European conditions, most of which are based on editorials in the London Times, interlarded with the hearsay and casual experiences of the hurried tourist. That is what makes the intelligent churchgoer 'tired.' He can get this sort of material, of much better quality and higher authority, elsewhere.

"If only the ministry were expert in its own field, the condemnation of its aberrations would not be so severe. But churchgoers are beginning to suspect that the ministry is no more proficient in matters of religion than it is in international or local politics. In the Protestant church, for example, the textbook is the Bible, but an examination of the clergy in that book would disclose fearful and wonderful conditions. It has fallen to the level of a motto-book, from which suitable passages may be selected to place at the beginning of sermons. The real cause of this, however, may be that an increasing number of ministers do not believe the Bible as the people understand believing it."—Dearborn Independent.

Home Travelers Into Bookland

In Bookland there is no past and no far-away; it is all now and here, making us the heirs of the ages

BY SAMUEL J. SKEVINGTON

AN ancient philosopher said that a house without books was like a body without a soul. That statement involves two things that are not so common and universal in our day as they ought to be, viz., normal home life and well-spent leisure—both of them mighty factors in the building of character, the loss of which forms one of the biggest problems of our modern life. But I am not starting out to discuss social economics, and I propose to take for granted both normal home life and well-spent leisure, as I think with you of "home travelers into bookland."

Sit Down and Go Journeying

Reversing the line of Wordsworth in his "Tables Turned," "Up, up, my friend, and quit your books," I am saying, "Let us sit down comfortably and take up our books, and go journeying into the delights of 'bookland.'" "Comfortably . . . journeying"? Yea, verily! for no distressing mal de mer spoils the voyage across the sea of thought, no perilous mountain-climbing is involved in reaching the Alpine heights of human knowledge. We may drift up and down the streams of poetic fancy and the rivers of alluring romance with never a fear or a care, and fellowship with the real kings and queens of the earth in the palaces of knowledge and wisdom. The "unread" have little idea of the pleasures and profits of which they rob themselves by neglecting to become travelers in the charmed regions of Bookland. Having tasted of these joys the great Erasmus, while studying Greek learning in Paris, wrote: "As soon as I get any money I shall buy books, and then I shall buy clothes." Fenelon, the French churchman, said: "If all the crowns of all the kingdoms of the empire were laid down at my feet in exchange for my books and my love of reading, I would spurn them all." Gibbon, the historian of Rome's decline and fall, passionately declared: "My early and invincible love of reading I would not exchange for the treasures of India." Petrarch, the Italian poet, chose to die in his library that to the last he might have the fellowship of his books. The venerable Bede closes his life story with a book in his hand. Scott weeps as he bids a last farewell to his loved books at Abbotsford, and Robert Southey, sick and dying, pathetically strokes and kisses the books he can no longer read. They had experienced the joys of life in Bookland and valued their citizenship.

The power and influence of the silent forces of Bookland in the molding of individual character, the development of nations and the history of the world are amazing. It was Homer's inspiring tale of blood that sent Alexander to conquer the world. It was the reading of the "Lives of the Saints" that transformed Loyola, the wounded Spanish soldier, into the Knight of the Virgin and the founder of the order of the Jesuits. It was the record of Captain Cook's voyage that aroused William Carey to the world-wide missionary task of the church. It was the reading of this same Carey's "Letters" that sent Henry Martyn to India, and Buchanan's "Star in the East" that pointed the way to the same land for Adoniram Judson.

Tracing the broader influences of Bookland on national issues, we find that Chateaubriand's "Genius of Christianity" did far more to arouse French interest in religion than Napoleon's Concordat. Lincoln himself declared that Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was a potent factor in leading up to the Civil War; the Russian czar traced the freeing of the serfs to thoughts and ideals conjured in his mind and heart by the reading of that story of slavery's wrongs. And who can measure in terms of history the results that have followed, as night the day, the reading of that Book of Books that has made for itself the supreme place in Bookland?

The Worst Robber

But not everything in Bookland is good and true and beautiful. One may not eat of the fruit of every tree of the garden. Some of it is noxious and poisonous. I am told that the microscope has revealed over seventy different kinds of destructive book worms, but by far the worst book worm of them all is not any that destroys the book, but the one in the book that destroys the reader of the book. Trench quotes Niebuhr as saying in one of his letters, "I agree with you that it is better not to read books in which you make the acquaintance of the devil." We need to be careful that we allow no author to drag the mind through the ditches, or feed the soul with evil thought. Presenting the Italian proverb, "There is no worse robber than a bad book," Archbishop Trench goes on to say: "Indeed, none worse, nor so bad; other robbers may spoil us of our money; but this of our 'goods' . . . our principles, our faith, our purity of heart." When some one asked Emerson for his opinion of Goethe's "Elective Affinities," he answered: "I have never felt that I had attained to that purity of mind that qualified me to read that book." In the paradise of Bookland we may walk in the cool of the day delighting in the fellowship and intimate communion of the very gods of the literary world, but we must beware of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, nor ever allow the serpent to tempt us to seek godlikeness in that which is ungodly.

HAPPY is the man blessed with the friendship of the great in Bookland—"those faithful friends who are always in when we knock at the door, and never 'not at home' when we call," those mute, silent friends, always willing to be the companion of the lonely hour, mellowing the day of sadness, cheering the time of need and helplessness and hopelessness. They are the friends worth having.

"A Cataract of Printed Stuff"

But putting aside the bad books, we are still compelled to a rigid process of selection and choice. Deluged as we are by what Frederic Harrison called "a cataract of printed stuff," we wonder, as Oliver Twist did when he was ushered into Mr. Brownlow's study, where the people can be found to read such an avalanche of books. Certain it is that none of us can read them all, and therefore we must select and choose. This is an imperative that cannot be avoided. The important thing is to select and choose wisely. Dickens says: "There are books of which the backs and covers are by far the best parts." With such, of course, we should have no fellowship, for in Bookland, as elsewhere, it is not dress, but character, that decides worth and value. Neither should we waste time with that sort of "literature" that comes under the description of Byron's line, "A book's a book, although there's nothing in it." John Ruskin would divide literature into two sections; on the one side he would place the multitudinous "books of the hour" and on the other what Emerson would call "the eternities," and for the most part, though I should not say exclusively, that is where we should seek our acquaintances and make our friends. And this is no easy task. It requires not only good judgment, but considerable nerve. Besought on every hand by the allurements of the advertisers and the enchanted lure of the "best sellers," it is exceedingly difficult to steer a straight course, but what old Thomas Fuller said 300 years ago still holds true, "Learning has gained most by those books by which the printers have lost," and while it is well enough to keep abreast of what the reading public is thinking and talking about, we must be sufficiently Daniel-like to say "No" when asked if we have read everything that everybody else is reading, and refuse to degenerate into mere literary sieves, or hypocritical worshipers at the shrine of popular but unworthy heathen gods.

Then, again, the taste for the best in Bookland is very seldom a natural gift but with most of us somewhat of an art to be acquired and cultivated. In literature as in music we do not begin with an absorbing love of the classical masterpieces, but the trend and aim of our education should ever be to develop us into lovers of the best. Here lies the great importance of the wise and careful direction of the reading of the children and youth of our homes. It must not be a mere police power protecting them from the crooks and criminals of Bookland, but such a devoted comradeship that will lead them into the knowledge of the best and develop in them the love of the best. And yet again it is far better to read well than to read much. Indeed we read too much and think too little. As the "Book of Common Prayer" says, we should "Read, mark, learn and inwardly digest." It is far better to read one good book well than to skim over and skip through any number of so-called popular productions.

Of course experience is the great teacher, and that is a very personal affair, but for the wise what a marvelous store of "teaching" there is laid up in the reservoirs of Bookland, the wisdom of the ages, the very revelations of heaven. In one of his essays, Brierley says: "In Glasgow the maidservant who turns on the tap in the kitchen draws water which has flowed into the grimy city from Loch Katrine, that far-off lovely lake set in its circle of mighty hills. And when before the turmoil of the day, in our secret place, we open a book of devotion, and taste there some living word—it may be a passage from Augustine, or a page of the 'Imitation,' or the message of prophet or apostle—is it not here again a matter of murky city and the highland springs? . . . Those far-off souls centuries ago climbed the hills of God, high up there they struck the rock and caused to flow down upon us the living streams that we here drink of."

Bacon said, "Knowledge is power," and while there is some truth in the saying that "A little knowledge is hurtful," it is Cowper who makes the best distinction when, in "The Task," he writes:

"Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more."

And this wisdom it is which, under the guidance of God, rewards the traveler in Bookland, if he gives first place to that Book which is able to make wise unto salvation, that Book in which is revealed the truth of God and eternity, that Book through which we come to the knowledge of him who is the world's Redeemer, Saviour and King.

Happy is the man blessed with the friendship of the great in Bookland—"those faithful friends who are always in when we knock at the door, and never 'not at home' when we call"; those mute, silent friends, always willing to be the companions of the lonely hour, mellowing the day of sadness, cheering the time of need and helplessness and hopelessness. Oh, they are friends worth the having! Here in Bookland all the tides of the world's best thought flow in with their priceless treasures. Here the caravans of the ages bring their rich cargoes. Here we meet and listen to all the great teachers, singers and story-tellers of all time. Here we may laugh as we travel with Dickens' "Pickwick Club" or Mark Twain's "Innocents," or sympathize with Hester, Nathaniel Hawthorne's martyr of "The Scarlet Letter," or sail the seas with Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast," or wander the land over with Longfellow's "Evangeline," or rejoice in the loveliness of Scott's "Rebecca," or dream with John Bunyan, the immortal tinker of Bedford, or sit at the feet of the great preachers of the church from the living masters of sacred oratory back to the little group of inspired apostles that gathered about the Man who spake as never man spake; yea, best of all, we may like Mary by day, or Nicodemus by night, drink at the spring of all wisdom, and learn of him, the "gentle and lowly in heart," and find rest for our souls.

No wonder Charles Lamb was ecstatically grateful for what he called his "communion with the great and good of all time." In Bookland there is no past and no far-away, it is all now and here, making us the heirs of the ages.

Stay at home and journey far into the happy land of books.

Isolation or Interference?

By J. H. Ambruster

AT the time of the death of President Harding, newspapers throughout the country gave accounts of the many important achievements during his term of office. A list, not segregated as between domestic and foreign, but classified by the press as the most outstanding performances, follows:

Establishment of Mixed Claims Commission to adjust American claims against Germany.

Refunding of British war debt and negotiations with other debtor nations for settlement of their indebtedness to the United States on account of loans made during the war.

Return of American troops from the Rhine, and negotiations of an agreement for payment of the costs of their maintenance out of funds derived in the reparations settlement.

Maintenance of American rights in mandated territory under the Versailles Treaty and enforcement of the recognition of these rights by other powers; notably with respect to American rights on the Island of Yap, which is under Japanese mandate.

Negotiations of treaties by the Limitation of Armament Conference, which was initiated by the administration, resulting in international agreement to limit naval construction, restrict use of submarines and poisonous gases in warfare, maintain the integrity of China, and settle controversial questions between Japan and the United States in the Pacific.

Extension of American influence in problems disturbing relationships in the Near East, and helpful participation in the Lausanne Conference.

Enforcement of American aversion to horrors of world traffic in opium and other habit-forming drugs, upon other nations assembled in the Geneva Conference, and substantial acceptance of American proposals to restrict the traffic.

Sent financial experts to Persia to adjust national revenues; and to Colombia for similar purpose, while the Naval Commission rendered expert advice to Brazil.

Peaceful relations between Panama and Costa Rica restored when those nations were at point of war; Cuba aided financially when on brink of bankruptcy; and peaceful governments guaranteed to Santo Domingo and Haiti; Tacna-Africa dispute between Chile and Peru settled; and five republics of Central America assembled in conference for establishment of Central American tribunal to preserve harmony among them.

The above arrangement comprises seventeen distinct items—all important; and it will be noted that every item has reference to matters in which the United States and some foreign country or countries were jointly concerned. Advocates of a policy of American isolation from international affairs would do well to take notice of this fact. It simply goes to show that, try as we will, America is too big, too important, too resourceful, too civilized, and—may we say it?—too Christian a nation to keep aloof from all world affairs and prosper. And why should we do so?

While still a small nation we found it expedient to consider others, or perhaps as might be better stated, to have others consider us. Even Washington did not spurn the aid of France in revolutionary times, and throughout all the years since that time we have not been free, nor could we have been free, from the consideration of other nations, and to some extent from participation in world affairs. For a few examples let us suggest: Morocco, Tripoli, Armenia, Turkey, the British and Russian questions in Alaska, the German question in Samoa, settlement of the Russo-Japanese war, Spain, Japan and China (in Perry's time, during the more recent Boxer uprising, and now the bandit question), and that much-vaunted international measure or treaty, the Monroe Doctrine.

Even now there exists and has been in successful operation for years, a virtual "league of nations" between the United States and South and Central American republics, which in conjunction with the Monroe Doctrine has caused many international questions or differences to be amicably adjudicated by other means than by war. But now we are considering more modern conditions, so let us look at the question from a present day viewpoint. In the first place, why should any country want to be concerned with the affairs of another country? The usual excuse for such international solicitude lies in one of three reasons: namely, aggrandizement, commercialism or humanitarianism.

Aggrandizement: We can quickly dispose of this reason or excuse by saying that we are absolutely not interested. Our policy in the Spanish-American and in the great World War has shown the world where we stand on this question. We are satisfied with what we have, content to be let alone and do not seek colonial possessions in all parts of the globe.

Where We Shine

Commercialism: Here is where we shine. We are universally recognized as being the most resourceful and prosperous nation on the face of the globe at this time. Prosperity is the result of industry, thrift and the development of trade or commerce. We have become prosperous because we have within our borders so many things that other nations need, and yet other nations have many things which we need and do not have. A vast amount of trade or interchange of commodities has grown up, and in these times when the industry and thrift of other nations is at low ebb, we are riding on high tide. If we want this prosperity to continue, our merchants, manufacturers and bankers have a right to expect that our country will be accorded a seat at the council table where international questions are discussed and decided, which will insure our having some voice in the handling of commercial affairs of the world in which they, and through them the remainder of our citizens, are vitally interested; so that we can keep a watchful eye over our own interests, wherever located, in order that some other country may not have an opportunity to "put something over on us," as the saying goes, and cheat us out of our hard-earned prize, gained by long years of industry, ingenuity and sacrifice. If we do not care how our commercial affairs are to be handled on the other side of the seas, or on the seas themselves, and think we can pursue a commercial policy of "all-sufficient unto ourselves," then by all means let us be isolated; but can we afford to do this?

Humanitarianism: This third reason should be given first place; many nations put it last. Let us here take comfort in the fact that the "grand old U. S. A." does place it first, for what is our attitude as expressed under "aggrandizement" but one of humanitarianism? In the programs of some nations it has no place at all.

Our total population is by no means 100 per cent Christian, still there are enough professing Christians within our borders, including those who believe in Christian principles, whether enrolled as church members or not, to justify us in calling this a Christian country; and a Christian nation it has often shown itself to be when emergencies have arisen. In the present crises, what could be more Christian-like than to lend a helping hand to the unfortunates of other lands? Or, reversing the question, what less could be expected of a Christian nation than that it should help those in need, whether within its borders or on the other side of the earth?

The Unfinished Job

To do this it is not necessary recklessly to pledge ourselves to fight their battles, build ships, or send ammunition for a prolongation of their difficulties; or to be a "big policeman for the world," as some have put it; to send our money and our sons across the seas to pay debts or fight battles. We did help in this way recently. The emergency called for just that kind of service, and no other kind of service would have been as effective at the time. Why did we do it? Simply for humanity's sake, to try to put an end to the horrible practices incident to modern warfare. We did our part well, but if any one thinks that the U. S. A. finished the job when the armistice was signed on Nov. 11, 1918, he surely is mistaken. We did not finish it at that time; no one else finished it, and it has not yet been finished. We ought to be willing to see to it that there is an honorable ending, at least so far as we are concerned.

We did not want to get into the war and whether we were finally forced into it by friend or foe, or whether there was some ulterior political motive, it does not matter now. The point is that we found it impossible to keep out of it and although some of us do not want to get into a league of nations or world court now, the chances are that we will have to take some part in the final adjustment sooner or later, whether we want to do so or not, and we might as well do it gracefully and at a time when our services will count for most. In the beginning many were in favor of our joining the league of nations, and had the proposition not been so plainly a one-sided political question, with a one man document which made some of its features impervious to compromising adjustment, it doubtless would have gone through without difficulty. Now that something has been presented which appears to be more adequate and less objectionable to the pros and cons, with the distasteful features of the former document largely eliminated, it seems difficult to get it through because of antagonism to the former league proposition. Most of us possess a more or less prominent bump of obstinacy, and when we have once made up our mind that we do not want a certain thing, it is hard for us to undergo the humility of changing our minds. Many of us who were against the democrats in the first instance, hesitate about changing our positions and endorsing a similar proposition with a republican name. But we will come to it sooner or later. There seems to be no other way out of it. Ours is the greatest nation on earth. Our president holds the highest civil position within the gift of man. This was repeatedly stated at the time of Mr. Harding's death, and was evidenced by the demonstrations of sorrow and sympathy by other governments in ways never heard of before. Shall we maintain our position as leaders, and add to it the role of world counsellors, advisers and arbitrators?

A Big Brother's Assistance

Then above all, if we are Christians we do believe in the Golden Rule. "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. 7:12. If we were "down and out" as a nation, would we welcome a big brother's assistance, counsel and advice?

Let us not be selfish; we live in a goodly land and enjoy many blessings which others do not have. Our system of government is not perfect, but it is the best that has as yet been devised. Why not try to pass on some of the good things to others? Why not try to be honest with ourselves and our God in trying to answer that eternal question, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

The Christian's Prerogative

SOMETIMES one wonders if Christians, as children of God, realize in any least degree their loyalty and prerogatives.

Nowhere does one find any other class or society so apparently desiring to be known for their meekness and humility; but these attributes are by no means to take the place of courage, faith, and power.

We are common, rather than royal in our habits. We fret over the sins of the world without taking account of its virtues; we talk of ailments and troubles instead of health and good fortune; we mourn over the going of our loved ones as though we were not all hopefully bound for the same journey's end. We worry over weather, work, and wealth, forgetting that after finding the kingdom of God, all good things are ours for the taking.

There is much talk, yet only a small part of it is constructive, so, with our minds surcharged with low-lying thoughts and ideas we marvel, not at the weakness of the church, but why the people outside of it are as they are.

When we Christians clothe ourselves with faith and power we shall come to the full consciousness of our relationship to God and begin competing with those first churches whose faith and grace and fruits were commended in the letters written by Paul.

A Gulf Stream in the Sea of Life

Where religion confronts not a theory but a condition and fearlessly faces facts

By Charles Alvin Brooks

IN the springtime of Christianity the religion of Jesus was a way of life. Every Christian home was a Christian center; every meal was a love feast; the disciples practiced for a while a voluntary community of property and the first recorded attempt at organization was for the purposes of welfare and relief. They had no constitution or by-laws, no rules or creed. Their life was the spontaneous overflow of a great love, the exuberance of a new birth. It gave birth to a new social life. New social motives and energies were released and love and faith was the social dynamic. Church history is the record of the tendency, constantly repeated, of the free life of the Spirit becoming frozen into rigid forms and institutions to be broken up only by revolutions that released again the forces of the abundant life that is in Christ and which can never be conventionalized nor confined in any institution.

A community is a social fact. The church is a factor in the life of the community and inseparable from it. It is rooted in and grows out of the community. Its character is determined by the type of the community. This is a simple social fact even though we are strongly reluctant to acknowledge it. In our changing cities typical of our new and more shifting community, conditions in America, we are always being confronted by the fact. If the community is prosperous the church is prosperous. If the community is depressed, the church is depressed. or some unaccountable reason we persist in a belief that the church as a divine institution is independent of the community.

New Conditions

We are familiar with this experience in the case of many of our notable churches where our most gifted preachers once reigned. If they were to return to those same pulpits today they would preach to empty pews. We bewail the decline of religion and the most heroic efforts are put forth to maintain the tradition of family church life in utterly changed communities. Not only are we confronted with changed conditions in old communities but we are called upon to face the religious and social challenge of hundreds of new communities which have been created by our modern industrial life and peopled by immigrants with utterly different traditions from our own.

What answer have we to make to these perfectly familiar facts in our American life? The answer which we are making is the Christian center. In a famous New England city, the old First Baptist church building with a remodeled spire is now occupied by an Italian Catholic church. It is the familiar story of the removal of the membership, the changed community necessitating the changed location of the institutions which was created by the membership. Across the corner from the old First Church stood a splendid plant of another Protestant church likewise removed. Recently our denominational missionary societies united in purchasing the property which is a combined Christian center and a home for an Italian Baptist church. The Christian center is the mobilization of the best social and religious forces in an intensified program of ministry to the changed and changing community life of American industrial and foreign communities.

The Center of Need

The religion of the Christian center is characterized by reality. It confronts not a theory but a condition and fearlessly faces the facts. It does not demand or wait for favorable circumstances or a ready-made situation. It is not the hot-house variety of religion which withers under a change in temperature. It is a brave venture of faith in the face of the circumstances before which conventional and institutional religion has steadily given way in similar American communities. How often have I participated in the selection of a favorable site for an American church. We all know the indispensable prerequisites. In selecting the site for a Christian center, the one prerequisite is the center of need.

The religion of the Christian center is Christian patriotism. I do not refer to that blatant patriotism which finds expression only in the beating of drums and military pomp and insignia. Democracy is not a political formula, but a spirit of brotherhood.

The Christian center is a statue of liberty and a symbol of the true America. It has become in the experience of thousands a Plymouth Rock, where new Americans have begun their real exploration and discovery of America. It is an outpost of American idealism and democracy. Some of us have no sympathy with forced Americanization. The Christian center is to make Americanism winsome and attractive. Its method is not that of the "drive" or the "campaign," but rather that of education and training, relying on spiritual processes to achieve what must be a spiritual result if American ideals are to mean anything at all. The workers in our Christian centers are the reception committee. They stand in the receiving line to welcome to the inner and better America all who really seek the Promised Land.

The religion of the Christian Center is a religion of interpretation. This is Bunyan's "house of the interpreter." The traditional background of these communities is not the background of evangelical America. The old world environment has been transplanted to American soil, and yet the immigrant does not bring all of his environment. The tragedy is he often leaves the best of it behind, its sanctities and world-old traditions which seem to him as strangely out of place in this garish America as his picturesque costume. But there are old-world superstitions and prejudices and hatreds which are out of place here and these he is sure to bring—old-world bitterness and hatred of conventional religion as he knows it at home, religion which was in alliance with political reaction and tyranny, intimately allied and strongly buttressing social injustice and inequality. And so we have often a combination of religious and social ultra-radicalism which is a hold-over from the old world and reinforced often by conditions as they present themselves here to the aspiring and dauntless spirits who make up the best of our immigration. It is our task in the Christian center so to interpret the gospel, not in sectarian terms, but with the great ideas of our Baptist heritage in mind, as to bridge the chasm from the old world to the new. If Baptists will be true to their heritage and dare to practice our principles fearlessly in our foreign colonies, without compromise, we can win. I do not mean in competition with other denominations, but in competition with false ideas of what religion and American democracy really mean.

"The Word Became Flesh"

The religion of the Christian center is the religion of the incarnation. The incarnation of God in Christ, though a unique and unparalleled experience, yet represents a divine method. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory . . . full of grace and truth." Those gracious words are the essence of the religion of the Christian center. The indispensable prerequisite of this ministry is the presence in residence, and complete identification with the community for better or for worse, of men and women who embody the ideals and incarnate the spirit of Jesus. The presence of the foreign missionary and the establishment of a Christian home are indispensable to the evangelization of any foreign field. Like Paul on shipboard, storm-tossed, these workers are identified with those that sail with them and bear the community's need upon their hearts. The religion of the Christian center is the religion of the Good Samaritan. Love is vicarious It finds ways of helping that are not conventional. Love asks no questions as to precedents and conventions. It suffers with all suffering and loves on to the end.

A few years ago in New York City when in the bitter winter, the water drainage pipes froze in the tenements of the Bowery, the property of one of our centers was thrown open from early morning until late at night as a refuge and shelter, with warm food for mothers and little children. When the coal shortage was at its worst, the supply of coal gave out. Any additional allowance was refused on the ground that "churches" might as well be closed as useless. When one of our Christian workers appealed for a reconsideration of the decision, which meant cutting off this ministry, and told the story, she had not finished before the man in authority took up the telephone and shouted instructions to send some coal at once. His reply to the remonstrance from the other end of the wire was "Yes, I know we are giving no coal to churches, but this isn't a church—they only call it a church. It's a place where they take care of women and children!"

The religion on which we are relying is an every-day religion: homespun, plain work-a-day religion, the religion of the carpenter who was no less divine in the carpenter shop that when he laid aside his tools for the great work to which he was appointed. So natural and simple and practical was his faith that at any moment he might have resumed his tools and been not one whit less "full of grace and truth." Doctor Glover says that some forms of piety involve unusual conditions and a special deity. They seem incompatible with daily life. "The type of holiness which Jesus teaches can be achieved with an ordinary diet and a wife and five children." The religion of the Christian center does not require ecclesiastical architecture or special forms and ceremonies. It is the religion of the common people who heard Jesus gladly long ago and will hear him still as eagerly if he can only be brought close enough.

And finally, the religion of which we are thinking is the religion of the Gulf Stream, which changed the climate from that of Labrador to that of Ireland and England. The outpouring of the streams of heavenly grace and love, flowing ever deep and full and steadily from the heart of God alone can change the spiritual climate of the communities of which we are thinking. The secret is just the open secret of the unwearied ministry of redeeming love mediated through men and women who love folks because Jesus loved them and who love Jesus because he loved folks.

After Many Days

By Maurice E. Balk

IT WAS at Antioch. . . . Paul, standing upon the roof of his garden, saw the glory of the sunset, and within his heart he gave thanks to God for it all. Some one plucked his garment from behind. "An old man and poor would speak to you."

"Bring him up," said Paul, "and when you return bring also a vessel with water and towel."

Paul went forward to meet the stranger as he hesitated at the head of the stairs. A shyness, born of his ragged appearance took hold of the visitor. But assured by Paul's easy and perfect manner, the stranger stepped onto the roof.

"Thou art Paul the preacher?" He spoke quickly, nervously. Yet the apostle caught an accent that belied the tattered garments.

"I have sought thee long today. Thou followest Christ of Galilee?"

"Take thine ease, dear stranger; thou art tired; tell me all thou hast to say when thou art rested."

The servant brought a towel and the vessel filled with water, and Paul himself washed the stranger's feet. Descending the stairs, the servant soon returned with meat and drink. Paul seated himself beside the Jew and they supped.

When they were finished the stranger spoke. The food and rest had revived him; his voice was stronger; he turned to Paul. The Eastern twilight deepened into night, as, in the vivid phrasing of his people, the Jew told his story—the story of the rich young ruler and Jesus—a story that for Paul lifted the floodgates of memory and swept him back to the years of his youth, to Damascus. And for this other vanquished Saul at his side there arose a passionate sympathy that longed to minister to the discouragement and ill-fortune so apparent in the stranger's face and condition.

The Jew continued. "Many months afterwards I was in Jerusalem, when they condemned him. I saw him crucified. He was forsaken save by a few women. I thought how foolish it would have been to have followed him. Later I married. For over a year I was supremely happy. The sad eyes of the prophet were soon forgotten in the laughing eyes of a loving wife; and as if to seal the oblivion a child was promised."

The stranger spoke softly now: "The child came"—he paused—"but stole its mother's life." Again he was silent, and Paul spoke words of comfort. "Master, my story is now but short. Into the formless features of the child came the sweet lines of her mother's face. And I loved the child with a double love. But some ailment, from which even the children of my camel drivers recovered, bore my daughter to her mother's tomb. And I was alone.

"'Tis now plain to me that the Great Master took what I would not give. Was it grief? Was it neglect? I know not. But this came to pass with the years. Commerce dwindled on the lake; my ships were lost; my camels perished by a strange disease. My lands slipped from my grasp. I left my house and the house of my fathers; I left Capernaum. But I stood alone in the world, a beggar.

"Yet the instincts of my race would not let me rest. I became a wanderer. I set my face to regain my fortune. I even became one of the hated tax-gatherers." And Paul listened to a tale of almost heroic stubbornness; of the ebb and flow of fortune's tide, ending in utter destitution.

"Has the Christ done this to me? Could he bear ill will, not wishing me well? Why should I have followed him? There was all the promise of spring about me; my crops, my commerce on the Galilean Sea, my wealth and she who lies in the tomb. And his followers! Men from the lakeside; men such as I employ to sail my ships and drive my camels. And did I not keep the law? Had I not done so from my boyhood? And when I asked him of the Perfect Life—what man had ever answered as he! 'Go thy way, sell all thou hast and give it to the poor; and come and follow me.' And his eyes were sad as I turned away.

"Master, can I love such a one? Is it a wonder that I fear him? He stripped me of the wealth he once asked me to leave; snatched from me love and hope, and left me with nothing."

"Thou Wouldst Not!"

"With nothing," breathed the apostle. "Save thyself and him. No, dear friend; down in Judea that spring he offered something ineffably greater than all thy wealth; something for which, through thy human loves unconsciously, thou wast striving; himself, who is God and Love. 'If thou wouldst have eternal life,' he said, and thou wouldst not. How surely it can be said, 'He came unto his own and his own received him not.'

"And he turned away sad. His sadness surely is mirrored in thy own; for we are all one with our Christ. And the measure of thy buffeting is but the measure of his love for thee. In the deep mist of thy wealth and self-righteousness the warm rays of his love were diffused and lost. But Christ is no timid Lover. He has shriveled up all that was not the man in thee; thyself alone is left. Is it not true what he said—'How hardly shall the rich man enter the kingdom of God' But the hardship now is over; the gates are opening for thee.

"Be not deceived, my friend," continued the apostle. "Whom he loveth he chastiseth. So he trieth the gold he coveteth. Is his labour to be fruitless? Nay, give him what remaineth from the ashes of thy foolishness—thyself, thy life, thy love."

A soft breeze played gently over the roof, stirring to soft dissonance the leaves of some neighboring shrubbery and peace spread over the city below But to the rich young ruler of the Gospel had come a greater peace—the peace of all those who attain Christ.

"Paul," said the Jew softly, "canst thou make me one of his followers?"

"Nay," answered Paul, "that I cannot for he hath himself already made the one; thine own tears witness to the fact Thy baptism will set the seal on thine acceptance."

The Hardest Words in the English Language

The hardest word of all to master is a strong, assertive, two-letter monosyllable

By Bernard C. Clausen

HUMAN life is a search after words. The gulf between beast life and man life separates wordlessness from the mastery of words. The crown of the human race is the ability to use words. An inherited treasure of wisdom comes down from past generations by means of words. Such enmity and hate as mar our world life may be traced directly to our inability to understand each other when we speak or write. Beauty sings itself to us in poetic words; travel reveals its secrets to us as we mount on the wings of another's words; ideas and ideals are preserved intact through the years in the wrappings of words. If you would realize how much of life depends upon language, imagine for a moment a world suddenly stricken wordless. Books mean nothing to us, penmanship avails naught, speech is unintelligible grunting. The agony of that blundering crowd about the tower of Babel is as nothing compared with the curse of helplessness which would blight a wordless mankind. Perhaps no truer thing could be said about the search of mankind through the ages than that it is an adventure in pursuit of words, new words, better words, more accurate words, more generally understood words, more beautiful words.

Words and Life

Certainly any life may be adequately summed up in terms of a search for words. From the first inarticulate gurgle of the baby who tries to imitate a baffling sound, to the dying whisper of the old man, we are battling with the problem of words. The child mind collects new words, like bright, glittering toys, and plays with them in glee. School days discipline the search into ordered training in spoken and written words. College brings an expansion of vocabulary and a mastery of the technique of classification and definition, with words as tools in the mighty drama of scientific research. Maturity introduces one to the tragedy of misunderstanding which might be averted by the right words. And death ends with stillness that hunger which has led men through the years. To say words, and read them, to use them correctly, to name things exactly and define them accurately, to respond to words and with words, then to penetrate the art which lies in the realm of beautiful words, to weave fabrics with the threads of words, into the patterns of glory,—is there much in life not included in this outline?

Perhaps it is because so much of our life is made up of words, that men's minds have been so frequently intrigued by the study of those strange coins which compose the currency of our speech-exchange. Think of the varieties of words with which our speech is equipped, harsh words and kind words, sharp words and soft words, bright words and dull words, hate words and love words, weasel words and power words, all ready for our use. Think of the confession of moral experience which is revealed in the vocabulary of a nation. Trench, in his matchless book "On the Study of Words" comments on the moral degradation implied in a tribe's language which has no word to designate God, but has one to name the process by which an unborn child may be destroyed within the body of the mother; or the tragic brutality betrayed by the native vocabulary of Tasmania, where four words express various methods of maliciously taking human life, without a single word coined for love. The romance of the study of words may enliven every glance at that compendium of phrases, the modern newspaper, and may clothe with interest even the most tedious of sermons.

What Are Sermons?

For sermons are simply attempts to clothe in meaningful and exact words the truths which religion has brought to sincere men. In my mind, there can be no more alluring task than to attempt to translate what the life of Jesus means to me, into the language of my fellowmen, so accurately that I shall do no injustice to my Christ; so simply that his revelations shall bore and bewilder no one.

Indeed, the opening chapter of John's Gospel, striving with all the treasures of vocabulary at its disposal to make Jesus clear, comes to its climax by saying, "He was the Word." Let us never again disparage the wonder of speech. Jesus was "the Word," from the heart of God.

I need make no apology, then, for writing these paragraphs in a lesson on the use of the hardest words in the English language. For every one should be master in the technique of speech, and should not be satisfied until the hardest words are his possession for freest use.

Difficulty depends, of course, on what one is trying to do with words. If the problem is to write the words, then even those yard-long polysyllables of theological definition, like "transubstantiationarism," and "antitranscendentalism," must yield the palm, though not without a struggle. Is it significant that the longest words in our language were invented to express, and are used to confuse the crystal-clear thought and limpid conciseness of Jesus' teaching? But even these technical titles are slight compared with the Indian name of a little New England lake where I have spent many a boyhood summer. Its horrendous title was Chargoggagoggmanchauggagoggchaubunagungamaugg!

If the problem is one of spelling, the writer moves in an altogether different area, for short words are often hard to spell. "Eleemosynary" has always been a personal favorite, perhaps because of the benevolence it represents, perhaps because I early mastered it and can count it a personal conquest. But it gives less trouble than such innocent-looking little rascals as "believe" and "receive," in which the i's and the e's elude the unwary who have not learned the humble yet infallible talisman "lice." Pronouncing, of course, introduces us to an entirely new set of difficulties, depending upon past experience and the formation of one's oral cavity.

But we move into another field, when we begin to discuss the hardest words to say and really mean them. Here is an area in which the Master, Jesus, presumes to be an authority. What he came to do has been summed up in many ways, but we can fairly say that he who was the Word came to teach men words, as the secrets of his vocabulary. What are the words he wishes us to master? Does his emphasis select some words as the hardest words of all?

Difficult Words

They seem so simple at first glance. Their very simplicity deceives us. How many of us have learned the art of saying, "I was wrong." We say almost anything to avoid that. "I was deceived"; "It was not very important after all"; "I was following out my own best impulses"; "You are misunderstanding me"; "If only you could know what was surrounding me then, you could see through it all"; "I do not see anything for me to regret." We are deceiving no one but ourselves. And even there the deception is a failure. We know that what we should say is a simple frank confession of our own fault. "I was wrong!" When we do find the courage to say it, it is as if a fresh breeze blew over the dank meadow of our subterfuge and deception. "Confess your fault," urges Jesus. Get the self-pity out of your voice, swallow your pride, learn to say, "I was wrong."

Add to this unused phrase another, "I am sorry." If I could send a hundred men from these paragraphs back to their homes with these two brief sentences mastered, springtime of love would come winging back into a hundred women's hearts. Tear away the walls of many of our houses, and find the winter of despair petrifying everything into the grim semblance of death. I could dispel that silent chill if I could teach men the command of these two brief sentences. The grey sky will clear into heavenly blue, the chill winds will whisper like a summer zephyr, the bird songs of happiness will fill every hour, the sullen snow and the grim ice will melt and meet in rivulets of gladness, and the brooks will leap with ripples of laughter. Spring will come again!

For I shall teach women to say, "I forgive!" Not scornfully, but humbly, as if knowing the delicacy of reconciliation. Too often the words are said, if said at all, with a hard glitter of remembrance that transforms them into a threat. Too often there is a supercilious aloofness which changes the blessed syllables into a cynical sneer of "holier-than-thou." But the words I should teach begin with a recognition of one's own faults, an acknowledgment of the common ground of sin on which all humanity stands, an avowal of the sympathy which yearns to strengthen the offender, and the opening of every portal of the life in a bold gesture which takes the risk of unworthiness on the bare chance of atonement. One hour of study in Christ's teaching will reveal how he kept striving with men over this difficult sentence. Seventy-times-seven was not often enough to say it toward one brother, the depths of hell could not encompass it, eternities could not silence it, and he who had not learned to forgive could by no artifice effectively plead to be forgiven.

There is one word more difficult in the English language. Short as these other expressions have been, they bring us at last to a climax word even more laconically brief. The hardest word of all is the short, sharp monosyllable "No!" —spoken without hesitation in the face of temptation. Not a compromising "I'll think it over"; not a wavering "Well, I want to be a good fellow"; not a faltering "It cannot be as bad as they say; just this once and never again." But the simple, frank, strong, self-assertive, unabashed "No!" which means business and will brook no retreat.

The lights are flickering out in a hundred country churches, and home through the shadows of Sunday night mother and father are walking. They have been thinking of their boy, all through the service.

"Wonder where he is to-night?"

"Oh, he's all right, mother. In church, perhaps."

"Yes, but I cannot help wondering and praying. O God, when temptations assail our boy, give him courage to say, No!"

"What of the Laymen?"

By William Travers Jerome

THIS question has recently been asked by many people in many places.

Twelve hundred men on Sunday, Sept. 30, packed the auditorium of the First Church of Syracuse with standing room only.

Practically every Baptist church in Montana on Sept. 30 celebrated laymen's Sunday.

A pastor of a little backwoods church in Wisconsin said "Thank God for laymen's Sunday, it saved our church. My men came together for the first time in years, old animosities were forgotten and a new .spirit of cooperation was born."

Three examples picked from a multitude, showing how the celebration of Sunday, Sept. 30 as laymen's Sunday helped to mobilize the men. What of the laymen!

The telephone rings in the office of the National Laymen's Council and the chairman is requested to furnish a speaker for a great Bible and missionary conference, to speak on the job of the laymen in the church. A speaker is furnished.

The phone again rings. "Can Mr. Jasperson (executive secretary of the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen) stop off at Cleveland on his way to Chicago and secure the release of Mr. Dickson so he can set up the missionary conference in New York?" Mr. Jasperson stops off at Cleveland for half a day and gets Mr. Dickson's release. Then Mr. Jasperson goes to Chicago to meet the middle western chairman of the National Council in a day's conference. What of the layman!

"You can't do anything with the laymen during the summer"—the chairman of the Laymen's Council and the executive secretary heard this remark at least fifty times in Atlantic City last spring and afterwards. They almost came to believe it themselves—almost but not quite. They decided at least to try and see what could be done during the summer so that when the fall came, real work could start. Mr. Jasperson began his duties July 1. By Sept. 1, every state in the Northern Convention except two had a live layman as state chairman and he was at once setting about building up a local state council to help him organize the men of his state. The laymen of Maine meeting at Waterville under their state chairman, Harry S. Brown, decided to underwrite the expenses of a local layman to act as executive secretary for the Maine work. Nothing can be done in the summer?

On Sept. 15 the state chairmen of the Laymen's Council of the eastern states met for a day's conference in New York.

On Sept. 20, the state chairmen of the middle western states met in Chicago for a day's conference with Mr. Jasperson.

During October, the executive secretary of the Laymen's Council, Mr. Jasperson, has been meeting with large and small groups of laymen throughout the Middle West, and one and all are eager to cooperate and build up a strong laymen's organization in our Northern Convention.

In November; Mr. Jasperson was to meet the chairmen of the western and Pacific coast states and their laymen.

During October and November prominent laymen have been speaking to groups of men at laymen meetings held in the New England and eastern states in connection with the state conventions and Bible and missionary conferences.

What of the laymen?

The laymen are awakening!

The laymen are mobilizing!

The National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen is being daily strengthened in its work by the splendid cooperation being given it by pastors and the various units of laymen in the different states. The following letter from the Hon. G. I. Neal, state chairman of the Laymen's Council for West Virginia is a good example of the sort of cooperation that the National Council is getting.

Mr. William Travers Jerome, Jr.,
Chairman,
National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen,
17 East 42nd Street, Room 200,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

Our State Baptist Association met at Parkersburg last week—Oct. 16-19 inclusive.

I made an appeal for an organization of the laymen of this state through our state paper, the Baptist Banner, to about 300 laymen whose names I procured. We had a supper, at which there were around 200 in attendance. It was really a great success. Much interest was manifest and apparently all those present went home determined to do what they could to effect a thorough organization.

We organized by the selection of a state chairman, a treasurer, and a secretary, and five additional laymen to be named by the chairmen, the five so named, together with the three officers, to comprise an executive council. The gathering selected me as state chairman, and C. P. Nelson, Robson-Prichard Building, Huntington, W. Va., treasurer, and authorized the chairman to name a secretary, who is to give all of his time to the work and receive a salary and expenses to be fixed by the chairman.

I have not yet selected a secretary, but as soon as I do I will report his name, address and salary to your office. It is our purpose to go actively into the work, commencing at the bottom, that is, each church, and later to build them into combinations or large groups.

We shall keep you advised as to our efforts along these lines.

Please have my mail addressed to me at Box 363, instead of 917 Fifth Avenue.

Yours truly,
Signed—George I. Neal.

What of the laymen!

More men than ever before in the history of our denomination are attending the state and association conventions this fall.

Men are beginning to realize that the church which is good enough to marry them and bury them and to teach their children, the church that is good enough for their wives, mothers and sweethearts to work for, that church is worthy to receive from them more intelligent interest and service.

The men are beginning to appreciate that helping to run a church is a real man's job, and that the burden has been left far too long on the shoulders of the women and the pastors. They have done more than their fair share and the men are determined to step in now and help them more actively in the great work.

The National Council is planning to bring at least 1,000 laymen to the Northern Convention meeting at Milwaukee next spring. In this way the men can get an intelligent picture of the many activities of the denomination and help, as they should, in shaping the policies of the Northern Convention.

Mutual understanding, mutual trust, mutual cooperation. More intelligent work and less unintelligent talk! These are the underlying principles governing the aims of the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen.

It is to the credit of Baptist laymen that while maintaining independence of thought they can still work together harmoniously in the name of Jesus Christ for the glory of their God and their church.

Neighbors But Not Yet Brothers

By A. B. Rudd

NEIGHBORS as we are—the United States and Mexico—it behooves us to cultivate friendly relations. Neighbors who fail to do this must pay the penality in many ways. The "I-will-have-nothing-to-do-with-my-neighbor" plan has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. A few years ago an American who lived not far north of the Mexican border said to me: "If I had my way, I would build a high wall between Mexico and the United States and cut off all communication between the two countries." To quote him is to condemn him—national selfishness run to seed! It is true of nations as of individuals—no nation liveth to itself. International developments in the last few years have clearly demonstrated this fact. Even from European nations, our country cannot—dare not—hold itself entirely aloof, and much less from Mexico with a common boundary of more than 1200 miles and common continental interests which justify our much-talked-of Pan-Americanism. A consideration of two simple questions may help to throw light on the Christianizing of our relations with Mexico.

It is heartening to observe that the great masses of our American people who have never seen Mexico are thinking about the Christianizing of these relations. And to one who crossed the border thirty-five years ago and whose heart has beat in close sympathy with Mexico ever since, the question we are considering has but one answer—it is sorely needed.

Mexico regards our country with suspicious fear. Past history does not inspire confidence. We are frequently spoken of as El Coloso del Norte (The Colossus of the North). Some time ago this matter was discussed in an editorial in El Universal, the leading daily of Mexico City, and the statement was made that in case war should come between the United States and Japan, the sympathy of Mexico would be with Japan, though she might not feel free to say so in a practical way. Should our future relations with Mexico continue on a par with those of the past, these fears and suspicions will be removed. She will continue to regard us as a neighbor to be feared rather than loved and trusted. A Christianizing of our relations will establish confidence, change her attitude, and thus open the way for us to become a decidedly helpful neighbor.

This brings us to the more important and by far the more difficult question to answer, "How can it be done?"

Get Acquainted

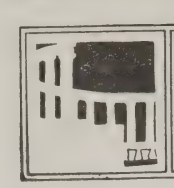
I would suggest that we begin by getting better acquainted with each other. I doubt if there are two countries in the world with so long a common boundary that know each other so little, that understand each other so lamely. Of course there is a reason for this—difference of race, difference of language, difference of traditions, etc. But a Christian nation must make an honest effort to rise above these things in dealing with its neighbor. When the American and Mexican nations come to know each other better, two things will be evident: first, that neither is as bad as the other regards it; second, that neither is as good as each regards itself. Intimate mutual knowledge will go far toward bringing our relations with Mexico in line with Christian principles.

The conscientious application of Christian principles in the handling of diplomatic questions is the one great thing to be desired in our dealings with Mexico. Rarely if ever has the world seen a finer example of this than in the case of the appointment of Warren and Payne by President Harding to study with two Mexican commissioners in Mexico City the question of recognition of the Obregon government. Our procedure in this matter has made a deep impression on Mexico, and the names of Harding, Warren and Payne will be held in grateful remembrance in this land. After all, it is character—personal character, character moulded along distinctive Christian lines—that can bring about the desired results as to international relations.

The intensifying of all departments of mission work—evangelistic, educational, medical—will undoubtedly go a long way towards Christianizing our relations with Mexico. Giving her the very best we have got—giving it in abundance and with a hearty good-will—lending a ready hand in the physical, educational and moral uplift of her millions. Just in proportion as our home-land Christians invest in Mexico's redemption, will they be inclined to deal with her as a Christian nation should. It's high time for us to see what we can put into Mexico, rather than what we can get out of her.



And now in closing let me call attention to what I regard as a most important factor in the problem we are considering, namely, the attitude of our people toward the more than 3,000,000 Mexicans now in the United States. The press of Mexico is constantly publishing notices of mistreatment of her nationals in different parts of our land. Of course many of these notices are greatly exaggerated and not a few are doubtless false. Now it goes without saying that the presence of so large a number of Mexicans in the states may become either an asset or a liability when it comes to the question of the relations between the two countries. They go north clothed with their racial virtues and faults. If our people can meet them and deal with them in accordance with the Christian principles we profess, a great point will be scored in favor of Christianizing our relations with Mexico.

Unnoticed

A few years ago while attending the meeting of our Northern Baptist Convention, I looked up a Mexican Baptist who when a lad had been a student of mine in the Zaragoza Institute in Saltillo. For some years he had been established in business in this northern city and seemed to be doing well in his adopted land. I asked him about his church relations and his religious life. His reply, which pained me greatly, was about as follows: "When I came to this city I at once began to attend the Baptist church and continued to do so for quite a while. Gradually I was impressed with the fact that no one took any special notice of me, and later I was convinced that I was not a welcome attendant in the services, and so dropped out altogether. As there was no Mexican congregation in the city where I might feel at home, I gradually lost interest in religious matters and now do not feel that I have any religion at all."

This young man comes of a good family. His father is a deacon of our church here in Mexico City, and his brother is vice-president of the traffic for the national railroad lines of the republic. Before leaving the city in which he lives, I stated the case to the pastor of the church which my young friend attended, urging him to do what he could to remedy the situation. Later I wrote inquiring if he had succeeded in interesting the young man in religious matters, but received no answer. I have given this incident as pointing out a way in which American Christians may lend a hand to Mexicans who live among them and so help forward the work of Christianizing our relations with Mexico.

A PROTEST

I was greatly astonished to read in your issue of Nov. 3 the article by Samuel McCrea Cavert, "How the Orthodox Eastern Church Looks to an American Churchman." After the position taken by the writer of said article it would appear that all our Baptist missionary endeavors in Europe are worse than useless.

Our brethren from Jugo-Slovia, Roumania and Russia told us at the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm last summer of the bitter persecutions they are still suffering at the hands of this same Orthodox Eastern church. Now that the powerful Eastern church has in part lost its standing with an income from the governments it is appealing for the sympathy and financial support of American Christians. It has not changed its spirit nor its methods. Our Brother Adorian, pastor of the Roumanian church in Bucharest, can furnish us dozens of authentic cases of bitter persecution instigated at the hands of the Orthodox Eastern church. When I was in Roumania last summer I met many of the brethren who had thus been persecuted and saw the marks of their persecution on their bodies. Brother Belk, formerly superintendent of the First Roumanian Sunday School, Detroit, showed us the bruises where he, with many others, had been beaten with stones and sticks two days previous. Brother S. U., missionary in Bukovinia, came directly from prison to our meeting. This is the fourth time since last February that he has been in prison for weeks at a time for preaching the gospel of our Lord and Christ. I could give many instances but mention only these two, of men whom I have known in Detroit for years past and last summer met in Roumania.

The state says there shall be religious tolerance for all, but the representatives of the Orthodox Eastern church manages the persecution not only of the living but even goes so far as to refuse burial to the dead and in at least one instance to cause the body of a Baptist brother to be exhumed months after his burial and the coffin to be placed in the ditch by the roadside.

It is this conduct of the Orthodox Eastern church which needs to be interpreted to the churches of the West. Of course if we have nothing to offer except a different kind of liturgy and differently practiced ceremonies then it may be well to prepare for a compromise. On the other hand, if we still have a life-giving gospel, as our brethren in those countries prove we have, then it is not an effort to strengthen this unholy church which we need but rather the earnest prayers for all of our brethren that are working so heroically in the countries dominated by the Greek Catholic Church.

I believe in the broadest brotherhood and am associated with men of many different denominations in various kinds of Christian service; I want to be courteous and generous; but having seen the ruinous influence of those churches of Europe that are dead in formalism and ceremony, I want to protest against any effort that will strengthen the hands of such organizations and cause the people of those countries to continue to sit in darkness, ignorant of the saving knowledge of our Redeemer.

VAN LOON'S NEW TESTAMENT

H. G. Wells thinks we need a new Bible and that he is best fitted for making it. Van Loon, with a seemingly great admiration for the Bible and a desire to make it increasingly attractive, has, in reality, given us a one-sided and diminished view of the person and character of the New Testament Christ. How does Van Loon sum up the character of Christ? Is he to him the greatest of characters, the one who cannot be contained in the definition of a man alone? Bushnell in portraying Jesus says he cannot be classified among men. Van Loon speaks of him in such terms as these: "His heart was filled with love for his fellow-men—he was faithful in his religious duties—he was not like other people." The biographers of Gladstone, of Carey, of Judson make the same statements, and with equal truthfulness concerning these men. The Christ of Van Loon is presented as one with the sanity of a Franklin, the heroism of the Knights of the Round Table, the piety of a Saint Francis, but he is not the Christ as everywhere living in the New Testament. In the Gospels he is the carpenter, the son, the citizen, the synagogue worshiper, but he is also that one through whom men see the Father, the Son of God whose death bears an indissoluble relation to forgiveness of sins (Matt. 26:28).

Van Loon is not fair to the New Testament or to the words of Jesus concerning himself. Fifty years ago Professor Seeley gave to the world his brilliant book "Ecce Homo," giving his conception of the person of Christ. He presented Jesus as the model man, a reconstructor of society, illustrating and enforcing the Golden Rule, but Jesus the Saviour, the Redeemer—he did not find him in the New Testament. Van Loon is a man of the Seeley kind. The boys for whom this volume is designed will find a Christ very different and very inferior to that presented in the Gospels and epistles of the New Testament. There is a peril that the beautiful appearance of the book, its attractive literary style, its apparently great desire to win the boys to read the Bible will lead the reading public to a mistaken estimate of its worth. The book reviewer of The Baptist of Nov. 10 speaks of it as a magnificent piece of work. In my judgment it is a mischievous piece of work because it does not give us a large enough view of Jesus. It does not allow him to speak for himself.

and change their spirit; his is the mercy and forgiving of sins. But let us also make our day set apart for repentance and prayer a day of thank-offering and sacrifice! The unspeakable rise of the cost of living oppresses the country. Provision for the winter is lacking almost everywhere. In the great cities and industrial neighborhoods millions of people are being seized by want. Many fall sick and die because the very necessities of life are lacking. Whoever has anything and can help let him help! Brothers, sisters help because there is need of your help, oh such bitter need! Let us give unto the Lord of that which he has given to us; we are but stewards and soon he will say: 'Give an account of thy stewardship!' If the twenty-eighth of October will be a real day of penitence, prayer, thank offering and sacrifice then it will be a day of blessing, and its effects and consequences will become so more and more and remain so. God grant this!"

Mr. Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States Railroad Labor Board, according to the Union Signal, says: "I am not a citizen of Chicago but have been a resident of the city for two years. I am therefore not in a position to make a comparison of conditions in Chicago prior and subsequent to the adoption of the prohibition amendment. Personally I am a prohibitionist and always have been. I was elected governor of Tennessee twice on a law enforcement platform, by a combination of republicans and democrats who believed in the theory of prohibition and in the practicality of its enforcement. I have never seen anything in Chicago nor anywhere else that has modified my views in the least as to the evils of the liquor traffic, the necessity of its prohibition and the feasibility of the effectual enforcement of the eighteenth amendment." Mr. Hooper is a member of the Morgan Park Church, Chicago and the teacher of a large men's class.

Sunday School Lesson for December 23

THE UNIVERSAL REIGN OF CHRIST
CHRISTMAS LESSON

Lesson Text: Isa. 9:6-7, 11:1-10; Psa. 2:1-10.

Golden Text: Psa. 2:8.

The universal reign of Christ rests upon the character, reflects the conduct and requires the cooperation of the followers of Christ.

Rests Upon the Character

Both passages from Isaiah describe the character of the Anointed One, for that is what the word Messiah, or Christ, means. Christ is not a personal name—it is an official title, and always means to devout Jews the Messiah. The universal reign of the Messiah is predicted by Isaiah and by the Psalmist, and the universality of the reign rests upon the character of the King. Wisdom, righteousness and power are the three attributes of character emphasized. Wisdom is expressed by three other words—understanding, counsel, knowledge. This wisdom is not received from educational processes or by academic methods, but comes upon the King as a spiritual gift. "The spirit of Jehovah shall rest upon him." We do not depreciate the need of full academic training for all religious leaders; but there is an intuitive knowledge, sometimes called common sense, which is independent of all schools. The Christ had this kind of knowledge in all its fullness, and all who would cooperate with him in the establishment of his universal kingdom must have it, too, in addition to academic learning.

Righteousness and power are also attributes of his character. His uprightness appears in his judgments. No sharp judgments based upon rumor have any place in the reign of the Messiah. He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, that is, by appearances; neither decide after the hearing of his ears, that is, by rumor or gossip. The square deal is his rule and equity is his standard for everybody and especially for those who have suffered without the power to redress their wrongs. Power can be placed in the hands of such a ruler because he will never abuse it. The power he exercises is the power of free speech, for he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. There is nothing so powerful as the spoken word on the lips of a righteous man upon whom rests the spirit of wisdom. It is greater than all armies and navies. Jesus sent his disciples out to preach and teach because the spoken word when inspired and focused is invincible.

Reflects the Conduct

Painters have found in the description of Isaiah 10:6-9 the inspiration for their pictures of the Golden Age. Jesus in his early life embodied all the beautiful ideas of Isaiah's vision of the wolf dwelling with the lamb, the leopard lying down with the kid, etc. In all other men the brute is forever seeking to exalt itself above the spirit. Paul could never get away from the tragedy of the flesh dominating the spirit. But in Christ all the wild passions were tamed, and he presented to the world one man whose conduct was perfect and in whose personality human nature was restored to the image of God. Therefore the universal reign of Christ when it is accomplished will reflect the spirit and conduct of Christ. For wild passions that issue in lust and war and greed and murder there is no place in the kingdom of God. Only as these passions are tamed by the grace of Christ and turned into new channels can they be used to build up the things they once destroyed.

Requires the Cooperation

The universal reign of Christ will never come without the cooperation of the followers of Christ. "Ask of me," says the golden text, "and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Prayer is basic in any cooperation with our Lord. What is not worth praying about is not worth having. We pray for the things in which we are most interested, and if we pray without hypocrisy our lives will be in harmony with our prayers. In other words, no man can pray honestly without cooperating with God in the answer to his prayers. Therefore when the Psalmist said, "Ask of me and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance," he was putting his finger on the very heart of cooperation. It is all very beautiful to read and visualize the colorful words of Isaiah about the millennium; but the millennium waits upon the fuller cooperation with Christ of those who profess to be his followers.

Departmental Correlation in Ontario, Calif.

By H. R. Stanford

The church school is organized in departments consisting of senior, adult and young people. The young people's department is subdivided on the basis of day-school association. For example the junior high-school group is the intermediate department in the church school. Of course there is flexibility in classification. But the plan calls for the complete articulation of day-school associations with church and Sunday school relations. A competent principal heads each department.

The plan is not new. But the demonstration of its value in this place is new to this church. The principal of each department is responsible not only for the Bible-study period on Sunday mornings, but for the devotional and expressional activities of the young people on Sunday nights and on social occasions during the week. This plan called for the reorganization of the B. Y. P. U. The young people were divided into three groups under the title B. Y. P. U., and within a few months each of the new societies had a membership and attendance equal to or greater than that of the single society before the new plan was established.

This growth was due to several factors. Correlation emphasized the fact that every member of the Bible school is by virtue of that membership related in a vital way to one of the evening groups, and as the principals are interested in both the morning and evening meetings they try to build for both with equal interest, and as the responsibility is thrown directly upon each age-group for its own programs without the help of "the old-timer" to monopolize the time, the natural reserve of the younger people is removed, and by holding the groups together in day school association alignment the esprit de corp of the public school is transferred naturally to the Bible school and B. Y. P. U.

In this readjustment perhaps the greatest problem was the adult B. Y. P. U. This was to include members of the adult group, men and women who, for the most part, had been through the graduate and post-graduate courses of the B. Y. P. U. and for whom the regular young people's topics were no longer adapted. They were largely getting their devotional and expressional opportunity in the mid-week prayer meeting. After trying the old and familiar B. Y. P. U. topics and routine for a while and failing to hold the attendance, it was decided to make this rather a study group than a B. Y. P. U. in the usual sense. The question of what to study found a happy solution in a suggestion to use The Baptist. Each Sunday evening, accordingly, this group has been using a single issue of The Baptist around which to center discussion. Sometimes a single article is taken and informally discussed or debated. Sometimes two or three articles are treated in this way if brief enough. In some issues a central theme has run through the paper and this has been made the keynote of the meeting. These meetings of the adult group have proven very interesting and profitable.

None of the organizations existing under the old plan has been done away with by departmental correlation but each is strengthened and systematized

How Two Children Looked for Heaven

A Christmas Play from Czecho-Slovakia

(When I was in Prague last summer Madam Kolator told me of a lovely Christmas play that was given by the orphans in the Peabody-Montgomery Home at the Christmas season. The story of the play was founded on a true incident of two children, who came to the home just as described. I saw the children, by the way. It was written by Rev. B. Hanus, one of our devoted pastors, and had to be repeated before several audiences, the people were so deeply touched.

The orphans acted it with great feeling and skill, but naturally the boy who took the part of the dog that barked outside the door was regarded as a stellar performer.

Very little scenery is needed. The children do not wear any distinctive costume—just ordinary clothes.

The Children's Home in Prague, about which this play is written, is supported by the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society. The little play might be given and then an offering taken and the proceeds sent to the society through the state office, plainly designated to be for the support of the Peabody-Montgomery Home, in Prague. This will count on the church's apportionment, as it is included in the budget. The translation of the little play was made by Madam Kolator.—Helen B. Montgomery.)

SCENE I

Lord Mayor of a small village sits in his room and writes. Some one knocks. "Come in."

Rich farmer's wife, Mrs. White, enters: "Good morning!"

Lord Mayor: "Good morning, Mrs. White; what can I do for you?"

Mrs. White: "The policeman told us in the market, yesterday, that there are those two orphans, and asked if any one would take care of them till the time when their aunt comes and takes them. So we thought we would be willing to take them to our house.

Lord Mayor: "Well, I am glad, Mrs. White. You see, you really could take those orphans as your own, having no children and no debts on your farm."

Mrs. White: "Do you think that we worked as hard as we did, to give it away now to any one? No, no, my dear sir! It's quite enough if we take those children in for a few weeks, and it may be the aunt will not even pay for it, at all!"

Lord Mayor: "But, Mrs. White, you don't mean—"

Mrs. White: "Yes, I do, really!"

Lord Mayor: (Gets up from his seat, opens a door and calls to his wife): "Mother, bring those children in. You see, Mrs. White, they are such good children. If we had not our own five children, we would take them as our son and daughter."

Enter wife with boy, four years old, and girl, eight years: "Here they are (kindly), those dears! Well, I am glad you accept them, Mrs. White; God will be your reward.

Lord Mayor: "You see, children, Mrs. White will take care of you; and just you be as good as you have been these three days with us, and surely she will like you very much, too. Well, go, Rose; go and give your little hand to Mrs. White."

Rose: "Don't send us away! Let us stay with you!" (Puts her arms around L. Mayor's wife).

Wife of Lord Mayor: "Don't cry, Rose; don't! Look here, you will get used to Mrs. White, just as you got used to me. She will be ever so kind to you both."

Mrs. White: "Now, stop that crying! I don't like that! Come on, children."

Lord Mayor: "There is a bundle of their clothes in the kitchen."

Mrs. White: "Goodbye." "Goodbye."

Wife of Lord Mayor gives her the bundle of clothes, and says: "Dear Mrs. White, be kind to them. They are so wretched and alone in the world!"

Mrs. White: "They will not suffer hunger, but you know quite well I haven't time for any nonsense. Goodbye."

Lord Mayor walks up and down in his room, sighs, sits a while over his writing; gets up again, and looks unhappy. His wife enters, with red eyes; sits down and puts her handkerchief to her eyes, and says: "I'm so unhappy about those poor dears! Who knows what they will have to suffer from that woman? If we hadn't five children, I'd not give them away!"

Lord Mayor: "They just only took them because they heard something about an aunt, and who knows if this aunt gives them anything for it?"

Wife: "But I hope they will not do any harm to those children."

Lord Mayor: "Remember, mother, that the root of all evil is love of money."

SCENE II

Servant of Mrs. White irons linen; it is Christmas time: Rose and little Johny sit on the floor and try to play—very sadly.

Enter Mrs. White: "Again in my way! Make room; sit somewhere aside; don't come in my way all the time!"

Servant: "But, ma'am, don't please; it's a sad Christmas for them, any way."

Mrs. White, (Angry): "Stop that talk! Everybody pities them—because you have not to pay the fare of it, that's all! I'm sorry I was foolish enough to take them. After all, no aunt in sight, any how! And you hurry up with that ironing, or we shall never be ready!" (Goes away).

Servant: "Poor dears! Why didn't their mother take them away, too?"

Rose: "Mary, is it far away, that heaven where mother is now?"

Servant: "Why do you ask?"

Rose: "When mother was ill, she told me she was going to heaven. I wanted very much that she should take me, too, but she said I must stay with Johny and take care of him. Later on, she said, 'We will meet there.' But I think we could go and try to find heaven."

Servant: "Poor dears! Yes, if God would take you there, it would be better for you."

Rose: "I don't think it's far, at all. I am looking every day to those hills over there, and there it's just so very near to heaven." (She looks out of the window).

Servant: "In the spring, when it will be fine in the field, we will go up to the top of the hill over there. Then we will see how near heaven looks, over there."

Rose: "If it only would not be so cold and snowy, and Johny would not be so small, we could go, perhaps tomorrow."

Servant: "In the spring Johny will be big enough to walk to that hill."

Enter Mrs. White: "Now, do hurry up! Don't talk to those kids. The devil brought them to me."

Rose: "Now don't cry, Johny! We will go away to mammy, to heaven. She will never be cross with us. Don't you ever think of your mammy?"

Johny: "Oh, yes, always when I sleep."

Rose: "Look here, Johny, let's go now right now!"

Johny: "Yes, let's go now!"

Rose: "To mammy!"

Johny: "To mammy!"

Rose: "But, Johny, you must run very very fast. You won't cry, will you? Look from that window—Heaven is very near it's over there (pointing). We will soon find mother. But we must not come near Mrs. White; she would beat us again. You remember?"

Johny: "Oh, I will just run and run!"

Rose: (Puts a woolen shawl around Johny's shoulders, and whispers): "Come! We just cross the garden; but quick quick!"

SCENE III

In Peabody-Montgomery Home: Seventeen children, with the matron, are celebrating the Christmas Eve. A fine Christmas tree, with burning candles, and the table full of presents. The children sing a Christmas hymn, when a dog barks very loudly behind the screen.

Orphan: "Auntie, some one must be at the door. You hear our doggie?"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Auntie: "Yes, go and see who it is." (All wait).

Auntie: "Who is it, coming in—some children?" (Enter orphan with Rose and Johny).

Orphan: "Auntie, a boy and a girl stood in front of the home, and looked eagerly into our window. I heard the little boy say, 'Rose, here is heaven. Mammy must be here.'"

Rose: "Please, we are Rose and Johny, and is our mother here?"

Auntie: "Where do you come from, now at night, in the cold? How wet you are!"

Rose: "Please, we went to look for heaven, so we could go to our mother. Johny couldn't walk any more, and I was so afraid we would never find it; but now I am so glad we are here!"

Auntie takes Rose on her lap, and orders tea. One of the orphans goes out to fetch hot tea; another takes off Rose's shoes; another takes Johny into his arms. All want to do something for them. They bring their presents to Rose and Johny, with exclamations of pity and love.

(Note: Here is a fine chance to improvise a dialogue).

Auntie: What do you think, children? What shall we do with Rose and Johny?"

All seventeen scream: "They are our own! Let them stay with us in our Home!"

The Oldest Orphan (thirteen years), comes to Auntie—the matron—and begs: "Let them stay with us, Auntie! They have no mother, no father, just like us."

Another Orphan: "We will share our food with them."

Another Orphan: "We will divide our clothes and shoes with them."

All: "Please let them stay!"

Matron: "All right, children, it shall be as you say. Now let's sing a nice prayer at night."

(All sing a prayer).

Rose and Johny fall asleep in the arms of Auntie and one of the biggest boys. After they sing, all look at the two sleeping children.

Auntie: "Let's take them to the bedroom. Poor dears, they are asleep."

Rose (dreaming): "Mother, mother, so we found you at last!"

The Young Reserves

"Dear Kermit:

I was very glad to get your letter. I am glad you are playing football. I should be very sorry to see either you or Ted devoting most of your attention to athletics, and I haven't got any special ambition to see you shine overmuch in athletics at college, at least (if you go there), because I think it tends to take up too much time; but I do like to feel that you are manly and able to hold your own in rough hardy sports. I would rather have a boy of mine stand high in his studies than high in athletics, but I would a great deal rather have him show true manliness of character than show either intellectual or physical prowess, and I believe you and Ted both bid fair to develop just such character.

There! you will think this a dreadfully preaching letter! I suppose I have a natural tendency to preach just at present because I am overwhelmed with my work. I enjoy being President, and I like to do the work, and have my hand on the lever. But it is very worrying and puzzling, and I have to make up my mind to accept every kind of attack and misrepresentation. It is a great comfort to me to read the life and letters of Abraham Lincoln. I am more and more impressed every day, not only with the man's wonderful power and sagacity, but with his literally endless patience, and at the same time his unflinching resolution.

Your loving Father.

—From "Roosevelt's Letters to His Children."

Dear Young Reserves,

This dear little Christmas play has taken up all our space this week, but perhaps you won't mind because you can take the parts of the two nice orphans and the dog which barks outside, if the play is given in your church. Write and tell me if you are in it, won't you please?

Waiting to hear from you,
Ever your friend,
Margaret T. Applegarth.

When Leaders Listened

By L. C. Kitchen

I HAD an interesting experience last Sunday that I think is very significant, and may be of interest. I was invited to speak at the Y. M. C. A. in Midnapore to a group composed largely of professors and students, with a sprinkling of lawyers—all educated Indians.

Two years ago I was invited by the former secretary to address a similar audience and was diplomatically advised to choose a subject on which I could give some good moral teaching without being too definitely Christian as it might be misunderstood as propaganda. The noncommittal subject of "Honor" was suggested and I acceded to the request. At that meeting there were fifty or sixty present. After the meeting they cleared out quickly. I heard no comment except that later some criticism reached me. It appeared that some were offended because they had misunderstood something I had said as a slur on Indian honor. It was a critical and almost hostile audience quite in sympathy with the prevailing spirit of the country.

This time I was determined not to trim my message. The present acting-secretary is one of our mission men, a former teacher in our Bible school. He asked me for my subject some time in advance. He too tried to get me to change it to some such subject as "Prohibition in America!" I felt that perhaps the less said on that subject the better but it was for far different reasons that I refused to change. I was firmly convinced that educated Indian leaders are not "touchy" about Jesus Christ, that they are willing to listen about him, and to him. I held to the subject chosen, "Jesus Christ and Indian Problems of Today," rushing in, perhaps, where angels fear to tread. In spite of the fact that the previous week another missionary of ours from Balasore had given them "Jesus Christ: The Young Man's Ideal," there were nearly 150 present. I had a most sympathetic hearing for about three quarters of an hour, a most sympathetic summary by the chairman (the usual custom being that the Indian chairman has as long as he likes to take for rebuttal), and at the close about twenty-five gathered around me, still wanting to hear about Jesus Christ and him only. They asked me as I was leaving if I couldn't arrange to spend a day or two there occasionally giving them interviews. Alas! my work is twenty miles away. No resident man in Midnapore!

Departmental Correlation

in a way which has worked out to the great advantage of all. A count of several Sunday evenings has shown more than one hundred young people besides the adult group, all intensely interested in their own specific problems and all under the best conditions for self expression and development.

These comments would not be complete without emphasizing the fact that all of this correlation is with the church. Each group is made to feel that it is a part of the church, at work in various ways, but never separate from the church. This feeling is fostered by the active interest and help and in some cases definite supervision of the board of Christian education, elected by the church and responsible to the church.

The plan has been worked out without friction or difficulty by sympathetic cooperation.

Topic for December 23

By Winford L. Sharp

ADVENT LESSONS FROM BETHLEHEM
Matthew 2:1-12

1. Jesus sought by heathen. About the time of Jesus' birth there seems to have been a rather widespread expectancy of the coming of a universal king and deliverer. The birth of kings was supposed to be heralded by unusual phenomena of the heavens, so it was that the "wise men" of the East were searching the heavens. With the appearance of an unusual star they believed that the longed-for king had come and confidently set out on a long pilgrimage in search for him. It may have been their knowledge of Jewish expectations that led them to Palestine or it may have been the peculiar heavenly phenomenon itself; at any rate they reach Jerusalem in their search and after inquiry find the new born king at Bethlehem. The earnest longing which beat in the breast of these heathen Magi of old is duplicated in the hearts of countless millions of weary heathen today. With an instinctive urge in their souls they continually search for the deliverer. We who know that king surely should guide all hungry souls to him in order that they may enjoy true Christmas blessings.

2. Jesus neglected by Jews. His own people proved most neglectful. Though his coming was proclaimed by unusual means, yet the priests and scribes, the spiritual leaders themselves, when questioned by inquiring heathen did not know of his birth; the best they could do was to quote prophecy—they had no vital knowledge of him. Worshiping the true God and highly favored as they were, yet it took the questions of heathen wise men to arouse them from smug complacency, and even then it was only a passing interest. How like favored Christians today! Living in the midst of all advantages made possible through Jesus and yet so neglectful of him; with scarcely enough interest or vital Christian experience to guide inquiring searchers. We are at ease in Zion.

3. Jesus opposed by Herod. Herod was the only one whose interest was keen and lasting. Jealous of his power he feared a rival in this new born king, and sought his destruction. Spiritual truths and values found no place in his life. This has been the constant experience of humanity; when a man is blessed with prosperity and power so very often the cause of Jesus is utterly neglected and often positively opposed. Jesus himself gave utterance to this pertinent truth when he said, "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!" Let us be careful lest temporal joys and successes lead us to oppose the king!

4. Jesus worshiped by the Magi. When the Magi found the baby Jesus at Bethlehem without shame or hesitation they fell down, an attitude of humility, and worshiped him. It was customary for visitors at the cradle of a prince to present gifts, and in keeping with this custom the Magi presented their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. In other words the Magi of old recognized and proclaimed the kingship of Jesus. The Christmas season ought to be a time when each year we would again without shame or hesitation proclaim our full allegiance to Jesus as king and Saviour. Let us be chiefly interested in giving rich gifts to him rather than to each other. Such is the message from Bethlehem.

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

Cincinnati: It was with pleasure and enthusiasm that the young people of Miami Association received the word that Cincinnati was to be included in the series of Bible and missionary conferences. On Sunday, Oct. 14, the executive committee of the association held its first fall meeting at which Dr. A. W. Rider of Los Angeles, the secretary of the conference, presented the plans and program for this great meeting. A resolution was adopted by the committee to the effect that the Miami Association B. Y. P. U. was entirely in sympathy with this great conference and that it would do all in its power to see that the young people gave it their wholehearted support. A "flying squadron" of three-minute speakers was organized to visit the societies every Sunday night to boost the conference. Each society appointed its own registrar and friendly contests were held between various unions to see which could first register 100 per cent. This stimulated interest as well as registration. Out of the 1400 registrations over 600 were young people. The work did not stop here. The young people of Norwood Church, presented the pageant "On Trial" at one of the evening sessions and the distribution of advertising materials and the matter of ushers was taken care of to a large extent by the associational B. Y. P. U. The conference proved to be a great help and inspiration so much more because of the opportunity to serve.

Seattle: Several weeks prior to the Seattle Bible and Missionary Conference, Dr. W. I. Fowle of Greeley, Colo., the secretary, appeared before the B. Y. P. U. board and thoroughly sold to them the idea of getting their young people interested in the conference. It was understood that there should be one young person on each local church registration committee whose responsibility it would be to enlist the young people of that church. Boosters or three-minute speakers were appointed from the ranks of the district board to visit the various B. Y. P. U.'s of the city at their regular Sunday evening meetings and "talk up" the conference. In each instance the president of the local union, being a member of the board, would be primed beforehand and ready to cooperate in lining up members. The different unions of the district, twenty-two in all, were canvassed in the same manner on the same Sunday. By the following Sunday there was something new to spring on the young people. Doctor Fowle had arranged for a young people's banquet on the evening of the closing service of the conference. Various members of the conference team were asked to be present and tickets sent to all unions along with circular letters from the president of Western Washington B. Y. P. U. as well as from the district president. The banquet proved a success from both a social and inspirational standpoint, 256 being present, which was the full capacity of the dining hall in the First Church. When the opening chorus announced the beginning of the evening session in the auditorium above, the young people marched up in a body. They say "we feel well repaid for the efforts in enlisting young people for this conference, not only in the increase it gave the attendance, but in the permanent value of our splendid conference program in molding the interest of our younger generation of Baptists."

San Francisco: The chairman of the publicity committee for the conference was Hugh Thomas, state B. Y. P. U. publicity director; and the chairman of the "pep committee" was Harold K. Langdon, first vice-president of the state B. Y. P. U. The "pep committee" was composed of young people to whom the matter of songs, yells, etc., for the conference was left. There was a contest for the best original song. This committee visited numerous young people's societies, working up this feature of the program, and, of course, promoting interest in the conference. On the first night the delegations were marked by unique headgear and many clever songs and yells were given. There were more than 500 young people present at that session. Besides, young people served on the various committees and at the Loyalty luncheon which here included both men and women, the California-Nevada Volunteers (Life Service League) took active part.

Our Own Folks

Impressions of Mexico

By Edwin R. Brown

Due to the generosity of Dr. J. W. Brougher and members of the Temple Baptist Church in Los Angeles, I was enabled recently to take advantage of an invitation to participate in the Mexican national lawn tennis tournament. There were eleven foreign players as guests of the republic, and the tournament was one of the most successful sporting events ever staged in Mexico City.

I had the pleasure of traveling from Los Angeles to Mexico City in company with six world famous tennis stars. When they knew of my occupation as missionary among the Mexicans they dubbed me their "sky pilot," and I had the fun of initiating them into many of the mysteries of Mexican dishes and customs.

The trip on the way down from Laredo was very delightful, and traffic was heavy. The only sign of abnormal conditions that appeared was the presence of a guard of twenty soldiers on every train. When I asked the guard why, he replied that it wasn't because of any present danger they carried a guard, but as a precaution against what might be.

The first thing that struck me in Mexico City was the Ford. In the six years since I was in the capital, Henry Ford has done more to speed up Mexican life than any other man or institution. Where formerly the sleepy-eyed horses pulling the open barouches could scarcely be urged out of a slow trot, now the Fords whizz by at the rate of forty miles an hour, and the honk of the auto horn or the wide open cutout drowns every other noise.

But with all the increase in speed, there still remains the delightful native courtesy, and we who were the guests of the nation found nothing lacking in that exquisite attention which looked after and anticipated our every need, and afforded us every entertainment.

During the tournament we found that the audience of Mexicans from the highest circles of business, government and society appreciated all the finest points of the game, manifesting as much enthusiasm in a tennis match as the common people do at a bull fight. South Africa, Spain, Honolulu, and the United States were represented, and I could not help but think that if the nations of the world could only be brought to treat each other with the same high and chivalrous courtesy which is manifested in an international sporting event, it would be the solution of the problem of world wars.

I found the Baptist work in Mexico City and in Puebla, my former fields, prospering greatly, but sadly in need of funds for extension of the work and the entering of open doors. Our good missionary doctor, C. E. Conwell, still sustains the burden of the work of the Baptist hospital in Puebla. Dr. A. B. Rudd, our superintendent in Mexico City, tells me that never before have such splendid results been obtained in the gospel work in Mexico as now. Of similar nature were the reports given me by Methodist and Presbyterian workers. In spite of all the past, Mexico is more open to the gospel today than ever, and now is t psychological time for a tremendous outpouring of men and money on the part of American evangelicals for the winning of the Mexican people for Christ.

Politically the situation in Mexico City is somewhat tense, and this is having an adverse effect upon business. However, it is hoped that no serious trouble will develop on account of the election of a new president. Obregon has done much to bring more settled conditions, and his influence and prestige will probably be able to keep the unruly elements from rocking the ship of state too violently.

Returning to "America," I bring deeper engraved than ever my appreciation of the Mexican people, their courtesy and kindness, and am more than ever convinced of the marvelous opportunity presented to Christian Americans by the unevangelized multitudes on our southern frontier.

Philadelphia Letter

By Arthur C. Baldwin

Our distinguished Baptist brother, Lloyd George, has come and gone. We were ready to give him a great time, but he would have none of it. He was here but a few hours—visited the shrine of liberty, told us in the Forum that he "would rather trust the Liberty Bell of democracy, even though it were cracked, than the tocsin of autocracy," and departed, leaving the special reception committees appointed by the various ministerial conferences high and dry with nothing to do. What a time we would have given him if we had had a chance.

The great Bible and Missionary Conference was held as per schedule in the Baptist Temple, Nov. 5-7. Everything that could possibly be done to advertise it and insure its success had been done by Rev. Floyd L. Carr, with the cooperation of our local board of promotion, through five weeks of earnest campaign. Four-minute speakers bombarded the churches. The campaign for registration was vigorously pushed and a really great program of information and inspiration was set before us. The dinner conferences were particularly helpful. The difficulty of bringing all this home to the churches remains very real, however. We have a challenging and mighty task before us.

The first of the two meetings of the Baptist Social Union was held at Lulu Temple, Thursday evening, Nov. 22. The speaker was the Hon. Martin G. Brumbaugh, former governor of Pennsylvania, who took for his topic, "A Citizen in a Crisis." I am writing too soon to say how he handled it. Certainly courage and faith are needed.

As so confidently predicted in my former letter, the municipal elections revealed a machine candidate elected for mayor, with a majority of almost 300,000. With him has gone in a machine council, nineteen out of twenty. I am not planning to join the school of prophets, however, because of this accurate prediction. It is a time for mourning. They told us the tax rate would not be increased. The assessments have been, however, and millions of increased income will be available without a change in the rate. If only this increased load of taxation could be carried by the multitude of people who refused to register! They did not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

The sentiment among the churches against the scandalous lack of law-enforcement in the city is growing and making positive expressions. It is high time. One of our judges, for example, has ruled that when liquor in transit in an automobile is discovered by a police officer nothing can be done about it without a search warrant. The only thing for the policeman to do is to send the bootlegger rejoicing on his way. There seem to be hundreds of ways of breaking the law, but only one of enforcing it. Unless law-enforcement officers hew to the line and follow every rule exactly to the last letter, the courts are sure the palladium of our liberties is in danger. The other danger of law defiance they seem to disregard. Another judge, in sentencing a boy in his teens to prison for ten years, denounced a certain saloon that he located and called by name as a place where boys congregated and stayed all night. The police, however, know nothing of this place and it continues without disturbance. Politics, corrupt magistrates, judges, who if not corrupt are in sympathy with the wet program, have combined to make this city one of the wettest on the continent. It seems that at last, however, even the lethargy of our citizens is being disturbed. On a recent Sunday the papers reported that 200,000 people indorsed the appeal of their pastors for a program of law-enforcement. The churches are organizing by wards and the pressure of organized decency has already made a dent in the official consciousness. It may be that we shall have some good things to report before long.

The Roxborough Baptist Church held an installation service for the Rev. J. Foster Wilcox, on Thursday, Nov. 15. Rev. George S. Young, of Jenkintown, on Oct. 28, celebrated the tenth anniversary of his pastorate there. During that time the benevolences have increased from $900 to $4,300 a year and current expense from $2,300 to $5,200. Last year the Unruh Memorial Chapel was erected at a cost of $35,000. It has been a strong and large pastorate. We hope that Pastor Young is entering upon a second decade of similar service.

The First Church at Kennett Square is reporting a happy time. Pastor B. D. Stelle has a new parsonage that was erected last year and now the church is planning a new building on a very choice lot. He had two baptisms recently.

Our brother, Carter Helm Jones of the First Church, continues on his indefatigable way. He seems to carry on almost as a recreation a program of sermons and special appointments that would send ordinary men to the sanitarium. On Nov. 13 he attended the Centennial Association of the Virginia Baptist General Association in Richmond, as a fraternal delegate from the Northern Baptist Convention. During the week of Nov. 18 he preached every night at the Clinton Avenue Baptist Church of Newark, N. J. To these special appointments he adds a regular series of dinner talks and other engagements. The only trouble Doctor Jones seems to have is the absurd rule that limits a week to seven days. He could fill it if it were twice as long. It need not be added that every Sunday he is feeding his people, as always, with the finest of the wheat.

Among the recent speakers at the Baptist conference have been Prof. Francis H. Green of Pennington Seminary, on "Wit and Humor"; Dr. Ellen C. Potter, who is at the head of the welfare department of the state; Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin; Prof. E. B. Pollard of Crozer read a strong paper, "Can the Evangelical Faith Live With the New Learning?" It was an utterance which made the judicious and lovers of concord to rejoice. I wish it might be printed in full.

California Letter

By George E. Burlingame

California Baptists are a bit puffed up in view of the fact that four of the thirty-five Bible and Missionary conferences were scheduled for the Golden State; and Northern California gloats over the peculiar distinction involved in holding three of these four in that territory, at San Francisco, Fresno and Sacramento.

San Francisco Baptists witnessed the unprecedented when 600 men and women attended the Loyalty luncheon at the Palace Hotel, filling to overflowing the immense ball-room. The Los Angeles women numbered 800 at two simultaneous luncheons, and the total registration exceeded 2,000. The movement appears to be the most promising enterprise of its kind ever undertaken by Northern Baptists.

The Tanforan Revival

After eleven years of freedom from the curse of race-track gambling in California, marked by the dismantling of the infamous old Emeryville Track at Oakland and the abandonment of Tanforan near San Francisco, a pretentious revival of horse-racing was staged in November with a meet at the historic old track where in the old days jockey and tout and book-maker foregathered to fleece young bank clerks and to involve multitudes in ruin and sorrow through gambling on the races. Tanforan has been renovated and enlarged, and nearly a month of racing was announced under the auspices of men of wealth who represent some of the most prominent families of San Francisco.

California law prohibits gambling on the races; and assurances were given through the press that there would be no betting and that the management would rigidly enforce the laws against gambling. Several gestures were made in accord with this promise, and a few arrests were made at the grounds while it was evident that the same old crowd of gamesters which formerly haunted Emeryville and which now sojourn at Tia Juana were tremendously interested in the "ponies" at Tanforan. Within a few days after the opening, sporting writers in the San Francisco dailies were frankly affirming that betting was essential to the success of horse-racing, and that the meet had been put on at Tanforan with the expectation that public sentiment could be developed in favor of a repeal of the law against race-track gambling. A sample of such writing is the following from the Chronicle: "To the old timer the most interesting consideration was if the Pacific Coast Jockey Club's philanthropic scheme of conducting an expensive race meeting with all book-making and betting prohibited could possibly succeed, either from the club's point of view in making a very heavy investment or from the public's standpoint in being deprived of what has always been held to be an indispensable concomitant of the sport . . . But how very natural is this instinct of speculation and how inseparable it is from all human affairs. When life itself and every business transaction is naturally a gamble, whether one is in possession of a peanut stand or a seat on the stock exchange—what can be the raison d'etre of a horse race if the spectator is restricted by law from preferring one horse to another and expressing that preference by the pocketbook that talks?"

Rupert Stirs up a Rumpus

The University Fine Arts Society of San Francisco heard an address recently from an invited guest, which started a vigorous discussion in the community on the divorce question. Rupert Hughes, author and movie director, advanced the following propositions, according to the local press reports: "Divorce is moral; a husband or wife should be able to divorce his or her mate by sending notice to that effect by registered letter; a couple who live together in unhappy married life because of divorce laws, or because one will not agree to dissolve the partnership, lead hideously immoral lives; this is not a Christian nation, and divorce laws based on biblical teachings should not be imposed upon the nation; marriage is not sacred, but love, motherhood and fatherhood are,"

When it is remembered that movie directors are the caterers who concoct the celluloid pabulum of the American people and mix the moral ingredients that make up their daily film ration, the utterances of Mr. Hughes become significant. The query arises: If the youth of America are fed on movies prepared by men holding such views of marriage and the family, how long will the American home last?

The Hollywood Horror

The fourth industry in the United States, with its center of activity at Hollywood, is in the doldrums, and several thousand camera moths of filmdom are anxiously facing a hard winter. The wild debauch of extravagance in production of "supreme" films and the unbelievable kiting of salaries to movie stars have reached a climax and now the performers are "getting the ax." Two of the largest and most famous studios are closing down; others are expected to follow. A Los Angeles dispatch to the San Francisco Bulletin gives some light on the conditions which have precipitated the movie panic, in the following paragraph:

"The real trouble is that the motion picture producers don't know what kind of pictures to make, or how to make them. Not only has their bag of tricks been exhausted, but the flag of revolt has been raised by some players, and their cry is, 'I don't want to be good; it isn't life.' They refer to the parts assigned to them.

Or bow to anarchy.

The Man of Nazareth should rule
The hearts of all mankind;
Then war and greed would not befool
The nations that are blind.
The words of Jesus we recall,
And his inspiring plan;
He taught us to be kind to all
And love our brother man.

"This revolt has started under alien leadership, with Pola Negri, the Polish actress; Ernst Lubitsch, the German director; Eric von Stroheim, the Austrian director-actor, and Charles Chaplin—not the Charlie of the baggy pants and funny feet, but Charles Spencer Chaplin, the producer-director—the same Charlie, only different, of England. They claim that our motion picture plays are going stale because they do not mirror life. "I don't want to be good; it isn't life!" And this, in America the Beautiful!

The Greatness of Jesus

The public orator of the University of Cambridge, Prof. T. R. Glover, says in one of his books, "One of the weaknesses of the church today is—put bluntly—that Christians are not making enough of Jesus Christ." The same sentiment finds expression in a recent note in a prominent English journal, the Saturday Westminster: "In the age that is coming the Christian faith will have to make either much bolder or much lower claims. If the pitch is reduced many more will join in but only for a time. A Christianity which is willing to abdicate its royal dignity and take its place as one interest among many will not greatly interest mankind." These reflections concerning the unique preeminence of Jesus Christ provide a canvass on which to display a paragraph from a recent sermon preached by the pastor of the First Unitarian Church of Sacramento: "Was not the greatness of Jesus his all-embracing humanity, that took every one into his heart? He did not believe himself to be God. He did not even believe himself to be the Son of God, except as his fellow men and women were....Some day the world will do this great soul justice. Some day, when the human race has grown older and wiser than it is today, and weary of strife, it will turn from worshiping him as God to listening to him as prophet and teacher, and down the dim aisles of time mayhap will catch the true significance of his words and his life."

With streams of poison like this flowing from so-called Christian pulpits to rob our young people of a living faith in a living Lord, it is good to note that Baptists in California are substantially a unit in their unflinching loyalty to their risen Redeemer, and fearless in their avowal of faith and his deity. They are in joyous accord with the truth so clearly set forth by Dr. F. C. Spurr in his notable series of articles on the person of Christ which appeared in THE BAPTIST last winter. They profoundly believe with Renan (who spake better than he knew) that "whatever may be the surprises of the future, Jesus will never be surpassed."

Linfield College

Yes, Linfield College opened in September as it has done annually since the year 1857. In all these years there has been no interruption in its work. The registration for the present semester is now 256, which is running parallel with our best record of last year. There are 100 freshmen and thirty-seven seniors, this being our largest senior class. The states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and California are all well represented as usual. There are also two Russian, one Japanese and four Filipino students. Five of these are preparing for Christian work among their own people. No others better exemplify the Christian religion on our campus than do these foreign students.

The faculty remains the same as last year except that Miss May Chalfant succeeds Miss Arlie Salmons as teacher of French and Spanish. One addition to the number as constituted last year is Mr. Eric V. Sandin of Connecticut, who is the new assistant teacher of English.

The spirit of the institution indicates further progress toward the Christian ideas and ideals for which Linfield College has always stood. Faculty and students alike believe this will be Linfield's best year.

New Houses of Worship

The week ending November 9 witnessed the dedication of a new church building at Medford. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Dr. John Snape of Oakland, California. This is the first large, modern church building to be erected in Medford. The cost is approximately $52,000. The equipment is complete, including a good pipe organ. The building is of the Spanish type of architecture of solid brick finished with stone-stucco. The pastor is Rev. Frank R. Leach, a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary of the class of 1891. He is having a successful pastorate.

The Baptists of Arleta are likewise rejoicing over the completion of a new house of worship. This building cost approximately $40,000 and was dedicated during the week following Sunday, Nov. 11. The morning sermon was delivered by Dr. George R. Varney of Linfield College. The dedicatory sermon was preached in the afternoon by Dr. Thomas J. Villers of the White Temple. Harry W. Stone, of the Portland Y. M. C. A., led in raising the balance of the funds needed. The evening service began with the baptism of fifteen candidates and closed with an even dozen responding to an invitation to the Christian life and fellowship. The energetic pastor here is Rev. Owen T. Day, who is a comparatively recent product of Linfield College and Newton Theological Seminary.

A Fruitful Pastorate

On Sunday, Nov. 4, Dr. Charles L. Trawin completed six years as pastor of our college church at McMinnville. During these years 460 have been added by letter, 158 by baptism, and fifty-six by Christian experience; also, 472 have been dismissed to other churches and 100 dropped from the roll. The present membership is 771, of whom about 200 are non-resident. There is not a wealthy man or woman in this church. The following financial record of these years is, therefore, significant of a genuine devotion to our great cause. The total contributions in the six years have amounted to $58,780.54, of which $33,149.70 was for benevolence. In other words, for every dollar spent on itself this noble church has given $1.29 for others. During this same period over $30,000 cash has been raised for the new building, the basement of the Sunday-school unit of which is now under construction. This unit will cost about $60,000 and the completed building approximately $100,000. The pastor of this important church has the pleasure of presiding over a midweek prayer meeting which fills the present main auditorium to its full capacity. Members of the faculty and student body of Linfield College are largely represented in these gatherings.

from the trial seems not to deter them at all. On Tuesday, Nov. 6, a vote was taken on the question of a state income tax. Preceding the election there was a marked difference of opinion concerning the proposition. When the votes were counted, the measure had carried by a very small majority. No great elation has followed this success, but, on the other hand, there seems to be rather a subdued spirit because of the uncertain results which may follow. Some are positive that those who have capital to invest will keep away from Oregon, while others are equally sure the new law will catch our wealthier citizens who are today making practically no contribution to the expenses of the state goernment. Time will tell the story.

Centennial Celebration at Rutland

By W. A. Davison

The First Church, Rutland, Vt., Rev. George W. Peck, Jr., pastor, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary Nov. 11-18.

The first address was delivered on Sunday morning by Helen Barrett Montgomery. In the evening Pastor Peck delivered a sermon showing the work accomplished.

On Wednesday evening there was a fellowship supper, to which over 400 people sat down. Pastor Peck presided and music was furnished by the male quartet. Special tables were reserved for former pastors, Rev. Charles A. Rees and Dr. Gibbs Braislin. Doctor Braislin's pastorate was the longest in the history of the church, covering a period of fifteen years. The members of the church, who had been baptized or married by the above-mentioned pastors, were invited to sit at the table with them and renew the former acquaintanceship and fellowship. Greetings were brought from the pastors of the Advent, the Congregational, the Methodist and the Universalist churches. The history of the church was read by Mrs. Katherine Kinsman Johnson, whose father, W. R. Kinsman, had been elected to prepare and read the history, but who was called home shortly after beginning the work. His daughter, Mrs. Johnson, took up the work and completed the history.

The First Church, Rutland, was organized Aug. 17, 1804, with thirty-four charter members. This church continued for ten years, when, because of deaths and removals, the services were discontinued and the church disbanded. In 1818 a few Baptists began meetings in what is known as Mill Village, the interest and attendance increasing so that on Nov. 25, 1823, a church was organized and recognized by a council made up from neighboring churches. This church is still in existence and doing splendid work today. The meetings at first were held in the various homes, but in 1827 a building was erected which was occupied for forty-five years. The first pastor was Rev. Isaac Fuller, who served for two years and was succeeded by Rev. Hadley Proctor. The church immediately organized a Sabbath school and also entered into fellowship with the Vermont Association, which was the forerunner of the Vermont State Convention. In the early 60's this church came out strongly in favor of the abolition of slavery. Even after the windows of the church building had been smashed by stones and brickbats, the people remained brave, invited a contraband of war to speak in behalf of freedom and took a collection for destitute contrabands. The church continued faithful under different pastors, but there were no events of special importance until 1871 when the church decided to find a better location and put up a better building; the present church edifice was then erected. When ground was broken Harmon Clark drove the team and Deacon E. W. Horner held the plow. The first $1000 for the new building was pledged by George A. Tuttle, father of the present moderator of the society, Mr. Egbert C. Tuttle. The total expense of the new building was $42,000 Since that time an addition has been built and the church edifice thoroughly modernized and a new parsonage secured, so the property at the present time is worth over $100,000. It ought here to be mentioned, as an encouragement for other city churches, that Deacon E. W. Horner established a little mission at North Clarendon, which was later taken up and successfully carried on by Deacon B. W. Marshall for fifty years, and during that time more than 100 members were added to the Rutland Church from this North Clarendon Mission. The mission today is being carried on by Deacon Clayton Fuller. Rev. Edward Mills was the faithful and efficient pastor during the construction of the new edifice and removal thereto, but in 1875 tendered his resignation and closed his work. He was succeeded by Rev. J. K. Richardson, who remained eight years, receiving nearly 200 into the church by baptism. Rev. Charles A. Rees succeeded Mr. Richardson and did splendid work until 1890 when he was called to Minneapolis. Rev. Gibbs Braislin was the next pastor and remained fifteen years, gathering into the church a large number of strong men, and building the church up in every way so at the time he resigned to accept a call to the First Church of Gloucester, Mass., the church had 575 members, over 250 having been received during his pastorate, making the church the largest Baptist church in the state. Doctor Braislin was followed by Rev. Eugene Haines, who remained about four years and was succeeded by Rev. Franklin Irving who also remained about four years. In 1915 the present pastor, Rev. George W. Peck, Jr., came from Camden, N. J. Under his leadership the church has gone steadily forward, so it now has a membership exceeding 700, with all departments and organizations in a flourishing condition. During Mr. Peck's pastorate a new parsonage has been purchased and a new pipe organ secured, the gift of Mrs. Mary Horner Stewart of Seattle in memory of her father and mother, the late Deacon and Mrs. E. W Horner, and her sister, Eva Horner Richardson. The auditorium has been redecorated, new memorial windows put in and electric lights installed. Probably the greatest achievement of the church during its entire history was in 1920 when they secured in pledges for the New World Movement their entire quota of $21,300, which it is believed will be paid in full on or before April 30. The church now has a permanent endowment of $12,000. Last year more than $7,000 was raised for current expenses and benevolence.

The oldest member in the church is Mrs. Frank S. Hale, while the three earliest baptized living members are Mrs. Mark E. Tenney, 1858, Mrs. L. L. Pearsons, 1866, and Mr. Egbert C. Tuttle, 1867. The building committee of the present church edifice in 1871 were George A. Tuttle, E. W. Horner and John Murray. Sons of the church in the ministry at the present time are Rev. Edward Abar, Rev. Harry Whitcomb and Rev. R. A. Moore.

The celebration continued on Thursday evening, November 15, when Doctor Braislin preached and Rev. Charles A. Rees officiated at the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. On Friday evening there was a musical and pageant.

Dr. Doris O. Tuttle, a graduate of Smith College and of Woman's College of Physicians and Surgeons in Philadelphia, who has also had one year of interneship and is soon to go abroad as a medical missionary, presented to the church in behalf of the Northfield girls a silk Christian flag, which is to stand on the platform along with the stars and stripes.

Sunday morning, Nov. 18, an anniversary sermon was preached by Dr. W. A. Davison, who at the close of his address called upon the entire congregation, be-

Howard G. Colwell

By John C. Crouch

The cause of Christian education has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Prof. Howard G. Colwell, formerly of St. Louis, lately of Loveland, Colo. I do not refer alone to the particular field of the denominational college. His influence in this field was great. While a teacher for a few years in La Grange College he made impressions that will never cease to bear wholesome fruit. His constant interest and cooperation with all our denominational schools was helpful. His encouragement to young people to attend these schools was effective. His earnest desire to regain his health sufficiently to again resume his work in a Baptist college was with him to the end. In his judgment, however, Christian education was not confined to any particular type of school. There was definite Christian education going on in every class he taught during those many years in the Central High School of St. Louis. If all teachers in our public school system were like him most of our problems in the churches and elsewhere would be rapidly solved. To him it was Christian education to teach and build the attendance to several hundred in the Agoga class in the Third Baptist Church of St. Louis. The tremendous need of training workers for all departments of church activity impelled him in his multitudinous labors—as leader in the early development of the Missouri state assembly at Arcadia Heights, as teacher in other assemblies, as instructor in various institutes and teacher-training courses. Training for kingdom service was his meat and drink. If God or man by any process can increase the numbers of his kind the advance of Christ's kingdom will be accelerated.

MAINE

East Winthrop: The centennial of the church at East Winthrop was observed Nov. 19 with special exercises. A historical paper was read by Mrs. Kilbreth. There was a roll-call and Secretary Mower gave an address on Baptist achievements during the last hundred years. The church has had a typical New England history. Its first pastor was Rev. John Butler, grandfather of Prof. Nathaniel Butler, of the University of Chicago. Dr. Alonzo Bunker was ordained here before his remarkable service in Burma. The church has never been large but has always maintained a high type of church and community life. An interesting element in the celebration was the ordaining of the young pastor, Angus Lyons, after the examination by the council, of which Doctor Mower was moderator and Rev. H. H. Brown, clerk. The exercises included charge to the candidate, by Rev. H. L. Skillin; charge to the church, by Dr. E. C. Whittemore; hand of fellowship, by Rev. D. W. Kimball; and sermon, by Rev. H. H. Brown. Mr. Lyons has been a few months upon the field and pastor and people are working happily and hopefully together.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

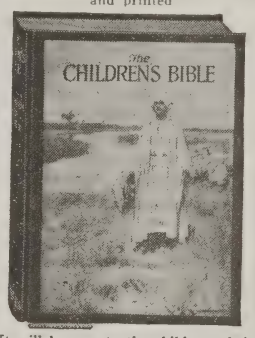
A council on ordination called by the Troy Church of the Dublin Association met with the church Nov. 14 to consider the advisability of ordaining to the Christian ministry H. L. Smith who was serving the church as pastor. Mr. Smith graduated from the Gordon Bible College in June. After examination of the candidate the council unanimously advised the ordination of Mr. Smith. Services for the ordination were held in the evening of the same day. Rev. W. D. Swaffield of Keene served as moderator of the council and F. L. Brown of Troy as clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Pres. N. R. Wood, of the Gordon Bible College. The prayer of ordination was by Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the New Hampshire Convention. Rev. R. H. Tibbals of Antrim welcomed Mr. Smith into the Christian ministry. The charge was given to the church by Rev. D. M. Cleveland of West Swanzey and the charge to the candidate by Rev. Edw. Babcock, of Lowell, Mass. The Troy church is a typical New England village church and the pastor and people are working enthusiastically together.

A new pastor has come to the Swedish churches of Manchester and Concord. Rev. David Tillman, immediately upon his arrival in this country early in October, took charge of these two fields. He is a good preacher and a fine musician. Receptions have recently been given to Mr. and Mrs. Tillman by both the Manchester and Concord Swedish churches. The work is opening with promise.

Special evangelistic services are being held in churches throughout the state. Among the churches putting forth special effort is the First Church of Nashua and among those aiding in this service is Rev. W. H. Freda of the Clarendon Street Church, Boston.



Americanization work is given special attention by the First Church of Manchester. A successful Chinese Sunday school has been conducted for a year and earnest effort is being put forth to reach other races in the city. This work was originally inaugurated under the incentive given by Miss Marion Lathrop, New England secretary for Americanization work of the Baptist Home Mission Society. An Americanization social was held in the church on the evening of Nov. 20 when seven or more nationalities were well represented. This was held under the auspices of the Chinese boys of the Sunday school. Syrians and Swedes were present in the larger number. Central Europe was also represent-

CONNECTICUT

The Bible and Missionary Conference in New Haven was a great success. More than 1300 registrations. The reaction throughout the state is wholesome.

The Rockville Church, Rev. R. W. Ferguson pastor, held its annual roll-call and church supper on Nov. 15. The roll-call collection amounted to $300.

The Messiah Church, Bridgeport, celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary during the week beginning Nov. 18. The work of the church is in a flourishing condition. Rev. Walter Gay is the pastor.

Nov. 6-8 the Stamford Church celebrated its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary. Under the leadership of the present pastor, Rev. W. J. Barnes, the church has been undergoing extensive repairs. The outlook for the work is most hopeful.

The South Willington Church has suffered an irreparable loss in the passing of Mrs. Fanny Parker Hall, widow of the late Gardiner Hall. Mrs. Hall was a woman of sterling character, and because of her high devotion to her Lord was a generous giver to all worthy objects. She and her family are represented on the foreign field by the Willington Hall in Burma.

Immanuel Church, New Haven, Rev. John B. Pharr pastor, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, Oct. 26-29.

Rev. J. W. Grainger, formerly pastor of Calvary Church, Bridgeport, has been installed as pastor of the Memorial Church of the same city.

The Hungarian Church in Wallingford is rejoicing in the leadership of Rev. Nicholas Dulitz. Mr. Dulitz is a strong acquisition to the Baptist forces.

Central Church, Hartford, welcomed into its membership ten new members, Nov. 4.

Ten Loyalty luncheons have already been held throughout the state. They have been largely attended by the women of the churches, enthusiasm running high.

Dr. C. A. Detweiler of the Home Mission Society was the speaker in the First Church, Bridgeport, on Nov. 25, and Dr. E. Leroy Dakin, of the Temple Church, Brooklyn, spoke in the Empire Theater, under the auspices of the federated Bible classes of Bridgeport, on the afternoon of the same day.

Rev. H. C. Speed and wife were formally welcomed to the pastorate of the Middletown Church, Nov. 9. Dr. A. C. Coats, secretary of the Connecticut Convention, conveyed to Mr. and Mrs. Speed the greetings of the state. Already Mr. Speed is showing himself a strong and capable leader. Connecticut most heartily welcomes him.

WEST VIRGINIA

Five regional Bible and missionary conferences were held the week of Nov. 18 at Hinton, Charleston, Huntington, Parkersburg and Clarksburg. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, Mrs. J. M. Baker, J. F. Ingram and L. C. Hylbert were the leaders, not to mention such state leaders as Secy. A. S. Kelley, Dr. E. J. Woofter and Secy. F. E. Brininstool. At the Charleston Conference the Baptist Temple building was well filled for morning, afternoon and evening sessions, many prominent business men attending the three sessions.

The new Baptist Temple buildings of Charleston are being rushed, hoping to have three units under cover before bad weather. The old Temple building is taxed practically every Sunday and two departments of the church school are conducted in the Y. M. C. A. across the street from the church. The Fred O. Blue Bible class for men has reached an attendance of 180. On a recent Sunday the offerings for the day totaled more than $22,000. Despite the great building program the Temple Church stands a close second in contributions to denominational missionary objectives of the past six months.

Fifth Avenue Church, Huntington, the largest Baptist church in our state, was the scene of the Huntington missionary conference and that was followed by a great training school of methods under the leadership of Secy. A. B. Withers of the state. They have had such leaders as Miss Meme Brockway and Mr. Harry V. Meyer.

The 100,000 Baptists of West Virginia are alive to the denominational program and are "on the march."

NEW YORK

The Tabernacle Church of Utica, Reverend Edward Bleakney, minister, has recently added two new workers—Miss Charlotte Shelton and Mr. Clarence F. Read. Miss Shelton is a graduate of Boston University school of religious education and social service and comes from the First Church of Malden, Mass., to be pastor's assistant. Mr. Read is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music and has been director of music at Christian Temple, Wellsville, New York, for some years. He comes to Tabernacle as organist and director of music at Christian Temple, baptism has been administered twice recently; 169 have been added to the church during the present pastorate which began March 1, 1922. Beginning in January the Sunday school will have a contest with the Sunday school of the First Church of Syracuse. The attendance at the prayer meeting, at communion and at the Sunday morning and evening services has never been larger in the history of tabernacle. Mrs. Charles R. Vickery of Syracuse is giving six lectures on Japan before the prayer meeting hour.

On Nov. 2 two hundred women of the Chautauqua County Association sat down to an "echo" luncheon in the dining room of the First Church of Jamestown. Inspiring reports were given by the delegates to the Loyalty luncheon at Buffalo and the trial of the association for neglect of opportunity was most effectively presented. The whole program and the work and prayer leading up to it were inspiring and resulted not only in $1273 collected by the women of the First Church but in a good sum not yet fully reported from other churches of the city and association for the continuation fund. Of far greater value than the shower of dollars that fell upon our pictured umbrella was the spiritual blessing received. Many of the young women and girls of the church are now interested in mission work. Several from nearby places went away resolved to hold other echo luncheons in their home churches. All agreed that greater effort is needed, and resolved to be more active in prayer and gift for the cause of missions at home and abroad.

ILLINOIS

In the three years that Pastor J. W. Hoyt has served the Belden Avenue Church of Chicago, 440 new members have been received, the finances have been greatly increased and systematized, the spiritual life of the members has been deepened, and the entire community has felt the impact of a sustained evangelistic ministry. On a recent Sunday nearly 700 were in attendance at Sunday school.

Rev. James M. Lively has closed revival meetings of three weeks in his church at Mattoon, assisted by Rev. Albert A. Gordanier of the Paris church. Reports coming from Mattoon give evidence of a revival of the old time religion and interest which is keenly alive toward religious things. From the very first night the church was filled at every service and on Sundays at both morning and evening services from one to two hundred people were turned away from the doors unable to get in. The B. Y. P. U. has outgrown its regular room and moved to the auditorium, only to be rapidly outgrowing the auditorium. Although the church building a few doors away from the Baptist church has been rented for Sunday-school classes there is still a shortage of floor space and a community center building of three large rooms will soon be rented and at the disposal of the classes. Mattoon is one place where all Illinois Baptists are convinced that a new and large building is needed. Their growth is not a sudden thing but the result of seven careful years of organized work by the pastor. As a result of the meetings just closed about sixty Christians will be added to the membership. The leading entertaining feature during the meetings was a men's chorus organized and trained from the big chorus choir by Mr. Gordanier.

MICHIGAN

Mr. L. H. Mayes, who graduated from Denison University last June and who is now studying at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, recently supplied the pulpit of the First Church of Benton Harbor.

IOWA

The Hulme party, evangelists from Ohio, closed meetings at the First Church Humboldt, Nov. 25. Rev. Mr. W. J. Robinson of the First Church, Rockwell City, baptized the candidates the last night of the meeting. Doctor Caul, of the state mission board, spent several nights in the meetings. Delegations came from Baptist churches within a radius of thirty miles. This party opened meetings at the First Church at Algona, Rev. Frank H. Webster, pastor, Nov. 27.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Rev. Earle D. Sims, of Chicago, formerly missionary to China, conducted a series of travel talks and revival meetings at Wessington recently.

KANSAS

Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, evangelistic singers of Topeka, assisted in special meetings with the First Church, Sedan, Rev. Elmer Kirkpatrick pastor. The meetings were largely attended and there were four additions.

Rocky Mountain States

MONTANA

Rev. E. L. Hurley, formerly of Nebraska, has accepted the permanent pastorate of the church at Stevensville.

Rev. H. J. Pritchard spent the month of November with the church at Dillon with a view to becoming permanent pastor at this important school center.

Dr. J. H. Spencer, whose father was the first Baptist missionary in Montana and who himself was the first Baptist minister ordained in this state, has taken a position as special pastor-at-large under the convention board and is now with the church at Laurel.

Rev. W. R. Millam, for several years rural colporter missionary, began on Oct. 1 to fill the position of city missionary. He will devote his time exclusively to the urban communities of the state. He will give December to Glasgow and January to Kalispell and Whitefish.

Rev. E. Clutterbuck reports a successful campaign for funds for a new unit for the church at Darby which will be designed especially for social and community center activities.

Pastor Frank D. White of Havre conducted two weeks of special meetings at Livingston during October. Pastor T. L. Huxley of Livingston returned the courtesy by spending two weeks in November with the Havre church.

Miss H. Mary Sundell will spend the month of December with the Baptist church at Belgrade.

The church at Hardin, led by Pastor W. L. Wilson, has purchased lots, looking toward the erection of an edifice at an early date.

The Immanuel Church of Great Falls is completing the basement of its building for social and educational activities.

Rev. Willard Osborn is acting as stated supply for a four months period at Lewistown.

Rev. G. J. Dryden comes directly from the Southern Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Ky., to become district colporter in eastern Montana with headquarters at Miles City.

Rev. Olof Sutherland was recently appointed as district missionary in east central Montana.

EAST WASHINGTON AND NORTH IDAHO BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Loyalty Luncheon and the Bible Missionary Conference was held in Spokane, Oct. 29-31. A goal of 2,000 attendance had been set. It is probably worth while to remember that there were never over five or six hundred Baptists together in any one meeting in this convention before. The total attendance was 1,500. There was a paid registration of slightly over 500. A rate of $2 per family was made. All young people of high-school age or under were given admission buttons gratis. The

A "REVELL" BOOK—Ask for It!

Loyalty luncheon was held in the Marie Antoinette Room of the Davenport Hotel; 261 paid to attend this meeting. About 100 more filled the galleries for the addresses. The national team consisted of Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, Alice Brimson, Miss Ina E. Burton, Miss Helen Monroe, Miss Louise Carter and Miss May Houston. The receipts from the dollar shower reported $1,625. Probably the total amount will be very much larger than this figure. The Bible and Missionary Conference team consisted of Dr. F. W. Padelford, team leader, Dr. T. J. Villers, Dr. Frank Peterson, Dr. Thomas Moody, Dr. W. H. Main, President Corwin S. Shank. National director of laymen, Mr. J. O. Jasperson, addressed the laymen at two meetings; also Dr. George L. White of Los Angeles. Both the laymen's conference and the laymen's banquet were attended by large numbers of the Baptist brethren, 477 being present at the banquet. The interest of the people was shown by the fact that nearly all of those attending the meeting stayed through to the end. Teams from the distant sections of the convention field, representing every association, were present with the expressed idea of understudying the national teams and holding "echo" luncheons and Bible and missionary conference rallies in the various associations. Probably there has never been a Baptist meeting in this convention that equaled this either in point of attendance, in the high and sustained order of addresses given, or in the interest and enthusiasm of the people who had come together. Rev. A. L. Black, religious education director of Idaho, who acted as conference secretary and who, together with a splendid committee worked up the attendance, deserves a word of keenest appreciation. Brother Black endeared himself to all our people in a remarkable way.

Are you satisfied with the responsive readings you are now using in your church? You can make this part of the service of greater interest and profit by adopting RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES. Rev. George B. Stewart, D.D., of Auburn Theological Seminary says, "I have examined RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES with considerable care and regard it as an exceptionally good piece of work. The Scriptures are well selected for their use and of the right length. I think the volume ought to have a wide circulation and be of immense service in the home and in organizations of the churches." By special arrangement, it has been made possible to send a sample copy to any church upon request. Association Press, 347 Madison Avenue, New York.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

FRIDAY EVENING, Nov. 8, marked a new mile stone of progress in the history of the First Church of Redlands, S. Fraser Langford, pastor; 276 partook of the substantial supper served by Mrs. W. R. Heacock and her many willing helpers. The Boy's Notcher Club was also served at the same time. The reports showed twenty-two baptized, seventy-one received by letter, fourteen by experience and twenty-two by affiliation. The present membership is now 829, including student affiliated members. 600 members have been received in the last four years and two months. The Sunday-school enrolment is now 785. Total amount of money contributed to all causes during the year was $29,194.88. Of this amount $16,286.19 goes to the New World Movement, $549 to Near East relief, $179.65 to Japan relief, $11,018.67 for local expenses—$2.60 given for benevolence for every $1 given for local expenses. In addition to these amounts $55,000 has been pledged to the first financial unit for a new church building, costing $150,000.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

NINE DISTRICT ECHO Loyalty luncheons and Bible and missionary conferences were held in Western Washington Convention field during the week of Nov. 12. One evening and the full day following were given to the sessions. Three teams of three to five persons each led. Bible expositions, addresses on stewardship, prayer, and missions, with conferences on our denominational program; broadened vision, intensified interest, quickened the spiritual life and inspired to better service for Christ. The women's meetings were unusually informing and attractive. It is felt that a great blessing must come to all the churches as a result and a consequent larger sharing in the great work of the denomination. Many said, "We ought to have these meetings every year."

OREGON

ON Nov. 4 THE NEW church at Medford was set apart, Rev. John Sharpe, of Oakland, Calif., preaching the sermon, and Dr. O. C. Wright of Portland bringing the congratulations of the Baptists of the state. The edifice cost approximately $52,000, and its thirty-one rooms are equipped with every modern device for efficient service, from a fine gymnasium in the basement to a magnificent Reuter pipe-organ in the auditorium. The lighting is by the indirect system and the building is heated with modern gas furnaces. Each department in the Bible school has its central assembly room and separate class rooms with solid walls, built-in class cabinets and blackboards. The dedication services listed all week, Tuesday night witnessing the dedication of the new pipe organ, Wednesday being "open house" and ending in a banquet at which the mayor and representatives of the citizenship of Medford took part. Thursday was "fellowship night," greetings being brought from the churches of the Association by Rev. C. M. Cline of Grant's Pass. On Friday night Dr. W. T. Milliken, director of religious education for Oregon, brought a message to the young people and their friends.

ON Nov. 11 THE ARLETA church of Portland, Rev. Owen Day, pastor, reached the high water mark in its history. Dr. George R. Varney of Linfield college spoke in the morning at the first service held in the auditorium unit of their new church building. Dr. T. J. Villers, pastor of the White Temple, spoke in the afternoon, Dr. W. T. Milliken addressed the young people at thir service, and at night, after a song service conducted by Prof. Findlay and his great chorus choir, Mr. Day baptized sixteen men and young people. Under the generalship of Harry E. Stone, general secretary of the Portland Y. M. C. A., $8,282 was raised, enough to put the church "over the top." Mr. Day gave a brief sermon after which Doctor Wright offered the dedicatory prayer and ten people came forward to confess Christ or to unite with the church. This unit of the Arleta church consists of a large and handsome auditorium with galleries, a basement with social rooms and a splendid gymnasium. The old edifice has been removed to the rear and will be used for Sunday-school purposes until the final unit can be built. The cost of this unit is around $50,000. During the week social and musical gatherings have been held in which the entire community have participated. Rev. Owen Day is the worthy son of a worthy father—Rev. Franklin Day of California. He is one of the Oregon boys, and is making good in every way.

ON THE SATURDAY MORNING, following the Portland Bible Conference Mrs. Summerlin, wife of Rev. R. G. Summerlin, pastor at Powers, was stricken with apoplexy and passed away in a few hours. Her husband and six daughters are left to mourn her loss.

THE LAYMEN'S COUNCIL of Portland, at its regular monthly meeting held Nov. 16 voted to memorialize the convention to insist that every organization using denominational funds in the support of workers within this state, confer with the convention regarding such appointment, and work through the convention in its operations. The protest arose because of the action of the general education board in appointing workers in the state institutions without consultation with the convention.

PORTLAND EXCEEDED SEATTLE by at least 100 in registration at the Bible and missionary conference. The entire state was represented.

THIRTY-SIX HAVE united with the Highland church, Portland, as the result of an evangelistic effort conducted by Rev. August Hunderup, who assisted pastor W. L. Riley. Mr. Hunderup has gone to Hood River to assist Rev. C. R. Delapine.

Our Book Shelf

Snowden's Sunday School Lessons for 1924. New York: Macmillan.

A book full of rich and reasonable suggestions. The method of treatment is original, arresting the student's attention, capturing his imagination, stirring up his mental processes, and inspiring him to study and teach the lesson with new vigor and freshness.

Some Makers of American Literature, by William Lyon Phelps. Boston: Marshall Jones Company.

In this volume Mr. Phelps treats of eight leading American literary figures—Edwards, Franklin, Cooper, Webster, Lincoln, Hawthorne, Emerson and Mark Twain—in a manner that holds the attention of the reader from beginning to end, for he has the gift of writing entertainingly. Also he truly evaluates each of these "makers of American literature." There may be some disappointment in finding so little of Mr. Phelps own work in his treatise on Lincoln. These essays were first delivered at Dartmouth under the auspices of the Dartmouth alumni lectureships.

Toward the Understanding of Jesus, by Vladimir C. Simkhovitch, New York: Macmillan.

This book has had such demand that a condensed edition in paper covers has been published. This can be secured from Kirby Page, 311 Division Avenue, Hasbrouck Heights, New Jersey, at a greatly reduced price. John Dewey says, "I have read this volume with eagerness, appreciation and enlightment. It is the only book of the kind which I have ever seen that appeared to me to place the teachings of Jesus in a living and concrete contact. The book makes clear, it seems to me, the social origin and also the social purport of the teachings of Jesus; and I cannot imagine that it will not prove stimulating and helpful to every religious teacher."

The Hobo, by Nels Anderson, University of Chicago Press.

What is a hobo? What makes them? Whence do they come? Where do they live, and how? How many of them are to be found? Where do they camp? What sort of brotherhood exists among them? What brings them together? How are they organized? Is their life one of pleasure or of hardship? Are they vicious? Are they a menace to the country? Are they educated or illiterate? What do they read? What do they talk about? Have they any homes? Have they any leaders, public speakers, poets, writers? Have they any connection with the I. W. W., with anarchists, communists or other radical groups? What do they do for shelter in winter? How do they travel? What becomes of them in old age or sickness? How often we have wished to hear their story from somebody who knows their life and can interpret them sympathetically. This is what Nels Anderson has done in this book. He knows how to think and talk and feel hobo, and he teaches the reader to do so. At the end of the book he presents a broadly and scientifically developed program for dealing with the problem of the migratory worker.

If America Fail! by Samuel Zane Batten. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.60.

A new book written by Samuel Zane Batten, is in the class of awakeners. It does not profess to give a program, but it stresses mightily the need of both a spirit and a program if America is to succeed. In spirit and purpose it is in the goodly fellowship of Jeremiah, Amos and Micha—and Rauschenbusch. In the one chapter on "The Mission of America," Doctor Batten has rendered a valuable constructive service. The people of the United States have been greatly in need of a few clear "pattern ideas" concerning the nature of real Americanism, and in that chapter those ideas stand out and shine. The pastor or layman who is called upon to make an occasional patriotic address, will find here a mine of rich material from which he can draw year after year for a score of interesting sermons or lectures. Besides this, the book is well adapted for either private reading or group study. It is a worth while contribution to the growing mass of literature that deals with the ethical and social aspects of Christianity.

Human Australasia, by Charles Franklin Thwing. New York: Macmillan. $2.50.

President Thwing has combined in this work of 270 pages an interesting book of travel with a suggestive contribution to social and political science. His emphasis is on the human factors rather than the material; he deals with folks more than with albatross or geyser, kangaroo or boomerang, gold or mutton. He discusses at some length the "White Australia" policy which resolutely refuses to admit black, brown or yellow people to the commonwealth; and considers that the result of this experiment in race segregation may be one of Australia's chief contributions to civilization. Among the other topics considered are education, the universal vice of gambling, industrial experimentation, and religion. "There are at least three elements, or parts, of civilization in Australasia upon which most citizens are in agreement: one is the duty and right of keeping their civilization white; one is the high function which sports play in this civilization; and one, the third, is the noble place to be given to education." For a brief and readable sketch of this remote and little-known region of the world below the equator, "Human Australasia" is to be commended as truthworthy and full of interest.

Professor Finney is not an alarmist, but he admits that something has gone wrong in social life. He has courage to look at the situation fairly and to endeavor to see just what is wrong. He sees, for one thing, that the unrest of today is not due to agitators or bolshevists. It rather grows out of the development of machine industry and the autocratic control of money. Causes are at work which are making for the elimination of the middle class. There is a most unequal distribution of wealth, and this cannot be accepted as just or satisfactory. The middle class is the chief sufferer from this unequal distribution, and so has a real grievance. In the latter half of the book the author suggests some practical remedies. The workers must have an effective voice in the control of industry. Taxation must be employed to limit inheritance and prevent the dangerous increase of property for power. There must be a transvaluation of values and all persons must have access to the best things in life. The book does not profess to chart the whole road to Utopia; but it gives a sense of direction and suggests some of the next steps.

Little Books on Religion.

The Macmillan Company is putting out small volumes of books treating religious subjects. Their peculiar excellence may be set forth in the statements that writers most reliable in information and notable for literary ability as well as character are selected to prepare them under a rigid editorship. The contents are concise and the salient points well selected and presented in style and diction that make the information in them as entertaining as its educatory, fitting them for the taste of the lay reader as well as for the professional. Each volume is a classic on the subject it treats.

"Buddhism and Buddhists of Southern Asia," by Kenneth J. Saunders, professor in the Pacific School of Religion, is notable for its succinct, clear, and definite presentation of the origin of Buddhism and its history to the present day—its doctrines, principles and its influence on its believers. We have read nothing better, very few equal to it.

"The Religion of the Lower Races," by Edwin Smith, a missionary in South Africa, and a son of a missionary. A thoroughly informed and a scholarly writer. He devotes the book to the history and condition of the Bantu tribes which represents fifty millions of the least uncivilized of the Africans. While the Bantus differ in the dialects they speak, in their social and political economies and in many aspects of their religions, the author claims that those differences are largely incident to province or tribe, and degree of civilization while a race likeness in language and physical features and many customs prove their unity. Bantu is a general term applied to people as we use Latin, Celtic or Teutonic race. The author gives a fascinating description of the governments, politics, social condition, morals and religions of this great people. The merits of the book consist in the information and reliability of the author, the congested limits of the volume and its grip on salient points. The author's suggestions as to the needed preparation of the missionary for that field are priceless.

"The Eucharist in St. Paul," by Stuart L. Tyson, Honorary vicar of "The Cathedral of St. John," New York. If we rightly understand the objective of this book, one at least of its main purposes is to confute the ritualistic fancy that the elements of the Lord's Supper have a sacrificial intent and value as an offering to God. As such the book has, we surmise, a special value to those who are entangled in those vagaries. We have read the book with interest, for it is scholarly and historical, quite exegetical in its explanations of Paul's references to the Holy Supper in First Corinthians—the only references the great apostle makes to the "sacrament" as it is sometimes unhappily called. The views of the author are decidedly "low church" and differ little from the teaching of evangelical churches on the nature and symbol of the great ordinance.

Adding a New Chapter to the Acts

By A. H. Henderson

THE happenings out here on the Chinese border are so varied, not to say lurid, that it seems wise to record them as they take place. Today as I came out of the dispensary a group of perhaps twenty people were squatting outside. A whole village wanted to be taken into the hospital! One blind man was the only real hospital case, so, with the exception of three or four other sick people, we accommodated them all elsewhere. The blind man is interesting. He and his wife were baptized ten years ago but had never prayed because "she did not know how" and his prayers were entirely requests for himself. I tried to show them what Christianity really means, and as we talked I learned his history in detail. Thinking of God only as a giver of gifts, he had railed at God when his crops were poor declaring that he did not love us. Soon after he had suddenly gone blind and he feels it is a punishment for what he said.

While we were walking in the city one morning, we met an old man carrying water. We soon learned that last year his whole family of six children died within one month of bubonic plague. He now lives all alone in his large and desolate house. We have visited him there two or three times. This is a part of one of our conversations:

I asked, "Where is God?"

"Do you think he can see us?"

The old man said, "Why yes, he sees us all."

"Can he hear us when we pray?"

"Yes, he hears us."

Then I asked, "Do you think he loves us?"

"Yes, he loves us all just like his children," the old man answered.

"Can he save us from hell?"

"Oh yes, he is stronger than the spirit that rules over hell."

"Will he save you?"

"He will if I trust him. He will not unless I do."

"Are you trying to find him?"

"Yes."

"What prevents us from finding him?"

And the old man answered, "Sin in our hearts."

This man has never before been visited by a missionary, has heard no one preach and has read no Christian book. What he believes is not the teaching of Buddhism. This seems to be one of the very rare cases that now and again we meet where the Spirit of God has found a man willing to learn and has given him light directly from above.

Near the old man's house we found a child suffering severely from chronic suppurating tubercular glands. After we had visited the family three times urging them to come for medicine, they decided that we really did want to help the child and the mother came. She happened to arrive at the time for the woman's meeting, was deeply interested and after the meeting, pointing to the Bible from which my wife had been reading, said, "Where did you get that book?" My wife told her it was God's word revealed to us and after listening attentively she said, "I want to enter. I have never once been here before. I never heard this before. I want to be a disciple." Such cases too are very unusual and we pray that the seed may find good ground in which to grow.

God's power was our theme in the bazaar service, and we had good talks and fine attention. Saya Hpo Ttun, the last speaker, in illustrating what he has said, gave the following from his own experience: "In Mong Yaung, fifty days

A VALUABLE GUIDE

From the press of the Fleming H. Revell Co. comes a book, "Church Music" by Edmund S. Lorenz, which in its completeness, sagacious attitude and constructive suggestion, is certainly to be of the utmost value to all interested in the music of the churches and its proper support and encouragement. The author of the volume, himself a practical musician, successful publisher of church music, editor of choir journals and experienced church worker, recognizing the pitiful lack of efficient material for church music courses in the theological seminaries, with a resultant lack of knowledge of and crippled sympathy with the proper place and aims of music as an aid to divine worship and as a spiritual force on the part of many ministers—this expert, from his ample knowledge and experience has planned this encyclopedic survey to meet the lack. And he has succeeded wonderfully well!

He knows and understands actual conditions. Many of the books dealing with musical subjects are too technical, and often too indefinite to be of much value to the non-professional musician. In this troubled field of church-music, practical advice and suggestions are needed. In the general field of music today we have only too many critics who muddy the waters of progress with their prejuidces and half-baked conclusions. The department of sacred music has not escaped this infliction. Hence, the welcome to this sane, sensible and inspiring survey.

Fundamentally, "Church Music" was conceived and designed to meet the needs of the ministerial training schools. It is a textbook to be used as a basis for a definitive course that will acquaint and instruct our future pastors in a subject that has been only too much neglected, and therefore the football of fads and fanatics, The lay-out of the book is logical and coherent; designed to supply basic matter for a whole year's intensive study in the seminary. In addition, a comprehensive list of available titles for collateral reading is supplied. The questions appended to each chapter are to the point and practical. As a prospective text, book it is ideal.

I know of few books that can equal in value the final section of this volume—the portion dedicated to a survey of the organ, its history, development, construction, uses and abuses. Every committee chosen to oversee the choice and installation of a new organ should invest in this volume before any contracts are let or specifications closed.

Another valuable section is that devoted to an anlysis—calm, but authoritative—of our supply of hymns, chants, anthems and other liturgical music. The many varied types are traced back to their sources, whether it be Gregorian plain song, Reformation chorales, Roman motels, Calvinistic psalms, English hymns, American gospel songs and camp meeting tunes, or the several other contributing agencies which are represented in our modern religious music. The varied points of strength, and the defects in each type are dealt with in an apparent spirit of fairness and accuracy. Mr. Lorenz is not playing advocate for any personal prejudice—and this open-minded attitude is one of the most salient points about the book. If every organist, every chorister, every minister—for that matter, everyone—would seriously study this work, the urge for improved church music would receive a vital stimulus. There is an eloquent foreword by Cleland Boyd McAfee, D. D., well known as professor of systematic theology, McCormick Theological Seminary. The factual definiteness and comprehensive certainty of Mr. Lorenz's positive handling of this difficult subject fall no whit behind the enthusiastic and genial admonitions of the introduction. It is a cause for optimism and renewed courage to realize that such a practical, well-written and successfully executed manual is now at our service.

Adding a New Chapter

east of Kengtung, there is a woman who was tormented with an evil spirit. She went from one village to another, seeking a place to live, but everywhere the people drove her out because of the evil spirit within her. She tried to live alone but could not escape the evil spirit. At last she was told that if she would go to the Christians she might be healed. She went to their village, they received her and prayed with her for deliverance and for a whole year now she has been free from her tormentor." When Hpo Ttun visited that village, the woman went to him and sitting before him told how great things the Lord had done for her, saying, "I believe in Him and will be his disciple." Is not the power of Jesus wonderful? An obscure village of humble disciples has now become a very "city of refuge" for the tormented slaves of the devil.

WALKING

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Shows not four miles that thou hast walked or run.

And better still: If thou would'st really thrive,
Add to the score one more, and make it five.

And still again: Fate has for him few tricks
Whose daily tale of miles walked numbers six;

And health superlative on him awaiteth when
He brings the score of each day's miles to ten."

BIBLE SUNDAY
December 9th

Theme
THE BIBLE

Purpose
The earthquake in Japan has made large areas of the Far East practically Bibleless. Thousands of Bible printing plates in 25 languages and dialects used in Yokohama have been totally destroyed. They must be replaced at onee or the whole missionary program will be seriously handicapped.

Need
The American Bible Society needs immediately $289,000 with which to make good the actual losses, to say nothing of the enlarged opportunities.

Responsibility
is definitely upon the Churches of America, whose agency for Bible work in the Far East is the American Bible Society.

Opportunity
is one of unusual significance and every Pastor, Sunday School Superintendent and Young People's leader should utilize Bible Sunday on December 9th (or nearest convenient date) for the promotion of interest in the distribution of the Scriptures in Japan and the Far East.

An unusually good work is reported at Mt. Vernon, Ill., where Evangelists Hoskins and Fleming recently closed a meeting. The church at Princeton, Ind., is now engaged in special meetings under the leadership of the same workers.

The stereopticon department of the Board of Promotion has a few Christmas sets of stereopticon slides. There are eighteen colored slides and two hymn slides ("It Came Upon a Midnight Clear" and "Holy Night") in the set with a manuscript in Bible language. If you want to use this set write giving date desired and name and address of person to whom it is to be sent.

It is reported that the series of sermons by President Faunce of Brown University have attracted unusually large congregations in the old First Church of Providence, where the former editor of THE BAPTIST, Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves is pastor. These addresses have been broadcasted, greatly increasing the number of hearers. Speaking of the use of the radio by churches, Dr. John R. Hobbs of the First Church, Birmingham, Ala., has reports showing that the services of his church are being enjoyed by homes in twenty-five states.

We have just learned that at the last meeting of the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society a special committee was appointed, consisting of Henry Bond, William T. Sheppard, Rev. M. J. Twomey, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor and Rev. Carter Helm Jones with whom was associated Rev. Joshua Gravett as vice-president of the society, to read all the correspondence in the files of the society concerning which references and charges have been published in recent numbers of The Fundamentalist issued by the Baptist Fundamentalist League of Greater New York and Vicinity, and to read relevant portions of such correspondence to the board. The special committee of the board is therefore proceeding with its task and will endeavor to have all the correspondence read prior to the next meeting of the board. A full and thorough investigation is assured.

Mr. J. M. Williams of Winder, Ga., recently wrote the president of Bessie Tift College stating that he wanted to do something definite for Christian education. "The Lord has certainly been good to me, carrying me over many a rough and rugged place, and I have received blessings much more than I deserve. Considering all these gifts from our heavenly Father, we are giving $50,000 in gilt-edge securities to Bessie Tift, the income to help educate worthy girls." The income will begin to be available Jan. 1, 1924. Starting out in life Mr. and Mrs. Williams borrowed $200 to give them a start and now, after twenty-five years of hard work, Mr. Williams is having the joy of giving his money to causes he believes will make for the extension of God's kingdom.

For the Child at the Center

Christmas is the birthday of the world's most precious child—the Babe of Bethlehem. Christmas means giving, too—for and in His name. Can you go happy this glad Christmas season knowing there is some little one on a mission field for whom your gift of love may smooth the way during the "happy New Year?"

Christmas Offerings for Christmas Centers

There are at present 26 Christian Community Centers in operation. Others are sorely needed. These institutions minister to Cosmopolitan, Negro, Italian, Japanese, Chinese and Russian groups. They are maintained cooperatively by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, State Conventions and City Mission Societies. A wholesome development of this work calls for the consecrated giving of a host of old friends and new.

The New Paradise

"I THANK thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." Their own wisdom stands in the way of the wise, because they think they understand everything. Their own intelligence is an impediment for the intelligent, because they are not capable of understanding any other light than that of the intellect. Only the simple can understand simplicity, the innocent, innocence, the loving, love. The revelation of Jesus open only to virginal souls, is all humility, purification and love. But man, as he grows older, becomes more complicated and learns the horrible pleasure of hatred. Every day he goes further from Paradise and becomes less capable of finding it. He takes pleasure in his steady downfall and glories in the useless learning which hides from him the only needful truth. To find the new Paradise, the kingdom of innocence and love, it is needful to become like children who have already what others must strive and struggle to regain. Jesus sought out the company of sinners; but he felt himself with his true brothers only when he laid his hands on the heads of little children.

—Giovanni Papini

Fresh from the Field

Rev. J. A. Swanson is now settled on his new field at Brocton, Mass. He was until recently the pastor of the First Swedish Church of St. Paul.

"Football," says the "Northwestern Christian Advocate," "is gradually displacing bull fighting in Spain, according to a native Spaniard and professor of Spanish in the University of Iowa. Slowly reform is working in the home of the bull fighter—slowly, we say."

Seventy years ago Rev. Seth Reed was pastor of a Methodist Church in Monroe, Mich. At the age of 100 Mr. Reed recently officiated at the dedication of a new church building in that city. Among his Sunday-school scholars was General Custer, whose home was in Monroe.

The First Church of Titusville, Pa., has suffered a serious loss in a fire which partially destroyed its house of worship. The loss is reported as $25,000 with an insurance of only about $5,000. How would a similar experience find your church? Winter is coming on and the fire hazard will be greater.

Mrs. Smith Thomas Ford, former president of the Woman's Home Mission Society, has been seriously ill at the Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago having undergone a serious operation. At the present writing she is reported to be improving with prospects of complete recovery. Doctor Ford is doing double duty as pastor of the church at Wheaton and as one of the teaching staff of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary.

Missionary C. S. Detweiler writes: "Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Peters have returned to Cuba for a second season of special evangelistic services among the Baptist churches of eastern Cuba. Their first campaign of two weeks, began in Santiago, Nov. 18. They are working with a new mission which is supported by the Cuban Baptist Home Mission Society. This mission promises to be the Third Baptist church of Santiago. Already there have been many manifestations of divine power in their meetings. They ask for the prayers of their friends in the states for this campaign.

What is probably a unique undertaking in labor journalism appeared with the issue of the Denver Labor Bulletin for Nov. 3, and a supplementary section on Nov. 10, devoted to the church and labor. A frank effort was made by the editor to define the relationship between organized labor and organized religion, and a number of articles were contributed to this end. Use was also made of several articles which appeared in "The Annals" for Sept., 1922, an issue devoted to "Industrial Relations and the Churches." The special issue has apparently attracted much favorable notice in Denver and elsewhere.

The membership of the Epworth League has reached 800,000 and the subscription of the Epworth Herald, the Methodist young people's weekly newspaper, has reached 77,000 according to the recent report of the secretary of that organization.

The First Church of Billings, Mont., dedicated the first unit of the new church Nov. 25. Rev. E. R. Curry, pastor of the First Church of Bozeman, preached the dedicatory sermon. In the afternoon open house was held from three to five o'clock. The evening was given over to a big musical program.

The president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mr. Corwin S. Shank, will go to Japan as a fraternal messenger from our own Baptist people to the people of Japan. Mr. Shank was asked by the board of the foreign society to render this service. Japanese diplomatic representatives have urged Mr. Shank to go if possible.

The "Baptist Propeller" is the name of a new newspaper published by students and faculty of the Southwestern Baptist Seminary. It is to be "safely conservative in views, direct and open in policy." It has the "one object of properly reflecting the seminary spirit. This idea carries the interpretation of seminary life, the defining of seminary activities, and a rendering of the seminary position on matters of Baptist interest."

Norman Angell in the London "Nation" discussing the "commercialism of demagogy" has some pointed things to say about the press in general and daily newspapers in particular. He says that our minds become unbalanced because a part of the facts concerning many national and international questions have been obscured. If we had the same set of facts that the French people have had about Germany and England we would probably take the same general positions. "There are papers—Manchester Guardian among dailies, and in all countries a number of 'high-brow' reviews—that do in some measure deal with the whole truth. But if the great newspaper trusts, the vast industrial organizations like the Associated Newspapers, the Amalgamated Press, the Hulton or the Beaverbrook combinations, the Hearst Press in America, had to live on the patronage of the class of readers which is prepared to hear both sides, those big concerns would be utterly bankrupt . . . The Daily Mail or the Hearst Press, lives by dealing in a form of politics, when it deals with politics or public questions at all, which will appeal most readily to the tens of millions, to the tea-shop waitress or the school-girl typist. That is to say, it must touch some feeling easily aroused; must not puzzle them by upsetting conceptions that have become familiar; and must present so simple a case that it will hold attention in competition with the rattle of tube and factory, or the fatigue of the day's end." While THE BAPTIST has not yet succeeded in pleasing everybody it has gained a wide reputation for giving the facts to the folks.

Rev. Frank W. Stanton, for nearly four years the pastor of the Knoxville Church, Pittsburgh, has accepted the call of the First Church, Akron, Ohio, and began his work Dec. 9.

Rev. Torrence Phelps, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Green Bay, Wis., has accepted the call of the First Congregational Church of Kalamazoo, Mich. Mr. Phelps is the son of Dr. S. W. Phelps, who was until recently pastor of the Grace Church in Milwaukee.

Fred H. McNair was ordained at the First Church, Valier, Mont., recently. Mr. McNair completed his B. D. course at Colgate Seminary last June. The ordination was followed by a baptismal service. Secretary Cress was the speaker, Rev. F. R. Brown of Great Falls moderator, and Arthur Bowman clerk of the council.

Mme. Kajiko Yajima, the ninety-year-old suffrage worker and president of the Japanese W. C. T. U., escaped bodily harm in the recent earthquake. Her house was badly damaged, but ten girls carried her to safety. Later the fire forced her to flee to the military barracks. She is a remarkable woman.

Friends of Rio Grande College at Rio Grande, Ohio, are greatly encouraged with the outlook for the future of the school. Last month the new president, H. T. Houf, was inaugurated. The registration for the first semester was 163. The summer attendance goes above the 350 mark.

Dr. J. L. Jackson, who has been for a number of years the pastor of the First Church, Bloomington, Ill., has been obliged to resign on account of failing health. He asks that his resignation be made effective Feb. 1. Dr. Jackson was formerly pastor of the Fountain Street Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., and the Hyde Park Church, Chicago.

A special offering for Doctor Axling and the work of the Tokyo Tabernacle at the Calvary Church, Minneapolis, amounted to more than $1800. Other pledges are being received. Doctor and Mrs. William Axling are missionaries of the Calvary Church. The pastor, Rev. John MacLean, announces that the church school of missions will open a six weeks' term on Jan. 3.

The "Northwestern Christian Advocate" tells us that "Liberal, Mo., gained no small notoriety a generation ago because of the fact that it was founded by a group of liberals who were seeking to get away from all church influence. A city ordinance decreed that no religious services should be held in the town. This condition did not exist many years as such conditions never stand for long time. It is of great interest to Methodists, therefore, that the announcement is made that that church has recently dedicated a commodious and beautiful new building in the town and that the Disciples are also organized and working in a good building with fine success attending their efforts."

Entirely Mistaken

"Killam, you are awfully hard on some of us. You seem to enjoy jabbing us. Can't you be a little more human?" How can a man show himself more human than by doing exactly as we are charged with doing? We do "jab" occasionally, but note that we always do it with a beautiful Christian spirit. If we were not very human how could we show so much familiarity with your kinks and foibles? THE BAPTIST always seeks to live where its readers live—that is, in the same vicinity. This paper is produced on the assumption that its readers are not angels.

Nine Readers Go Forth to Read

"Brother A will scamper through to see if his name appears; not finding it, he will throw the paper down in disgust.

"Brother B goes straight for the 'Sunday-school Notes.' In this case Brother B is a professor in one of our normals.

"Brother C will read the 'Personals' and will straightway write a letter of joy or of sorrow as he reads of distant friends.

"Brother D will go right for 'Topics of the Times' to see the summary of current issues. Brother D in this case happens to be the president of one of Michigan's great educational institutions.

"Brother E will go carefully through the reports of our home and foreign work, for through the years he has invested considerable money in our missionary enterprises. Reading this weekly report, he keeps posted on world-wide Methodism.

"Brother F will nibble a little at every page and pass on without digesting anything in the paper.

"Brother G will get mad at something and send a hot letter to the editor, with $2 for next year, and $2 for a friend, for he appreciates a paper that does not always agree with him. He prefers an Advocate to a weekly phonograph. He reads it from cover to cover, advertisements and all.

"Brother H will study carefully the various appeals, for he recognizes the fact that the Advocate is a guide to sane giving, as well as to holy living.

"Brother I reads the bishop's page first, with a real Methodist's respect for his chief: he reads it with a prayer and then goes out to follow the bishop's suggestion of service.

"P. S.—We formerly had one reader who always read the editorials first. Not having heard from him in months, we fear something has happened to him and cannot say whether we have another one or not."—Michigan Christian Advocate.

Say More by Not Saying So Much

We are trying to shorten the articles and news items and after a while if we can show any satisfactory progress we may try the same thing on the editorials. We sent back a manuscript recently and the author complained. He did not like our action. He said, "Don't you know it will take me twice as long to write an article of 1,200 words as it would one of 2,500?" Of course we know that. That's why we sent it back. He will say a lot more by not saying so much.

It is said that there are more than 200 churches in New York City which hold all their services in foreign languages. Some work yet to be done by the agencies interested in Americanization.

Mr. F. R. Welles, of France, who for several years has given a stated sum for the purchase of books for the library of Kalamazoo College, has doubled the amount for the present year. The library subscribes for 114 periodicals.

The Methodists recently dedicated in Los Angeles their largest church building on the Pacific coast. It cost $1,500,000. On the day of dedication it is reported that the congregation raised $5000 for a director of religious education and also gave the pastor $25,000. Surely this must be in the "golden west."

Dr. Howard B. Grose was the speaker at the First Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on the occasion of its annual home-day service. He was ordained in this church forty years ago. It was a joyous occasion, especially for the older members. The special offering amounted to more than $800. The minister of the church is Clarence H. Frank.

Frederick A. Bisbee, for twenty-five years editor of the Universalist Leader, died at Miami, Fla., last month. For years he has been in poor health and his work was often done under most trying physical suffering. "In these last years when life brought him sorrow and much pain," says the Leader, "he seemed to live above these things and still radiated good cheer in his written words and in his personal conversation."

Dr. Charles A. Brooks has accepted the call of the Englewood Church, Chicago. The church and Baptists of the city generally are greatly interested and pleased with the announcement. For several years Doctor Brooks has been doing one of the big jobs in the denomination. He has centered upon the work in the cities and especially among the foreign peoples. He has been a source of strength to the workers in all our great centers. For a year he acted as our Baptist representative or commissioner in Europe. Englewood, we expect great things of you under the leadership of your new pastor.

The "Western Recorder," speaking of Rev. J. Frank Norris of Fort Worth, Texas, says: "That peace and forgiveness are reported from the Galveston convention." According to reports Dr. S. P. Brooks of Baylor University said: "I am opposed to evolution of every kind." The Recorder continues: "The convention unflinchingly maintained its dignity and yet made it possible for the brilliant Fort Worth pastor to apologize for personal injuries which had transpired in the conflict over 'open board books,' and 'evolution.' The whole South will rejoice at this consummation, for the difference embarrassed all of us and entered into inter-state objectives and policies injuriously. The Lord grant this new peace shall be of long life!"

It is reported by Dr. Benjamin Otto that the North Shore Church, Chicago, has extended a unanimous call to Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of the Temple Church, Los Angeles. It is hoped that he will accept the call.

It is well to get the point of view of those who have not embraced Christianity. An editorial in the American Israelite is clear-cut and worthy of consideration. The editor says: "Jewry is the only religious body that during the last 2,000 years has not persecuted others for religion's sake. There has never been a time during the last eighteen centuries when both Mohammedans and Christians have not somewhere persecuted non-believers, sometimes to a greater extent, sometimes to a lesser, here through the imposition of civic and economic disabilities, there through violence and outrage, often the very worst imaginable. True, Jewry has not had the power to persecute 'heretics,' which is perhaps fortunate. But even if it had the power, it is questionable whether it would have used it, for one of its 'fundamentals' is that 'there shall be one law for you (the Jews) and the stranger within your gate.' Besides, Judaism teaches that the righteous unbeliever in the tenets of Judasim, the man who does justice and loves mercy, be he Christian, Mohammedan or pagan, stands equally before the law with the most meticulous observer of the laws and customs of the Jews." Here we see how Christianity has to bear the blame for the acts of so-called Christians and Christian nations. In the matter of persecution Baptists stand with the Jews in making the claim that as a people they have never persecuted others. They have felt the sting of the lash but have never applied it. They established an asylum in Rhode Island where Jews and Quakers and all others might be free from disabilities on account of religious belief or lack of belief. Can our editor point out where Baptists ever persecuted his people?

Call Thou Our Sons

By Henry Crocker

O CHRIST, who once by Galilee
Didst call young men to follow thee,
Their love aroused, their zeal inflamed,
Their questions solved, their work explained,
And sent them out the world to win
From all the miseries of sin,
Call thou our sons by thy sweet voice;
Help them to make thy paths their choice;
Their doubts dissolve; their trust secure;
Their hearts make resolute and pure,
And in thy service let them be
In closest fellowship with thee.

Rev. Ralph Barry, who has been one of the workers under the Wisconsin Convention, has accepted the call of the church at Eau Claire, where Rev. E. R. MacKinney recently resigned.

Rev. C. B. Allen, formerly pastor in Chicago, Omaha, Helena (Mont.), Salt Lake City and Canton, (Ohio), died Nov. 22 in Berkeley, Cal. Two years ago Mr. Allen retired from active service on account of failing health. Mrs. Allen and four children survive him.

This was a Methodist church. The Northwestern Christian Advocate makes the report: "The officiary of an Iowa church who had promised their pastor $2000 a year but who had paid less than $200 during the first six months complained to the district superintendent upon his second round that 'the only thing they had against their pastor was, he didn't pay his debts.' For real downright humor—barring the victimized pastor—that can't be beat."

Dr. Edward Raffety, editor-in-chief of Sunday-school publications of the Publication Society, has resigned his position with the society effective March 31, 1924, to accept the editorship of the new International Journal of Christian Education, which is to be published in Chicago by the International Sunday-school Council of Religious Education. The first issue of the new journal will probably appear in October, 1924.

According to the "Christian World of London" of Nov. 15, "the oculists express their belief that by the recent operation on Dr. J. H. Shakespeare the sight of one eye is preserved. The other, the retina of which was detached, is lost. Doctor Shakespeare is suffering from nervous overstrain, of which the eye trouble is a symptom. Dr. Charles Brown, writing in the Daily Telegraph, says that probably Doctor Shakespeare will have to go more slowly for the remainder of his active service. Yesterday's news was that the oculist had seen Doctor Shakespeare the day before, and his report was fairly satisfactory. It is hoped that Doctor Shakespeare will be able to get up in the course of a day or two."

Speaking of Dr. John Clifford in the Bloor Street Church, Toronto, Dr. W. A. Cameron said: "He left us just as he would have wished with his full armor on." The Canadian Baptist then speaks of Doctor Clifford's love for mankind. "Anarchists and infidels sat in his evening congregations—not because they loved the message, but because Doctor Clifford had sought to help them at other times. He loved truth; that he defended always, irrespective of the cost. He fought tyranny, hypocrisy wherever found. Against the government he hurled his thunderbolts when the education bill was announced. There was a lively clash, but when the smoke of the conflict had cleared away Clifford was victor. The ministry was a privilege and a pleasure. He loved Christ and rejoiced in him. Christ and the cross were the center of his sermon."

The Pastor as a Leader

EVERY pastor is ideally the leader of his church in all things essential to the welfare of the local congregation and vital to the advancement of the kingdom of God on the earth.

However, ideals are not always realized and this is true in a very marked degree with many pastors. Too many of them are content to follow the line of least resistance, and the following of that line does not make for leadership.

Assuming then that pastoral leaders are needed, what must be done to supply the need?

First we must begin at the source and change the antiquated methods of training men for the ministry that still obtain in many theological schools. We have the highest regard for genuine, reverent and constructive scholarship. All schools should teach respect for the spirit of research and develop the sense of appreciation for the best in literature, history, science and art. But the sustained attempt on the part of some divinity schools to make scholars of all their students is vanity and vexation of spirit, because a scholar, like a poet, is born not made. Both poets and scholars are comparatively few in the very nature of things. The prime business of a theological seminary is to develop preachers and pastoral leaders. To this end the faculty should be selected from men who have had successful pastoral experience and who meet the necessary scholastic standards. The roster of many theological faculties is not assuring along this line. Divinity students should be required to follow the laboratory method under wise guidance and at least half of their work should be done outside the walls of the seminary in active and official association with pastors selected for this task because of their unquestioned leadership. There is still too much of philosophy and dead languages required for graduation from the standard theological seminary. The church is suffering untold loss today because so many of us were fed up on philosophy and philosophizing at the expense of efficiency, and on exegesis at the sacrifice of experience. Preachers, if they are to become leaders, must be more practical and less philosophical.

The modern church is in large part a business corporation. It deals with all the elements of business in the administration of its affairs. The principles that underlie money and manufacturing and salesmanship and labor and organization, are all involved in the management of a local church. The pastor, as the leader of his church, should understand the best business methods and be able to command the respect and confidence and cooperation of the best business men of the church and community. We speak of stewardship for example. But what is stewardship except a religious word for trusteeship, and trusteeship is an economic term. While the pastor's citizenship is in heaven he must keep his feet on the earth. Told by D. L. Moody that he was on his way to the polls to cast his vote, a religious fanatic exclaimed in horror: "How can you vote when your citizenship is in heaven?" To which the practical and common-sense evangelist replied: "I pay taxes in Cook County." Our colleges and theological seminaries must require the student for the ministry to master the science and practice of business principles and methods before he can be graduated, and these business principles and methods should be taught with special application to the average local church.

With such leaders in our churches, the archaic methods of managing the finances which are still followed by many local congregations will be changed. The budget system will be adopted, and the budget covering every expenditure of money by the church and all its departments will be administered by a board of trustees representative of every interest in the local church. Every member will be enlisted in the support of the church not only financially but in worship and service as well. The big giver will take his place with all the other givers and he will not bulk so largely as to frighten the average pastor by his financial power. Benevolences also will be included in the common budget, and weekly, proportionate giving systematically administered will be followed up by business methods so that arrears and consequent deficits will be reduced to zero.

BUT for pastors who cannot have the benefit of the new seminary training because their seminary days are over, something must be done. There is something seriously wrong with the leadership of many pastors when 60 per cent of the membership of local Baptist churches neither go to church nor support the church with any regularity. Leadership is lacking among pastors who permit their church rolls to be loaded down with so many non-resident, non-contributing, non-active members without making some effort to remedy this disgraceful state of affairs. It does no good to blame the pastors. We do not blame a sick man for being sick—we help him to get well. In the same spirit and with the same practical sense we must help pastors who do not and who cannot lead their churches. The pastor is the key to the local church. Missionary, educational and promotional agencies have too often gone into the local church through the transom. We must stop that method of entrance and use the key. If the key is rusty, bent or a misfit we must make the key fit the lock. To speak without the figure, we must find some method of helping pastors as practical as the method of developing boys and girls in rural communities to become efficient and enthusiastic in raising well-bred stock. While this is being written a procession of boys and girls from Kansas, Nebraska, Indiana, and other states, headed by a brass band, is passing the office. Their badges and banners indicate the fact that they are attending the international stock show as guests of their states and counties. There need be no fear of a slump in the production of blooded stock so long as these boys and girls are encouraged and helped to take a vital interest in the farm.

Regional schools for the training of pastors in the most approved methods of managing a church, must be opened. Means must be provided in some way to defray the expenses of the pastors attending such schools for a week or ten days each year. The expenses would not be large, and the returns would be of inestimable value to the kingdom of God. The fellowship of such schools or retreats would be an unfailing source of inspiration and information to many pastors deprived of the privilege of social contacts with their brethren in the ministry. The interchange of ideas and experiences, the teaching by men who are experts in church affairs, the atmosphere of earnest purpose and prayer, the close grappling with baffling problems, would make such a school invaluable in its practical benefits to the pastors in attendance.

If we want leaders we can have them, not by indulging in complaints and casting blame upon this thing or that thing, but by heroically facing the situation as it exists and setting in motion the forces that will change it. The pastors as we know them are willing to be shown a better way. Taking them in the large and measuring them with leaders in other lines, pastors do not suffer by comparison, and this in spite of the fact that leaders in all other lines have far more coaching than pastors ever receive. A few weeks ago we met two young men on the train going to New York from the Pacific Coast to attend a school of methods for a month at the expense of the company employing them. The company thought it well worth the money expended to bring their salesmen from all parts of the country to New York in order to increase their efficiency in the business.

Now that the Northern Baptist Convention is about to close the New World Movement which began at the top and worked down to the local church, it is timely to begin a New Church Movement which will start at the bottom and stay with the pastors until the weaknesses which now make us impotent in so many ways are removed, and the local church is raised to its highest possible efficiency.

John Clifford Crowned

IN the going of Dr. John Clifford of London a great Baptist leader has been crowned. Of him the words of Paul uttered in the prospect of death are most fitting. He fought the good fight, he finished the course, he kept the faith. John Clifford was a militant leader of his people in the interest of justice for more than sixty years. He fought continuously and consistently against all impositions of ecclesiastical-political power, and yet he was never belligerent. His fine sense of humor and his sweet Christian spirit kept him fraternal and calm in the very midst of the ugly tempers released by his fight for fair play. C. H. Spurgeon who loved Clifford said to him one day: "How is it that I cannot rid you of your Arminianism?" Quick as a flash came the witty reply: "I see you only once a month, but I read my Bible every day."

John Clifford kept the faith by using it. Faith like land or money must be used if it is to become helpful and growing. His best defense of the faith lay in its consistent proclamation and in its power to inspire him to fight on without discouragement in the face of established precedent and against entrenched ecclesiastical interests. He always kept an even keel. In the "Down-Grade Movement" he walked in the middle of the road avoiding both extremes without compromising his own vital convictions. He was a profound believer in the Baptist principle of liberty—liberty to think, to worship, to act, without interference from church or state. There were no compartments in his life. His personality and conduct were unified and harmonious. "My politics are part of my religion," he would often say. He endured as seeing him who is invisible.

John Clifford was really a citizen of heaven with an undying passion to colonize the earth with the ideals, laws and liberties of heaven. Money made no appeal to him. With calls to other churches paying double the salary he preferred to stay with his beloved people of Westbourne Chapel. His powers of endurance and concentration were far above the ordinary. It was by the aid of these powers that he was able to carry on a ministry of such varied activities through so many years. His scholarship was of a high order in spite of the fact that his early years were handicapped by lack of academic training. In his mature young manhood he took all the honors London University had to give, and yet he remained the simple, democratic friend and companion of the poor, the ignorant and the oppressed. He did not live to see his ideals for disestablishment of church and state in England realized; but he lived long enough to see his fight for the full enfranchisement of Englishmen and English women won. He died like the heroes of faith whose names are recorded in the eleventh of Hebrews who had witness borne to them through their faith and yet received not the promise in its fulfilment. But he finished his course and when he passed out at the Baptist headquarters in London it was to answer the summons of his Lord to come up higher and engage in a wider service unlimited and immortal.

"And Some, Evangelists"

"EVERY man his own evangelist" is a needed goal for pastors to strive for, but since the early church some have been called to be evangelists and it will always be so.

The situation today is that a few are called and many do not bother about the call, but go in on their own hook.....

How do we get our present force? Some of the choice ones had the sanctified courage to give up successful pastorates and strike out in pure faith on the more venturesome path of special evangelism.

Some of them are good folks loaned to us by our sister churches, not always understanding perfectly our ways and ideals, but often proving a great blessing to us.

Some are left-overs from the conferences, men who were not particularly wanted by any of the churches or men who did not particularly want to go to their suggested appointments.

Some are mere pick-ups from the ecclesiastical waste-baskets, and they have a chance to perform their religious mal-practice just because the supply of good evangelists is so limited.

How would it be instead of discounting evangelists, if we should begin to train up our own men for the task, and say goodbye to dependence on Tom, Dick and Harry?

We scold about the cheap, short-cut places that train these miscellaneous men, but what real church-wide effort are we successfully making to train our own men for this most difficult task?

Blessings on those men of God who have sacrificed their home life and are in the field of evangelism because of the conviction that God wants them there.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

Straight Thinking

THE rarest of all mental qualities is the capacity to think straight, to pick and choose judiciously; to decide by act of intellect alone, with no admixture of moods; to arrive at conclusions which are wholly uninfluenced by hopes, fears, anxieties, envies, jealousies, ambitions, and any or all other emotional urges. There are those who say that ability always to exercise cold, calm, deliberative judgment is the highest mental quality, being superior to power of observation, memory, creative ability, imagination, temperament, artistic ability, mathematical ability, ability to co-ordinate the muscles, to any other kind of ability.

It may be true that men of great emotions are capable of great joys, but in them this is counterbalanced by a capability for great sorrow. Summing it all up, I expect the balanced are the happiest and most contented of folks.

The first mental qualities to be found as we come up in the scale are the instincts. Some of the instincts are based on emotions. Some of them are essentially judgmatical. In fact, the judgment of men never elsewhere reaches the high level that it does in those instincts that are matters of large judgment. Certain of our instinctive acts represent the very acme of clear, straight thinking, although the thinking may be group thinking and antecedent to the individual.

I think I disagree with that opinion. But I will agree to this: Judicial ability represents a greater freedom from mental ill health than do any of the other abilities referred to. There are many insane and near insane who are great composers, mathematicians, artists, actors, creators, inaugeurs capable of prodigious feats of memory, but those having great judicial ability are balanced.

The first acts of our lives are instinctive, based on experiences of the stock. The qualities of these acts are judgmatical. Very soon emotions begin to intrude themselves. The child begins to develop anger and fear and other emotions, and not infrequently exhibitions of these emotions begin early to interfere with the workings of those instincts which bear such logical relations to the well-being of the child. From that time to the death from senility of the individual the capacity to follow, first, instinct and, second, judgment and straight thinking is more or less limited by the intrusion of the emotion.

When minds are wrecked, the rocks that sunk them are usually labeled "feeling" and rarely labeled "thinking." All of which is written without overlooking the fact that the extreme heights of human performance are only reached by minds under the whip of great emotion.

Let the person who would protect his mental health and happiness look well to his emotions.—Dr. W. A. Evans, in Chicago Tribune.

The Art of Condensation

ON this subject Dean Charles R. Brown writes in the Record of Christian Work: "In your unregenerate fishing days, before you learned to fish properly with a fly, you may have resorted to bait. You will remember how those long, squirming angleworms could vary their length. One of them might easily extend himself until he would measure six inches, and then suddenly at the prick of the sharp hook he could cuddle himself together until he was not more than two inches long. But there was no more worm in the elongated edition than there was in the worm of briefer compass. If the mother bird had been feeding her young, the nestful of birdlings would have derived just as much proteid from the condensed edition. And when we have learned the high art of condensation, so that an hour of talk may be compacted into twenty-five minutes without the loss of a single idea, the people will derive as much, and even more, spiritual proteid from our efforts as a result of the condensation."

Channing Pollock's Own Story of "The Fool"

THE accompanying article is an outline of Mr. Pollock's address given to the Baptist ministers of Chicago on a recent Monday morning and given to "The Baptist" by the speaker on request. It is printed here with the hope that our readers may appreciate the difficulties a dramatist meets in seeking to redeem the stage in order that it may become what it was originally intended to be—the patron of culture and Christianity.

MY first set-backs with "The Fool" were the fault of no one. I thought of the play ten or twelve years ago or more, and had delivered a scenario to my agent, Elizabeth Marbury, when—along came "The Servant in the House." There is no real likeness between the two plays, but their genre is the same, and I promptly shelved mine. It probably would have stayed shelved but for Shelley Hull, who became deeply interested in the story, and wanted me to write it for him. So I made a contract with his manager, A. H. Woods, and went to California to do my job. That was in the winter of 1918-19, and I had got as far as Los Angeles when I learned of the sudden death of Shelley Hull, and took the next train back to New York.

Following the Urge

The following year the urge to write "The Fool" returned and I broached the subject to Mr. Woods. He and I had produced "Roads of Destiny" meanwhile with results none too good, and he couldn't see why I persisted in toying with "high-brow stuff." I held out for a couple of months, and then tackled "The Sign on the Door." Our compromise was that afterward, we should do "The Fool," but when "The Sign" was launched, I found Mr. Woods still skeptical and unsympathetic, and very much under protest, I undertook a drama of Broadway called "Orchids." When it was finished I tore it up and vowed that unless I starved to death in the meantime, I would do nothing else until I had written the play that had been clamoring for utterance nearly ten years.

To avoid starving I wrote the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1921." Then the great success of "The Sign on the Door" in London removed my financial worry, and the enthusiasm for "The Fool" expressed by Godfrey Tearle, who had played Regan in the London "Sign," gave me an actor to tie to. So I came home that fall and settled down to actual writing. Up to this time I had done a scenario; I had many hundreds of pages of notes; had read a dozen books, and gone to Pennsylvania and Ohio to observe the steel strike at first hand, but I had not attempted anything in the way of dialog.

I finished my second act in February and made an appointment to read what I had completed to Mr. Woods. I had no faith that he would like it and told him so frankly. The evening of the reading was all that I had expected. Mr. Woods and Bertram Harrison, his stage director, sat through the recital in bored silence, and then Mr. Woods suggested that I drop this foolishness and make a dramatization of "A Bed of Roses."

I called on him the next day to say that nothing would induce me to abandon "The Fool", and to suggest that we destroy our contract and release each other from an obligation that was becoming painful to both. This he declined to do. So I finished my third act, and with almost undescribable reluctance took it to him. Again silence, and only one moment of approval—when I reached the end of the act. Again I asked leave to destroy the contract. Mr. Woods said he would produce the piece if he could get John Barrymore to play Gilchrist. He promised to speak to Barrymore and let me hear from him the next day.

The next day I heard nothing. The next week I heard nothing. When a fortnight had passed without word I telephoned. Mr. Woods was busy. Then I called. Mr. Woods was out. This sort of thing continued another fortnight, and then I wrote asking for the third time that the contract be destroyed. Mr. Woods replied that the contract gave him a year in which to do the play, and that at some time within that year he would make up his mind.

I put my work aside and had made up my mind to forget it, when Mr. Woods notified me that if I would return the money I had received for an option on "The Fool," he would return my contract. I felt that he already had his option, but I gave back the full sum and finished my fourth act. Then I began what, in April, 1921, seemed the hopeless task of marketing the manuscript. I had some idea of doing it first in England, but while my English manager, Frank Curzon, was enthusiastic, Godfrey Tearle displayed a change of heart and now could see nothing in it.

Robert Milton, a leading director, was genuinely impressed and recommended it warmly to his management, but William Harris thought it a bad play and declined it. So did William A. Brady, who had paid me $2,000 for my first effort, "The Pit," and to whom I went because I felt that he owed me a production. A dozen other managers followed Mr. Brady's example. There is no need of going into this. It is the up and down of the business: the common experience of all authors who attempt to do something a little different.

Promises Broken

But finally the Selwyns bought "The Fool" and arranged with Sam H. Harris to take one-fourth of the risk. And presently came the proposal that I produce the play in Los Angeles for a "try-out." I was opposed to this, because I felt nothing could be judged from a hit-or-miss production by a stock company, and that, in any event, "The Fool" would not appeal to a community that had given record runs to "The Brat" and "Civilian Clothes," but I yielded to the assurance that nothing that happened in Los Angeles would affect the determination to produce it in New York. Also in any event of my going to Los Angeles, I was promised that Richard Bennett would play Gilchrist in the New York production. The night of our opening in California I found that Mr. Bennett was pledged to a second season on tour in "He Who Gets Slapped" and that the promise made me could never be carried out.

The Star of Bethlehem

Also, that first night in Los Angeles I was approached in the lobby by a motion picture magnate who asked me: "What's all this talk in your play about the Star of Bethlehem?"

I inquired: "Do you know what the Star of Bethlehem is?"

"Sure," he replied, "it's a star in the Milky Way."

I told him it was the star that rose over Bethlehem when Jesus was born and that symbolized the coming of Christ.

"Well," he exclaimed, "you ought to say so in the play. People don't know about that."

This seemed to me pure comedy. It almost became tragedy when I returned from the coast to find a management deeply dejected by a wire from this critic stating his belief that my play was "dull and talky and hasn't got a chance in New York." Mr. Harris asked to be relieved of his 25 per cent. I bought his interest, because it was no time for hesitation, and brought personal pressure to bear to prevent the holder of another minor share from following the example of Mr. Harris.

Mr. Selwyn told me at this time that there wasn't another management in New York that would have produced the play in the face of the telegraphed storm of denunciation from the coast. Perhaps he was right. Certainly the Western Union might have put up a new building from the proceeds of the wires sent to prevent the Selwyns wasting money on "The Fool." People who never before had evidenced the slightest interest in the Selwyns or in the drama or in me, suddenly became obsessed with the dread that my managers would lose money, and telegraphed hundreds of words at their own expense. A western newspaper man who had seen the performance wired three pages, the text of which was: "'The Fool' is a treatise on capital and labor and religion—nothing more. What entertainment values it possesses are buried beneath a bushel of long tiresome dissertations." Another motion picture magnate dispatched 300 words, beginning "Pollock play as dull as production would be expensive. To produce it in New York would be courting ridicule and bankruptcy. So far as I can see, play hasn't one redeeming feature." Mrs. Leslie Carter wrote: "The subject does not appeal to me at all . . I adore a wonderful love story . . . this play is tedious and dull. In several instances I have asked how it would be received in New York, and in every case the reply was that it would never go in a million years."

No one could blame the Selwyns for losing enthusiasm, especially since even before the telegrams arrived, Mr. Woods had been around to inquire whether they were crazy when they bought the play. Moreover we were now within two months of the contract limit for production, and, thanks to the broken promise as to Mr. Bennett, they had no one who looked even possible for the role of Gilchrist. Mr. Bennett was still playing "The Fool"—strangely enough to enormously big business— in California, and I sent him in all nearly $200 worth of telegraphed entreaties to stick to the agreement and play Gilchrist in New York, but his prior engagement for "He Who Gets Slapped" could not be cancelled.

Studio Burns Down

I was living in Shoreham, Long Island—seventy miles from New York—and for a month I came in every day, not to engage a cast but to prop up the flagging interest of my managers—to make myself such a nuisance that, in self-defence, they would produce "The Fool." It was at about this time when my efforts had resulted in a production actually being built that the studio burned down, and with it every stick of scenery for the play. At about this time, too, a leading man who had been engaged in desperation and who had proved so wrongly cast that the company made up their minds the piece would never open, and stopped working, showed me a contract for "the run of the play," and announced that it was he or no one. Eventually our leading man discovered that this was not his type of part and generously tore up his contract, but we were then within ten days of opening and we were rehearsing without any one in the role of Gilchrist.

I tried to get Basil Sydney who had read the play and liked it, but while we were working with the other man, he had engaged himself for "R. U. R." I tried to get Basil Rathbone who had read it and liked it, but he had gone to England to act in "East of Suez." Finally heaven sent us James Kirkwood. The tide had turned. The Selwyns' fighting spirit had been aroused, too, and they were sticking nobly. This whole-heartedness survived the discovery that, partly because of a personal antagonism, we could get no booking on the road. "The Fool" had to have its try-out in some out-of-the-way one-night stand or "open cold" in New York. The latter alternative seemed impossible, so we booked Hempstead and White Plains, two small towns in the vicinity of New York, and opened in the latter place to a gross of very little over $100. One of the managers who had refused the piece favored us with his presence and his criticism; the latter so loudly delivered in the lobby that it nearly provoked a riot.

The morning after "The Fool" opened in New York, and before the box office did, one of the gentlemen who had declined it telephoned to ask whether he could have the theater for one of his attractions on the following Monday. Another bet Mr. Selwyn $500 that we wouldn't last three weeks. I don't think any of this came of personal antagonism. These men couldn't see anything in the play, and they were determined that a play on which they had more or less staked their so-to-speak reputations should not pass.

For ten days it looked as though they might get their wish. And then again the tide began to turn. Slowly business started to grow, and then suddenly, by leaps and bounds, so that the house wasn't big enough to hold the people who found what some of our managers had missed in "The Fool." By December we were writing new history in the American theater. We were making new records with a play that had been branded a sermon—a play dealing with problems in which theater-goers were not supposed to be interested. For two weeks after Christmas we gave matinees every day, and the gross receipts in that two weeks were over $50,000. In February we sent a second company to Boston. Five more companies are now carrying abroad the gospel of "The Fool," reaching about 115,000 men and women a week or nearly 5,000,000 in the season. And some people have doubted the influence of the theater!

All these doubts have been so amazingly dissipated by what has happened in connection with "The Fool!" In seven months in New York we received over 8,000 letters from people who liked the play and who have been helped by it. One man wrote us that on account of this play and its effect on him, he was sending four boys to college. Another man that he had made up an old quarrel with his wife. A third that he was completely revolutionizing his business and giving a share in its proceeds to his employes. We have had hundreds of letters like that.

I had intended to go abroad last season and take a vacation. Instead I have made more than 200 speeches in churches of all denominations—in all kinds of pulpits and in universities and schools and before clubs. I have found an opportunity to bridge that age-old gulf between the church and the theater. I have had men like Isaac Landman, editor of the American Hebrew, say that "The Fool" was contributing more than any other influence to the breaking down of racial prejudice, and men like Governor Cox of Massachusetts declare that this drama was the greatest engine for good in the state. I have seen my despised and rejected brain-child prove the dignity and influence of the theater, and have found my work and my happiness in the aftermath of a play in which only a few months ago only one person in the world—and that person my wife —had faith.

Such a "happy ending" to my story affords no possibilities of bitterness. It only leaves me feeling very humble and very grateful that I should have been chosen as the lion's head through which the water flowed.

Morning Hours in China

By Dryden Linsley Phelps

"SKY clear, sun rising, all the tints bright, all the outlines sharp, save for the soft and misty infinite of the lake. A pinch of white frost powdered the fields, lending a metallic relief to the hedges of green box, and to the whole landscape—still without leaves—an air of health and vigour, of youth and freshness. 'Bathe, O disciple, thy thirsty soul in the dew of the dawn!' says Faust to us, and he is right. The morning air breathes a new and laughing energy into veins and marrow. If every day is a repetition of life, every dawn signs as it were a new contract with existence. At dawn everything is fresh, light, simple, as it is for children. At dawn spiritual truth, like the atmosphere, is more transparent, and our organs, like the young leaves, drink in the light more eagerly, breathe in more ether, and less of things earthly. If night and the starry sky speak to the meditative soul of God, of eternity and the infinite, the dawn is the time for projects, for resolutions, for the birth of action. While the silence and the 'sad serenity of the azure vault' incline the soul to self-recollection, the vigour and gaiety of nature spread into the heart and make it eager for life and living. Spring is upon us. Primroses and violets have already hailed her coming. Rash blooms are showing on the peach trees; the swollen buds of the pear trees and the lilacs point to the blossoming that is to be; the honeysuckles are already green."

Thus wrote Amiel in his diary an April morning of 1852, looking across the Tyrian Geneva Lake to the gnarled majesty of the Dent du Midi snows. In face of grandeur not so intimately beautiful, but far more magnificent, my Chinese teacher and I open our books across a friendly table. I always supposed the evenings were made for conversation. Not so. It is the mornings, when the red sun, tossed up through an ocean of cloud combers, hurls level shafts of radiance against ragged peaks. I think that neither of us shall forget these summer months, looking across bottomless chasms to the mountain battlements, where Tibetan crags shoulder out the sky with their flying snows. Our cottage clings to a cliff-edge, like a taloned eagle. Here Giang First-born and I dip into the classics, and discuss everything from Lao Tze to Clutton-Brock.

Giang's father was a military official under the Manchu regime. The family lived in the town of Big Bamboo, in the province of The Four Rivers, but removed to the capitol Chengtu in time to witness and suffer the horrors of the 1911 revolution. Of all nations reputed peaceful, China is not least in carnage, looting, brigandage and burnings—when the time comes! The Giang home was pillaged. Within the next two years both the father and mother died. The boy declined work in a silk shop to earn his rice in order to continue his studies in the Chinese classics. For the sake of old family ties his uncle, a former cook of the household, returned to serve his young master without remuneration. At eighteen he married a girl selected by his parents when they were one and two years old. "Had my choice been free," he now reflects, "I should never have interfered with my studies by marriage at so early an age. But there was no other recourse!" Ten years after the establishment of the republic, there was a mutiny of the soldiers in Chengtu. Giang's family gems were stolen; houses were burned. Officials ran for their lives.

Studious Amid Confusion

Outside militia entered the city. Confusion reigned. All this time, however, the young man continued his study, supporting himself by teaching Chinese to foreigners. His connection with our West China Baptist Mission came in this way through Doctor Slaight, now in Suifu. Rev. John P. Davies, one year later, baptized him in our Big East Street Baptist chapel. English Bible classes at the Y. M. C. A. were now included in his program. For the last two years he has been the personal teacher of Miss Argetsinger, at the same time continuing his studies, and preaching in the Children's Church in Goldsmith Street. This summer Mr. Giang has been my personal teacher, and in the fall he enters the West China Union University, where he will live in our Baptist College Dormitory, Van Deman Hall.

In the early hours of the morning, when only the birds sing to an awakened world, we begin our study, constantly deepened by the telling of stories, personal incidents, and discussions of religion and philosophy relative to our lesson.

"My life has been full of trouble," Mr. Giang confessed to me one morning. "Having studied the literature of Buddhism, my mind has been tossed between the philosophies of optimism and pessimism: the lo-gwan-di, and the bei-gwan-di. Often I long to have little to do with the world, but live as a priest in some lonely mountain temple," he continued, as we glanced down the valley to a sequestered Buddhist retreat, the White Deer Monastery. "I believe that religion is a refuge from the vanity of the world. Suppose I do fight evil circumstances, become a hero, and die: what do I carry to the other world?" But when I intercepted that Christianity had passed away from the phase of serving our Lord in personal safety-seeking seclusion to a new epoch—really a return to Christ—of serving our fellow men in the dust and grime of cities, he added, "Yes, one must struggle in the world. A rock on the mountain is ugly, until the chisel of the sculptor carve it. We must be cut by trouble, until our full and inner character appear."

Our hours tête-à-tête over indistinguishable and labyrinthine ideographs and ideograms (idiot-crammed I) Mr. Giang illuminates from his "storehouse of things new and old"—proverbs, anecdotes of the sages, epigrams, legends. Chinese is the most sagacious of literatures. "You are troubled over much," says the Master to petulant Martha, and Mr. Giang writes for me a story in our English study hour that afternoon about the Man of Ch'i, who constantly feared the heavens would fall.

"There was a man who lived in the state of Ch'i. He, one day, was told that the heavens were not firmly (established) and would fall some day. After getting this information, he was sad at heart, and could not sleep or eat quietly, because he thought that if they should happen (to collapse) so that he would (surely) have been perished. For this reason, therefore, he did nothing except have excessive anxiety." This apt little anxiety, waiting for the heavens to fall down. Finally, broken by this care, he died. But the heavens still existed. The moral of this fable is that no one should worry about the future; in an etching the Chinese, according to their laconic style, enclose in a four-character mosaic: "Chi'i Man Forbodes Heaven."

In high school and college days, like most other American boys, I waded the Latin morass; penetrated the Greek etymological jungle; plodded the German veldt, and breezed along the French Avenue de l'Opèra. But for concrete imagery and terse fascination, Chinese outshines those baby tongues. Take the word "eye," and you have "white eye," "hot eye," "green eye," and "cold eye"—everything but our "cock eye"! If a friend "white eyes" you (avoiding your glance), he scorns you; "hot eye" speaks for itself: he envies your prosperity; "green eye" covets your chattles, and "cold eye" gives you the "frosty mitt" in American parlance. Hypocrites are "false countenance faking piety." Rumor or calumny is "wind noise." We read in our Chinese Gospel of Jesus' agony in Gethsemane and of his final victory. I described the great gnarled olive trees which one may still see in that Garden, and how the bitter ripe fruit of that tree after curing becomes sweet and edible. "K'u gin, gan li," he quoted, with his usual readiness: "When sorrow is at an end, then cometh joy." One morning hour we discussed the things of the Spirit, which the Master likened to the wind coming we know not whence.

Man's Soul Portrait

"Sweet springs have no source; fragrant herbs have no root," he added. The Bible is an oriental pageant. It is man's soul portrait, painted on an eastern canvas. I read the Gospels in Chinese with a thrill of delight, as one beholds a kaleidoscope of moving colors and scenes. Take that little word "inn"—"—they came to an inn." An American, reading, must picture, not a Biltmore, but at best a third-rate drummer's hotel. The dweller in the Far East sees a delapidated roadside abode, thatched, blackened, earth floor, animals and men guests together.

Do you remember Doctor Corley, who used to be a missionary in our West China Baptist Mission? He was one of the first men they told us about when we came to this "Inland Empire of China." Corley went into the by-ways of his town (Yachow)—like a certain Master of old—and gathered up a collection of ragamuffins. They were "hand-picked" "culls." But Corley kept them in his little industrial-religious school, teaching them to clothe and feed themselves by their own hands. Well, some of those lads are the Chinese backbone of our West China Mission. And they make the only vertebra that articulates! Now Corley is a blessed landmark to us, pointing with a significant finger. And the script on the sign, when you read it, says, China will be brought to Christ only by Chinese, chosen, trained, nourished one by one. So I do not begrudge long, extra hours with Mr. Giang this summer, next winter and on....

West China Baptist Mission.

My Lesson

YOU ask me how I learned to pray?
Long years ago, so troubled seemed the way,
So full of doubt and storm each passing day,
My life so full of needs, hope so astray,
A Friend I needed, one whom I could trust alway—
I could not help but pray.

You ask me how I learned to trust?
Of wisdom I had none; I could not judge aright,
I needed counsel, guidance toward the light,
I longed to gird my weakness with a holy might,
He called me unto him—the Way, the Truth, the Light,
And then—I learned to trust—the Christ.

You ask me how I learned to love?
Because he first loved me; his life he gave
And suffered on the tree for me—oh! sinful me.
He washed my sins away, from self he set me free.
His love enthralls, compels, enraptures me.
My Guide, my Friend, my Saviour now is he.
How could I help but love?

The Child in the Midst

The church is realizing that in the fifty million youth of America is its opportunity to mold the America of tomorrow

By Alice W. S. Brimson

THE child is in the midst this year. The church that is in step with the religious life of America is talking about child health and child play, child labor and child education, and all that goes into the life of American children today. It is realizing that in the fifty million youth of America is our opportunity to mold the America of tomorrow. All that we would be, and are not—all that America should be, and yet falls short of attaining—this is the message of home mission study this year.

And what are some of the things that we ought to put into the child today in order that we may reap them in the America of tomorrow? First, perhaps, a higher partiotism. She was a Hungarian peasant woman. Education had not been hers. Never before had she been able to write enough to sign her name. She could read but little. She had no wealth. But loyalty she had, and there was a beautiful look in her eyes as with one hand on her heart and a voice hushed in reverence she said, "Before God, I love America." Are we training our boys and girls that they shall have that earnest, reverent love for their native land? Are our Baptist Sunday schools using their opportunity of contact to increase the patriotism of their children? If not, we as a denomination are not contributing our full share to the movement for a better America.

Patriotism Not Flag Drills

Patriotism is not flag drills and lusty singing of national anthems. Patriotism is a respect so deep that it cannot brook dishonor or dishonesty to besmirch national life; it is appreciation so intense that it carries willingness to sacrifice. Sacrifice may mean the giving up of personal desires in order to reverence the nation's laws. It means the giving up of time not only to know about our country's affairs, but to vote at its elections and to serve in its offices when it calls. It is that spirit which puts the welfare of the whole before private gain that America may be a good land for all its people, not an overabundant land for just a few.

And then, further, we should teach our children an international love. Here in our land we are carrying on a vast experiment in world brotherhood. We are trying to prove that people of every race and nation can live together and work together for the common good of all. But, like Edith Cavell, we have found that "patriotism is not enough; we must have love." Love will make us quick to appreciate those gifts of hand and heart and brain which come to America in those whose customs and appearances seem quite removed from ours. Love will help us to understand each other. Love alone will create the atmosphere which will make possible the unification of native-born and foreign-born Americans for world service on the plane of our highest ideals, which is the only worthy kind of Americanism. Yet that love is all too rare in the America of today. "My people hate Americans," one of our Russian pastors said. "Every Russian is sure that every American is out to skin him."

"Perhaps you would like a teacher?" was asked of a foreign woman one day. "Sure, you teach me?" the foreigner replied. "No, I'll only be here a short time," said the Americanization secretary. "But I'll bring you a teacher, a woman who lives right here and will come every week." The foreign woman looked dubious. "All right, if you can find. But I don't think you find here. All American women hate foreign women." In a western town the Armenian pastor's wife, a highly cultured American woman of Boston upbringing, said she had lived there four years and had had only two American women call on her during that time. Their home was beautiful within and without, with every evidence of highly educated and refined taste. But the "good" Americans in the town felt it far beneath them to call on one of the despised nationality, and very few knew that the woman was an American. If we are to have this love, the church of the living Christ must take the lead. We Christians, like Peter, need a housetop vision, and then we too shall perceive that God is no respecter of persons.

But the vision comes slowly. "If we get more Chinese, there will be no more Americans come here," said a deacon when nine Chinese boys were baptized at his church. "You don't want those Polish women; you don't want to sit next to a Polish woman, do you?" asked a Christian minister.

If only that spirit of love for all people can be put into the boys and girls of our Sunday schools, if they can come to know that all men are brothers with a knowledge so vivid that it acts itself in brotherhood in school and playground, the great American experiment will be a success in the tomorrow.

But the America of tomorrow is not alone in the keeping of the boys and grls in our American Protestant Sunday schools. There are our Slovak Sunday schools and Polish Sunday schools. Then there is the vast host of boys and girls from foreign-speaking homes, who are still true to the religious heritage of the old world, and an even greater number of others who have drifted away from religious influence entirely. Thirteen million in America today, the census tells us, were born in other lands—six million in lands which do not use the English language, or have the heritage of the freedom wherewith Christ hath set us free. There is no race suicide in these homes and these children will have an equal suffrage with those of older American homes in the making of the America of tomorrow.

What stamp are we putting on these foreign children? Whether they are of silver or gold, of copper or nickel, is not ours to decide. They come loaded with the heritage and traditions of another world, but upon each America has the privilege of placing its stamp. We can make strong, useful, loyal citizens, or we may place on them the stamp of the counterfeit.

Molding Plastic Material

To stamp into the plastic material of childhood the Christian ideals of America, our Christian centers are reaching out to the children and the youth of their communities. To reach the children and give them religious instruction, our mission schools and foreign-speaking churches are carrying on their broad activities. The Christian Americanization department, too, is trying to mold the America of tomorrow through its work in the homes of foreign-speaking races.

The needle readily pricks a way into the heart of a girl. What service could a World Wide Guild find more fascinating than a sewing club for foreign girls in their immediate community? In Chicago three or four of them have been held with great success in public parks. In Hutchinson, Kans., the girls meet at the Friendly Cottage which the Baptist church has rented in a Mexican community. And in such a class is opportunity, not only for Bible stories, but for that personal contact which is the best possible interpretation of Christian womanhood to these children of other lands.

The children in the homes where the Christian Americanization volunteers visit, look forward to the day when teacher comes. One little girl ran home from school every Wednesday to be sure to see teacher, and when the caller had been forced to leave before she came, great was her grief. One boy helped his mother with her English lesson every night in order that she might know it perfectly.

Only God can tell the far-reaching influences which have come to impress the lives of little children because Christian women in the neighborhood have come to the foreign home to be a friend or a teacher for the mother. And so, because the home is the bulwark of the nation and the heart of the family, the Christian Americanization department of the Woman's Home Mission Society, is trying to put a Christian stamp upon the New Americans, striving to bring "Christ in every home—"

"For a better America."

From Berlin to Shanghai in Fifteen Days

There are reasons to believe that the people of Russia are ready for a reformation within the church, such as took place elsewhere in Europe in the days of Luther

BY J. T. PROCTOR

IN the racing world of Shanghai and other large ports in the Orient where British influence is dominant a word has been coined and projected into common use which is a fair substitute for the American word "tenderfoot." Ponies in large numbers from the ample plains of Manchuria and Siberia are shipped into Shanghai. These ponies are very little different from the Texas pony. Upon arrival they are all raw and unbroken. The most promising are carefully culled out and trained for the race course. An unbroken racing pony is a "griffin." So is an inexperienced traveler or tenderfoot from any country who comes to the Orient.

Crossing the Country

The task of crossing Russia today presents no difficulties worth speaking of. This is not known in New York. I was seriously told in New York by the travel department of our foreign mission board, by the travel department of the American Express Company, the Thomas Cook and Sons' tourists agency and by other agencies which ought to have known better, that the trip was either impossible or wholly impracticable. It was thought that a passport vise could not be secured, that there were no through trains, that if there were trains it would be wholly unsafe to travel on them, that there must be fighting somewhere on the road and that travelers were in danger of being held up for weeks or months on the road. If I had not lived for twenty-five years in Shanghai, which is at one end of this longest railway service in the world, I would have been properly impressed by this solid array of negatives—of lack of knowledge. As it was, this experience merely served to raise in my mind this question—how long will it be with these conditions obtaining, before our beloved New York wins and retains the coveted distinction of being the financial capital of the world?

I entered Russia by rail from Helsingfors Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 22. The run from Helsingfors to the border is about fourteen hours, and from the border to Petrograd less than two hours. After spending two days in Petrograd I took the night train for Moscow, a run of sixteen hours. After six days in Moscow I took the through express train for Chita on Thursday, 3 p. m., Aug. 30. This through train is made up of seven or eight sleeping coaches, second and third class, with a dining car which runs clear through. The train arrived in Chita, just east of Lake Baikal, Friday, 3 a. m., making a run without changing coaches or dining car of a week and twelve hours. At Chita another train was taken for a run of twenty hours to Manchuria City on the border between Russia and China. From Manchuria City to Harbin, also in China, a third train was necessary. We arrived in Harbin Monday, 5 p. m., Sept. 8. From Harbin to Shanghai takes less than three days, making the whole trip from Moscow to Shanghai twelve days, or from Berlin to Shanghai fifteen days.

The train and service from Petrograd to Moscow was quite as good as will be found elsewhere in Europe. The train to Chita was almost as good; the service left much to be desired. The train and service on the Chinese Eastern railway in China was unusually good. The coupe which I shared for a week with a cultured English-speaking German was well cushioned, with room enough for a chair on the other side of a small table from the berth used as a seat during the day and provided with a private toilet room shared by two adjoining coupes. The dining car was ample, decorated with potted plants, furnished with a piano and well patronized. This served as a social room where we frequently lingered for hours after the afternoon tea or over the coffee while listening to music after dinner in the evening any time from eight o'clock to midnight. There were tea parties, dinner engagements, chess between an American missionary and a Mohammedan Bolshevist Turk from Turkestan and a deal of visiting and social life in the most cosmopolitan little community I have ever lived in for a week.

There was no more trouble over my passport, after I secured it through the soviet embassy in Berlin, than is experienced in other countries in Europe. It was called for only three times, on crossing the border in and out of the country and when entering the territory of the former Far Eastern Republic at Werkney Udinsk. As this territory is now embodied in the national federation of soviet republics it is difficult to explain this. The railway ticket could be purchased only from Moscow to Werkney Udinsk. From there until Chinese territory was reached it had to be purchased with gold rubles. The ticket from Moscow was purchased with paper rubles of the soviet government. The customs examinations upon entering and leaving the country were purely perfunctory. The thing they seemed to be looking for most was printed matter or literature which might prove to be anti-bolshevist propaganda.

The cost of railway ticket and berth from Moscow to Harbin, a distance of about 4900 miles, was just a little less than $100 United States money. I secured three meals a day, a la carte, plus an afternoon tea, for less than $2 gold per day. The cost of the whole trip, including meals from Moscow to Shanghai, was $216.94 or from Berlin to Shanghai $308.76. The trip is quite feasible. I would not hesitate to take it with my family.

The Country

The Trans-Siberian railway follows generally the fifty-fifth parallel of latitude. This means that it is about 600 miles north of the Canadian border from Minnesota to the coast. Having traveled all over the western states in America, from south to north by horseback, following the cattle trail, and from east to west by five different railway lines, I was impressed with the fact that on the Siberian railway there is to be seen less waste land than will be found bordering any of the through routes in America. The country on the whole is open and tillable. In crossing the Ural mountains there is some rough country and again on either side of Lake Baikal. But in the main it is inclined to be flat and low rather than rough or rolling. It seems well drained. There are three main river systems draining to the north. Two of these rivers we crossed and we passed very near the source of the third on the western border of Lake Baikal. It is claimed that this lake is the greatest depression on the earth's surface known to the world.

The country is sparsely settled; no more so, however, than large sections of Montana or Wyoming. Unless the government definitely encourages immigration on a large scale I venture the statement that it will take 150 years to get this country all as thickly settled as is the state of Ohio. At present there are large sections which seem well adapted for cattle grazing. This is especially true of the country east of Lake Baikal both in southeastern Siberia and in northern Manchuria. On either side of Lake Baikal there are forests, though not so extensive as I had expected to find. In the Ural district there are forests, but the principal forests I saw were between Petrograd and Moscow.

We passed through the Ural Mountains, the border between Europe and Asia, in the night. At sunset we saw no sign of mountains. In the morning we seemed to be just passing out of the foothills. The only scenery worth mentioning was near the lake. We had a most wonderful half hour skirting the lake going south between near sunset and dark with the reflection of the sun on this most charming sheet of water against a background of snow-capped mountains in the very near foreground. A trip around the world will seldom furnish a scene to be compared with this.

Economic Conditions

Russia looks shabby. This is not a criticism. It is a record of my dominant impression from all that can be seen of people, houses, streets and villages. I was not so much impressed that there is a large amount of extreme poverty, as that people who have been accustomed to better days are making a pathetic struggle to look as well as possible in clothes and houses and conditions that can only be described as shabby. One can see more barefooted grown women on the streets of Petrograd and Moscow than can be found in Peking or Shanghai. With or without shoes, the women seen on the streets were mostly dressed in the cheapest dress materials while the men all seem to have visited the second-hand store. Streets have gone for over eight years without repairs. Houses show signs of broken or fallen gutter pipes with the rains of several seasons having been allowed to deface the walls. The whole effect is very depressing, especially in Petrograd.

It is reported that Petrograd has lost half of its pre-war populations. There are blocks and blocks of well-built houses, residences, flats or apartments, located in once prosperous sections which are now largely or wholly empty. Many of the stores which are open for business are either only half stocked or stocked with very cheap goods. A great many factories and industrial plants have not been reopened since the war or since the revolution, which is the phrase more frequently used. These conditions obtain to a less degree in Moscow but in the main are prevalent throughout both European and Asiatic Russia. One is glad to be able to report, however, that business is decidedly improving in Moscow and in some other places. A good harvest is reported over most of Russia. The farmers are quite generally making some progress in getting back to normal conditions. From what could be seen from the railway, economic conditions are noticeably better in eastern Siberia than in the western districts. There is evident a feeling of confidence that agricultural conditions are improving.

Currency conditions are deplorable to the last degree. The day I left Berlin for Petrograd I was able to buy 3,200,000 marks for an American dollar. The first day I was in Petrograd, four days later, I bought 320,000,000 rubles for one dollar. Eight days later when I left Moscow I got 395,000,000 rubles for one dollar. I was told by persons living in Moscow that this remarkable fall in the ruble in eight days was nothing unusual. The soviet government is making desperate efforts along certain lines to stabilize the ruble, but so far all efforts have failed. Like Germany, they have tried almost every method but that of a balanced budget. It is becoming increasingly clear that no country in Europe can stabilize its currency until it is willing to curtail government expenses and collect taxes to the extent necessary to balance its budget.

The following items taken from my day book account of expenditures for the two days I was in Petrograd may serve to help some to visualize the cost of living there as measured by a currency which has all but lost its value.

Sample Cost Prices

The Present Soviet Regime

That substantial changes have taken place in the original bolshevist government is beyond question. There is undoubtedly a new regime. This new regime is in the process of evolution following the announcement, about two years ago, of the new economic policy—the N. E. P. as it is almost universally called.

In its implications this new policy is seemingly the exact opposite of the well-known bolshevist unalterable antagonism to private ownership of property, private initiative in business and capitalism. What has taken place is seemingly this. There is a decided disagreement within the government as to the feasibility, under present conditions in Russia and in the world at large, of adhering strictly to the pronounced paternalism demanded by orthodox communism. The majority have decided in favor of a compromise, for the present at least, which permits, under certain conditions, a return to the old system of private ownership of property, private initiative in business and capitalism. This is the new economic policy. Being a compromise it is not perfectly clear-cut or unmistakable in its meaning and is even more confusing in its application. The government reserves the right of government monopoly and control in certain industries at its discretion. In districts where the government is liberal in its intepretation of the new policy, reversion to conditions obtaining before the revolution seems practicable but where the government is not liberal in its interpretation those who control capital are afraid to take the risk. Even under favorable conditions there is a general belief that the government is inclined to reserve for its own control those industries and enterprises which are most promising. Added to all this is the uncertainty as to how long this experiment will be tried. There is the possibility that the majority in the government favoring this policy may be reduced to a minority, in which case there may be immediate reversion to strict communistic principles. Under these conditions even if there were such a thing as capital in the country it would be very timid and uncertain in its activities.

Believe in yourself—that you, even you, can do some of the work which Christ would like done, and that unless you do it, it will remain undone.—Henry Drummond.

Soviet Government to Stay

The soviet form of government in Russia has seemingly come to stay. I did not talk with a man who thinks otherwise. Careful inquiry did not reveal any opinion to the contrary in all Russia. No counter-revolution is expected. An evolution is expected by many, not a revolution. There is of course wide difference of opinion as to the rapidity and extent of the evolution in political development expected. Some are optimistic, but these are in a decided minority. There are less than 500,000 members of the communistic party in all Russia in a population of 150,000,000. Outside of these 500,000 communists there are seemingly relatively few who really believe in bolshevist principles or in the soviet government except as it may be decidedly modified in the direction of the new economic policy. But there is just as evident a very wide resignation, if it can be called such, to what is considered the inevitable.

The most live question in Russia today is that of recognition by the Powers. They are expecting two things from such recognition. Some are expecting a certain moral support for the progressive element in the government, thus hastening the internal evolution towards modern capitalism. They are all expecting an inflow of outside capital in the form of loans to the government, or as loans to Russian companies, or for development of all kinds of industries all over the country with or without direct cooperations with Russian industrialists. There is nothing on which the Russian people seem more united today. The naive exaggeration of expectation and its universality would be laughable if they were not taking it so seriously. There seems no division of opinion at all that the future of Russia's commercial and political development is absolutely dependent on the inflow of foreign capital. The line of reasoning of many seems to be something like this: Give the progressive element in the government the benefit of the doubt on every count; let it be granted that the present progressive element will continue in the majority and will grow stronger, that there will be in all districts a liberal interpretation of the new economic policy, that the government will not reserve to itself the more favorable industrial opening but will leave these open to private enterprise and that this new policy having begun as a temporary experiment will be made permanent. Grant all this. There still remains the hard, cold fact, as claimed, that there is simply not sufficient capital left in the country to make possible the industrial development absolutely necessary to feed the people and preserve a semblance of modern European conditions. Some even say that there is no capital left, that values have been destroyed except as they are restored through a slow process of evolution by the help of outside capital. It is against this seeming stone wall that what little optimism there is in Russia is hurling itself. The effect is very depressing even for the sympathetic visitor and student of present conditions. The question is when will the great powers recognize the soviet government? Will the recognition come in time to save the country from further irreparable loss of both property values and of morale? When recognition comes will it bring the desired capital and how rapidly? It is pathetic to the last degree to see a whole people seemingly basing their entire hope of the future on the answer to questions of this kind.

Religion is outlawed in Russia. There has taken place much more than the disestablishment of the church. It is the legal disestablishment of religion itself. There is very little, if any, compromise in the rigid interpretation of the original bolshevist position in this respect. While this is true, the active opposition to organized Christianity has almost ceased. The life of the patriarch of the Orthodox Church has been spared and he has been set free. It is interesting that this is quite generally believed to be due to the influence of Great Britain. An administration of the church has been installed which is favorable to the government. This has caused a pronounced division in the membership of the Orthodox Church into what is now called the old church and the new church, the latter term being applied to the new administration favorable to the government. I am told that the overwhelming majority of the old membership is remaining with the old church. The same Patriarch Tihkon is serving the old church but, of course, without government recognition. The congregations are as a rule allowed to continue to use their church buildings, but they must pay rent to the government for the same in addition to assuming full support of their priests. Under present economic conditions this is proving quite a burden in many instances. But the churches were never so full and there are evidences that the uncompromising government opposition is proving a real challenge to the best and highest in the churches.

The non-conformist bodies in Russia are neither numerous nor strong. I have been told that with the exception of the Evangelical Christian Union and the Baptist bodies there are no denominations in Russia of any national strength. I have not been able to verify this statement. The Evangelical Christian Union has its headquarters in Petrograd and has churches all over the country, north, south and as far east as Vladivostok and Harbin down in China. They report about 500,000 church members. Mr. Prokhanoff, the general secretary, gave me letters of introduction to pastors to use on my trip across the country and I called on the pastor in Harbin. The Baptists with headquarters in Moscow also have churches in all parts of the country. They also report about 500,000 members. These two bodies are in the process of combining into one denomination to be called Baptist. The Baptists of America, North and South, and of England are hoping to join with this united Baptist body in the support of a Bible training school which will grow into a theological seminary for the training of an adequate leadership for this largest group of Baptists in the old world.

There are many reasons to believe that the people of Russia are more ready than ever before for a strong evangelical movement, for a reformation within the church such as took place in the rest of Europe in the days of Luther. Russia is a great religious opportunity.

"Hit Them Where They Are"

By John Krumm

ACCORDING to an editorial in Colliers' Weekly, when Wee Willie Keeler (the Babe Ruth of former days) was asked the secret of his remarkable batting, he replied "I hit 'em where they aint!" That is, he endeavored, and successfully, so to hit the ball as to place it where there were no opposing men just at that time. No wonder he piled up the runs for his side.

That is scientific batting. But just that is the very opposite of scientific or efficient preaching. I believe most pastors have had at times the following experiences:

The pastor prepares his sermon with much care, with probably certain kinds of persons (or even individuals) in mind. He has something good and effective to present—he knows he has. When he stands before his people and preaches he becomes aware of the disconcerting fact that he is 'hitting 'em where they aint." Something or other, somehow or other (storm, counter-attraction or a "hunch") has kept away the very persons whom he hoped to "hit" with that particular sermon. Nevertheless, it being sermon time, he must go on through with it, and line 'em out the best he can to the bitter end. So in that sermon he "hit 'em where they weren't;" physically, they were not there.

Again, a pastor at times, possibly without meaning to do it, develops a sermon for its own sake; it contains great fundamental, universal truths, and is not necessarily dependent on time, place or persons. The sermon turns out to be sort of detached, like a beautiful picture or splendid poem. And the pastor preaches that fine sermon, and becomes again aware that he is "hitting 'em where they aint." Eventually he comes to realize that he is preaching to persons of a bygone generation, that the people to whom he thought he was preaching no longer exist, except here and there is "the last leaf" of which Holmes wrote. His people were there before him physically, but not mentally, nor educationally, nor culturally. There are batters whose aim is true, but who swing too late; by the time their bat is around to hitting position the ball has already gone by and is in the catcher's mit.

Are we as pastors enough aware of the fact that the "sun do move?" Have our people passed on before us, and are we the survivors of a by-gone generation? If so, it is no wonder we keep on "hitting 'em where they aint."

As for myself, I have revised Willie Keeler's slogan and am now trying to follow the advice of a new slogan, which is "Hit 'em where they ARE."

In this connection, how much we can learn from the Lord Jesus. It is certain that he made it a point to "hit 'em where they are." Several times it is recorded that the Master "went about." So he always had his congregation present physically. And Jesus knew the people of his own day and generation; he knew their thought life, he was posted as to current events, and he thoroughly understood human nature in its inner workings. As recorded in John 2:24-25, "He knew all men, and had no need that any one should testify concerning man; for he himself knew what was in man." In the story, "Hazard" by Nancy Barr Mavity, the young girl, Tracy, rises in the church meeting and says to the well-meaning, but misguided pastor "What do you know about young people and what we are thinking?" It would seem that her pastor, in respect to young people, had "hit 'em where they aint," mentally and otherwise.

When Nathan looked guilty David square in the eye and shot at him, "Thou art the man!" it is certain he hit him where he was. It is also certain that we must learn to preach to human nature "as is," and not as we might wish it to be, or may conceive it to be.

Trusting it may prove of help to my brother ministers I would mention one method I have been following of late to enable me to "hit 'em where they are." Sickness has already kept me out of the pastorate over three years, and probably it will do so permanently. And here I am now about seven months in bed. For some time yet the bed must be my pulpit and study, if I am to have any such at all. So I read my Bible, newspapers and magazines, and listen to the chatter about me. Now and then I write a treatise, have it typed and put nice covers on it. Then I circulate this as best I can among sanatorium folks, and others. Thus some folks who do not, cannot, or will not go to church,

Coleman and Ford Hall Forum

Advertising Expert—City Councilman and Acting Mayor—Leader in Sociology—Ford Hall Forum Founder, Boston—President of Babson Institute

By John F. Cowan

I MIGHT have said "George Coleman, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America" or "Coleman, acting-mayor of Boston," or "Coleman, president of the Babson Institute," or "Coleman of The Christian Endeavor World," for by any of his "doorplates" he would be recognized by large numbers.

A Boston high-school graduate, in 1885, with a Franklin medal, he was looking for a job. His uncle was family physician to Dr. A. E. Winship, editor of the Journal of Education, and asked Doctor Winship if he could use the boy; he took him in as office boy. Some plasmic germ from an ink-slinging ancestor must have headed the lad towards journalism, for the office staff soon sat up and took notice that he had editorial and managerial instincts. Soon afterward he followed Doctor Winship to the New England Magazine, as business manager. Then he planned a great adventure in Buenos Aires—prepare for a thrill!

Wrecked and Rescued

In a storm-shattered ship he drifted in mid-ocean for four weeks, sea awash with the decks, masts crashing down, in a state of desperation. But after hope had nearly died a happy rescue came that subsequently revived his early religious life, threatened by adolescent skepticism. An inner voice kept saying: "He saved you, didn't he? Why not then be a sport and dedicate your life to His service?" And George W. Coleman did.

He left off advertising drygoods to head the advertising department of the Christian Endeavor World. Seventeen years as advertising manager, business manager and editorial writer; then came an attractive offer from a leading shoe firm, demanding a decision. But Christian idealism had gripped him too deeply—he quietly shut that door to affluence.

Then the Boston Ad Club "hollered" for Coleman to head up an enlarged organization of the outstanding interests of the city; he was the only man on whom they could agree.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of America held a convention in Boston in 1911. They saw enough of Coleman's chips and shavings to satisfy them they wanted him as president. In their great convention in Dallas next year Coleman put over the innovation of filling the Sunday morning city pulpits with Ad Club speakers. He himself addressed a great mass meeting in the afternoon in the Opera House on "The Unchurched Masses." They were tugging at the heartstrings of this compassionate, yearning—shall I say "idealist?"

Well, anyway, his "get-'em-to-gether" vision materialized, though it looked at one time as if it might get sidetracked. Friends urged him to run for the Boston City Council. When George Coleman "runs" for anything he doesn't saunter. He served three years; was made president, ex-officio acting-mayor during absences of the mayor. Elated friends now urged: "You can make the mayoralty."

But the quite different job he had cut out for himself loomed clearer and clearer, and he brushed away the buzzing political bee. For meantime he with others had been inviting 200 guests yearly to his summer cottage at Sagamore Beach, down on Cape Cranberry—I mean Cod—for a three-day sociological conference. They were trying to figure out why human beings working together industrially must act so much like a powder magazine with a lighted firecracker sizzling beside it.

So Coleman paired men like Thomas Dreier and millionaire I. W. W. Warbasse; Roger Babson and tag-manufacturer Dennison; Assistant-secretary of Labor Louis F. Post and horny-handed John Doe—and the sparks flew! That was Coleman's notion of playing out his vacation. Oh, he played—scrub baseball, clown in the country circus, and fifteen-mile hikes down the beach from Plymouth. Coleman is a "he-man." But the big idea that is back of the Ford Hall Forum was seething in his system. The idea, you understand, is simply to give gunpowder a chance to flash off in the open, instead of tamping it tightly in a hole to explode with damaging force.

Coleman had got the forum bug into his system at Cooper Union, New York. He capitalized his standing as a prominent Baptist layman (he was made president of the Northern Baptist Convention in 1917) to pry loose from the Baptist Social Union, custodians of the Daniel Sharp Ford (Youth's Companion) $1,000,000 fund, out of which Ford Hall was built, an appropriation of $500 to grubstake the Forum for six weeks. Thep put it on probation, but—

There wasn't a "but." Ford Hall, which was not being used on Sunday evenings was, like the silver statues of the saints that Cromwell coined into money, sent "about its Master's business." The "first-night" audience of 150 didn't cause the Baptist Social Union to get "all het up" with enthusiasm. The crowd on the street was suspicious this might be clever Baptist proselyting.

A Thousand Turned Away

But the second audience numbered 270; the third was 500. Soon the 1,200 seating and standing capacity was required to the limit, and a double line-up waited outside, around the block; sometimes a thousand or two had to be turned away.

It would require another article to go into the electrifying Ford Hall programs. Sketched roughly, an address by such a man as Charles S. Stelzle, or maybe a Jewish rabbi, or a Roman Catholic priest, is followed by an hour of rapid-fire questioning from the floor. It's hair-trigger democracy—a cross between a university and a town meeting. This write-up will have to limit itself to results.

One-third of the audience are Jews. For the rest there are Catholics, Protestants, street arabs, a few millionaire and trust magnates anxious to discover which way the world is heading, and working people galore. The second year, Coleman began to open the forum with prayer, and to sing hymns, along with the rendering of classic masterpieces. Surprising as it is, the prayers "went." An agnostic speaker said: "I never thought I should bow my head reverently during a Christian prayer as I have tonight."

It was because, as Fra, Elbert Hubbard's magazine, said, "They were prayers that voiced the universal human need and the audience sometimes applauded them." Some thirty of these prayers were published in a little volume, "The People's Prayers." By the way, "Who's Who" lists two other Coleman books: "Searchlights" (reprinted editorials) and "Democracy in the Making." No harm in telling, too, that Colby College made Coleman an honorary "A. M.," and Wake Forest College and Franklin College each gave him the "LL. D."

As to Baptist propaganda, the forum crowd came to confide in and love George Coleman so that they never thought to ask what he is denominationally. A Jewish pedler spied a portrait of Coleman hanging in a minister's study, and shyly exclaimed in a pleased way: "Oh, so you know him, too? I go to his—his—I hear him Sunday nights. I know he is a good man."

Margaret Deland tells in Harpers' of a little Jewess who was expressing her hatred of Christians. Some friend asked her to go to Ford Hall. She inquired, "Who is Ford Hall?" Explanations followed, but she said, "I have to go to the Feast of the Passover." She was assured that Mr. Coleman would be at Ford Hall.

"But Mistair Coleman, he iss not a Jew."

"I say he iss a Jew. Mistair Coleman iss not a Christian; he iss a goot man."

Perhaps the best proof of the pudding is that Ford Hall Forum has been the progenitor of about 300 other forums, that are trying to do the same helpful work. It was Coleman's human sympathy, his exquisite tact, the spirit in him of the One who did not condemn the erring woman or brand Zaccheus and Matthew as renegades, that has done it. These 300 forums are wonderful safety vents for explosive passions. The discontented who have "something on their chests" are helped to get it off in a harmless way. Ford Hall Forum celebrated its fifteenth anniversary this year, and is still going strong.

The forum idea has been extended to scores of churches—Protestant, Catholic, Jewish—to adult Bible classes, Young Men's Christian associations, and chambers of commerce. The essence of it all is as Coleman puts it in a query to employers: "Is it better to discuss disagreements with your employes, or fight it out with violence and death?"

And in another way Coleman helped capital and labor to see that they have more points of agreement than of disagreement. During the war he was head of the speakers' bureau of the department of labor, Washington. His bureau sent out speakers whose experience and wisdom qualified them to help avoid strikes by frank and free discussion. He was "Mr. Fixit" to a large group of people who were potential troublemakers.

Those who know George Coleman personally do not wonder at his marvelous skill in pouring oil on troubled waters. There's something irresistibly friendly about his twinkling blue eyes, with the little "laughter wrinkles" beside them. His blonde hair and Van Dyke beard frame a benign countenance whose winsome smile is 99 per cent pacific. Where others would frown over difficulties, Coleman beams and chuckles a throaty laugh, "like hickory-nuts rolling across the attic floor." His middle name is sympathy with the other fellow. Yes, he'll be patient and hear him through. And sometimes his comradeship takes the form of throwing his arms around one and giving him a bear hug.

As a speaker, his poses and gestures are those of gentle persuasion and calm reasoning rather than bluster or cram-it-down dogmatism. To realize how this wins, he must have been seen as he swayed an audience of 12,000 people in Druid Hill Park, Baltimore, into enthusiastic harmony with his appeal.

As chairman of the Baptist War Commission, Coleman went to France in 1918, to observe, and be able to tell the Baptists of America what more they could do to help win the war. For years a director of the Boston Y. M. C. A. he was naturally drawn to the war work of that organization on front lines. He lived in a dugout, under shell fire, wore the "Y" uniform, and helped carry chocolate to the fighters. Back in America again, he responded to numerous calls to speak and help prepare us for the long, hard struggle then expected.

And Coleman's estimate of the red triangle service was: "A wonderful work; of the utmost value to our boys."

His present job is president of the Babson Institute, Wellesley Hills, Mass. The purpose of Roger Babson in this organization is to inoculate men with the fundamental principles of business, instil the proper motives and the spirit of business cooperation. And that touches the tap root of what Coleman has been working at in the forum.

This institute, with its beautiful 175-acre campus, and its 100 projected buildings, and men of such breadth and character at its head, is bound to be a tremendous factor for saner relationships, and for brotherliness in big business.

The Light That Never Fails

What man may become if he fulfills God's purposes, we see in Jesus Christ

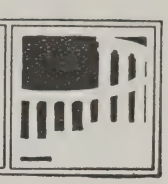
BY J. F. VICHERT

THE word light is used in the scriptures more frequently than any other to describe the nature of our Lord, and to suggest the character of his influence and service in the world. "I am the light of the world," was his own statement. Catching up the prophetic utterance which had come across the centuries, Matthew wrote: "The people which sat in darkness saw great light, and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." "In him," said John, "was life, and the life was the light of men." And again, "That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." The coming of Christ, his character, his words and deeds, the influence which streams from him—all taken together are as the shining of a great light.

With searching and revealing power that light shines in upon every area which our vision scans. It falls upon that blackest thing we know—sin. All down the years we mark the trail of sin. It put its blighting touch upon every life. It cast down many strong men. It bound with heavy chains, and dragged after it its captives. Everywhere among men it was working towards its fearful consummation and bringing forth death. Of all this we were to some extent aware, but sin in its true character, sin in its naked ugliness, sin with its malignant designs, its corrupting tendencies, and its fatal issues we had not clearly seen until there fell about it the shining of this great light which "blackens every blot."

In that fierce radiance sin shows for what it is, and the guilty soul which has been in its power, startled and affrighted by the revelation, cries out in its despair and seeks deliverance. Happily, he who makes clear the true nature of sin also opens a way of salvation so that men, if they will, may pass "out of darkness into his marvelous light." Again, this great light shines upon and through all God's disclosure of himself to men. "He spake unto our fathers through the prophets," but he had many things to say unto men which in those times they were not able to receive. In these last times he has spoken unto us through his Son, and the revealing light which shines from him illumines all that had gone before.

Moses and the prophets acquire new meaning in the presence of his radiant life and completing words. He came not to destroy but to fulfil, and in the glory which he kindles we see and understand that there were some things permitted because of the hardness of men's hearts, some things there were at which God winked, and for a time that which was in part had place and meaning. But now, "that which is perfect is come." We shall read then the chapters of the unfolding revelation of the past in the light which comes from him to whom it all was leading, and here as elsewhere "we needs must love the highest when we see it."



That light falls forward also, and is the glory which brightens o'er the page where those whom the Spirit was guiding into truth, to whom he was showing the things of Christ, have written what they learned. With eager hearts and reverent faith we turn to the scriptures of both Old and New Testaments to gain new insight, and to find truth in clearer, fairer lines because of the shining of this great light.

Once more, this is the best light in which to see God. At Athens Paul found an altar with this inscription, "To the Unknown God." Before such an altar countless men have bowed. Dimly conscious of deity, convinced of its real-

The Open Forum

A QUESTION OF LOCATION

(An open letter to the Japan Baptist Mission, the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and the Baptists of the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention.)

The writer of this letter as a young man, in 1889, was appointed as a missionary to Japan. In the fall of that year, he arrived in Japan and was there until 1897, a period of nearly eight years. It was the day of small things and the missionaries, particularly those who were at the more central stations, were compelled to render varied service, not only for their local field but also for the entire mission. In the course of a year or two, he became chairman of the building committee, chairman of the general school committee, and secretary of the board of the Theological Seminary. The station was Tokyo. Yokohama was about twenty miles distant. During those early formative years the first buildings were erected for the Theological Seminary and the school which has developed into the Mabie Memorial School was founded. While the investment at that time for these two schools was comparatively small, less than $10,000 all told (the second school being in temporary rented quarters), the place of location, so far as the part of the country is concerned, was practically settled, and the writer probably had more personal responsibility in that matter than any one else. He therefore feels that now a statement from him concerning rebuilding may be appropriate, especially in view of changed conditions.

The total loss that has come to the Japan Baptist Mission because of the great earthquake is estimated at $500,000. Whether those figures represent the valuation before the earthquake or the cost does not particularly matter. In the rebuilding it is very probable that in order to be safe more expensive types of building will be erected, buildings that are relatively both earthquake-proof and fireproof. There is no question but that the Central Tabernacle, under Dr. William Axling, is essentially a work for Tokyo and vicinity and so must be rebuilt in that city. There is also no question but that the work of Doctor Benninghoff has been so successful at Waseda University that if that university is continued, which it undoubtedly will be, that work must be continued and adequate facilities must be given him. There is also no question but that the local churches of the Tokyo-Yokohama district must be rebuilt and must have help from the Baptists of America. When it comes to the rebuilding of the Girls' School, of the Theological Seminary, and of the Mabie Memorial School, a few questions might now well be raised.

1. Is it necessary to have two girls' schools twenty-five miles apart, such as the Sarah Curtis Home and the school of which Miss Converse has been the head for so many years? It may be that two schools are necessary or it may be that one school would be adequate when we take into account the whole need of that country Baptistically. It seems that a thorough survey should be made before the policy is established and now is the time to do it.

2. There are two great centers in Japan, the Tokyo-Yokohama district, which during the last century has had many earthquakes, three or four of them very destructive, and the Kobe-Osaka-Kyoto district, which has not been devastated so much by earthquakes during that time. There is no doubt that as a great port Kobe during the last thirty years has grown much more rapidly than Yokohama and before the earthquake far outstripped it. It is a question whether the Kobe-Osaka-Kyoto district will not be as large or a larger center in the years to come than the Tokyo-Yokohama district. The Baptists of America are deeply interested in this question because they must furnish the major part of the money for the rebuilding of the seminary and Mabie Memorial which are of vital importance to our Baptist work in Japan. If the schools are established in the Tokyo-Yokohama district, they ought to be built of reinforced concrete and made earthquake-proof and fireproof which will mean a very large outlay and tens of thousands of dollars more than if the same schools are erected and built up in safer portions of the empire. The whole country has earthquakes, but the Tokyo-Yokohama district is in the earthquake zone where the devastation has been much more severe than in many other sections of the country.

It looks to the writer as though the precedence enjoyed by Tokyo in the years to come would not be so marked as it has been in the past. At least, all the reports and surveys that have come from Japan since the great earthquake seem to indicate this. There is a clean slate so far as the two above-mentioned institutions are concerned and the difference in rebuilding will be tens of thousands and in the long run possibly hundreds of thousands of dollars more than through the buildings are constructed out of the earthquake zone. Again, what happened in Tokyo and Yokohama in 1854, what happened again in a lesser way in 1894, and what has happened in an awful way in 1923 in historic earthquakes will undoubtedly be repeated in the years to come. Since American Baptists must furnish the major part of the funds for this rebuilding, the time to make a careful survey of the whole situation is now before large sums have been invested.

As the writer received the grant from the American Baptist Missionary Union for the buildings of the Japan Baptist Theological Seminary, which were first erected in Yokohama, and as he also, as the agent of that same society, secured the first temporary headquarters for the school which is now known as Mabie Memorial, and as he further was the most active of any one in the mission in advocating the placing of these two institutions in the Tokyo-Yokohama district, and as such wrote by far the largest number of letters on behalf of the mission to the home society urging that these schools be located in the Tokyo-Yokohama district, thus bearing the chief responsibility for such locations, he feels that it is only right that at this time he should frankly, facing the facts as they are, make the suggestions above indicated and ask that a very careful survey be made before the final policy is decided as to the location of both of these schools. He has the very highest regard for Doctor Chiba, president of the Japan Baptist Theological Seminary, who is his "son in the ministry;" for Professor Topping, who has been a life-long friend, and whom he urged the Foreign Missionary Society to appoint to Japan; for Doctor Axling, who has been close to him since his first appointment to Japan; for Doctor Tenny, whom he requested the Foreign Society to appoint to Japan, as being specially adapted to the needs of that field; and also for Professor Fisher, a missionary's son, whom he has known from his childhood. They are all men who in a large way have made good as missionaries and who demand the heartiest appreciation of American Baptists and are splendid representatives of our denomination in the Tokyo-Yokohama district. But this question of location is something entirely apart from personnel and is something that demands the most earnest consideration of American Baptists who must rebuild at some place these great institutions.—GEORGE W. TAFT.

Oft, as he jogs along the winding-way,
Occasion comes for every man to say,—
"This road?—or that?" and as he chooses then,
So shall his journey end in night or day.

Sunday School Lesson for December 30

REVIEW: THE WORLD FOR CHRIST
Golden Text: Psalm 145:7

The review takes us over a wide area. Beginning with Abraham so long ago, we travel with him from Chaldea to Canaan, and moved by his sublime faith we come through the centuries to the universal reign of Christ which is still largely in the future. One or two things in this vast survey are worthy of special emphasis.

The Bible a Missionary Book

First, the Bible is a missionary book. "The Bible is an immortal oratorio of missions. It begins with the majestic opening trumpet of 'In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth' —the proclaiming of the God of world-wide dominion and power; and is followed by the recitative of history, the majestic solos of prophecy and the chorus psalms, the music of the tragedy of sin and the triumph of sacrificial love. It moves on through the wonderful melodies and crashing discords of the Gospel history, till at last it swells in a mighty crescendo to the closing chorus of Revelation, where there breaks on our ears the triumph song and on our eyes the vision of the Eternal City of God, where the divine missionary purpose is completed."—Basil Mathews. This is the poet's way of saying what most of us can say only in sober prose. But no one can read the Bible without being impressed with the world-sweep of its history, prophecy, poetry, gospels, epistles and apocalypses. The failure on the part of the Israelites to become a missionary people was their undoing. It was difficult for them to be a people separate from the pagan world and yet to mix with pagans for their salvation. When they mixed with the pagan world they usually lost themselves in the admixture; and when they remained separate from the pagan world they lost the fine missionary passion and enthusiasm which alone can save any religious group from intolerance and bigotry and exclusiveness and isolation. To mix and yet to remain distinct and dignified and helpful is the problem. Jesus solved it, his early followers solved it and others have solved it and are solving it in the spirit and by the method of Jesus. People who love the Bible and stand in defense of it as the Word of God must be missionary because the Bible is but the unfolding story of God's loving purpose to redeem the whole world.

The Church a Missionary Organization

Second, the church is primarily, fundamentally and eventually, a missionary organization. The church has many functions. It is a body with a variety of ends and aims and activities; but all these have but one objective, and that is the evangelization of the world. All churches have at least a five-fold program including worship, religious education, community service, evangelism and missions. The first four head up in the fifth—missions. What gives worship its spiritual flavor? Is it not the intelligent appreciation on the part of the worshiper, of God in his just and loving purpose to enfold in his everlasting arms all the children and all the grown-ups of every tribe and nation in every generation? How can one worship a God who is truly worthy without knowing him and co-operating with him in his desire to save all men? Of course religious education has the missionary idea as its end if it is good religious education. To develop the pupil to be unselfish and altruistic is the fine aim of religious education, and the highest expression of unselfishness and altruism is found in the real Christian missionary. Community service and evangelism are types of missionary service carried on in the local church. "If we cannot cross the ocean and the heathen lands explore, we can find the heathen nearer, we can find him at our door." A casual survey of any church community will reveal the need of missionary work under the very eaves of the meeting house. So the whole work of the church is pointed toward missions at home and abroad. The topic of this review should be expanded to read: "The World for Christ by Christians."

An Attendance Contest

Divide your class into groups of five or ten, according to your membership, with one member of each group as captain. Number these groups 1, 2, 3, etc., or you may name them, if you prefer. Have the numbers as well as the names of the members of each printed on large placards and hung on the walls of the classroom. A class of fifty would have ten groups, with five in a group.

The big idea is to see which of these groups can induce the largest number of person to attend the meeting of the class on a given Sunday. Using the first three Sundays of the month for working up the details and also for the purpose of advertising the venture.

The contest proper should be started on the fourth Sunday with group number 1 leading off. It will, of course, be up to this bunch to do everything in every way they possibly can to have a large attendance, of both the members of the class and visitors, present on the day allotted to them; in fact, they should endeavor to have a record-breaking crowd on hand. The total attendance corralled by this group, as well as all succeeding groups, should be printed on the placards which bear their respective number and names.

Of course, it is to be understood that the members of the other nine groups will co-operate in building up the class as a whole by being present also. That everything may be fair and above-board, it is suggested that each group be penalized one point for each member who is absent during the period of the contest. By having a penalty staring them in the face, each of the groups will do some tall hustling every Sunday to get out a full representation of its membership.

The contest may run for ten Sundays, or for double that number, if desired. The group registering the largest aggregate attendance during the period will be declared the winner.

That all groups may have an equal chance to come out on top each of them, when the contest is inaugurated, should be credited with extra points, on a graduated scale. For instance, group number 1 should start off with thirty extra points to its credit, to which will be added the attendance they round up the Sunday they are on duty. Group number 2 will be credited with twenty-seven extra points, number 3 with twenty-four, number 4 with twenty-one; and so on. If the contest is to run more than ten Sundays, the extra points should be eliminated for the second go-around.

The writer believes if this contest is given a good, fair trial it will not only substantially increase the weekly attendance upon the class, but will cause it to become one of the most wide-awake and efficient organizations in the whole school.—WILL B. MUSE in Organized Class Magazine.

The "Central Christian Advocate" says: "Things are running according to schedule. The king of Spain visits Rome and calls on the pope. The press dispatches state that the king of Spain actually got down and kissed the pope's toe. Then he took a seat on a throne placed lower than the throne of the pope. And now that the king of Spain has gone back home the Vatican comes forward with the expected announcement that it is making no arrangement whatsoever with the Italian government for any adjustment of relations between them because the Vatican holds tenaciously to the idea of the temporal power of the popes, just the same as it has ever since people of Italy threw off that temporal power in 1870." The experience of our Methodist friends in their work in Rome fits them to appreciate these moves of the Roman Church.

Phil. 3:12-16

By C. W. Chessman

The scripture passage, including the wo preceding verses, sets forth the lominant passion of Paul's life. It is an ntense longing to approximate more ɔerfectly the character of Christ. He .estified elsewhere that Christ lived within him and here he is saying "Not is though I.....were already perfect." A fuller, richer experience of Christ was ɔossible and to this he would press on.

Shall we not share with Paul this supreme aspiration? Nothing else is so worthful or rewarding. Christ is not an dea but a person. Christ incarnates himself in persons and makes their per-sonalities incandescent with his spirit. Christ is a communicator of life. He came into the world that men might have life and have it more abundantly, and when we dwell in his holy neighbor-hood we are transformed into his image, rom glory to glory.

Shall we not pursue the way that leads nto fuller life with Christ? Christian-ty's first name was "the Way." How lluminating! In Acts 24:14, Paul, in making his defence, declares, "This I confess unto thee, that according to 'thy Way' (which they call a sect) so wor-ship I our fathers' God." (Other refer-ences: Acts 9:2; 19:9; 19:23; 22:4.) Canon Cook states that it is "a definite and progressive direction of the inner and outer life of man." Whatever else the term suggests, it implies motion. It certainly accords with Paul's declaration n the passage before us, "I press on owards the mark.....Christ Jesus."

The Christian life is a movement Christward. It is human personality being progressively filled with Christ's personality. Incarnation means Christ resident in the soul of man. This means the presence of the creative forces of Christ and the resultant over-soul. And this is the central dynamic of our re-igion.

Why do we exercise vital concern for the world's needs? Why do we engage n Christian service? Why are we busy with the publicities of religion? Why do we support the church and missions? The compelling dynamic for all Christian activities is the indwelling Christ. "The love of Christ constraineth me." The way to kingdom realization in the world is the way of him who says "I am the way, the truth, the life"—having his way in your life and mine.

There is no other way. It is the old way and the new way. It was the way for Paul and it is the way for you and for me. We outgrow some things but never Christ. George Matheson prays, "Son of Man, thou never growest old to me. Last century is old. Thou art not obsolete. Thou art abreast of all the centuries. I have never come up to thee, modern as I am."

There is nothing we need more imperatively than fuller and fuller life in Christ. If we are not pressing on towards the mark Christ Jesus, then we have ceased to be Christian, and no amount of urging can relate us to sacrificial, Christian service. It is easier to sail a boat in a dead calm than to get a young people's society to carry out Christ's program when that young people's society is not in progressive, living relations with Christ.

Shall we profit by the rich example of Paul and put first things first? Shall we follow the trail of the new year as passionate knights of the gleam? Shall it be a following on to know Christ through surrendered lives to him, through Bible devotional life and unselfish service in his name? If so, then along the trail of the year, in unsuspected ways and places, the angels of God will meet us as they did Jacob of old, and our cups will be brimming with the spirit of the Master, bringing peace, purpose and power to our lives, the note of religions reality to the church, and the experience of the new birth to many now walking in darkness. Shall not our dominant purpose in the new year parallel Paul's?

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

220 young people made an interesting feature of the last session of the Bible and missionary conference at the Immanuel Church in Chicago, Nov. 16. All but ten of them came to eat and remained to be filled with the spirit of progress emanating from the address of Doctor Evans, of Kansas City.

"The B. Y. P. U. can always be depended upon to stir up a crowd"—so say they all. In order to live up to this reputation, they proceeded to tell the world about the banquet. From pulpit, in local unions, at city and district meetings, by telephone and personal announcements the word was passed, and the result was an enthusiastic and successful conclusion to this splendid conference. The sale of tickets was conducted, not by the B. Y. P. U. as an organization, but by the young people individually in association with the local church officers, thus enlisting the entire church in the undertaking. The young people's committee took charge of reservations and program. The life of the party was the Oskies. They raised their voices again in the old war cries, yells, and songs of convention days. Such meetings serve to keep alive in the hearts of the young people the magnitude of the work which lies continually before them."

Indiana's Denver Club—The convention had come and gone and many Indiana young people who might have gladly and profitably attended had not heard, or if they had heard were not sufficiently interested to attempt to join the throng of Miamis on their way to the great meeting of Baptist young people. Those who did go became so enthusiastic and so inspired that they resolved to go home and "tell it." The Denver Club was organized as a part of the Indiana B. Y. P. U. for the purpose of convention promotion. A state sales manager (transportation leader he is sometimes called) heads the organization. He receives the active cooperation of his assistant salesmen in getting members for the club, a branch being in every association. Information as to program, cost, routes of travel, etc., are obtainable from him or any of the salesmen. A set of slides showing the beauties of Colorado, Denver and the vicinity are used in the promotion work as well as a set showing Indiana delegates in action at Boston. One association has already signed up thirty-seven people signifying their interest in the convention and the trip. It is the hope of the Denver Club staff to have a chapter in every church in the state within the next few months.

Michigan is working along similar lines. In cooperation with Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, Wonder Tour No. 2 is being promoted in all four states. Illinois has completed its plans for traveling to the Denver Convention and for its side trip, and literature is now out.

State Transportation Leaders—So far as we have been definitely notified, the following are the leaders of transportation for the respective states: California, N., Harold Langdon, 519 21st St., Oakland; D. C., John Ruthven, 2-5 Center Market, Washington; Illinois, L. W. Kester, Park Ridge; Indiana, C. J. Hutchinson, 317 W. Jefferson, Ft. Wayne; Kansas, A. W. Briggs, 4006 Metropolitan, Kansas City; St. Louis, Mo., Clark Eagle, 3729 Delmar Blvd.; New York, Gilbert L. Bigger, 385 Pulaski, Brooklyn; Ohio, Charles Bowen, Box 560, Granville; Pittsburgh, Pa., Wm. O. Bond, 305 Wilson Ave., Washington, Pa.; Philadelphia, Pa., J. W. McCrossen, 3342 Brandywine St.; Rhode Island, Herbert Lottsfeldt, 149 Mercer St., E. Providence; West Virginia, Clyde L. Ferguson, Box 435, Kenova; Maryland, N. C. Harrington, 225 N. Calhoun St., Baltimore; Ontario and Quebec, Walt L. Rice, 289 Broadview Ave., Toronto.

The Christmas Aunt

MRS. ASHBY wore a shawl crocheted in scallops, and it was vaguely understood in the boarding house that it was precious to her because her Brother Jim's Wife had once made it for her with her own hands. Somehow that distinction covered all its present sins of overornateness and its slightly dingy forlorn air of having been used too many years. If only Brother Jim's Wife could have seen her in it now———

But it was thoroughly understood among all the boarders that between Brother Jim's Family and Mrs. Ashby there was a great gulf fixed. Society spelled with a capital S really could not be expected to have many dealings with the inhabitant of a boarding-house, and yet one did often wonder about Brother Jim and Brother Jim's Family: were they such resplendent beings that nothing material ever crossed that great fixed gulf? Nothing but that one shawl, and the Christmas check of which Mrs. Ashby always spoke with bated and reverential breath. Presumably because of its size.

"In what mail did it come?" some one had asked last year. A perfectly idle question, such as boarders will ask in the hushed interval between corned-beef-and-cabbage and rice pudding. But Mrs. Ashby had deeply resented the question. She had drawn up her thin little shoulders underneath that hideous shawl and had said with freezing dignity: "I really didn't notice."

Poor Miss Smithers was quite crushed. She hadn't meant to be inquisitive or pushing. Only it just happened that she had met the postman both mails for the last two days, looking for a letter of her own, and she couldn't help but remember that there had been no letter for Mrs. Ashby. Yet here she was in receipt of it. However, Miss Smithers apologized. Mrs. Ashby accepted it, and being in the position of condescension she once more pointed for the awed boarders the glory of her Brother Jim's existence beyond the fixed gulf. The mere matter of Gwendolyn Van Rensaeller's lingerie—everybody knew what it cost—you couldn't help but be impressed by this marvelous creature———

"But I think she ought to be ashamed of herself, never to send one single solitary present to her poor forlorn old aunt!" raged little Miss Tracy, the stenographer, afterwards. "Wouldn't you think they'd want to make the dear little lady happy? Here's another Christmas, and I suppose those stingy Van Rensaellers won't do a blooming thing for her except 'Brother Jim's' check; and I doubt if it's a big check—certainly she's never done anything riotous with it on other Christmases. Goodness me, if she was my aunt, I'd make her just glow with adorable little surprises, something to please her all the year round too. I've never had an aunt, and I've always wanted one."

It was Mr. Cutting who made the amazing suggestion: "Why don't you adopt her then? I've never had an aunt either, and she's just my idea of one—shivery, with a perpetual shawl around her shoulders, and a frightful dread of draughts, and awfully genteel, and just as kind as you make 'em. I think it would be lots of fun to be Jim Junior and send her a thumping big box of Page and Shaw's on Christmas morning. Come on, you be the fair Gwendolyn and I'll be Jim Junior."

Gladys Tracy looked at him in surprise: "Really?"

"Really! Why not? You haven't any family; I haven't any family; Miss Smithers hasn't any family; we're the forlornest souls on Christmas, and yet here's a lady with enough family and to spare, but never a loving token to prove their existence. Yet Jim Junior got a new roadster only last month she told me."

"And Gwendolyn has two fur coats."

"The wretch! Well, shall we?"

"Lets! And put their cards in, you mean?"

"Of course! She'll have to thank them then, and won't they be flabbergasted? I'll begin saving for the fattest box of chocolates."

Instantly there leaped into Miss Tracy's mind a picture. It was of Mrs. Ashby sitting beside a rose-shaded boudoir lamp. "I could make the shade myself for a mere song," she thought, and in her lunch hour the next day she searched the lamp departments. The standard itself was the big outlay, of course. But for two and a quarter there was a dear little plain lamp. "I'll make the shade fussy," she smiled to herself, as she figured out just where three little curlicues of gilt braid could form decorative roses.

Oh yes, it was the jolliest little plan in the world! Miss Smithers loved it. And if Miss Smithers warmed to a project then you might know it was absolutely correct and proper. She said that she was going to replace Brother Jim's Wife's crocheted shawl with a purple sweater. There was a very soft beautiful refined shade of purple which would bring out all the ivory tints in Mrs. Ashby's faded cheeks. Miss Smithers had studied art and color combinations at one time in her long melancholy career; she was therefore an authority on wha went with what.

Even their landlady approved th scheme. "Land sakes, serves them righ those spendthrifts! Always buying th best for themselves, and never lifting hand to help this perfectly nice gentee little lady who would be an ornamen to any home."

In her memory of all the things Mrs Ashby had let drop about the wonder of her brother's household there lingere the way the mahogany gleamed—"ol mahogany has a special gleam and lus ter, Mrs. Binner, and in my Brothe Jim's mansion there is not a stick c veneered or modern furniture. Every thing antique, and special periods in eac room."

"Oh my!" sighed Mrs. Binner. Sh remembered those sighs of hers extenc ing back over several years now, an in the kindness of her honest heart sh wondered if she were not almost a hypocritical as the detested Van Rer saellers out in Chicago; for right in thi very house she had a small round mahog any table with a quaint old standard- she never had time to get much pleasur out of it herself, being here and ther on her feet all day and too tired at nigh to care whether it was veneered or gil ed. Suppose she substitute it for th dreadful old oak affair now in Mrs. Ash by's furnished room?

She broached the matter to Mrs. Snel her special crony among the boarder Mrs. Snell said it was a lovely, lovel thing to do, and she would make a stri of that quaint oriental-looking stuff t put on it, and Miss Tracy's lamp coul rest on the strip.

All told, it was the most mysterio happy Christmas Eve ever spent in th boarding house. It is true that Mr Ashby, being somewhat lonely, had trie to pay a little visit after supper in thre of the rooms where certain surpris were being finished, and had had to b turned away with one excuse or anothe She was perfectly dear about it, and sai she knew just how it was, for when sh and "Jim" were still at home they use to have the greatest lot of last-minut things to do on Christmas Eve. Bt when she reached her own room sh locked the door and sat down by th hideous, highly-glazed oak table for lonely cry. Sleigh-bells clanking ou side with all the suggestive cheerfulnes of Christmas: and she, only she, left ou of Christmas. She went to bed earl She got up late the next morning. To late for the other boarders waiting b hind their doors to hear her go dow to breakfast.

For it had been arranged that, whi she was eating, they would get the presents into her room, and the obligin little maid-of-all-work made the bed and straightened things with surprising dispatch.

Slowly Mrs. Ashby climbed up the stairs after breakfast. The worst day of the whole year was upon her now, and she was none too eager to start it. But there were only thirty steps, and all too soon she was inside the lonely door. She locked it.

Then turning, she saw the surprises. That lamp! "To dear Aunt Sarah, from Gwendolyn." The sweater! "To Sally, from Matie Van Rensaeller." The candy! "To the best aunt in America from your good nephew, Jim Junior." She fingered them in a dazed fashion: she stroked them unbelievingly. The lovely old table amazed her—it was Mrs. Binner's one antique: what was it doing in her room? She sat down in stony silence and stared and stared and stared, thinking.

Meanwhile, out in the hall, the others stood waiting with bated breath, their eyes brimful of the delight they felt so sure they had given. Any minute she would be out to tell them of the wonderful surprises from Brother Jim's dear family. But eleven o'clock came, still silence in that room. Twelve o'clock—silence. One o'clock—silence. The gong rang for Christmas dinner. No Mrs. Ashby appeared. The boarders were greatly upset.

"What can it be?" they asked.

"It's the handwriting that gave us away, just as I said," sighed Miss Smithers. "We decided to print our names, but would all the Van Rensaellers print? Of course not!"

They appointed Miss Tracy to go as a delegate to discover the trouble. She knocked. No answer.

"Dinner's ready, Mrs. Ashby, aren't you coming down?"

"No, dear. I—I don't feel very well."

"Can't I come in then?" begged the girl in the hall.

Mrs. Ashby opened the door. Her eyes were red. "I don't believe I could swallow a bite," she said plaintively.

Gladys Tracy stepped inside the room and looked around: "Haven't you had a nice Christmas?" she ventured.

"Oh my dear! My dear!" wailed the little lady. "That's just the trouble, it's too nice, for you all found me out, didn't you?"

"Found you out?" echoed the girl. "What do you mean?"

"Oh! oh! oh!" cried Mrs. Ashby into her handkerchief. "I'm so ashamed of myself—think of a reputable woman like me doing such a disgraceful boastful thing, always bragging about Jim and Jim's wife and Jim's children and Jim's autos. I don't wonder you decided to pay me back! I know you meant all right, but I'm so ashamed of myself. I'm suddenly seeing myself as you must have been seeing me—a silly old boaster. Only I didn't dream you guessed! I had such fun putting on airs about Jim's greatness and grandness; somehow it was a comfort to me in my own shabbiness———"

Gladys Tracy leaned against the door limply: "What does this mean?" she gasped. "Haven't you a Brother Jim?"

Mrs. Ashby hung her head, covering her eyes with her hands. "Oh, don't rub it in! Don't! I know all you feel; these presents have been telling me all morning."

"No, they haven't!" the girl said faintly. "They haven't told you a thing that we had in our hearts—for one thing, not one of us ever dreamed that Jim and Gwendolyn and Jim Junior were not true flesh and blood relations. We've adored hearing about their grand house and their grand clothes and their grand autos. But we've thoroughly detested them for their shabby treatment of you! Never a present in all these Christmases we've known you! You see, we think you're adorable; we would all simply love to have you for our aunt! We said that if you were our aunt we'd want you to have a thumping big box of candy, a gay little lamp, a nice sweater, a pretty table runner. So we pretended to be those lordly relatives. We wanted you to write them magnificent letters of gratitude. We wanted the mean old things to squirm in their boots. We wanted them to wonder what in the world to do: to keep quiet and accept your thanks, or—to turn over a new leaf! But we never once guessed that you were pretending, you dear darling lonely little lady, you!"

And with that she gathered that little old lady into her arms and kissed her with all the fervor of a devoted niece.

"For you are my aunt, my precious Aunt Sarah, from this good minute on! And I'm a real flesh-and-blood niece!"

"Same here," said the astonished but irrepressible Mr. Cutting from the doorway, where a little circle of amazed eavesdroppers had listened to the confession.

Even Miss Smithers had her kiss for this Christmas aunt. The little old lady's cheeks were pink with excitement and delight: "This is the most wonderful day of my life, my dears," she said, "for suddenly I have a family."

"Put on your new sweater, auntie, and come down to eat Christmas dinner," ordered the devoted nephew Cutting.

She put it on. She came down. She radiated the sudden peace she felt. The sudden love for all the world, and especially for this devoted slice of it which had done such a beautiful thing for her. "You are better than Jim," she said to Mr. Cutting affectionately.

"And Gwendolyn, snippy girl," laughed Gladys softly.

"There's a verse in the Bible about me," Mrs. Ashby said that evening after a truly wonderful day. She put on her glasses, and by the rose-colored glow of the new lamp she read it aloud to them: "He setteth the solitary in families."

Mr. Cutting had to have the last word: "God bless our boarding house," he said reverently as he too kissed his Christmas aunt!

Missionary Heroes

By Homer F. Yale

THE study of the lives of great missionary heroes has not only inspired others to go as missionaries, but has led many into a deeper consecration to Christ.

In my own study of the history of missions I have tried to learn where the missionaries served, and the time of their service. But it has been a very difficult matter to get this information arranged in systematic order. I now have a list of about forty missionary heroes that every Christian should know about, arranged by countries and dates. A few names have been added of the most noted native heroes who have been transformed by Christianity.

It would be a good plan to cut out the following list and keep it in the Bible for a bookmark until all the names and countries are learned by heart.

India

William Carey, 1793-1833
Adoniram Judson, 1813-1850
Dr. John Scudder, 1819-1855
Eliza Agnew (Ceylon), 1850-1883
J. E. Clough, 1864-1906
Dr. Clara Swain, 1869-1896
Mary Reed, 1884-
Pandita Ramabai
Chundra Lela
Lilavati Singh

Africa

Theodosius Vanderkemp, 1799-1811
Robert Moffat, 1817-1870
David Livingstone, 1840-1874
Francois Coillard, 1857-1904
Alexander Mackay, 1876-1890
Mary Slessor, 1876-1915
Bishop James Hannington, 1882-1885

China

Robert Morrison, 1807-1834
J. Hudson Taylor, 1853-1905
Mary Morrill, 1889-1900
General Feng

Pacific Islands

John Williams, 1816-1839
Titus Coan, 1835-1882
John Coleridge Patterson, 1856-1871
John G. Paton, 1858-1907
James Chalmers, 1867-1901

Turkey

Japan

Dr. J. C. Hepburn, 1859-1911
Guido F. Verbeck, 1859-1899
G. L. Mackay (Formosa), 1872-1895
Joseph Hardy Neesima, 1874-1890

Korea

H. G. Underwood, 1885-1916

Home Missions

Roger Williams, 1628-1683
John Eliot, 1645-1690
David Brainerd, 1742-1747
Marcus Whitman, 1836-1847
Sheldon Jackson, 1858-1909
Booker T. Washington, 1881-1915
W. T. Grenfell, 1892-
Frank Higgins, 1895-1915

I am preparing short stories of these great heroes, of just a few sentences, to be learned by the children in Sunday school.

Our Own Folks

English Baptist Affairs

By W. T. Whitley

There is still an aftermath of Stockholm. The indefatigable Doctor Rushbrooke is pervading the Continent, one week spending a few billion marks in going across Germany to the rising nationalities of the Baltic or the Balkans, next week emitting a report of a few thousand words from his tiny London office, and a third week trying the atmosphere of France—not necessarily Monte Carlo alone. But he reports direct to the boards, and it is only needful to pay a passing tribute to his labors.

Many new friendships have been inaugurated, and as between our nations a British-American fraternity has taken shape, to insure that these shall not remain private and isolated. The intention is to link men with men, church with church; perhaps Rochester, N. Y. with Rochester, Kent; Reading, Pa., with Reading, Berks; Burlington, N. J., with Burlington, Yorks. As the initiative is largely with Doctor Fowler, we in England are expecting things to hum.

The report of the Stockholm meetings is all but finished, and in three weeks should be available to all readers. For yours, the various branches of the A. B. P. S. will be the fount of supply. One great feature will be a reproduction of "The Nations Turning into the Baptist Road." This cartoon, thirty feet long by ten feet high, was so placed in the exhibition that it could not be taken at once. The plate from it measures three feet by one foot, and will bring a bird's-eye view of world-wide Baptist extension into prominence. While it will be folded into the report, at $2.50, it will also be available separately at perhaps fifty cents, and it ought to go into hundreds of churches and homes.

Doctor Clifford

The event of this last week has been the home-call of Doctor Clifford. In London he has been known for sixty-five years, throughout England for the span of many a man's life, and in 1905 the whole Baptist world became aware of his greatness. As a politician he played his part, and a famous caricature depicting him as John Knox preaching at Mary, Queen of Scots, showed well the ethical spirit that prompted his public action. This came out well in his dealings with our educational problems. At the first Baptist Congress he was vice-chairman; he was chosen president of the Alliance, 1905-1911; when Doctor MacArthur succeeded him, he was appointed deputy-president for the eastern hemisphere; this year he was named president emeritus. Now he and his American colleague have within the year both run their course and stand side by side before their King. He took his duties seriously, and in an awkward situation within the late Austro-Hungarian monarchy, headed a deputation to solve the difficulty. His last hour was in the midst of his brethren, for the Council of the Baptist Union had met for one of its most important sessions, in full numbers. He paid a personal tribute of sympathy to Doctor Shakespeare, saying that he too knew the drawbacks from a failure of sight. But the significant utterance was on evangelism. This was ever dear to his heart, and as a proposal was made to enlist the services of Mr. Douglas Brown for the whole denomination, he earnestly supported it. Five minutes later he heard the Master's call, looked up, and with two sighs he heeded and went. Who could ask for a happier reunion in more fitting circumstances?

London sheets cried the tidings in an hour, and every news sheet paid him tribute next day. His brethren naturally felt unable to resume their work for two or three hours, and many were the stories told of his piety, his zeal, his brotherliness. Meanwhile a stream passed through the quiet room where lay the worn-out frame, a lily resting on its breast.

The Baptist Union felt the shock keenly. It happens that the vice-president and the treasurer are abroad; the secretary is ill. But many brethren are hastening to carry on the necessary work and wind up the year's proceedings. Many special measures will doubtless have to be taken, and it is fortunate that a conference is called early in the new year to think out principles and policy with relation to certain problems.

In the election that has been sprung upon the country the education question is not of the first importance. It is well, however, to observe that whereas many of your states have to comply with judicial interpretations that banish the Bible from public schools, the point being stressed here is the direct opposite—the necessity of having the Bible in every public school. A somewhat kindred matter is that many counties are considering the isolation of the rural dweller; in one shire a rural center organizer is being appointed, and, of course, a woman is wanted; $1500 yearly ought to get a good one. In another shire a scheme is worked out for rural circulating libraries, and again a well-trained woman is in charge. The beneficence of Andrew Carnegie, enables this to spring, like Minerva, fully equipped from the brain. We owe much to the rural villages, to the little churches there. Long may they flourish and train a godly seed!

Hoosier Who's Who

By U. M. McGuire

A nibbler for news of the churches can find plenty of good cheer in the tidings that drift on the winds.

Among the smaller churches, Pastor Bowman has baptized four at Harmony; A. C. Chism at Liberty Center was exposed to a "shower" of groceries, et cetera, worth more than $100 cash, to say nothing of the good-will and happiness; L. S. Sanders, having brought Larkin up from nothing to half-time and baptized thirty, closed his work Nov. 18, with a surprise dinner at the church, and a right good time; F. H. Albritten has been recalled after a period of absence, to Freedom, Friendship Association, with an advance to full-time service; and Churchman Avenue, Indianapolis, whose shifts of fortune would bewilder Puck, is now riding the crest of the wave with F. M. Buchanan at the helm, and had a great home-coming the other day. Calvary, Indianapolis, was classed among the smaller churches until recently; but Pastor Clarence Wilhelm has been baptizing so many that after counting by scores and hundreds, the rest of us have quit counting. Perhaps he knows how large his membership is.

Reports of evangelistic activity for the last year were not satisfactory, and the figures roused the Baptists of the state to the necessity of bestirring themselves. Consequently, revivals are reported already from a good many localities with an encouraging number of baptisms. It is hoped that the pre-Easter campaign period this year may witness a spiritual tide of more than ordinary dimensions.

An Alarming Showing

White Lick Association presents an interesting phenomenon. With twenty-two churches and more than 2,000 members, the letters to the association last fall contained reports of the baptism of only twenty converts. At such a showing the churches took alarm. Conferences were held and a cooperative evangelistic campaign was planned in which it is hoped to enlist gospel teams, singing bands, visiting delegations and all of the local preaching talent, and to reach every church in the association with an intensive effort to win men to Christ. Already there are signs of a general awakening. The central committee in charge of the campaign is composed of S. A. Hayworth of Danville, A. D. McDaniel of Clayton, W. A. Cox of Quincy and the writer.

Among the larger churches, Ellis M. Jones at Washington has just gathered in more than 100 as a result of union meetings of the Protestant churches. A. A. Cohn of Sullivan assisted Mr. Jones during the meetings and is now getting ready for a great drive in his own church. South Bend, First, was lately destroyed by fire; but there was a respectable amount of insurance, the church is strong, U. S. Davis is still there, and the phoenix will rise from its ashes. Anderson dedicated its new temple, Sunday, Dec. 2, in a blaze of glory.

Forest Hills dedicated and Pastor Chastain followed up with a good revival. Olive Branch, in Friendship Association, dedicated, and S. A. Hayworth, in a series of meetings, won two or three dozen to Christ. Ray Banks and W. E. Houghton are in meetings at Mt. Vernon, with crowded houses. F. R. Barnaby, with A. P. Renn assisting, is vigorously shaking the bushes at Petersburg.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

Dedications

The dedication of the new Big Bend Baptist Church took place on Nov. 25. The building has been standing for a number of years, but recently it has been remodeled and renovated at an expense of approximately $9,000, so that it is now virtually a new building. Dr. W. T. Dorward, of Milwaukee preached the sermon at the morning service, and in the afternoon Superintendent A. LeGrand delivered an address. There was no appeal for money as that matter had been taken care of beforehand. At the evening service Rev. Ralph Barry preached. Mr. Barry supplied the pulpit here for awhile when he was pastor at Honey Creek.

Other Building Improvements

The Baptist Church at Hillsdale has recently improved its building by decorating the interior and installing electric lights. This gives the building a pleasing appearance.

The Whitehall Church has put on a new roof, placed a new hardwood floor in the auditorium, and erected new steps in the front of the building.

The Green Bay Church installed electric lights, refinished the wood work and effected some other improvements which make the building very attractive. The church received eight for membership at the November communion, and others were expected for the December communion.

The South Side Christian Center in Milwaukee has been renovated and improved at an expense of approximately $1,000. The work is being cared for by Miss Maimie Passolt and Dr. D. W. Hulburt; it is hoped that other workers can be added soon.

About a year ago the church at Raymond suffered the loss of its building by fire. A new one has been erected and the dedication took place on Nov. 11. The speaker of the day was Rev. A. T. Erickson, of Green Bay. This is one of our good country churches. It should now set itself to an aggressive work in the neighborhood. It was formerly a Danish-speaking church.

An Unusual Occasion

A delightful affair in the form of a twenty-fifth anniversary surprise banquet and party was given in honor of Miss Clara Lannen in the parlors of the Berlin Church, Wednesday evening, Oct. 24. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion and a delicious supper was served by the men's class in charge of Mr. Palmer. The party was given by the Sunday-school class of which Miss Lannen has been the teacher for twenty-five years. The class presented her with a reed rocker as a token of appreciation of her services to them. A novelty on the program was a history of the class and a little play presented by girls dressed in the fashion of twenty-five years ago with their hair in pigtails delivering graduation exercises which were required before they could enter Miss Lannen's class.

Some New Leaders

Rev. A. T. Erickson who has been pastor at Green Bay for the past five years has resigned to become the state evangelist. He has spent most of his ministerial life in Wisconsin and knows the state and its needs as but few of our men do. He will take up his new work Jan. 1.

The Janesville Church has called Rev. R. A. McMullen, of Manhattan, Kans. to succeed Rev. R. G. Pierson as its pastor. He was formerly pastor in Milwaukee, then in Minnesota, and from there he went to Chicago where he was pastor of the Pilgrim Temple. Mr. McMullen and Mr. Pierson were fellow students in the University of Chicago. He will begin his new pastorate Jan. 1.

Rev. E. Lansing Holland, of Minneota, Minn., has accepted the call of the churches at Pewaukee and Merton. He began his work Nov. 1.

Other Notes

Rev. D. Raffone, who is in charge of the Italian church at Kenosha and Racine, was recently elected as a state deputy for Wisconsin at the convention of the "Sons of Italy" held at Providence, R. I. This is considered quite an honor for a Protestant clergyman.

Rev. E. W. Foster is the acceptable supply at the Grace Church of Milwaukee while they are looking for a pastor.

Pittsburgh Association

By R. G. Pierson

The editor of The Baptist has given the writer of these notes the task of gathering the Baptist news from this territory. This seems like a large task to give to one who has so recently come to the "workshop of the world," but he has undertaken it with the hope that pastors and churches will send him items of news from their fields. A letter sent to 1249 Peermont Ave., South Hills Sta., Pittsburgh, Pa., will receive attention.

A month's residence in a place does not give one time to get acquainted, size up the folks and get the right impressions. However, I venture even on this short acquaintance to say that the ministers and laymen I have met are a friendly, earnest and aggressive group of men. Men of vision and vitally interested in the denomination and its world task.

A Real Governor

Pennsylvania has a real governor in the person of Gifford Pinchot. On Monday, Dec. 3, the ministers of Pittsburgh had the privilege of hearing and meeting him. He has an attractive personality and a smile that captures one from the start. He is a fearless crusader against law breakers. He not only dares to say things, but he dares to do things. As he spoke on law enforcement he hit straight from the shoulder, putting the responsibility for the present crises up to those who have failed to keep their oaths which were taken when elected to office. The governor is a modern crusader and appeals to his hearers to join him in the fight for law and order. He says that no matter who goes with him or who fails to do so, he will go the limit. As one listened to his message, the fighting spirit was aroused and one went away with shoulders squared and jaws set for the battle.

Farewells

The Knoxville Church and the ministers have been bidding Rev. Frank W. Stanton godspeed as he goes to take up his new work as pastor of the First Church of Arkon, Ohio. Brother Stanton began his new work Dec. 9, after nearly four years of efficient and constructive work in Pittsburgh. The results of his work will show in the years to come as he has builded well. He has been interested in the associational work, active in the life of the community and has identified himself with every movement for the building of the kingdom. The church and community showed their appreciation and love for both Brother Stanton and his good wife in many substantial ways. On Dec. 3 the Ministers' Association gave him a farewell luncheon. The following brought messages: Jessup, Griffith, and Chappell. Doctor Bartol spoke for the laymen.

The Library Church is saying farewell to its pastor, Rev. E. Paul Smith, who goes soon to take up his new work in Pocatello, Idaho. The best wishes of the brethren go with him.

Friends of Rev. W. C. Chappell, executive secretary of the Pittsburgh Association, are saddened to learn of the death of his wife, which occurred Monday morning, November 26, at the home in Wilkinsburgh. Memorial services were held Tuesday evening, Nov. 27. Rev. A. J. Bonsall had charge of the service, Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker and Rev. F. W. Stanton assisting The body was taken to Hillsdale, Mich, for interment, where Mr. Roberts of the College Church conducted the services. Mrs. Chappell had been an invalid for years. In her suffering she manifested a singular patience and composure. All hearts will feel profound and sincere sympathy for Doctor Chappell and the three children in this their hour of sorrow.

New Pastors

Rev. D. M. Lenox began his work as pastor of the Oakmont Church on Nov. 25.

Rev. M. R. Palmer, formerly of Castile, N. Y., was welcomed to his new field, the Union Church, by large audiences on Sunday, Nov. 18. This is a difficult down-town field with plenty of problems but we believe Brother Palmer and his loyal people will turn them into opportunities.

Rev. R. G. Pierson, formerly of Janesville, Wis., began his service with the Mt. Lebanon Church of Dormont on Nov. 1. The outlook is promising. This is a new field and is growing rapidly. A hearty welcome was given Mr. Pierson and his family by the church at a public reception Friday evening, Nov. 16. Dr. H. W. Ewalt presided. Greetings were brought by the pastors of the Dormont churches and by the Burgess, Mr. Wm. E. Best. Dr. A. J. Bonsall, Dr. W. C. Chappell and Mr. J. H. Stauff, president of the Pennsylvania State Convention, welcomed him in behalf of the Baptist ministers, the association and the state respectively. Rev. J. S. Jewel, a member of the church, represented the congregation. Mr. Pierson responded, pledging best service to the church and the denomination.

Jottings

The meetings of the Ministers' Association have been interesting and stimulating. Recently excellent papers were read by Doctor Bonsall on "Divorce," Havard Griffith on "Church Program," and E. Paul Smith on "A Simple Gospel for a Complex World."

The Sunday school at the Rankin Center is growing rapidly. A recent Sunday showed an attendance of 153. Mr. C. P. Leedy has been secured as a part time worker for men and boys. Miss Gladys Hall of New Brunswick has been appointed day nursery worker. The writer had the privilege of visiting Rankin Center recently and found it a beehive of activity. An excellent building and an efficient staff of workers under the direction of Miss Luella Adams make this an outstanding work in kingdom building.

On Nov. 10, at Woodlawn, a memorable day rounded out five years of fruitful service on the part of the pastor, Rev. Lawrence B. Ford. This is a progressive church under the leadership of a progressive pastor.

The Home and Orphanage recently held its annual meeting and the reports showed the best year in its history. Rev. J. S. Jewel, the efficient executive secretary, has been sowing some seed that is already beginning to show signs of harvest. This important work is being directed by the right man.

Missouri and St. Louis News

By J. L. Watson

Having seen nothing in The Baptist from St. Louis since the going of W. E. Darrow from Grand Avenue to Ansley, Neb., several months ago, I am tempted to write a few lines.

All our Baptist churches in the city now have pastors, and the St. Louis Baptist mission board has called Dr. S. E. Ewing back to his old task as superintendent of Baptist missions in the St. Louis Baptist Association. Doctor Ewing was called to this position in 1907 and held it until about five months ago when he resigned and took another position. Now the board calls him back to the task which he never should have given up. He knows the city, the churches and their needs and is therefore more able than any other man to take up the work where he left it off months ago.

The Baptist churches of the city are planning to enter into another simultaneous evangelistic campaign in November, 1924. However, some of the churches are planning for revivals before that time, but such churches will enter the November campaign also.

Pastors who have recently come to St. Louis city pastorates are Henry Alfred Porter from Atlanta, Ga., to the Third; J. F. Reagan from Canton, Mo., to Calvary; and J. L. Watson from Sullivan, Ill., to Grand Avenue. The work in these churches seems to be progressing in a fine way. Grand Avenue will probably enter into an evangelistic campaign in February.

At the meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Association Monday, Dec. 3, Rev. J. F. Breen of Tabernacle Church brought the message on the subject, "The Holy Spirit and His Work in the Church." The speaker showed he had given the matter much thought, and his remarks were well received by the body. Brother Breen is by no means an old pastor in the city, having come to the Tabernacle from Troy, Mo., less than a year ago. He is also the new secretary of the association.

It is now quite the habit to conduct a week of fellowship meetings in the churches. When J. L. Watson came to Grand Avenue about two months ago the church had a week of such meetings and one of the city pastors was asked to speak each evening. Calvary, now under the pastoral care of J. F. Reagan, has just closed such a meeting, and next week the Kingshighway Church will offer such a program to its people. Others are being planned and some of them are to run over two weeks instead of one.

Rev. O. L. Wood has been succeeded as superintendent of state missions in Missouri by Rev. O. E. Bryan who has been connected in former years with the Southern Baptist Convention work throughout the South. Other changes may be made at the meeting of the board in January.

Several fine Baptist church pulpits in the state are now vacant, or will be very soon. Those live churches, however, will not long be without pastors. I must not name those churches. I did mention a pastorless church once in a note to one of our papers and in about one week had forty-seven letters from as many men who desired to visit the church with a view to taking the pastorate.

MASSACHUSETTS

The Bible and Missionary Conference postponed from Nov. 14-16, will come Jan. 28-30 in the First Church, Cambridge. This is a happy arrangement, for such a conference is best held in a church, and in one so accessible. Four minutes from Park street by the subway, brings you at the church door. A great conference is anticipated. It is likely that a similar conference for western Massachusetts will immediately follow this one.

The Ford Hall Forum featured a Christian and Jewish night on Nov. 25. One newspaper said they "staged the millennium." A Baptist Minister, Dr. C. H. Rust, and Rabbi Heller did not exactly swap their faiths, but they swapped appreciations of each other's faith and people. Doctor Rust could sweepingly allow the Jewish sources of our Bible, our Lord and our gospel; and Rabbi Heller could as heartily testify to the amazing goodness of Jesus, and the surprisingly permanent force he had become in the world. It was a dramatic moment when Doctor Rust, standing arm in arm with the rabbi, exclaimed—"His God is my God. The Jesus his people gave to the world is my Jesus, and we stand upon the same platform—the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man!" There was immense applause; and there is great satisfaction that such an occasion could be one of the conspicuous achievements of the Forum.

Dr. Rufus M. Jones the strong, sweet, Quaker mystic from Haverford College, was the preacher at King's Chapel, Boston, Thanksgiving week. It is one of the treats of a lifetime, to hear such a prophet discourse so simply upon the profoundest connections of our faith with the world's present dark hour. He made you recall Job's confidence: "He uncovereth deep things out of darkness."

Dr. Natan Soderblom, Archbishop of the state church in Sweden, has been a welcome guest in Boston. Pilgrim Hall was packed with Congregational and Baptist ministers to hear him; and hearing him was a rich experience. Overflowing with human sensibility, and deep Christian feeling, it was not difficult to understand his authority and influence in Sweden. His secret is that the man is greater than the bishop. The ecclesiastic seems submerged in a large, wise and loving nature, consecrated to the good of the world. He has a speaking face, and abundant wisdom; a keen sense of humor, and practiced observations. A politician masquerading as a stateman seems rather diminutive by comparison with the great Swede.

Modern Football is as clear as mud to those who do not understand it, but the 50,000 who do understand it, found it rolled in mud when the warriors of Harvard and Yale battled in the big stadium. You would think that mud and the intellectual life had become equal partners.

The Boston Baptist Ministers Conference continues to plow the field with home talent. And the meetings, in attendance, and interest, are well up to scale. On the third, Rev. N. E. Fetter, student pastor of the First Church, gave us a remarkable hour. He proved himself a specialist indeed, as he discoursed upon his specialty. Living so long and so intimately with students, he sees religion and the churches from their angle. President Clifton D. Gray of Bates College was present, and was called upon after the address of the morning. He strongly enforced the great point for the denominational college—the point, it may be added, in which Bates is strong: An entire faculty of Christian teachers, all committed to the faith and service of Jesus Christ, and none admitted who are not. In that respect, Baptist colleges must be pronounced and peculiar. Pastor Freda raised a burning question: "What shall we do for the overwhelming majority of our youth who are not students, and cannot be—anything for them?"

IN THE RECENT DEATH of Mrs. Henry E. Hodge, wife of our beloved brother, the pastor of the First Church in Everett, a good man loses a precious companion. Mrs. Hodge was thoroughly and intelligently devoted, and had made herself a large place in the Baptist sisterhood. Such a woman is a force in ministry and manse.

NORTH SCITUATE AND THE Bailey family are identical. Time out of mind our Baptist church there has been blessed by some of them. Others of them have become almost indispensable in some of our greatest centers. Is not Dr. Henry T. Bailey at the head of art interests in Cleveland, Ohio? Is not Professor Albert E. Bailey one of the luminaries in Boston University? Charles W. Bailey, president of the Boylston Bank in Boston, and former president of the Social Union, does not the strong church at Wollaston appreciate him? But in the old home church, where Frederick T. Bailey stands by the stuff, they have just been celebrating his "silver year" as leader of the Bible school. Mrs. Edward S. Bailey gave a history, Mr. Willard L. Bailey brought a "message." The good words "love" and "appreciation" were uttered with strength and tenderness, and the hero of the occasion closely described. If ever they should change the name of North Scituate, it will have to be "Bailey."

THE NEW MEETING HOUSES of the churches at Weston, and Belmont street, Watertown, are, under the favoring weather conditions, speeding towards completion. There will be two happy pastors and congregations when the dedications come in the early spring.

WEST VIRGINIA

REV. CLARENCE W. KEMPER of the Baptist Temple, Charleston, on Dec. 4 performed the marriage service for Rev. Donald T. Grey and Miss Rowena Engle in the First Church, Lansing, Mich. Mr. Grey was Mr. Kemper's associate while pastor of the First Church, Lansing, and Miss Engle was a member of his staff at the Charleston Baptist Temple during the past year. From Lansing Mr. Kemper proceeded to Buckhannon, W. Va., to give six addresses on Dec. 6-7 before the state young people's conference held under the auspices of the West Virginia Sunday-school Council of Religious Education.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

AFTER AN ABSENCE of three years from the campus, Dr. Barnard C. Taylor, professor emeritus of Old Testament literature and exegesis, returned to Crozer for the Thanksgiving season and consented to address the student body at the annual Thanksgiving dinner. Doctor Taylor expressed his thankfulness for the past and present of the seminary, and his abiding confidence in its future. After referring to his forty-three years' service at Crozer he closed by saying that he is still a young man and quoted as his own sentiments the words of the late Doctor Henson, "I'll never grow old. I'll die first!"

ILLINOIS

THE FIRST CHURCH of Sterling has called Rev. J. G. Little. He is settled and ready to face and to seek to solve the problems and take advantage of the opportunities presented on this important field.

REV. W. W. MARSHALL, recently called to Cambridge, is happy and expectant of worth-while things coming to pass in Cambridge, by the grace of God and the splendid cooperation of his people.

UTICA, FIRST BAPTIST has called Rev. A. R. Pixley, an "over-seas" man, with a varied experience in Y. M. C. A. work. The church will prosper under his leadership.

REV. A. S. KELLIE, formerly of Divernon, where he did a splendid work, has been called to the First Church of Morris. Morris is fortunate in securing his services.

THE TRUSTEES of the Frances Shimer School voted on Friday, Nov. 23, to ask for plans for a library building to cost around $50,000. It is not intended to begin construction until the funds are in hand. The trustees also took action to install an improved system of accounting under supervision of W. A. Sills of the auditors' office, University of Chicago. The dean's report showed total attendance of 192 pupils of whom 100 are junior college students. Among others appearing at the school recently are Riccardo Martin and Emil Telmanyi; Jan Chiapusso appears Jan. 4. Dr. Shailer Mathews Jan. 13, Dr. J. Paul Goode, Feb. 15. The second semester begins Feb. 5. Fifteen states are represented in the student body and the number of house pupils is the largest the school has had.

NORTH DAKOTA

REV. E. W. WHITE, of Omaha, was with the Norwegian Baptist church, Fargo. The church decided to become an American church with the name Immanuel. It is planning to build a new temple of worship. Doctor White held a three weeks' meeting at Kenmare in which about fifty persons were converted or restored to membership.

SOUTH DAKOTA

REV. R. R. RICHARDS is doing good work in the state. At Glencross, having no Protestant church, he held a meeting in the high-school building. The result was the forming of a Baptist church. At Timber Lake, the day he began meetings a man from New York was in the meeting who had been sent to foreclose a mortgage of twelve years' standing. He saw a live revival started and abandoned foreclosure. In two weeks the church was reorganized with thirty members and the amount of the mortgage subscribed. The state board has properly increased the evangelist's salary. Doctor White and Mr. Richards are both Nebraska men.

IOWA

REV. GEORGE GREEN conducted a successful revival meeting at Sibley recently. About thirty were baptized as a result.

REV. J. W. CASE is the new pastor at Le Mars, having come from Spirit Lake.

THE HULME EVANGELISTIC PARTY has been conducting a revival campaign at Humboldt with good results.

PRESIDENT JOHN W. MILLION of Des Moines University recently attended the inauguration ceremonies of President H. C. Wayman of William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo. It is reported that the inauguration was largely attended by friends and alumni of the college. William Jewell College is to be congratulated upon its new president.

A "WARM UP THE HEART" revival meeting was held with the church at Winterset Nov. 4-18, Rev. Stanley A. Gillett, pastor, doing the preaching. Reports come that it was a most successful meeting.

NOV. 8 A RECEPTION was given by the members of the Forest Avenue Church to the new pastor, Rev. A. N. Nettleman. Messages of congratulation were given by a number of speakers on the program.

A MILITARY SERVICE WAS HELD on Armistice Day at the University Church by Chaplain J. Orrin Gould, pastor, assisted by thirty ex-service men. It was a splendid service and appreciated by a large audience.

A UNION REVIVAL campaign was recently closed in Highland Park, the Baptist, Christian, Methodist and Presbyterian churches cooperating. Dr. John F. Harmon was the speaker and presented the gospel message in a unique manner. It was a real "warm the heart" campaign and each of the churches profited by the meeting.

DR. D. J. EVANS, pastor of the First Church, Kansas City, Mo., was the speaker at the Des Moines University chapel Nov. 13. His message was much appreciated by the students and faculty. He is a friend of students and understands their needs during college days.

DR. G. P. MITCHELL, secretary of the Iowa Convention, invited the pastors of the denomination in the state to a luncheon Nov. 12. Plans were perfected for completing the New World Movement campaign before the close of the fiscal year.

THE BIBLE AND MISSIONARY campaign was held in Des Moines Nov. 12-14. Rev. E. A. Valiant, conference secretary is to be congratulated on having secured the hearty cooperation of the Baptists of the state for this meeting. The team of conference speakers was enthusiastically received at each session. All spoke favorably of the enthusiasm found in every program. The 700 delegates were sorry when the conference had to close. President John W. Million was chairman of the general committee of the conference.

DR. AND MRS. C. R. MANLEY of India, gave their dramatic dialogue, "India's Heartache," before the student body at Des Moines University at a special chapel Nov. 18. The Manleys are doing a great thing in bringing the life of India so vividly before Baptists just at this time.

MINNESOTA

Nov. 25 TWO MORE Sunday-school pupils were baptized into the membership of the Worthington Church. This makes forty baptized here in the past three and a half years, and nineteen received by letter and experience. More are expected to come forward for baptism in the near future. These additions are all coming in through the regular work of the church. The afternoon of Nov. 25, the pastor of the Baptist church at Indian Lake, Rev. C. O. Dahlen, came to the Worthington Church with seven candidates who received the ordinance of baptism.

INDIANA

THE WORKERS OF THE First Church together with those of the other denominations who responded to the invitation, assembled at the Lebanon Baptist Church for a three-day institute under the leadership of a team sent out by the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. The purpose of the institute was to bring to Lebanon, a comparatively small community, those advantages of study and information upon which the most efficient church schools are organized. The need for this kind of information and instruction in small cities and rural communities is too well understood to require restatement. Lebanon was no exception. Its churches and church schools were neither worse nor better than the ordinary variety. Perhaps the distinguishing mark was its realization of its need and the readiness with which it grasped the opportunity to avail itself of the institute. No expression of appreciation could repay the obligation to the University of Chicago in making this institute possible. Dr. C. T. Holman spared no effort to guarantee its success. The program of study was complete and definitely to the point. The leaders were unexcelled. Dr. G. B. Smith, professor of systematic theology, was the spiritual dynamo of the institute. His addresses on "The Need of Salvation," "God's Part in Salvation," and "Putting On Christ" were of a deep devotional nature and exceedingly helpful to all. Dr. J. M. Artman, professor of religious education, brought a comprehensive background of programming and planning for constructive departmental work. Dr. C. T. Holman specialized in the junior and intermediate departments. Mr. Herbert Ford presented a detailed program for missionary education in the church. Miss Montgomerie demonstrated the place and method of play in religious education. Mr. Takenaka brought a personal message from Japan. The results of the institute were clear-cut: (1) A new appreciation on the part of the church of its responsibility for and its identity with the church school. (2) New ideals in programming. It made the church school program an instrument of service rather than an organization. (3) It taught the technique of planning. (4) It inspired the workers with the possibility of realizing the high goals presented by supplying methods rather than overwhelming them with the task ahead and no way of achieving it. The First Church wishes to express its gratitude to the University of Chicago and those who gave so freely of their time and abilities to bring this blessing to Lebanon and its environs.

A SCARLET FEVER epidemic closed the schools of Washington Courthouse and caused the postponement of an evangelistic campaign, leaving Dr. T. M. Hofmeister of South Solon an open date for December.

A STATE CONFERENCE on evangelism under the auspices of the Home Mission Society and the department of evangelism of the Ohio Convention was held at Trinity Church, Marion, Dec. 10-12, Rev. Chas. H. Stull, state director of evangelism, presiding.

Nov. 18 REV. P. L. VERNON closed a successful five years' pastorate with the First Baptist Church of Wilmington to take up the work of executive vice-president of the World Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, with headquarters at Washington, D. C. The church and entire community feel heavily this loss.

ON SUNDAY, Nov. 25, Evangelist Wm. Pieffer closed a three weeks' campaign with the Baptist Church at Middleport. The interest was the best from the start, and results are very gratifying to pastor and people. Many will unite with the Baptist church, while some will go to the other churches of the town. Mr. Pieffer may be addressed at Columbus, Ohio.

MICHIGAN

REV. J. BURT BOUWMAN, who has been pastor of the Marshall Baptist Church for the past three years, gave his farewell address at that church, Sunday evening, Dec. 2. Before coming to Marshall Mr. Bouwman was director of the Y. M. C. A. work in Grand Rapids. March 9, 1921, he was ordained as pastor of the Marshall Church. May 7, 1923, Mr. Bouwman gave the ordination sermon of Richard Oosting, who was a friend of his at Kalamazoo College. Mr. Oosting graduated from the Divinity School at the University of Chicago last year and since had been doing work on his Ph. D. until he received a call to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Shinnston, W. Va. A farewell supper was given Mr. and Mrs. Bouwman in the church parlors, Friday evening, Nov. 23. Over 150 members of the church and congregation attended. The church feels that Rev. J. Burt Bouwman has organized the church for both work and play better than it was ever organized before. He has taught the true worth of organization and has instilled into the members of the church and Sunday-school energy and vim. He has given them a broader vision and more abundant life.

KANSAS

CLIFTON MCGLOTHLAN has closed two weeks of meetings with the church at Clyde. The church was awakened and there were seven additions by baptism.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Eldorado has finished three sections of the Sunday-school portion of its new building and moved from the Municipal Auditorium into the church building. About $40,000 of the projected $100,000 has been collected and spent. Sufficient brick and Carthage stone is on hand to complete the building. The part in use affords 6,047 square feet of floor space. For two years there had been no place to hold revival meetings, but a remarkable work of grace is upon the church. The son of the pastor made his confession of faith on Sept. 20, and since that time twenty-six have united with the church, twenty-two of these by baptism. Revival services are planned for January, the B. Y. P. U. conducting the meetings the first week, the pastor the second week. M. O. Clemmons is pastor.

FOLLOWING THE BIBLE and missionary conference held in Los Angeles, Pastor F. O. Belden, of the First Church of San Diego, arranged to have several "echo" meetings at his church, to which members of the other Baptist churches in this vicinity were invited. Among the speakers at these "echo" meetings were Geo. M. Davidson of Riverside, Rev. John M. Dean of Pasadena and Rev. C. H. Tilden of Assam.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

EVANGELIST HARRY O. ANDERSON of Berkeley held revival meetings for two weeks in the First Church of Alameda. Considering the fact that the San Francisco Bay region is difficult to arouse even to attend a revival meeting except those of various cults, it was remarkable that both attendance and interest should increase each night of the meeting. There were a number of decisions for Christ, many of whom have been baptized. Evangelist Anderson works with the pastor and strengthens the tie between pastor and people. Securing subscriptions to denominational periodicals and the enlistment to read the same falls to the newly organized department of religious education. There will be definite cooperation in keeping the list up to date.

THE FIRST YEAR of the pastorate of Rev. Thomas B. Frizelle with the First Church of Fresno has been a happy one. The church has been strengthened and is now in as prosperous a condition as ever in its history. During the year there have been several series of church night programs on Wednesday evenings. These gatherings have been well attended and the average attendance at the prayer service tripled. During the last six weeks there has been a largely increased attendance at all services of the church. Ninety-eight have been received into the fellowship of the church during the year, forty-one by baptism. This includes a number who came into the fellowship of the church through the work of Miss Amy Purcell, in charge of the Chinese Mission, and the work of Rev. R. Q. Martinez of the Mexican Mission. The church is vitally interested in missions and gave generously during the last six months to the New World Movement. A school of missions is planned for next month. Impetus has been given the work by the Bible and Missionary Conference held here Nov. 19-21. On the second evening of the conference there were by actual count more than 1,200 people present, the largest gathering of Baptists in the history of San Joaquin Valley. Credit for the attendance is largely due to Rev. J. C. Austin, loaned to the valley by Linfield College. The First Church is now free from debt, and in addition to the pastor's secretary, Mrs. D. P. Mason has been secured as office secretary.

REV. LOUIS J. SAWYER, pastor of Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco, uses the stereopticon lantern once a month in the Sunday evening service. For his illustrations Mr. Sawyer draws upon his own collection of slides, which is the fruit of wide travel, constant use of the camera, industry and skill in the manufacture and coloring of slides, and time and patience. A dozen or more formal lectures have been arranged on biblical and scenic topics, which Mr. Sawyer loans without charge. The state board of promotion has taken advantage of this valuable collection and is using in its promotion throughout the state Mr. Sawyer's new lecture, "Northern California on the March," which he wrote at the special request of the board. Hamilton Square Church also has a first-class movie machine, and is finding it of increasing value.

In Memoriam

Horace Frank Compton, a member of the First Baptist Church of Seattle, Wash., and one of its deacons for over 25 years, dropped asleep in the faith of the gospel, Thursday, Nov. 15, 1923, after a long illness. He was born in San Francisco in 1861 and came to the state of Washington in 1869. His early life was the story of long hours at hard work faithfully performed, in the doing of which he was learning lessons of upright character and sterling fidelity.

He was for a time a surveyor on the Northern Pacific Railway, then a farm laborer, in Skagit County. His father was a master mechanic who constructed much of the lumber mill machinery in and around Seattle in the early days, and soon Mr. Compton himself was connected with the Western Mill.

Nov. 18, 1883, he was baptized into membership in the First Baptist Church. From that day his life was a Christian example to every one. His mother joined the church in 1876. In 1889 he helped to establish the North Baptist Church, later called the Central Church and now the Queen Anne Baptist Church. He was a deacon in that church for some years. He and family returned to the First Church with their memberships in 1910. All of his family are faithful members of the church. He has engaged in almost every position of active Christian work in the church and has to his record 25 years on the Western Washington Baptist Convention Board and in 1911 was its president. He was also the president of the Seattle Missionary Society and assisted in the laying of the cornerstone of the First Church. He also taught the Baraca Class and for some time was teacher of a class of young men in the North Church. In addition to these exacting church duties he was also keenly interested in civic life and served at one time on the city council. He was the first man in Seattle to establish a retail lumber yard not connected with a saw mill and he made a marvelous success of it. He has been in business on Western Avenue for over thirty years.

Mr. Compton was descended from a historic French family of nobility by name of deMerle, who had their ancestral estate in Normandy and who emigrated from Normandy after St. Bartholomew's Massacre. The motto on the coat of arms was "Do well and doubt not", and that motto ran true to form in Horace Compton. The family settled in Massachusetts in 1633 and in 1765 in Maine on the Merrell farm, still owned by the descendants. Thomas Merrell married Sarah Blackstone, great-grand-daughter of William Blackstone, one of the first inhabitants of Boston and Rhode Island. Mr. Compton's mother, Catherine Merrell, was a descendant of that family.

Mr. Compton was a kindly, gracious gentleman, who loved his pastor and had no enemy in church or business, and had occupied this position without sacrificing conviction. In addition to his widow, who is the author of the memorial card for President Harding which is being used so largely in our denomination, he leaves four children—Frank, in business with his father; Merrill and Anna in the University of Washington, and Kathryn in the senior class in Queen Anne High School. Also a brother and three nieces.

Mr. Compton's illness began more than a year ago. He took a long sea trip to the Orient, which was followed by another to California and one to Rochester, Minn. He returned to Seattle in midsummer and arranged his business and then bent his mind to such recovery of strength as might be possible. For several months he had been bedfast, but patient and hopeful and cheerfully greeted each new day with faith and prayer. His home-going was most beautiful. In the early morning of Thursday one of his daughters arranged him in a chair by the bedside and brought a tray of breakfast. He had just greeted his wife and as a second daughter came to add her word of morning greeting, in the few seconds silence which had elapsed the swift angel messenger had come and touched him and his soul had gone home to the Father's house. His home has lost an ideal husband and the city an upright citizen, the business world a man of sterling honesty and integrity, his neighbors a beloved friend, and the church a kindly, generous man of God. The work he has laid down will be carried on by his talented and devoted wife, his strong sons and his gracious daughters. May God keep us all until the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

Refusing Twenty-seven Applicants for Church Membership

BY JOSEPH CLARK

At the close of June we had our mid-year conference with our teacher-evangelists, accompanied by inquirers and applicants for baptism. There were seventy applicants for baptism. Those accompanying the catechists came with the consent and approval of their teachers and of other Christians who were their neighbors, so that we had a "certificate" of their good behavior and practical proof of a visible change in their lives. Of the seventy forty-three were accepted, and on July 8 we had the joy of baptizing these in Lac Tomba.

But what of the others? Why were they rejected? Five young men were refused because they did not show interest in God's word. Although we had established schools in their villages they had not learned to read. We insist that as God has sent them a printed message, it is their duty to learn to read it, and that failure to do so shows lack of interest for both the message and the author of it. This rule is not applied to those over twenty-five years old. One young man was accepted in spite of the fact that he could not read, because he claimed his head would not learn. He had been a pupil for years and yet could not read the simplest syllables. Others were held back because of lack of experience. Several were not accepted because we were not satisfied with the arrangements for their marriages. We expect Christians to marry Christians and until we know they intend to do so, they cannot be baptized. Conditions such as these would be considered strange in America, but among these primitive and ignorant people we consider our rules wise and necessary.

At the examination of applicants by the missionaries and deacons any church member may be present and may take part in the proceedings. Some of the questions frequently put to inquirers here would cause astonishment in a similar meeting at home. The following will serve as illustrations: Do you pray with your wife? Are you in debt? What do you do when people persecute you, seeking your harm? Have you confessed to the losers your acts of stealing? Do you drink, smoke or gamble? What can you tell about the Holy Spirit? How can Jesus Christ forgive your sins? What is the meaning of baptism, and what does it tell to the onlookers?

We also had an interesting and important meeting in which we appointed four new deacons—two for Ikoko, one for Ntondo and one for the distant outposts among the Bolia tribe. Pray for us here that we may be so enabled to witness for Jesus that many more may be led to forsake the darkness and seek service with our blessed Lord.

Seeing Today Against the Background of Yesterday

By Alice B. Coleman

IN the yesterday of nearly fifty years ago, the field entered by Baptist women was bounded by the United States. The work was educational and missionary in Christian schools and in the home and Sunday schools. The first missionaries and teachers went to the negroes, the Indians and to communities on what was still quite truly "the frontier" where women and children were without Christian teaching through churches and Sunday schools.

Today the field of the Woman's Home Mission Society reaches from end to end of the United States, including Alaska, and extends beyond our limits to Mexica. El Salvador, Nicaragua, Cuba and Porto Rico. Today the people to whom our missionaries and teachers minister are, as of old, the negroes and Indians, but to them have been added the French, Germans, Italians, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, Finlanders, Roumanians, Hungarians, Poles, Syrians, Lithuanians, Chinese, Japanese, Spanish-speaking people in our country and in the countries and islands south of the United States.

In the yesterday of the early days there were less than ten missionaries and teachers. Today the roll of workers carries 297 names. It is equally true that the lines of work today are multiplied in number and are called by names unknown to those who first saw and felt the need and responded to its call. We have added to our vocabulary such terms as Christian Americanization, Christian centers, community centers, cosmopolitan groups, and daily vacation Bible schools, and we have adopted hospitals, clinics and kindergartens as fields for home missions.

But the fact that we are living in today does not mean that the work has come to a standstill and is no longer expanding. Before these words are read, another Christian center will have been dedicated—the newest, largest and most fully equipped, made ready in every possible way to minister to the foreign-speaking people of Rankin, Pa. The work of a Christian center has been carried on in that community for several years, but in old buildings, small and inadequate in every way for the rapidly growing work. Great steel mills, roaring and blazing by day and night, dominate the town. The families of the men who work in the mills are usually strangers in a strange land, with little or no knowledge of our language, unacquainted with our churches, and often utterly friendless. Rankin's Christian center will be a center of friendliness, of neighborly kindness, of Christian love, ministering to spirit, soul and body of those who come within its reach. Sunday school, Bible classes, clubs of all kinds for boys and girls, the laundry for the use of the mothers, the gymnasium for all, both young and old, the clinic for physical needs and the daily life of self-forgetting love shown forth in our workers—all these will be a beacon light to darkened minds and souls.

While Christian centers represent service to a community, Christian Americanization may be called a "win-one" work. One Christian woman, a volunteer worker, seeking to be a teacher and a friend to at least one woman from a foreign land:—this is the heart of Christian Americanization. This department volunteers, encouraging those already at work, and constantly seeking to awaken the interest of the churches in this form of personal service and to secure the organization of a Christian Americanization committee in every church. Last year 225 churches had such communities. But though the volunteer worker seeks to "win one," in the first place, the one almost invariably becomes many, for through the mother the children are reached and often the father also is drawn within the circle of friendship. The record for the past year was 2,341 volunteers and 40,000 individuals brought within their influence.

An outstanding need to today is trained leaders. This is emphatically true of the work for the negro race. The secondary schools are now largely manned by negro teachers, and in increasingly large numbers teachers and leaders in other professions must be adequately trained for leadership if they are to be qualified to assume the responsibilities which will rest upon them. This is also true in Mexico, El Salvador and Nicaragua. In Mexico we need more schools and stronger schools, not alone for the children of today who crowd a school as rapidly as we can open one, but for the sake of the leaders of tomorrow. From Nicaragua and El Salvador has recently come this challenge: Give us two high schools and El Salvador and Nicaragua can be evangelized in one generation. We need only to remember our own constant cry for leaders and for more leaders to appreciate the meaning of the same appeal when it comes from those who are practically destitute of men and women fitted by nature and adequate training for leadership.

How may we summarize conditions prevailing today in the fields of the Woman's Home Mission Society?

Some fields are unoccupied and the work has lapsed because of the with-nd themselves reading about religion ıd the Lord Jesus. My experience is ıat thus I can pretty nearly "hit 'em here they are."

It would seem to me that every pastor ɔuld put into some written or printed ɔrm a dozen or two of well thought out ɜrmons, and circulate them judiciously hen he does his visiting. He could thus ain personal, mental, spiritual touch ith many, not otherwise possible.

As far as possible let us cease to "hit m where they aint," and may the dear aster help us to "hit 'em where they e," to their good and his glory.

y, they have been moved "to seek the ord if haply they might feel after him, ıd find him." But they had not had ear light for their quest, and wherever en have closed their eyes against the ord that Jesus brought, and the veiled lendor of what he was, they have conıued to grope in darkness.

Apart from him men have had partial sion only. They have seen God as in glass darkly. At the best their conptions of him were inadequate, and at e worst they were grim and distorted. ven the chosen people to whom God as ever seeking to reveal himself were ow to lift their eyes to the widening ɔrizon, and pass in their conception om the God of the tribe and of the ıtion to the God of the whole earth. nai with its cloud of smoke, its lightngs, its thunder and the voice of the ümpet, with the awful terror which ese inspired, could not be forgotten. ɔd was glorious in holiness, his throne as established with justice, his law was rfect, but his demands were inexorable. ow and then to be sure like strains sweet music came assurances that he as merciful and gracious. He was en pictured as the father breaking his art over the wayward son, but the day the open vision was not yet.

It remained for one to come in whom welt all the fulness of the Godhead dily," who should live among men and what he was, by what he did and by ıat he said, show them what God was e. The prophets had told men much God but he could say, "He that hath en me hath seen the Father." All at wondrous life was as the shining a great light in which God was clear seen.

Again, that light falls upon man and ts out in clear relief his nature, and e far reach of his possibilities. To the estion: "What is man that thou art ndful of him?" there is no adequate swer apart from what shows in Christ. Some one has said, very truly I think, hrist was God's idea of a man." We well to remember the ancient formula ıich, along with its assertion of the ity of our Lord, affirms that he was erfect in humanity," and "consubstan1 with us." The actual achievements ıich make forever memorable the days of his flesh shine as ideals, each indicative of an inspiring possibility lying within our reach, if not within our grasp. What man was in the morning of the world when he stood forth fresh from the hand of God we may not know. What powers were extinguished in the tragedy of Eden we cannot tell. But what man may become, what man must become if he fulfils the purposes of God, we see in Jesus Christ.

Origen, I think it was, who argued that when God said, "Let us make man in our image," he had in mind not the man he made at the beginning, but man as he shall stand at last before the throne, redeemed and glorified. However that may be, it is certain that in the shining of this great light we see opening before our feet a glorious and an ascending pathway along which we may go towards far heights of being, and in the end, "be like him, and see him, even as he is."

How wonderful that light! How far it shines! There is no evil or form of error which does not shrink before it, and no depth of darkness which it cannot pierce. There is no living truth which it does not quicken, and no life in which it cannot kindle radiance. There is no upward path which it does not make bright, and no goal of attainment which it does not clothe with glory. There is no quality or attribute in God which it does not reveal.

Upon us hath the light shined. To walk in it is to be in the way of life, and to come at last to that city which, "had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the lamb is the light thereof."

Memorials of Indian Gratitude

Four new buildings at Bacone College, Oklahoma, marked the beginning of the new period in the history of this great school for Indian youth. These fine structures stand as memorials of Indian gratitude to those devoted missionaries who first blazed the trail of Christianity through the western world. Bacone College is but one evidence that the work of Baptist pioneer missionaries to the American Indians is bearing fruit.

Home Mission work supported by Northern Baptists includes missions among the Cheyenne, Commanche, Arapho, Kiowa, Wichita and Caddo tribes of Oklahoma; the Crow of Montana; the Shoshone, Ute, Piute and other mixed tribes of Nevada; the Mono and Chuckchansie bands of California.

Thousands of American Indians, the first Americans, have not yet been evangelized. Many are living in darkest paganism. They are depending on us for the gospel message. We must not fail them.

drawal of missionaries made necessary by the 25 per cent cut of last year which is in force this year also.

Some fields are undermanned and inadequately equipped. Last week a message came from a missionary stationed in one of our Indian fields in California which said that it would be impossible to carry on the work with any degree of success without a home and furnishings for the missionaries, an auto and two ponies. The missionaries are now living in two old rooms in the rear of the church which are utterly unsuited to human habitation and they are limited in reaching the homes of the Indians because they have only one aged horse and a buggy. The auto would take them swiftly through the valleys and the ponies are necessary for the other trips which carry them up the mountainsides. It is impossible for the society to meet any of these urgent needs.

Many fields are still unoccupied, without preacher, missionary or teacher. In California there are the Pitt River Indians in Shasta County and the Modocs in the northeastern part of the state. In eastern Nevada the Battle Mountain field, largely populated by the Washoes. In Montana, the Flatheads. Other groups and other races in the United States and still others in lands outside our own Mexico, and Central America, Cuba and Porto Rico. Fields are ripe and waiting, and people are longing and pleading for those who will lead them out of darkness into light. What shall we say to these things?

The Psychology of Inspiration
By GEORGE LANSING RAYMOND, L.H.D.
Formerly Professor in Princeton University
A most interesting and timely discussion with reference to the proper interpretation and use of the Bible. The author shows that, according to experience, truth is seldom entirely contained in any statement of it; that, according to experiment, a man's inner spiritual nature can be reached by inspirational influences not communicated through his physical senses; that, according to science, such influences affect the recipient, and are imparted by him to others, through the method of suggestion rather than of dictation, and that, therefore, a communication, however divinely true in spirit, may not be true, if interpreted according to the letter; because what one means by suggestive and non-dictatorial inspiration is that which leaves its subject free to give expression to its purport through forms of language influenced, more or less, by his own temperament, inexperience, and ignorance. At the same time, it is shown that this suggested and suggestive, rather than dictated and dictatorial, text is the very kind of agency most needed by a man's mind which cannot fully receive truth except by being made to think it out for himself: and which, in order to secure this result, must be left free to think it out in accordance with the natural laws conditioning all mental action.

Our Book Shelf

Tomorrow About This Time, by Grace Livingstone Hill. New York: Lippincott.

A well-written story that brings the reader to realize the responsibilities of a father even after the divorce court has done its modern work of separating a family.

Training for Power and Leadership, by Grenville Kleiser. New York: Doran.

A book for those who are willing to study in a thorough manner the practical methods which, properly applied to life, should produce success and leadership. The author knows his subject and writes of it in an interesting manner, and has arranged his material very well indeed.

The House of Youth, by Mrs. Maude Radford Warren. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. $2.

Mrs. Warren has covered substantially the ground of Arthur Train's novel of last season, "His Children's Children," and we think she has done her work with finer technique and deeper insight. She undertakes to portray the life of a group of young people in New York City, a group mad with the passion for pleasure, and in time reaping a bitter harvest from their sowing. A British writer has recently said, in a book reviewed elsewhere in these columns, that "the saddest thing in the modern world is men and women lost to themselves either in a restless hopelessness or in a luxury of external resources." This remark is faithfully amplified in "The House of Youth," with its narrative, vivid and at times startling and amazingly frank, of the hectic and wanton life pursued by Corinna Endicott and her set. Corinna comes of sterling American stock, and her decrepit old grandfather whom she loves and confides in, incarnates before her eyes the moral and spiritual ideals of her forebears. Three men become involved with her, creating the main problem of the book. Lust, cowardice and honest manhood contend for the mastery of her life; and the uncertainty of the outcome persists to the very last page. The story is irresistible in its interest, and wholesome in its attitude. One cannot but be sorry that such books must needs be written, for they remind us with painful emphasis of what we already knew concerning the house of youth which is in building in our present world. If we must have such books, however, it is fortunate that Mrs. Warren has written one; for her spirit and motives are fine, and she makes of the evil she describes a mean and ugly thing.

A Baby's Life of Jesus Christ, by Mary F. Holt. Published by the society for promoting Christian Knowledge. London—represented in the United States and Canada by the Macmillan Co.

The book was written for "John and David." It is a surety that thousands of other Johns and Davids and Marys and Marthas will listen entranced to the story of Jesus told in a manner that very little children can understand. There is an attractive colored frontispiece of Jesus and the little children.

Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, by Lewis Carroll. New York: Lippincott. $2.

No child's library—or, for the matter of that, no adult's library either—can be called complete unless it contains "Alice in Wonderland." "Alice" has long since become a classic. "You might better be remiss on Shakespeare than not to know your 'Alice'" remarked a university student. Hence the reason for ever new editions. The one published by Lippincott this year is a most attractive 'Alice.' It is a 240-page book printed in large-size type and charmingly illustrated. These illustrations include all of the original drawings by John Tenniel (without which an "Alice in Wonderland" would seem somewhat strange) and in addition elaborate color plates designed by Gertrude Kay.

Nancy Van Wyck is the emotional—at times passionate—motherless, almost fatherless heroine of this novel. From the time, as a little girl, that she makes her first conquest until, as a married woman, she settles her last one, by saying "I do choose," men are the plaything of her emotions. After her husband, David, goes to war and she begins to sense what she has lost, she starts the search with the determination that if she ever finds him she will search on for the happiness of unselfishness. The gross materialism of the last few years, the strife for freedom and democracy, the starving babies on Kerrigan Street, the conscienceless capitalist and the demagogue are all in this interesting story. The book stands for condition better than we have. It teaches plainly the truth rather than the pseudo-realism that moves so many.

A clergyman, while instructing a Sunday-school class, asked the children the meaning of "the quick and the dead." This seemed to puzzle them somewhat, but suddenly one small boy piped out, "Please, sir, the man as gets out of the way of the ortermobile is quick, and 'im as doesn't is dead."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

THE ORGANIST

History tells us that, after the Restoration in England, the appointment of an organist became an important function. He was first examined as to skill in playing. If satisfactory, he was questioned as to his views on things religious and, last of all, was required to sign a pledge to lead a sober, respectable life during his term of office. It is much easier to get a position today, is it not? We all love to feel we are "making good." There is a story told of a boy who came into a corner drug store and asked to use the phone. Granting him permission to do so, the proprietor was interested in the conversation that followed. Calling a large business concern in the city, the boy asked for the manager of one of the departments. "Mr. Smith?" he inquired. "Have you filled the vacancy which you recently advertised? Oh, you have? Is the boy who is filling the place perfectly satisfactory? He is? Then you do not think that you would consider another boy for the place? You wouldn't? Well, Mr. Smith, if anything should happen that you should wish to make a change or that the boy you now have does not prove successful, will you please call (giving a certain number) and ask for William Jones? Thank you." The proprietor turned to the boy and said: "Well, my boy, I am sorry that you were too late to get the job."

"Oh, that's all right," returned the boy, "you see, I'm the boy he hired!"

There is an example of getting concrete evidence of making good!

Another reason the minister often looks upon the organist as an outsider is that the organist looks at the music in the service only from a musical standpoint. He forgets that the music in the service is only a part of the service, intended to render effective the service itself and the teachings thereof. The music should be prepared and so rendered. The benediction is usually the sign for the organist to put on full organ and blow people out the doors, no matter what the last impression of the service happened to be. The prelude is merely, if you please, to create the atmosphere for what follows. The music in the service is a message in song and the postlude is to strengthen the keynote of that particular service, whatever it is. Sometimes it can best be done by not playing a note. I have seen a congregation walk quietly out of a service, speaking in whispers to each other, even after they were in the vestibules, merely because the service held such a sway over them and was not spoiled by the organist's throwing on full organ when the minister said his final "Amen." I never allow a piece of music to be played or a song to be sung that has any suggestion or association that will detract from the spiritual significance of the service or serve to take the mind of the listener elsewhere. There is such a world of music free from these entanglements that it is not necessary to put sacred words to "Mother Macree" or "Old Black Joe!" Any minister appreciates an organist who considers the music from this standpoint as well as from the musical standpoint.

Organists should get close to their ministers. You people who sit down in the pews can help a lot. The other day a famous actor, when given several curtain calls, made a little speech in which he thanked the audience for the splendid performance of the evening—meaning, of course, that they had played their part as listeners and critics with such genuineness that they had transmitted their good spirit and appreciation to the performers, making them able to give a more satisfactory performance than usual. Any person who does things in public will tell you that the audience has a big part in the success of a performance. So it is in a church congregation. If you think your minister preached a good sermon, if you think the choir sang unusually well this morning, wait a moment after the service and express the thought to them. Sometimes we musical directors put up program after program, of wide variety and type, and no one ever expresses a preference or shows the slightest interest (apparently) in what we do. We will try to give you what you like best, if possible. Suppose you had a cook in your home who selected the menu for your family, week after week, and no one ever said to her that he liked beef better than pork, or salad of one kind better than another. She would have no idea what sort of meal to keep on getting. That is what we are up against, in church circles. We rack our brains to give you a variety.

Organists should encourage congregations to express themselves freely as to what they like and do not like. Do not attempt to rule the situation like a czar, but be open to suggestions. After all, the people who pay our salaries and are compelled to listen to our programs should be allowed to make suggestions now and then. Even if you do not follow them out, it will give the member a lot of satisfaction just to make it! I would rather have people find fault than remain entirely passive to all that goes on musically.—Edwin M. Steckel in The Diapason.

Duet singing is very beautiful and congregations receive it gratefully. No branch of choir work needs greater preparation, however.

---

Contrary to the opinion of any number of ambitious church soloists, the average church attendant prefers a pretty, simple and impressive song to an oratorio air or anything florid in the "modern" style. At special services the big works should have their fling, because then the people expect them.

The oldest written music to English words is "Summer is i-cumen in," now in the British Museum, London. It is in a book which once belonged to Reading Abbey, containing a calendar of the abbey. "Summer is i-cumen in" is thought to have been written about 1240 at the latest. Writing of the tune in "Music and Youth" Nancy Gilford says: "Before me is a facsimile of the old MS. The feeling of it, music and words, seems to me to be as fresh and springlike now as it must have been almost 900 years ago, when some unknown man wrote in the monastery book a tune which was probably known to all the little country children in that part of England."

This commendation of RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES is given by Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Mr. Cluett has made an admirable selection in this volume, and one which is emphasized by the vital themes which the lessons expound and enforce. It should be used for domestic as well as public devotion. Pastors, Teachers, and religious educators may employ this lectionary as the basis for their work." By special arrangement, it has been made possible to send a sample copy to any church upon request. Association Press, 347 Madison Avenue, New York.

Of these there were 2,890 ministerial students and 2,007 volunteers for definite Christian service. Faculty, men, 935; women, 1,001; total, 1,936. Value of property, $29,439,710; value of endowment, $15,380,251; total valuation, $44,819,961.

The "Christian Science Monitor" in its issue of Nov. 15, advances editorially its proposal for ending war, or at least greatly lessening its likelihood: "The adoption of a constitutional amendment substantially as follows: In the event of a declaration of war, the property, equally with the persons, lives and liberties of all citizens shall be subject to conscription for the defense of the nation, and it shall be the duty of the president to propose and of Congress to enact the legislation necessary to give effect to this amendment. In accordance with this constitutional requirement, legislation would be enacted by which at a stroke the whole nation would be set to work to attain national victory. All possibility of personal profit would be eliminated. The hardy youth would still be subject, as now, to conscription for military service. But no longer would a fortunate class of persons employed in 'essential industries' exist. The riveter in the shipyard, the munitions maker in the factory would not, as in 1917, make preposterous wages in safety while his brother suffered and died in the trenches for a pittance. Labor would be conscripted equally with military service. But mere labor would not be working for the ordinary soldiers' pay in order that employers and investors of capital might reap golden profits. For profits equally with service would be conscripted. Capital equally with labor would be subject to the imperative demand of the state. The revolting theory that the state might command the lives of its youths, but that the money of the prosperous should be sacred, would be repudiated."

The Obscure Folk

OF THAT cloud of witnesses, with which we are surrounded, hosts are not known to us by name or reputation. Even of those whose names are familiar to us, few are known because of the outstanding work they have done, but only because of their relations to other outstanding personalities. The little widow slyly slipping her offering into the treasury, made a memorial for herself that will stand through the ages. There are millions in heaven's sight who are as meritorious as any whom we revere because they lived in the light of Jesus or Paul. These are thought of as a cloud, in scriptural imagery, so vast is their number. The common saints make up Christendom. The obscure Christians are the backbone of the church. One's hope for religion is strengthened when he has the opportunity of looking into the lives of humble folk who never do a good act with a thought of reward or appreciation. They are at their good works day after day and like the widow, never suspect that they are being religious. Yonder is an epileptic girl whose parents neglect her. Neighbors, touched by the child's helplessness, ask that they may provide her a home. For these simple-hearted, country folk to care for such a child is as fine a manifestation of infinite love as any recorded in sacred annals. Yet they do it without once thinking that they are doing anything meritorious. They are religious without suspecting it. The unheralded acts of human kindness are multitudinous. The saints are in unsuspected places.

During the month of November, Grand Island College received $5,343 from the estate of Mr. Swem A. Isaac of Pawnee City. With this gift work on a house for the president will soon be under way. In addition to this sum the alumni and former students have secured abou $2,500 to be used for the same purpos The house will be built on the campus when completed it will save the colleg at least $500 per year in rent.

At a special convocation of McMaste University, Dr. Howard P. Whidden, th new chancellor was installed. Amon the speakers on this occasion was D Edgar Y. Mullins, president of the Bap tist World Alliance. In the course o his address as reported in the Canadia Baptist "describing the different denom inational types of Christianity, Docto Mullins said that the Presbyterian rep resented the credal type, the Episcopa Church the hierarchial type, the Roma Catholic the sacramental, and the Un tarian the rationalistic type, while th Baptist view of Christianity may b described as experiential. Baptists ca never make a creed that is authoritativ that is binding on the conscience of any body. Acceptance of any confession o faith is voluntary. We have no author tative ultimate creed apart from the ne Testament that we can impose on any body, except where people enter int contractual relations to teach certai things. We have nothing we can impos on our denomination as a whole. W have cut away that support."

The Baptist laymen of Oregon a giving evidence of their vitality in man ways, but in one particular they a proving their devotion to the cause o the Master. They have launched a their special undertaking a monthl publication called the Baptist Spokesman, a business like periodical devote to Baptist undertakings in Oregon. Th Portland laymen's league is at work o ganizing the men in every church in th Willamette Association and is urgin upon the men in all of the associatio to do likewise. The laymen's movemen in the state is headed up by U. S. Bu of the Oregon State University and A ricultural College and the state counc is composed of a representative fro each association, as follows: Central, H. Merryman, Salem; Deschutes, H. Nordeen, Bend; Grande Ronde, Docto Moore, Baker; German, F. J. Berge Portland; Rogue River, Dr. M. R. Bri tan, Grants Pass; Swedish, Harley Ha gren, Portland; Umatilla, Roy Penlan Umpqua; J. E. Milligan, Eugene; We Willamette, U. S. Burt, Corvallis; W lamette, E. C. Callaway, Portland. Th purpose of the council is to coopera with the men of the local church in pr moting the following program: To g the men to accept greater service for th Master. To study how men can bett serve their church and denomination. T stimulate a greater interest in missiona enterprises. To give aid in forming each church and association of a la men's organization. To create a mobilize a great body of Baptist m who will take the Master into full pa nership, assume their responsibility denominational affairs, and stand f those great fundamentals of the fai that Baptists have always stood for. T hold a laymen's session at the next sta convention.

AND this is the sign unto you: ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest
And on earth peace among men
In whom he is well pleased!"

Fresh from the Field

Mr. F. S. Ethridge of Atlanta, Ga. has made a gift of $100,000 to Mercer University.

President B. M. Tipple of the Methodist College on one of the hills overlooking the Vatican in Rome, has resigned and will return to the United States. He has been in Italy fourteen years.

The Rogers Park Church, Chicago, has called Rev. Hershel R. Griffin, of Lebanon, Ind. He will begin his work Jan. 6. He was formerly assistant pastor of the First Church, Los Angeles. Rev. Herbert Ford, missionary in Porto Rico spoke recently at the church, his addresses being illustrated by stereopticon views.

The new $100,000 house of worship of the First Church, Anderson, Ind., was dedicated early in December. The church has now 900 members and is one of the strong churches of Indiana. Rev. E. L. Hamilton, a grandson of the celebrated Alexander Hamilton, is pastor. Dr. C. M. Dinsmore was pastor at Anderson before assuming the direction of the Baptist work in Indiana.

The Chicago minister's conference passed a resolution commending the Chicago Evening Post for its service in publishing in daily installments on its editorial page the Goodspeed translation of the New Testament thus "stimulating a very wide reading of the New Testament, doubtless making the contents thereof known for the first time to untold numbers of readers." The resolution was presented by Dr. M. P. Boynton of the Woodlawn Church.

An effort is being made to enlist 100,000 of our people in a scripture readers league by July 1, 1924. Mrs. Helen Barnett Montgomery has translated the four Gospels which will be widely used. Any one who reads the four gospels in this new translation or in any other will receive a certificate and button as soon as they notify the Publication Society that they have completed the reading. The movement is being promoted by the Publication Society.

The meetings of the Baptist ministers of Chicago have been of unusual interest during the past weeks. The devotional exercises are for a month in charge of one man. Rev. C. R. Osborn of the Morgan Park Church had charge in November and Rev. R. N. Van Doren of the Calvary Church for December. The speakers at recent meetings have been Dr. Edgar J. Goodspeed and Corporation Counsel Francis X. Busch, who spoke on "Law Enforcement." The meeting for Dec. 17 was held at the Second Church and was in charge of the evangelistic committee. The speakers were Dr. John Earl and Dr. S. J. Reid of the Tabernacle Church. The president of the conference is Rev. Swaney Nelson and the secretary Rev. C. S. Kerfoot.

The Summit Park Church, Battle Creek, Mich., has called Rev. J. J. Pease, who has been engaged for some time in evangelistic work.

The church at LaPorte. Ind., Rev. W. F. Bostick pastor, has been greatly stimulated by the special services under the leadership of Evangelists Littrell and Moody. The pastor baptized thirty-seven persons recently.

Pastor J. Oscar White of Indianola, Iowa, while in Chicago recently attending a board meeting of the B. Y. P. U. A. made THE BAPTIST a pleasant call. His church calendar reveals the fact that he is dealing with the big issues of life and leading his church to see things in the large.

Rev. D. R. Lagergren has closed his work as pastor of the Swedish Church at Menominee, Mich., and Mr. A. E. Applequist is acting pastor. It is hoped that the Swedish and English churches may be united under one pastor.

W. F. Hopp, chaplain of the Michigan state prison at Jackson, spoke at a father and son banquet in the Ganson Street Church of that city. In the course of his address he said that investigation failed to show one prisoner among the large number confined in Jackson who had ever attended a denominational college. He stressed the value of Christian education. Rev. B. H. Taylor is having a successful pastorate at Ganson Street.

Rev. George P. Howard, Sunday-school secretary for Argentina and Uruguay, representing the World's Sunday School Association, is in America on furlough, and while here is making a special effort to finance the printing of a Sunday-school song book in Spanish for there is nothing of the kind, with notes, in that language. "Fifty-five years ago," said Mr. Howard, "the first Spanish Sunday school in South America was started in the city of Buenos Aires. It was a small beginning, eight or ten children meeting in a private house. Today there are 110 Sunday schools in that city with an average attendance of nearly 7,000 per Sunday. The good work has spread until there are 250 schools in the rest of Argentina, about forty in Uruguay and over 1,000 in Brazil. The west coast can also give a good account of itself."

The Wellman, Kalona, New Haven and West churches in Iowa have worked out a plan for a combined parish and have called Evangelist Charles E. Hillis as pastor.

The new building of the First Church, Council Bluffs, Iowa, is nearing completion. A special committee is now working to secure a new pipe organ. The state convention will hold its next meeting in Council Bluffs.

Rev. W. E. Woodbury of the Trinity Church, Minneapolis, has accepted the call of the First Church, Melrose, Mass. Mr. Woodbury succeeded Dr. Lathan A. Crandall at the Trinity Church, when Doctor Crandall became editor of THE BAPTIST. He is a Massachusetts man and will be welcomed back to New England.

Cigarette advertising is to be discontinued in the Saturday Evening Post, according to a recent announcement. This decision upon the part of the Post will cause a loss in income of $300,000. It is further proposed to edit out of both pictures and reading matter all reference to the cigarette. There must be some good reason for this action upon the part of this great journal. Can you guess what it is?

New York is the largest Jewish city in the world. The Jewish population of the world is now about 15,000,000. In the United States there are 3,600,000 Jews and of this number 1,643,000 are in New York. The Jewish population make up 29 per cent of the total population. Warsaw is next 309,000 or 33 per cent of its population and Vienna next with 300,000 or 16 per cent.

According to the "National Advocate," the oldest temperance journal in the United States, Secretary Mellon's report showed that "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the federal government officers arrested 66,936 offenders. This does not look as if the liquor men were having it altogether their own way and enjoying the good time they would have us believe. In Pennsylvania alone the fines imposed amounted to $304,064.30. 280 automobiles were confiscated, 336 permits were revoked, and taxes and penalties of $837,423.36 collected. How long will they really enjoy this?"

"Sometimes when a man talks against war, he faces in rebuttal a question such as this: Wouldn't you go to war to protect the weak? The answer seems plain. A modern war to protect the weak—that is a grim joke! Look at the facts of the last war. This is the way it protected the weak: Ten million known dead soldiers; 3,000,000 presumed dead soldiers; 13,000,000 dead civilians; 20,000,000 wounded; 3,000,000 prisoners; 9,000,000 war orphans, 5,000,000 war widows; 10,000,000 refugees. What do you mean—modern war protecting the weak? . . . This is the conviction that grows in modern minds: war is no way to protect the weak." Yes, we know who said this in an Armistice Day sermon. We dare not tell for fear it might be considered heresy.

Who Can Guess Why?

One of the Advocates tells of a "fair-sized" church in a city of 100,000 which had exactly nine subscribers to the Advocate before conference and 169 shortly after conference. Can any one guess the reason for the added 160 subscribers? New members? No, same old crowd. New paper? No, same old journal. What was new? New preacher. That's all. The bishop doubtless sent the old preacher to some charge where blissful ignorance of the denomination's world tasks would not be quite so disastrous. We find exactly the same conditions but we have no bishop. Poor folks!

Killam's Kollum

Fifty Dollars for Two and a Half

In the early days of our ministry a Baptist newspaper came into our home, one page of which was called "Walks About Zion." The state superintendent said that it should be called the "Lies about Zion." He knew that it is possible to make a big story out of a small achievement. This is an art. Some men are apt students while others sin in an opposite direction. THE BAPTIST is trying to take the "bumptious bluster" out of its news. We buy blue pencils by the gross. If we were to print the copy as it comes from the hand of the copy makers, honesty would require us to dot the pages with —Advt. Two kicks this week. One man has a certain date when he would like to hold evangelistic meetings. And an interdenominational worker wants business. We have never promised anyone $50 in advertising with a subscription at $2.50. Brethren, let the editor's conscience be his guide. If he sins it will doubtless be in your favor.

May We Not Lose the "Mental"

A friend who has long known the writer wrote the new editor telling him that the old editor is "temperamental." We were at first perplexed. To be "temperamental" is not so bad but when you feel your "mental" slipping it means that soon only "temper" will be left. And we sampled the brand and it was "bad" temper. It seems to be much easier to lose the "mental" than to slough off the "temper." These two should never be divorced. They should be properly balanced. Our office editor tried to comfort us by saying "everything worth while is done by 'temperamental' folks." Then seeing our embarrassment she added, "I'm not saying you are temperamental." This subject is a bit too deep for us so we will leave the readers of THE BAPTIST to solve the problem. Our prayer is that the "mental" may be preserved.

They Say It with Knives

"If those who bought knives from Circle Number 5 will return the knives the money will be refunded." Thus readeth a notice in the calendar of the Calvary Church, Minneapolis. We cannot help but wonder how many circles were engaged in the traffic in knives. Why return the knives to Circle Number 5? THE BAPTIST is called upon to solve many mysteries, but this one is too much for us. THE BAPTIST however advise you to follow after the thing which makes for peace. Better return the knives!

Rev. E. H. Clark has resigned at Albion, Neb., and accepted a call to the First Church, Alliance. He has already begun his work on the new field.

Rev. W. L. Pettingill has resigned as pastor of the North Church, Wilmington, Del. to devote his time to the Philadelphia School of the Bible. He will close his work Jan. 1. Rev. C. M. Keen will become the pastor of the North Church.

Dr. C. R. Blackwell, now in his ninety-fourth year, has been compelled to lay aside all forms of service and is in serious doubt if he will ever resume correspondence with friends and publications. He yields to necessity. He is still editor emeritus of the Sunday-school publication of the Publication Society.

The General Education Board offered Furman University $175,000 on condition that $325,000 be raised within a specified time. On Thanksgiving day the amount was pledged within $55,000 and nine men became responsible for the amount. This means an added $500,000 to the endowment of Furman. Mr. B. E. Geer gave $100,000 of the amount.

Exercises were held recently marking the dedication presentation of the Edward H. Haskell home for nurses to the New England Baptist Hospital at Roxbury, Mass. The home is designed to harmonize with the new hospital buildings all of which have a domestic and home-like atmosphere. Colonel Haskell is the president of the hospital. This hospital sent out thirty-two nurses who volunteered for service during the World War.

The First Church of Kankakee, Ill., has recently rededicated its remodeled auditorium. President George W. Taft, who spoke upon the occasion, said that it was one of the most attractive places of worship he had ever seen. The church has an extensive program and the next step will be the erection of a modern building for the educational and social work of the church. Rev. Herbert Hines in the pastor of the church.

According to "The Lutheran," "about thirty-five foreign languages are spoken in the streets of New York City. Of these tongues thirty are used in worship in more than 200 churches, viz., sixty-two Lutheran, fifty-eight Roman Catholic, twenty-one Methodist, twenty Baptist, eighteen Reformed, fifteen Presbyterian, five Episcopal, five Congregational, four Greek Catholic, two "Evangelical," one Christian Science and one Swedenborgian. German is predominant in seventy-seven churches, Italian in thirty-six, Swedish in twenty-eight, Norwegian in eleven, Danish in three, Polish in eight, Dutch in six, French in five, Magyar in four, Czech (Bohemian) in four, Finnish in three, Lettish in three, Slovak in three, Chinese in two, Syrian in two, Spanish in two, Russian in one, Armenian in one and Greek in one.

Dr. John Kelman of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, returns to England as pastor of the Hampsted Presbyterian Church, London.

Hon. E. W. Stephens delivered the address at the centennial celebration of the First Church, Columbia, Mo. This address and other historical material has been issued in booklet form.

New Jersey Baptists have elected to the presidency of the convention Judge Horace Roberson, of Bayonne. He will carry on with a strong hand the work laid down by the late F. Wayland Ayer, who served the convention for years as its president.

Rev. C. M. Thompson, Jr., pastor of the church at Casper, Wyo., has resigned in order to accept the call of the church at Barbourville, Ky. He has had a good work in Casper. A number of persons have been baptized recently and the church is thoroughly enlisted in evangelistic effort. There are 146 members of the church pledged to give themselves to personal work and to win if possible at least one person to Christ and the church during the coming year.

Dr. Charles H. Sears and family were scheduled to arrive in New York Dec. 24. They sailed from Liverpool on the twelfth.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell recently celebrated the forty-first anniversary of his pastorate at Grace Temple, Philadelphia. One thousand persons sat down at a banquet in honor of the event. Three hospitals have been established under the care of the church and a great school has sent out thousands of students. What marvels within the ministry of one man!

Sir James Marchant, according to the British Weekly, is writing the official life of Dr. John Clifford. He expects to publish it within the next six months. Dr. J. C. Carlile in the same journal says of Doctor Clifford "His homegoing was almost ideal, to die in the midst of one's friends, without pain, with no lingering, with no regrets. Of him it may be said, 'God took him.' It was a translation rather than death. We are poorer but rejoice in his enrichment." The Baptist Times and Freeman issued a special number devoted to the life and ministry of Doctor Clifford.

Executive Committee Meets

THE executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention met in Chicago, Dec. 6, 1923. All members of the committee were present or sent regrets for absence. A large amount of routine business was attended to. Of special interest to the denomination was the report that forty-five of the "participating organizations" mentioned in the report of the committee on future denominational program had voted to ratify that report. There are sixty-two in all. Some of these "participating organizations" suggested some slight modifications in the structure of the board of missionary cooperation. Some others made financial conditions of cooperation which can be adjusted only after the board of missionary cooperation shall have been organized. The executive committee decided that two-thirds of the "participating organizations" had ratified the report and requested the law committee to prepare a statement of suitable amendments to the by-laws of the convention which would establish the board of missionary cooperation. This board will not be established until after the convention shall have adopted such amendments to its by-laws as may be necessary in order to establish the board.

Mr. W. G. Brimson was re-elected manager of transportation.

The Rev. Carl D. Case, of Oak Park, Ill., was selected as the preacher of the convention sermon, with the Rev. C. Wallace Petty, of Pittsburgh, Pa., as alternate.

The committee on program for the next convention reported in general outline.

The executive committee voted that the appropriation for the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America adopted by the Convention at Atlantic City should appear as an item in the budget of the executive committee of the Convention.

There was a full report of the committee to promote attendance upon the Baptist World Alliance showing that 60 per cent of all the American delegates to the Baptist World Alliance came from the Northern Baptist Convention.

It was also voted to arrange, if possible, for an annual exchange of fraternal delegates with the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland.

It was also voted to request the law committee to prepare a statement of amendments necessary to the by-laws to enable the executive committee to select the delegates of the Convention to the Federal Council to serve during the quadrennium between the meetings of the Council.

President Corwin S. Shank of the Convention has been asked by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society to go as its representative to Japan to bear the greetings of the society to the Baptists of Japan and to the communities of that country. The executive committee unanimously approved of this mission and requested that President Shank should also bear the greetings for the Northern Baptist Convention to our brethren in the empire and attend the conferences there on Christian matters. It is hoped that President Shank will accept both of these duties.

The meeting of the committee was pervaded by great enthusiasm and the spirit of earnest desire to promote the interests of the Convention and the work of the kingdom of God.

W. C. BITTING,
Corresponding Secretary.

The Lost Irene

"AND on earth, peace," was the song that ushered in the first Christmas. The glory of God and the good-will of men furnished the theme of the song which was set to the music of peace. Light was the theme of the anthem of creation when God said, "Let there be light," and all the sons of God shouted for joy. But when the new creation dawned in the birth of our Lord it was fitting that the heavenly host should sing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

Peace is our lost Irene. And peace is lost to many of us, because, first of all, we do not really understand the meaning or the majesty of peace. Peace is not to be pictured by the dead calm of an unruffled sea, nor by the motionless atmosphere of a hot, humid, summer evening; nor by the monotony and passivity of exhausted senility; nor by the undisturbed sleep of a child. If it is to be pictured at all it must be in colors of motion and activity against a background of calmness and poise. One artist caught the idea when he pictured peace in the form of a bird singing on the slender branch of a tree that overhung the roaring cataract of Niagara. Peace is an inner quality of the soul and not necessarily a quiet and harmonious environment. The most beautiful surroundings are frequently found to be an area of discord, while poverty and all its beggarly accompaniments often heighten the peace that does not depend upon circumstances.

There are three directions in which our lost Irene needs to be restored. Paul suggested the first when he said to the Christians of Rome: "Let us have peace with God," and to the believers in Corinth: "Be ye reconciled to God." Men have lost their peace with God because they have been unwilling to think of God in terms of love and have wanted their own way instead of his way. Some one has pointed out the fact that the younger son of the parable broke with his father when he said: "Give me," and there was no reconciliation and consequent peace until he changed his mind, came back home, and cried out in sincere penitence: "Make me." Whatever wrong thoughts he may have cherished of his father before starting to the far country were all dissipated when he came to himself and saw his father in the light of love. In the same way men have broken with God, the Father, because they preferred their own independence without regard to his good-will and loving purpose. Hence peace with God has been impossible. Only when men think God's thoughts and accept God's good-will as fully expressed in Jesus Christ can there be any reconciliation and peace between men and God.

The peace of a unified personality is another lost Irene among men. Most personalities are disintegrated and compartmentized. The will and the conscience, the ideal and the real, the inner motive and the outward appearance, the sacred and the secular, business and religion, are not doing team work. Solid walls of partition have been built between the body and the soul. Bodily instincts and appetites are indulged without reference to the soul, and the soul is smothered by the brute in man. The evil Mr. Hyde bullies the good Dr. Jekyll. Peace, or as we prefer to spell it, "p-o-i-s-e," is impossible under such conditions, and a divided personality is lost to the peace which angels sang at the birth of Jesus.

IT was to restore personal integrity that Jesus came into the world; this he did by demonstrating in his own life the perfect unity of body, mind and spirit, and by giving assurance to all who would follow him that their lives too would become unified and integrated. This is the only way of peace for a disintegrated personality. Equilibrium or balance is a symbol of the poise of personality. It is probably this that Jesus had in mind when he said to his disciples: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled neither let it be afraid." If we might be permitted to change the word, peace, in this connection to the word, poise, it would then read: "Poise I leave with you, my poise I give unto you." It is poise we need these days when nerves are all shot to pieces by the accelerated speed and high pressure of modern life; it is calmness we need in the midst of all the ugly prejudices and passions which run like molten metal out of the white heat of race and religious hatreds. The Psalmist was never more inspired than when he sang: "Fret not thyself, it tendeth only to evil doing." This high ideal is attainable only when we succeed in taking the living Christ into active partnership with us in our daily lives.

Peace has been lost among groups of men. Capital and labor are alienated, races are mutually exclusive, nations are far from an entente cordiale, and even within the same Christian communion, groups are organized into opposing camps. We do not have the data before us for comparison but for genuine discord, suspicion, prejudice and ill-will no atmosphere was ever more depressing than the atmosphere that has enveloped the world since the close of the great war. All the fine things predicted of the war failed of realization because men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles. Even the making of the treaty of peace was marked by the spirit and method that breed wars. Hence the nations today are just as far from genuine peace as if they were actually at war. This fact creates a world-attitude of mind which disturbs the peace of social groups all the way from the larger political groups to the smaller religious and family groups. Mutual confidence and good-will have been shattered by the strange revival of unholy fear, cruel suspicion and unfounded rumor. Our social Irene is lost.

But the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost. This fine verse has been robbed of much of its value because so often misquoted. It is true, Jesus came to seek and to save lost men and women, but he also came to seek and to save the fine things which men and women have lost. Among these lost things is peace—peace with God, peace with oneself, and peace with one another. It is all one peace covering the threefold relationship which one sustains to God, to himself and to his neighbor. Paul knew the way to peace better than any other interpreter of Christ, and in his epistle to the Ephesians he points the way with unerring aim. He covers the whole ground of peace on its religious, personal and social sides. As a matter of fact the entire letter is a treaty of peace. It begins and ends with a peace benediction thus indicating that peace was the uppermost thought in the mind of the writer. "For he is our peace," are the thrilling words with which Paul gathers up into one vital phrase all the rays of light shining on this fundamental experience and focuses them on the cross of Christ. The way of the cross is the way to peace, for the way of the cross is the way of sacrifice in the interest of reconciliation and unity and brotherhood. Let him speak for himself. "For he is our peace who made both (Jew and Gentile) one, and brake down the middle wall of partition, having abolished in his flesh the (racial and religious) enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; that he might create in himself of the two one new man (or race) so making peace; and might reconcile them both in one body unto God through the cross, having slain the enmity (between them) thereby." Then follows the eloquent passage covering the rest of chapter two, all of chapter three, and the first sixteen verses of chapter four, revealing the way to peace with God through spiritual reconciliation, to peace with oneself through the personal unity of the human spirit with the divine Spirit, to peace with one another through the new relationship of Christian brotherhood—all heading up in the cross of Christ spiritually and socially interpreted.

The religion of Jesus Christ holds the key to peace. The sermon on the mount is the charter of peace, the spirit of Jesus is the dynamic of peace, the cross of Christ is the cost of peace; but the charter must be incarnated in the lives of believers, the dynamic must be utilized by the church, the cross must be borne daily by every follower of Christ, if peace is to become more than a euphonious word. In other words, Christians must take Christ seriously and follow him literally if the world is ever to feel the stabilizing power of the religion of Christ. Peace comes by way of the second mile, and never by the way of "the pound of flesh," peace is bought at the cost of supreme sacrifice, and never by enforcing the law of retaliation; peace is maintained by cultivating and expressing the Holy Spirit of Christ, and never by yielding to the unholy spirit of Caiaphas.

Taught or Caught

SOME things cannot be taught. There is no school save the school of experience, and even that often fails to teach common sense. Common sense is instinctive, intuitional and congenital. It is caught, not taught. It is inherited and cannot be imparted by any educational process to the person who lacks it. When the disciples asked Jesus to teach them to pray they asked an impossible thing. Prayer cannot be taught as mathematics or language or science is taught. One can be taught to say prayers, read prayers, memorize prayers, but not to pray. True prayer is outside the sphere of academic systems. It lies in that region which we call the soul and depends for its spontaneity, spirituality and power upon that vital attitude of the soul called faith. In other words, prayer is caught, not taught.

May not this fact account for the gradual disappearance of fervent, effectual prayer from circles which depend wholly upon intellectual culture? From the rational side of things prayer appears to be an impertinence. Why should we give credence to anything that does not square with logic? Why attach any value to a thing that cannot be put in the curriculum of a college? If prayer cannot be taught, then it is useless. This might all be true if prayer could not be caught. But prayer is the finest symptom of a spiritual contagion. Exposed to certain spiritual influences, prayer gets into the blood, accelerates the heart action, energizes the nervous force, and gives one inspiration, vision and passion. This is the real cause of the outbreak of praying that accompanies a true revival of religion. Saul of Tarsus said prayers all his life prior to his conversion, but when it was announced to Ananias of Damascus, "Behold, he prayeth," Saul was then praying in reality for the first time because he had caught the vision and presence of the living Christ.

The Honesty of the Bible

AMONG all the traits of the Bible few are more impressive than its sheer honesty. It is true in this to the central aversion of its central Figure. Our Lord was not chiefly concerned with sins of the flesh, sad as they are, but with sins of the spirit, and most of all he abhorred hypocrisy. He uses no other word so stinging as "hypocrites!" And that is of the very genius of the Bible throughout. It is out and out for reality. There is no fictitious dressing of ugly facts in dainty garments as far as the Bible is concerned. That is one of the obstacles it has to overcome with some men and with a certain type of society. Many fastidious souls would like to have the Bible expurgated here and there in order not to offend nice ears. Some men are outraged by the fact that parts of the Bible are wholly unsuited for pulpit or other public reading. Where there is any authority for supposing that all the Bible is intended for public reading, they do not say. But they do question why such passages could not have been left out entirely? Why not tell the story of David and Judah and the others without these dark chapters? Because the Bible is an honest book, telling the true story of life. If only these things were not in the life of men, there would be no occasion to put them in the story. But an honest story has to tell them.

And yet it is the very honesty of the Bible that prevents its telling such a story with tongue in cheek as salacious books would tell it. No man was ever encouraged in his wrong by the story of the sin of man in this honest book. Sin is not a tidbit to roll on the tongue of readers; it is grim reality to be faced as it actually is, ruinous, despoiling, shameful. It adds no touch of glory to the character; it leaves a stain instead. This is the fact in life and this is the fact in the Bible. In salacious books which try to tell similar stories there is no mistaking the readiness of the writer to taste the sin with relish and condone it. Sometimes characters are spoken of as to be loved because of their magnificent sinning. Nobody says such a thing of a Bible character. There are no magnificent sinners in life; there are none in the Bible. They occur only in fiction and the Bible is not fiction.

This same trait of honesty makes the Bible an unpalatable book to certain sublimated optimists. It paints a portrait of humanity which is not acceptable to men who have only bright colors on their palettes. From first to last the scripture paints humanity with a dark streak requiring redemption. There is good ground to think that in some way God would have manifested himself to humanity through incarnation even if there had been no sin. But that is purely speculative, for the one assured thing about our Lord's appearance is that he came to save his people from their sins, that he was manifested to take away sin, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. That he did manifest the Father to humanity and make known his will to men is true. But his errand was for the correction of that ruinous dark streak that is so evident to readers of the Bible and so easily overlooked by some other writers.

The Bible is, nevertheless, the most optimistic book about humanity that exists. Man is made in the image of God; he is made a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honor; he can have fellowship with God, and he is to become like him, for he shall see him as he is. But there are no biblical rhapsodies on this theme. There is not a page which puts anything else ahead of God's proposal of redemption for sinful men. The view of sin is always there. Men who object to being reminded that they are sinful will never learn on that basis to enjoy the Bible.

But it is the honesty of the Bible that makes it utterly reliable for humanity. The man it proposes to save is no figment of imagination. He is the real man that every man, if himself honest, finds in himself. No man has fallen so low that he cannot find his fellow in this book and see that moral double of his receiving grace for redemption. And no man rises so high that he does see above him some man in this book who like himself still needs sustaining grace. No man is beyond hope; no man is beyond need. If the Bible challenges a man to be honest with himself, it enables him to be hopeful for himself. He cannot do without Christ, for he needs him. He need not do without Christ, for all men's need is in Christ fulfilled.—The Continent.

Eternal Vigilance

"TO train a generation to respect the law and to obey it is the task confronting the Christian church today," says W. A. Morgan in the Record of Christian Work. "To build up sentiment for law enforcement is a difficult task. Prohibition as a theory brings deprivation to no one, but prohibition as a fact takes champagne from any who desire it. Constant pressure from rich and poor is brought to bear on lawmakers and the officers of the law. It is not easy for these men to stand in the face of strong influence and unpopular criticism. Those who are thirsty shout louder than those who desire no wine. The dry forces may not be called upon to outshout the wet, but they are challenged to make firmness out-influence noise. It is the duty of every Christian to expect law enforcement, and to back all officials to the limit in their efforts to bring to justice those who break the law. There are enough Christian people to bring about and to maintain good conditions, but the danger is that good men and women will not speak and act, while thirsty men and women both shout and work. The Constitution is challenged. The churches must stand as a unit for law and order."

The Reality of Christ Today

Christ has come. He is here. He is able to unveil the Father and establish the Kingdom of God, making the world a Brotherhood.

BY FRANK L. ANDERSON

SYSTEMS "have their day and cease to be." Opinions come and go. Ideas of God and of life pass away. All interpretations are kaleidoscopic. "Whether there be knowledge, it shall be done away." What men would die for in one age is cast into the junk pile of antiquated ideas the next. Great vital philosophies accepted as true once are now of interest only to students of the history of ideas. "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity, says the preacher." Is the preacher himself a part of that vanity of vanities? Is the one who observes the ever-changing stream of human thought himself the creature of a day fading into unreality when tomorrow comes? What about Jesus Christ? We are not asking about his historicity. There can be no doubt there. Is he of yesterday and not of today? Has he, too, had his day? Has he come to the men of today as he came to the men of yesterday? Has he kept up with mankind? Is he our contemporary? Do we find him in ancient history with the great of those days and still the same Master in our modern history? Or do we of today look for another to lead us as he led men in days gone by? Does he make the appeal in our day that he did when men left their nets by the seaside or their government office in Capernaum? Has he the same power to win, to transform, to enlist men today that he had when his followers faced Jewish Sanhedrins, Roman governors, and arrogant ecclesiastics in the days of Luther and of Knox?

A Past Christ Not Enough

It is not enough to point to a Christ who was, who taught, who did great works, nor even who promised to do even greater deeds in the future. The reality of Christ in the life of today cannot be tested by the standards or ideals of any past age. He must speak to the men of today, win them in terms of today, enlist them in the work of today, lead in the solution of the personal and social problems of today. The kingdom Christ founded has grown, become more complex, more vast during these centuries. Can the founder build the superstructure? He did a great work at the beginning, can he do a still greater work in the process of building on the foundation already laid? Has he changed with the changing kingdom so that he and man can still meet, he as Saviour and Lord and man as follower and disciple? That is the question. The thinking, living man of today calls for a Christ who can meet him where he is with his problems of living. These are the real problems. He who thinks that Christ's supreme task is to help men in death only will not care for what has just been said. We cannot argue with him. Christ must help living men to live. If he cannot do that he is superfluous and our living man will look for another. Christ who fitted into and solved the problems of Paul must fit into and solve the problems of John Jones who lives on the streets of today where the people surge to and fro as they did when Jesus saw the multitudes of his own day, had compassion on them, and met their needs. John Jones, not Paul, not the multitudes of the past, must sit in judgment of the reality of Christ in his life now as Paul nineteen centuries ago was the judge of what Jesus did for him.

"The Master is too great to be made the subject of extemporaneous judgment. The magnitude of Jesus calls for reverent appreciation." These words of Dr. George A. Gordon, pastor of the New South Church of Boston, help us to have patience, compel us to examine our own selves relative to our qualifications to form opinions of the Master of the Christian centuries. He encourages our examination of his credentials. He does not demand blind faith. "Come and see" for yourselves. Put my message to the test in your life, personal and social.

We must go back, however, to the record of his life in Palestine. There can be no Christ for us today unless he is the Christ of the Gosepls continued through the Christian centuries. He made a tremendous impression on the people of his time. That story is told in four simple accounts. The writers seem to have no other object than to tell what they know or had heard from competent witnesses. They tell their story in a straightforward manner and in an unadorned style. No one can read the accounts without being impressed with the honesty of the men who set themselves to the impossible task of doing justice to the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. They were merely sketching that character. Theirs was no "extemporaneous judgment" and theirs was a spirit of "reverent appreciation." But each gave his view, gave one aspect of Christ. Together they give us a picture of him who went about doing good, a picture that will never cease to attract saints and sinners, scholars and simple men, rich and poor. The church can never in safety separate itself from those records. Prof. William Adams Brown well says of the church, "She has seen in the Christ of the Gospels the creator rather than the creature of the Christian experience, and ever turned back from the imperfections of her own attainment to the undying ideal there presented." When the church has tried to free itself from a creedal, metaphysical, dogmatic Christ it has always gone back to the Gospels. So have the opponents, however. But the latter have read their creed into the simple story of Christ's life and have counted the rest as unbelievers. The true method is to test the creeds by the Gospels, not the Gospels by the creeds. But there is the difference between the message and the form it was presented in in those times. The form was different even then. Matthew puts his message in the language of the Jews, Luke makes a more universal human appeal, and John shapes his to fit into the circle of men and women who had come under the influence of the Logos doctrine. Here we have today examples for us to follow.

IT is not enough to point to a Christ who was, who taught, who did great works, nor even who promised to do even greater deeds in the future. The reality of Christ in the life of today cannot be tested by the standards or ideals of any past age. He must speak to the men of today in terms of today, enlist them in the work of today, lead in the personal and social problems of today.

The Message and the Presentation

We, too, in order to help men to make real the Christ of today are in duty bound to pour the message into the forms of thought and life dominant now. Remember the teaching about the wine and the wineskins. Prof. John M. Coulter—one of America's greatest men of science, and a reverent Christian—in discussing religion and science speaking of the glory of the gospel that "it remains the same through all changes of human thought," says, "If its claims are true, nothing can be taken from it or added to it. But it is also true that its presentation must be adapted to current knowledge and current habits of thought. No more illustrious examples of this can be cited than the Founder of Christianity and his most successful messengers. All of these adapted the message to those to whom it was given. It had acquired no formal hereditary dress, but dwelt among men as it found them. The message is never changing, but the presentation must be ever changing." (Religious Education, August, 1923.) The tragedy in so many lives is that they think they must accept the "presentation" in the same spirit they receive the "message." Many a man's faith is wrecked in his trying to do so. He may be saved if he can be led to see that the "presentation" is temporal, but the "message" is eternal.

What are some of the elements in the reality of Christ for today? In answering that question the writer can but speak for himself in the light of what he has learned from the study of the Gospels and from the tracing of that light that has come in fulfilment of the promise of the continuous guidance of the Holy Spirit who would take the things of Christ—the Christ of the Gospels—and make the truth as it is in him more real to his disciples. There is the reality of his humanity. "The word became man and lived with men." He grew in stature and in wisdom and into favorable relations with those around him. When we say he was the ideal man we do not separate him from us except as the ideal is separated from the ordinary. In him the ideal and the real were one. There was no consciousness of failure, defeat, disloyalty. We see in him the measure of our capacities; we also see the distance—unmeasurable distance—between him and us in character. But he was not ashamed to call us brethren. Therefore the ideal does not discourage us. We see man at his best in Jesus. We see and take courage. The ideal challenges us to set ourselves to the task of achieving in the realm of character. We have faith in ourselves as we feel the radiance of his perfect manhood. A new meaning is put into that great statement that God created man in his image. In Jesus we have the interpretation in the language of achievement and full expression of the image of God in man. No one need fear the results of the study of modern science regarding man so long as men fasten their eyes on the Man of Nazareth. Man in Christ takes the place of ruler over the works of God. His concern should be not to discover his origin in terms of biology but struggle for the supremacy of the spiritual in his own life, looking unto Jesus as his ideal and helper.

The social question centers in the man Jesus Christ. That question is as old as the race and its essence is the relation of personality to property. Shall property serve man or shall man serve property? That is the social question. Strife, hatred, enmity, war—these cannot exist in the presence of the ideal man. Can we imagine Jesus going forth to kill his fellow man? Can we imagine Jesus advocating a national policy that favors the strong and works against the weak? Can we even think of Jesus living in luxury while the world starves? Can we justify international rivalry that is the cause of wars in the name or endorsement of Jesus? God forbid. The Christian conscience forbids it. We need not another ideal for the personal life, and he sets up a standard for all social relations. Put him to the test and see what happens. "If Jesus Christ is a man and only a man" I'll follow him. His is the authority of the Perfect Man.

The Father in Jesus

There is the reality of his Godlikeness. This is not a theological essay and therefore I do not use the terms of theology. The inner nature of the Father—His holiness, love, sacrifice—is discovered in Jesus Christ. In him man first finds himself and then finds God in terms of a human life. "A God better than the Father of Christ is for man inconceiveable." Jesus said, "He that has seen me has seen the Father." That is enough for faith, for knowledge, for life. He and the Father are one in character, love, purpose, spirit, holiness, suffering for sin, and rejoicing in the obedience and love of men and women on earth. No person in history has so influenced our view of God as Jesus has. He is the perfect revelation, image, shining forth of God. He does more than tell the world about God; he brings God to men in a way men can understand. "He was God's self-expression in humanity."

THE social question centers in the man Jesus Christ. That question is as old as the race, and its essence is the relation of personality to property. Shall property serve man or shall man serve property? That is the social question. Strife, hatred, enmity—war—these cannot exist in the presence of the ideal Man. Can we imagine Jesus going forth to kill his fellow man? Can we imagine Jesus advocating a national policy that favors the strong and works against the weak? Can we even think of Jesus living in luxury while the world starves? Can we justify international rivalry that is the cause of wars, in the name or endorsement of Jesus? God forbid.

"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." The perfect, ideal man is the perfect medium through which God makes himself fully known to men. He is the only, because complete, Word of God.

There can be no reality for us—for any man unless we put him to the test in our lives. No man can find the Father in the Son until he follows on to know what the Teacher has to give. He cannot find reality by means of theological controversy over terms that belong not to human experience, but to philosophy. It was the personality of Jesus that won the men of Galilee. Through the centuries seekers have found their feeling after God satisfied in him. The soul that hears in the voice of Christ the voice of the Father is not deceived. He knows the Father for the Son has revealed him. "My Lord and my God" is a confession that men today may make with even greater confidence and assurance than when it was first made in the morning of the day of Christ.

There is the reality of his Saviourhood. He came as a Redeemer, as an Emancipator of man. The perfect lived with the imperfect, finding himself in the same bundle of life with the sinful, defeated, broken and bruised men and women. Some thought that there was nothing for such except destruction. They were in bondage to this fear of God whom they looked upon as a hard, cruel, avenging, punishing God. Jesus came not to condemn but to save men. It was the gospel that he brought. He told men that God values even the sinners; in fact will ban the righteous to go out to find the lost. Jesus summed up in one sentence the purpose of his coming when he said, "The Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost." What inexpressible joy came to those who were looking for redemption from sin when they found that he did actually bestow upon the men of his day the life of freedom and release from personal sin and from the yoke of ecclesiastical autocracy that laid burdens upon men impossible to carry. The cross was the cost of loyalty to the Father's will. In his death he revealed the principle that the just must suffer for the unjust, those who have the deepest spiritual and intellectual insight must suffer at the hand of and in behalf of those who live on the lower levels of life obedient to the dictates of prejudice, crudeness, set against the light and bound by the chains forged in disobedience to truth. Jesus made it clear that he obeyed a principle of life in this sacrifice. Whoever would enlist as his followers must obey that principle, deny the authority of the self and accept the principle of the cross, the denial of self.

The Glory of the Cross

Jesus saw the glory of the cross. The giving of his life was an instrument for the sake of the human harvest of men who would be saved unto a life of unselfish, meaningful service in the kingdom. The cross to him meant power adequate to win the world to see life and to live it in the spirit of unselfish devotion to God's will and purpose for mankind. Perhaps there never was a time when men understood that principle and obeyed it in their daily lives as they do today. That principle is leavening commerce, industry, education, the professions, politics, world relations. It is the law that is growing in potency. The saving power of Christ is made clearer and clearer in the larger life of today. The reality of that power is not being expressed in fine interpretations but in the growing life of Christ, conscious or unconscious, in the great social movements of our day, that are expressing the great ideals of Jesus clearly told in the judgment scene in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, in the sermon on the mount, the parables of the good Samaritan and the rich man and Lazarus. The emphasis today is on what a man is saved from. The practical man is of the opinion that a man is not saved from sin, born again, unless his life is a life of honesty, uprightness, helpfulness, love in human relationships. There is the reality of his supreme authority in religion and in morals. He was conscious of that when he said, "Ye have heard that it has been said....But I say unto you." The religion and the ethics of the olden times must not dominate the world. A new Master has appeared. He cuts himself loose from tradition, he condemns all human ideals as supreme, he speaks as one having authority, not as one who is the echo of tradition. He utters the word of God to men—direct, simple, tender, gentle, meek, final. His message is original, first hand, real.

Men today will not have a pagan, arbitrary, crude, military view of God. That God is their devil. They will have their God interpreted in terms of Jesus Christ—or have no God at all, Christ has had a chance to speak during the last half century. The Gospels have been studied, more lives of Christ have issued from the press during the last fifty years or so than in all the previous centuries of the church. The world was fed on a kingly Christ, kingly like caesars and czars. That has passed except in Christian circles where autocracy still rules in religious teaching. The world has looked at the Supreme Face and will have no other in which to see God. Theological doctrines of God must conform to that Face.

"That one Face, far from vanish, rather grows,
Or decomposes but to recompose,
Become my universe that feels and knows."

In that Face man finds God real convincing, winning. In that Face man finds the ideal for living as he finds expressed in human language his thought of God. Jesus Christ gives man a sense of the reality of God and in him he finds the Lord of his life, individually and socially, for time and for eternity.

"If Jesus Christ is a God,—
And the only God,—I swear
I will follow him thro' heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea and the air."

But I must close, incomplete and inadequate as the statement is. We are classed as his followers. Let us then, follow, not guide, not even defend him. Our task is to present him to our day. He is here. He has come. How he came was a problem for the Sender. That was the Father's business. If we really follow him there will be no time for anything else. Men and women who relive Christ today are the only defenders. They make Christ real to the people of today. They will learn to believe in Christ only as they believe in us—the lives that we live in the Spirit of the everlasting Christ "closer to us than breathing and nearer than hands and feet." Christ has come. He is here. He is mighty to save, able to unveil the Father and establish the kingdom of God first within the hearts of men and then in their relationships to one another, making the world a brotherhood. "Master, let us walk with thee."

The Coming

By Mary Brent Whiteside

. . . Grim paving stones shall know his feet,
And in the street,
From upper Broadway, going down
To Chinatown,
He will find friends, "I walked with them,
One morning in Jerusalem."
And facing sin, his lips will smile and say,
To some frail woman of the scarlet way,
In words that are still marveled at, today,
"Go, sister, nor do I condemn."
But when men ask for miracles; to see
Some loved form loosened from the chains of death;
His mind will turn again to Nazareth,
And "If they seek these greater things of me,
"There must be greatness in their souls," says he.

I like to think he'll walk in country lanes in spring,
And touch the sweet white hedge-rose with his hand,
While timid things that creep, and things that sing
On jeweled branch, or flashing wing,
Will understand,
And brush his fingers, looking in his eyes,
With bright, but inarticulate surprise,
And he will whisper, as he used to do,
"O little furred and feathered creatures; ages through,
"My heart has claimed for its brothers, too."

Still men will say, "Is this an avatar,
"Who enters Boston in a motor car,
"And hurls no fierce denunciations from afar?"
And hear his answer: "All things pass;
"It were not seemly now to ride an ass."
Yet shall be banquets with the publicans again;
Sleek office holders; public men;
Lawyers and brokers, and at ease
With all of these,
His lips will smile at doubtful tale and jest,
Responding gently when addressed,
While only his deep eyes will say,
"Brothers, there is a better way."
And only his own heart will know
The kindling glow
That warms into intensity
When in a secret haunt where evil sups,
He hears a drunkard in his cups,
Hail him as "Brother" openly!

And when the very humanness of him
Turns deep weariness of mind and limb,
He will climb upward in the dawn again,
Above the huddled shadows that are thought of men,
And talk with glimmering wind and flushing cloud,
And the white morning star, aloud;
Then, after an immortal hour there,
No other heart but his great heart could bear,
He will return; come softly down
To the awakened town,
And stop beside a little factory girl—
Her brain awhirl
With longing for some silken gown
A glittering shop displays;
Thinking of ways—
And he will whisper, "That soft hue
"Colors the dawn clouds through and through,
"And God has painted them for you."
Yet might he quaintly add, "Had I the gold
"My two cupped hands would hold,
"Trust me to buy this rosy trifle for you, too."

Doubtless, he will not lack a roof and bed,
But pay the price like any drummer at an inn,
And when his morning tasks begin,
Wearing a felt or straw on his head,
Will take the subway or a bus,
Like all of us.
And we may sit beside him, wondering why,
The quiet stranger has so calm an eye!
But if he ventures to express
Some bold opinions in the press,
That win the world's attention, and its praise
For nine long days,
A voice will cry: "How can his words be good or true?
He comes from the same city that I do!"

So he will come and he will go,
And what new portents shall there be to show?
Only a pale saint of the latter day,
That was a woman of the scarlet way? . . . .

Two Ways of Meeting Evil

By Bernard C. Clausen

Jesus will appeal if we succeed in showing him. He does not need a scaffolding of our clever devices. Pull down the scaffolding and boldly reveal him. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

UNLESS I am mistaken, The Baptist has no more room for literary and dramatic criticism than has the frankly Christian pulpit. There are so many other things that cry out for saying, and the ability to make room for secular comments which have slight bearing on the Christian message, betrays a neglect of the Christian message. But now and then, in literary and dramatic fields, there is an event which has specific application to the tasks of the church. When confronted with such an occurrence, that church is unworthy that allows prejudice to blind its eyes. If ever a play held significance for the church, that play is "The Fool." And we have no right to survive these days of its popularity, unless we are willing to inquire sincerely, "What must the church learn from 'The Fool?'"

We are confronted at the outset with the adventures of its author. Channing Pollock was born in 1880, and as a young man had become well-known for his creative skill in the drama. Author of "The Pit," "In the Bishop's Carriage," "Such a Little Queen," "Roads of Destiny" and other well-known plays, he moved constantly in that rather rarefied atmosphere of culture to which such success gives entrance. He read the best books, met the great people, found his fame an "open sesame" into extraordinary privileges.

"Churchianity"

Yet in all that broad experience, he never went to church, never studied religion, never read the Bible. He devised a label for all that side of life. He called it "churchianity," and he brushed it aside as having no appeal to him.

One day Basil King, Pollock's friend and an author of world fame, suggested that a man of broad culture and wide reading ought to be ashamed of ignorance in Bible literature. "If you read that book for no other reason, read it for the perfection of its style, the beauty of its language, the power of its character studies," said King.

Pollock reluctantly and dubiously took King's advice, and bought a copy of the New Testament. He was carried away with it. The stories gripped him so that he could not leave it alone. One day he went to the garage to run the car out ready for a trip with Mrs. Pollock. His wife waited for over an hour. Then, with excited visions of an asphyxiated husband, she rushed back to the garage in search of him. He was seated comfortably in one of the automobile seats, quietly reading the pages of the New Testament. He had become inextricably caught in the toils of that Master of men, Jesus.

If we are tempted to write Pollock off as an exception from whose experience nothing can be implied, we are neglecting one of the most significant trends of our time. Modern literature is full of the traces of just such adventure. "Painted Windows" tells us the secret of Maude Royden, that lovely woman-preacher, whose wistful voice clothes with new eloquence the precious gospel, and whose syllables of enlightened interpretation are heard all round the English-speaking world. She spent her girlhood in a home of typical English culture, where mental gymnastics were the after-dinner delight, and where pride in learning was the only boast. She went to Oxford, religionless, bearing no memories but malice out of her parents' questionless formality. Once in college, her interest in philosophy led her into acquaintance with Plato and Aristotle. One day she suddenly realized that in all her research she had completely overlooked one name—Jesus of Nazareth. She determined to be fair enough to study him until she knew as much about him as she did about the Greeks. She did not care to investigate what creeds were most nearly typical of his expression, nor what church, if any, he founded. She viewed him as one of a large group of interesting minor philosophers. What did he say? What did he propose as a solution to the world's puzzle. What was his secret of successful living?

Having studied him as a philosopher, she began to respect his judgment, and she decided to try out his theory against the bruising punishment of London's slums. And she emerged from the years of testing, glad to claim him as Lord of her life. Today she is preaching him with a winsome earnestness which ranks her high among his most glorious messengers.

We may affect to be quite calm before such results. We may claim to be quite unsurprised that Jesus can conquer a modern mind if only we give him a chance. We may be supercilious in our proud, "We told you so!" But the root of the matter for the church lies much deeper.

The appalling thing is not that Jesus succeeded in enslaving these minds, but that they never saw him until they deliberately sought him in the pages of the Gospels. Pollock and Maude Royden were living in civilized Christian communities, not on the far frontier of pagan heathendom. Pollock numbered among his friends hundreds who were professedly Christians. He passed scores of Christian churches every day in his ordinary travels. Maude Royden had had her spiritual life actually forced by the superheated atmosphere of an ecclesiastical determination. Yet neither one had ever caught sight of Jesus!

Pollock had scorned what he called "churchianity," and when he read the Gospel story he gasped at the realization that all this scorned ritual and form and pretension were attempting to express this lovely Christ of the book. Maude Royden looked up from the printed page and with tears dimming her eyes whispered. "Is this Jesus?"

The churches, purposing to reveal him, had succeeded only in concealing him. Ritual, creed, ecclesiastical organization, had not turned men toward him. They had turned men away. They had effectually hidden the beauty of him.

We churchmen distrust his power to attract. We load him with the scaffolding of our own clever devices. We talk about everything else as we lead up, by rhetorical steps, to a timid mention of Jesus. We surround him with the trappings of misguided devotion. Pollock's experience clearly proves that in a host of cases we fail completely of accomplishing our intention. All our well-meant anxiety for Jesus is futile foolishness. He will appeal if we succeed in showing him. He does not need our cleverness. Pull down the unnecessary scaffolding, and boldly reveal him. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Another Lesson

There is another lesson for the church in the adventures of "The Fool." Pollock wrote it years ago, and submitted it full of high hopes. He was no untried playwright. He had successes to his credit. His literary productions had piled up magnificent runs. He believed this to be his masterpiece. He presented it confidently to the managers. He peddled it everywhere. No one would take it. We cannot assert with any degree of assurance what considerations were dominating the managerial minds as they turned back the play. Were they in search of those salacious lines which would be repeated with smirking whispers as men passed through the lobby after the play? They could find none on the pages of this drama. Were they demanding the lurid situation which would be sure-fire success with the sensation hunter, and which could be depended upon to challenge that greatest advertising asset in the play-world—the fierce, resentful criticism of the irate clergy? Whatever they were asking, they did not find it. For they rejected "The Fool" with a unanimous scorn which might have broken the spirit of a less seasoned craftsman. Channing Pollock was made of sterner stuff.

At last, on the author's personal insistence and responsibility, "The Fool" was produced in Los Angeles in July, 1922. It was at once accorded the honor of an absolute popular success. When its run began in New York, the demand for seats was so overwhelming that extra matinees were played every afternoon until the actors were utterly exhausted. The metropolitan production drew 350,000 paid admissions in seven and one-half months. Seven travelling companies are now on the road with the play, appearing before audiences which total 115,000 a week. The prospects seem to assure an aggregate audience of five million people this season.

This seems like a typical fairy story in which the obvious moral is, "Be good and you will be happy, as well as play to crowded houses even in one-night stands." But the church must learn a far more subtle lesson than that. We are interested not in what happened to the play, but in what is happening to the stage through the play. What is going on in the minds of those managerial despots, who could not find enough smut in its lines to justify the expense of production?

They are observing to their dismay that they missed their guess. They are being treated to a demonstration of the fact that decent people will say a wholehearted yes to a good thing. They are quailing under the implications of this knowledge. And the impress of this fact is far more salutary than that other conviction which so many of them possess —that if you put on a thing which is raw enough to attract the protests of the church, you can have guaranteed success and crowded houses as long as you can stay in town.

A thrill is sweeping through modern drama. It is the thrill of adventure in clean fields of thought. The box-office is registering a wonderful thing. The public is beginning to censor by means of vociferous approval for the good. More good has been done the American drama by the irrefutable eloquence of "The Fool's" success, than by all the legal banning, all the negative laws, and all the heated sermons, anti-this and anti-that in the stage-life of the last decade.

The same week "The Fool" came to town, a rather salacious movie was frankly flaunted as sensational stuff before our newspaper public. The ministers' nostrils quivered with the scent. The hunt was up. A resolution was proposed condemning the action of the theatre manager, and publicly regretting the program. What was the result? For one solid week, that movie-house was thronged from morning till night with record crowds, and sidewalks about the lobby were jammed and policed by special detail, and the ducats—the tell-tale ducats, before whose voice every manager I know becomes a craven slave —sounded their insistent encouragement toward more filth.

There are two ways of saying "no" to evil. One is to say no to evil. The other is to say yes to good. The first sounds logical and interesting. The second sounds wild but works effectively. Experience tells us that the "no-way" always focuses a spot-light of attention on the evil, and sends the emissaries of the devil chortling in glee at the sight of our innocent and well intentioned stupidity. The language of negatives is understood at its face value by less than 5 per cent of mankind. Why risk it?

Let the church say yes to the fine things of art and literature and life. Let it pattern its message after Jesus, who fulfilled and glorified a whole code of meticulous prohibitions with two simple affirmative commands, "Thou shalt,—— thou shalt!"

Now That Thanksgiving Is Over

By Frank S. Harwood

IN A civilized country the failure to express gratitude for even the smallest courtesies is regarded as inexcusable. For instance, if a gentleman holds open a door for a lady to pass through she would show a marked lack of breeding if she did not make some recognition of it, however slight. Should she drop her glove and he pick it up it is nothing but right in all circles of society that she thank him. The best feelings of culture have made it customary that there should be a prompt acknowledgment of the little courtesies of life.

But, almost strange to say, in the realm of the greatest favors the thanks have been slow in finding expression. At first thought this etiquette in little things does not seem to be carried over into the big things. We know that many of the pioneers in science and religion and in other realms have not been accorded the recognition due them. Were their contemporary beneficiaries ungrateful? Were these people who in the ordinary little incidents of the day showed a scrupulous politeness rudely impolite to the great souls of their time? It would be wrong to accuse them of such a double standard of behavior. Such a record is made not because people are unwilling to speak promptly the thanks they feel for such things, but because they are slow to realize the importance of what has been done for them. When they do realize their indebtedness they are lavish in expressions of appreciation. Sometimes, however, the most that can be done on account of the tardiness of the gratitude is to erect monuments to the benefactors or perpetuate in some way the spirit they have manifested. The benefactors themselves have in too many cases passed from the scene of action when the awakened world begins its thanksgiving.

Inventions have almost annihilated space and time, and the accomplishments of a genius do not have to wait so long to be heralded around the world. This is a day when the great man's revolutionary work meets with quick recognition. Also, instead of the former incredulity and hostility we find people now ready to believe that anything can be done, and they are just waiting to make use of the next invention. As an example of the quickness of recognition that our age makes of the discoverer, we have only to think of the Nobel prize for medicine for 1923, which went to Dr. F. G. Banting and Dr. J. J. R. McLeod of Toronto University. A grateful public said thank you to these men for the life-saving insulin, and they said it almost as promptly as the lady when her friend recovered her glove. Surely the world has not been altogether unappreciative; it has simply been slow to understand sometimes.

What a delight it would have been to Copernicus if his theories could have been broadcasted over a receptive world instead of being hushed up by an indignant church! How Robert Fulton might have enjoyed the encouragement of laboratory facilities in some such way as was afforded Steinmetz! If Benjamin Franklin could only see a modern city at night ablaze with electricity! The world now offers thanks long delayed.

The same thing has been sadly true oftentimes in religion. It is a familiar tale—this stoning and killing of the prophets. We sometimes wonder if the world is not more appreciative of its material inheritance than of its spiritual. It is the same old story—the world does not understand how much it owes to its prophets, and therefore offers little gratitude.

As an effective illustration of this whole matter, think of a child and its parent. There is not a child who begins to realize, as he grows up, the debt of love he owes his parents. He is chiefly concerned with his own interests and chafes under the necessary restrictions placed upon him by parental authority. Not until he is well on into manhood, and especially not until he is a parent himself, does he begin to understand all that his father and mother have done for him. Frequently this delayed understanding and thanksgiving comes too late to gladden the heart of the solicitous parent. Or at best it is apt to be deferred until gray hairs have crowned the temples erstwhile knit with anxiety. But better late than never. Are we not saying now, "Thank you, mother, for your patience. That long-suffering love of yours has at last found a response in the heart of your child." "Thank you, father, for your noble example. Your upright life has guided your child into the way of life."

And when we think of Jesus we feel the rush of gratitude almost overwhelming us. Why, O Saviour, have we been so long in coming to an understanding of thee? And, indeed, do we appreciate thee yet? We thank thee, O thou Bringer of Good News. We thank thee, thou Revealer of the Father. May our slowness of heart not shut out thy Spirit, but grant that thy Spirit may teach us to be true to the trust that thou hast reposed in mankind. Help us to believe that the thoughtless people will respond to the with gratitude when they are shown thy goodness. Amen.

The Ministry of Business

The business world today has its outstanding prophets—men who are blazing the way toward a new order of business. Each prophet carries his own message in business life as well as on the pages of holy writ.

By George W. Coleman

THE ministry of business is perhaps a meaningless phrase to most of my readers. But the idea which it seeks to express is dynamic. When the editor of The Baptist asked me to write an article on "The Living Christ and Modern Commerce," or some other subject of my own choosing along that line, my mind reverted at once to this phrase, the ministry of business, which I had just begun to use in addressing Christian people concerning the transforming, far-reaching and blessed revolution that is quietly going on in the business world today.

We have long since become well used to the idea of commercializing our honored professions. We can easily think of lawyers and journalists as money makers and even artists and doctors can acquire the commercial spirit, but how many have realized that we are moving quite rapidly in the direction of professionalizing business? The new order of business is calling for men who are specially trained for business life and who have some understanding that business is primarily a public service.

Prophets and Profits

Indeed, the business world today has its outstanding prophets—men who are blazing the way toward a new order of business which is as different from the old order out of which it has grown as the New Testament is different from the Old. And it is interesting to note that the modern business prophets are almost without exception makers of profits on a generous scale. They are often like a voice crying in the wilderness in so far as any heed the business world in general gives to their warnings and admonitions. They are the targets of sharp and bitter criticisms coming from all sides, but what they are doing sounds so loud the babel of criticism soon fades away.

Some of these business prophets are talking about the application of the Golden Rule to industrial and commercial life and putting it into practice at the same time. Another school of business prophets is shouting all over God's heaven the glorified maxim that he profits most who serves best, and they try it out every day in actual business relations. Still others will tell you that a great business organization should build up men as well as make and sell goods. And many a grizzled veteran of business will confess that he gets far more satisfaction in helping along the young men under him than he derives from any addition to his bank account. Then there are a whole series of minor prophets who are everlastingly hammering away on the problems of reducing costs—costs of production and costs of distribution, eliminating unemployment, providing for sickness and old age, extra rewards for long and faithful service, eliminating friction, developing good will, establishing mutual confidence. The dull monotony of repetitive work inseparable from factory life is made as interesting, worth-while and satisfactory as any other battle of life. Modern business is finding a way to do even that.

I shall never forget my first vital contact with one of these dynamic young prophets of business. He came out of the great Middle West as a guest and speaker at the Sagamore Sociological Conference at my summer home. That was seven years ago. In three hours of address and discussion he completely transformed my idea of factory life and what could be made of it.

I had vivid and painful remembrances as a youth from fourteen to eighteen of Saturday holidays and summer vacations spent in my father's bindery, standing up to a bench ten hours a day doing mechanical, monotonous work over and over again endlessly. I hated it. The factory seemed to me more like a prison. My heart went out in deep commiseration to the millions of toilers who had to earn their living in that way. But when Richard Feiss of the Cleveland Clothcraft Shops had finished the story of life as it is in a modern factory imbued with the spirit of intelligence and fair play, my heart jumped with delight, and I declared myself with deep conviction that were I a boy again just leaving school and looking for a chance to get a start in life, I would walk from Boston to Cleveland, if need be, to get a chance to work in a factory that was run the way the Clothcraft Shops were being operated. This is not the place to tell that story. Suffice it to say that my hate and dread of factory life were turned into a keen interest and an eager desire which did not leave me, but was heightened and intensified when years later I visited that plant in person.

And it didn't abate my joy one jot or tittle to find that my prophet was making handsome profits. Of course it will be well understood that I am citing the above instance merely as a type of which there are many counterparts. Nor am I trying to say that intelligent, humane factory management is the whole story in the new gospel of enlightened business. Each prophet carries his own message in business life as well as on the pages of holy writ.

> To sin by silence when we should protest
> Makes cowards out of men. The human race
> Has climbed on protest. Had no voice been raised > Against injustice, ignorance and lust,
> The Inquisition yet would serve the law
> And guillotines decide our least disputes.
> The few who dare must speak, and speak again,
> To right the wrongs of many.

Always have I had a great respect for Henry Ford as a master industrialist. Any man who can in twenty years or so make himself perhaps the richest man in the world without incurring the hate and antagonism of his fellow-men at a time when all rich men are suspected, deserves a crown of some kind. Mind, I do not say an executive chair in the political realm.

The Object of Business

But when I read in his own book the philosophy behind all the amazing achievement my admiration and respect for Henry Ford as a major prophet in the new order of business rises higher and higher. His enormous success advertises and commends his fundamental business principle as nothing else could. His business is a monumental exhibit and proof of the fact that the true object of business is to serve society and that, when that is done—actually done—profits will take care of themselves. Ford is continually straining every nerve and energy to make a better car for less money. He has done it, and the profits have rolled in on him like a tidal wave. The whole commercial world, outside of the pioneers in the new order of business, is hopelessly imbued with the idea that business is divinely ordered for profit-making and that service to society is the natural byproduct that accompanies profit-making. It is easy with this philosophy to chase profits so hard that everything else is forgotten.

Then Henry Ford aims to increase the earnings of his employes as he decreases the price to his customers. And he does it. Furthermore he employs the lame, the halt, the blind and released prisoners; gives them a chance to earn their own way—and makes it pay.

And what is to me most amazing of all, Ford is translating his business principles into terms of school and hospital. Perhaps it is a little too early to take an inventory of his fascinating nine-million-dollar, self-supporting hospital enterprise, but the self-supporting trade school, as he tells the story in the autobiography of his business life, is indeed prophetic in the highest degree.

Then there is Arthur Nash in Cincinnati, the ex-Seventh Day Adventist preacher, turned clothing manufacturer, a prophet in word and deed of the Golden Rule in every day manufacturing relations. Five years ago a handful of employes and a failing business run in the old-fashioned way. Today three thousand employes, a volume of business running into the millions, and the Golden Rule continually preached and practiced in its relations to wages, hours, five-day week, management, sales, prices, etc. Sounds like a fairy tale. Hear Arthur Nash tell it and preach it, and you will think you are in the midst of an industrial and economic pentecost. Golden Rule Nash, as he is being called, has a much more fully developed industrial gospel than that which was preached in Toledo two or three decades ago by another manufacturer who went under the sobriquet of Golden Rule Jones. There is a deep religious passion as well as a moral mission in the Cincinnati enterprise.

Perhaps the most outstanding Boston merchants of today are the Filenes, two brothers, Edward A. and A. Lincoln. Beginning years ago in a little store in Lynn, Mass., they now have a twenty-five-million-dollar specialty store business in a great modern structure on one of the busiest corners in Boston's shopping district. But the outside world would never have heard of them, even though they had met with the same commercial success, were it not for the fact that their business almost from the very start has been built up around the idea of democratic versus autocratic store management. They were pioneers in this method of doing business, and have carried it further than any other merchandising concern in the country. The Filenes are noteworthy citizens as well as pioneers and prophets in the new order of business. The merest outline of the democracy of the Filene store would more than fill the entire space of this article. If the reader is interested to know more of Filene's ideas about business, let me commend very earnestly to his attention a series of articles by Mr. Edward A. Filene, which began in the Nov. 17 issue of Collier's Weekly, under the title "On These Terms—Victory!"

My space will permit of mention of but one more business prophet, a man more widely known than any of the others I have described, except Henry Ford. Nearly twenty thousand of the leading business men of the United States and Canada look to Roger W. Babson for information and advice about business matters, and he spends over a million dollars a year gathering and interpreting the facts of business for the benefit of these clients. But he does much more than forecast the rise and fall of commodities, interest rates and stocks and bonds. More than any other man, in my humble judgment, he is blazing the way toward a more scientific and a sounder method of conducting business. By his statistical studies he is helping to reduce business to a science and by his persistent and earnest emphasis on the moral and spiritual factors in life, he is injecting the professional spirit into the life of modern business.

Not only is Mr. Babson preaching orderly and righteous business, through his regular reports to his clients, and awakening the interest of the general public through numberless articles in the daily and weekly press and many public addresses, but he is also actively practicing what he preaches in his own business. Every year he divides the profits of his business with his employes on a fifty-fifty basis. And within the last few years he has sought by the establishment of the Babson Institute to set up a great school of business education for the development and promotion of the new order of business and the training of the men who are to be its leaders. To this great endeavor he has pledged his fortune, given his name, devoted his energies and consecrated his life.

It is my privilege to know Roger Babson intimately in daily contact, and for years I have watched his growing influence with great respect and intense admiration. I never met any minister of the gospel who was more devoted to his calling than is this great layman devoted to his ministry of business, and his success has been phenomenal, not only in the general acceptance of his idea by the business world, but also in the material rewards that have come to him and in his widespread influence as a man of affairs.

It has always puzzled the average minister to know why the consecrated layman devoted to business lived in such an utterly different world from that in which he himself labored. The day is dawning when young men of business talent and altruistic spirit may choose the ministry of business as their calling in life, and do it with the same consecration that sends their brethren into the pulpit, into the halls of education or the laboratories of science. There have always been noble Christian men in business life. And they have made large contributions of the fruits of business to the advancement of the kingdom, but rarely has the Christian business man of the past thought of using his business itself as the aim and end of his Christian labors.

Business has long been regarded as a necessary evil out of which an earnest Christian might wring large profits to be spent in spreading the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. Now business is being thought of by men with ideals as a constituent part of the kingdom of heaven on earth. Business ministers to our physical needs; it furnishes the wherewithal for our homes, schools and churches. Just as our physical bodies must be regarded as the temple of the Holy Spirit, even so must commerce, manufacture, finance, agriculture and merchandizing be as clean and as devoted as the church itself aims to be. We have long had the consecrated business man; the time has now arrived when we can have a consecrated business. That is just what our beloved Walter Rauschenbusch, with his purity of soul and unclouded vision, was pointing out to us in his second great book, "Christianizing the Social Order."

If I could be a young man again, with the prospect of fifty years of active service for the kingdom of God, I would choose above everything else to be one of these pioneers in the new order of business. And I would feel that no scholar, no preacher, no pastor, no missionary, no teacher, no scientist would have quite the opportunity that would be mine to help win this old world away from greed, hypocrisy and spiritual death to a life of brotherliness, joyous service and glorious fellowship in deed as well as in word with that sweetest, strongest, most inspiring Son of Man who showed us the way and gave us the example.

Such a career has in it every appeal that it is possible to make to a man of courage, resource, ambition, and aspiration. It involves adventures full of danger, it calls for high qualities of leadership, it tests your ingenuity and your readiness, and it can put your hands on the levers of power that make and unmake civilizations.

In the ministry of business there are and will be outstanding prophets who lead the way. Feiss, Ford Nash, Filene and Babson serve as conspicuous illustrations. Their work has impressed me deeply. But there are scores of others, not so well known, each working out the problem in his own way just as prophets are wont to do. Very likely no two of them would fully agree, like true prophets again, on every phase of the subject, but, once more like all genuine prophets, they are all headed in the same direction and are working toward the stabilizing, the humanizing, the sanctifying of our commercial life.

I wish THE BAPTIST would give its readers a series of pen sketches portraying the commercial life of some of these modern business prophets. I do not know of anything that would be more heartening to us older Christians who are puzzled and shocked by world conditions, nor more inspiring to our young men and women who are eager to conquer the world for Christ.

Christmas in Bethlehem

BY WILLIAM C. CARL

BETHLEHEM. with its azure sky, its terraced groves of olive and fig trees, and its sloping hills where shepherds kept watch over their flocks on the Christmas eve centuries ago, is the mecca of the Christian world at Christmas. The people of Bethlehem look forward to the day with keen delight, and elaborate preparations are made to welcome the Greek patriarch of Jerusalem who comes each year to celebrate the feast with them. On the day before Christmas, the patriarch, accompanied by a large number of his bishops, archimandrites, archdeacons and priests, leaves Jerusalem about ten o'clock in the morning headed by kawases carrying silver maces. Starting from the Jaffa gate the procession descends into the valley of Hinnon on the western side of the lower pool of Gihon and on to the Plain of Rephaim known as the place where David overthrew the host of the Philistines at the shaking of the mulberry tress. Midway between Jerusalem and Bethlehem stands the monastery of Mar Elias where tradition locates the resting place of prophet Elijah on his long journey to Mount Sinai. As soon as the patriarch and his retinue come within sight of this monastery, the natives of Bethlehem ride out to meet them.

On reaching Rachael's tomb, a large number of Bethlehemites, men, women and children garbed in oriental dress of the gayest colors, join the procession singing their sweetest songs until they come into the city. At ten o'clock in the evening the chiming of the bells announces the hour of prayer. The patriarch clothed in his gorgeous robes and mitre, sparkling with gems and diamonds and preceded by the clergy carrying his crook, a banner with a picture of the nativity and two lights on either side and a golden cross, proceed to the church, with a choir of boys chanting as they lead the way. The patriarch is seated on his throne, with his retinue on both sides. At intervals he rises to take part in the service which is sung antiphonally and in unison without accompaniment. The service is chanted without intermission in Greek and Arabic. The bells chime at intervals and especially at midnight when the patriarch celebrates the service in the Grotto of the Nativity. The church is illuminated by candles and lights of different colors and is crowded by the pilgrims, visitors and natives. At daybreak the service concludes with the patriarch's benediction. Many return to their homes the same day, while others linger to visit the places made sacred by the Christ-child himself.

The people greet each other in front of the church with the words "Kull sanah va anta salim"—"Best wishes for Christmas," and spend the day in feasting and merriment.

Week of Prayer for the Churches

Sunday, Jan. 6, to Saturday, Jan. 12, 1924

That there may be unity of thought and purpose among God's believing children throughout the world during the Week of Prayer, beginning January 6, 1924, the Federal Council of the Churches recommends with slight alterations the following list of topics as suggested by the World's Evangelical Alliance and signed by British and foreign representatives of the Alliance.

It is earnestly hoped that both the clergy and the laity in their private devotions, as well as in public meetings and more particularly in union services, will join with the great company of "the Lord's remembrancers" in making this approaching season of united intercession forever memorable because of the promised manifestations of the divine power, now so desperately needed, in answer to believing prayer.

TEXT SUGGESTIONS FOR SERMONS AND ADDRESSES

"Again a new commandment I write unto you."—1 John 2:7-8.

"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—St. Luke 12:32.

"Meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light."—Col. 1:12-13.

"Let all the nations . . . . bring forth their witnesses . . . . ye are my witnesses.—Isaiah 43:9-10-11.

"With all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord."—1 Cor. 1:2.

Monday, Jan. 7

THANKSGIVING AND REPENTANCE

Let us give thanks—For the revelation during another year that there is One within and above all the years, the same Lord who is rich in mercy to all who call upon him.

For all doors that have been opened to him in all lands, and for his eagerness to enter through his spirit into his church, and into individual life.

For all who in 1923 out of every race and tongue were born again into the new life in Christ.

For spiritual awakenings in many places which indicate the movement of God the Holy Spirit.

Let us remember in penitence—Our lack of that faith, which is bold to claim the resources of Christ Jesus.

Our absorption in the machinery of service, and our neglect of the power of the Holy Spirit.

Our willingness merely to hold our ground when we are called to move forward.

Our endeavors by compromise with the world to buy off its contempt and enmity.

Our weariness in service, our loss of the first wonder of redemption, and our failure to be as those who wait for their Lord's appearing.

Scripture readings — Isaiah 43:7-19; Psalm 114; Acts 16:16-34; Col. 1:9-23.

Tuesday, Jan. 8

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL

"Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it."

Let us give thanks—For the eternal purpose which Christ has for his church.

For the unity which is already enjoyed before his throne by all who call upon his name.

For all deliberations and conferences during the past year which have led the followers of Christ to understand each other better, and to enter upon new service in fellowship.

For those who by their words spoken or written, and by their faithful lives, have made it easier for others to believe in him.

Let us confess—Our unworthiness of the great love bestowed upon us; our lack of vision, and timidity in bearing witness; our failure to make the world understand the mind of Christ; our unwillingness to be in the world as those that serve.

Let us pray—That the whole church may wait upon God, and humbly listen to his voice.

That it may put the first things first, and open its heart more fully to Christ, its Divine Lord.

That through a living experience of God in Christ Jesus it may reach a truer unity.

That in its thought the church may be true to the whole counsel of God, and in its word and action may show to all mankind the eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us by his Son.

Scripture readings—Psalm 72; Haggai 2:1-9; Isaiah 11; St. John 16; Eph. 4:1-16.

Wednesday, Jan. 9

NATIONS AND THEIR LEADERS

Let us give thanks—For the grasp of the divine purpose guiding the destinies of nations.

For the certainty of his majestic rule, because the Lord is king, though the earth be never so unquiet.

For all who, having believed in him, have sought to lead their peoples to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with God.

Let us confess—That nations that know the Christian faith have been indifferent to each other's sufferings, suspicious of each other, and lacking in charity and understanding.

That they have not trusted the way of Christ, in which alone there is life and peace.

That they have yielded to fatalism and despair, and have not accepted his values.

Let us pray—For all in authority, that they may accept their powers as a trust from God.

That they and their peoples may be delivered from fear, suspicion, and distrust.

That there may come such a peace that in the joy of it nations may dwell together in service one of another, none making them afraid.

That, as a means to attain this end, those seeking the fellowship and peace of the nations may be

Building the Biggest Bible Class in the World

By Vic E. Malmfeldt

CERTAIN conditions often exist because there are so many people ready to say, "It can't be done" whenever any change is suggested. The average men's Bible class is in a rut. Its leaders and members seem to think this is a necessary condition, and as a result things drag along.

This was the state of affairs in the Business Men's Bible Class of the First Baptist Church in Kansas City, Mo., when Mr. N. W. Dible was elected president about eight years ago. Mr. Dible is a builder, a man who develops districts of hundreds of new homes. He is the type that envisions big projects and then puts them across.

So it was only natural that heading a class that was in a rut—the usual twenty men every Sunday—should be contrary to his ideas.

A careful study of the situation convinced him that methods then in use were not the methods that were conducive to real growth. Few men other than zealous Christians are willing to attend a class that is a minor, inconsequential part of a Sunday school made up of children and women, and to take part in a program to interest and attract children.

The first move must be to hold sessions that would attract men. This could not be done as long as the class was confined to a corner in the general Sunday school. To get the necessary room and to develop individuality, a tent with a seating capacity of about three hundred was erected, where the men held their own kind of services. prayers by men, songs by men and talks by men—no less religious but more interesting to them.

The value of this idea was soon demonstrated and it was only a matter of time until the tent was outgrown and a tabernacle exclusively for the men's class was built. This building was constructed of frame and stucco, and seated about one thousand men.

With the larger capacity and resulting greater attendance, many changes had to be made. The old way of having class discussion of the lesson had to be abandoned for a lesson presentation by an able teacher; and many men, afraid to come because they did not want to show their ignorance of the Bible by having questions asked them, joined the class.

The class as a unit was becoming unwieldy, so it was divided into four divisions, with a vice-president in charge of each. It was their duty to keep in touch with the men, a very important matter in holding the membership.

Constant growth had increased our roll to about six hundred, a number too large for the vice-presidents to perform their duties effectively; so the divisions were subdivided into forty teams with a captain at the head of each team. The captains took a real interest in their teams and began adding new men. To keep up interest and to increase the membership many expedients were resorted to. Contests between teams were sometimes started, with the losers giving an entertainment to which the wives, sweethearts and children were invited.

A Bible class catering only to a few church members makes a fine little society, but to fulfill the important mission of bringing new men into church membership and to put men into active service in the church (the church's greatest need today), requires that the men's class be not only a recruiting body, but a constructive force.

The big problem was to cater to men's daily needs; to give them something on Sunday that would enable them better to live their daily lives. Propounding abstract theological problems would not interest men, but the common every-day humanness of the International lessons has a splendid appeal when properly presented.

One of the reasons for our success has been the type of teacher that we have had. Dr. D. J. Evans, pastor of the First Baptist Church, is the teacher. He is an able speaker and a profound student of the Bible; his fifteen years of work with men, first as a teacher, then as dean and president of William Jewell College, enabled him to know men and how to talk to them. His expositions of the lessons are most interesting and always have a practical appeal.

The results already obtained not only in building the membership, but the growing importance of the men's class to the church, enthused Mr. Dible and the other officers to even greater efforts. Even at this time only a few of the most optimistic could vision a group of five hundred or more every Sunday, but with the starting of the "pal system," wherein every man is paired with another, and each has as his duty that of getting his pal out, the goal was reached and the tabernacle outgrown. We then engaged Ivanhoe Temple with a seating capacity of 2,300; and even the most pessimistic had to agree that it was a wise move.

So with a president of vision, a teacher with power and an organization of willing workers, the only limit to results was our willingness to take on the job. And last summer when the challenge came from a big western class for a five-weeks' attendance drive, our goal of 50,000 men in a Bible class on the last Sunday seemed less hard of accomplishment than the gathering of one hundred did a few years ago.

To get out this number of men meant real work. Teams were reorganized; special committees were appointed; house to house canvassers were put to work; radio speeches were made every night; the newspapers were worked for publicity; cars of our members carried windshield stickers; posters were put in show windows; films were shown in all the picture shows; one-half and full page advertisements were carried in the newspapers; and carefully coached teams lined up the big business houses to get their employes out.

From a start of 2,276 men the first Sunday of the drive, we jumped to 3,054 the second Sunday, 4,784 the third, at which time the auditorium, basement and roof garden of Ivanhoe Temple were so crowded that we were forced to move to Convention Hall, where we attracted a crowd of 17,883 men the fourth Sunday. The glorious climax came Nov. 11 with 52,121 men crowded in, on and around Convention Hall, the largest meeting place in Kansas City, winning the contest for us.

This was probably the largest number of adult males that have ever assembled for a religious service, either in ancient or modern times, and has given the Bible-class movement in Kansas City and the rest of the United States the greatest impetus of any effort ever made along religious lines, and shows to all Bible-class leaders the possibilities before them and the need for more intensive work.

Every day brings in new reports from other classes telling us of increased attendance and interest, and if we can get others to benefit by the enthusiasm aroused, we are achieving our object of "lifting the manhood of the world."

So the results obtained in building "the world's largest Bible class" are the results of the vision of a man who was not satisfied with mediocrity, the enthusiasm and leadership of a great teacher and the willingness of the organization to get behind its leaders.

What we have done is only what any class can do. Men must be made to feel that they are wanted and that there is a place for them. The desire for a friendly handshake and the opportunity of mingling in a fine fellowship, exists today as it always has, and it takes only the vision and enthusiasm of leaders such as ours to achieve equal results.

Suppose—

By Frances L. Garside

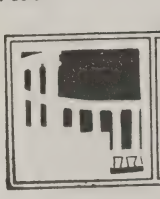
A MAN undertakes to build a house. Then, because he is a chivalrous American gentleman and realizes that the house is to be a home and means more to his wife than to himself, he hands her the reins, and from that day till they move in she has a beautiful brainstorm fighting for shelves, closets, windows, window seats.

But suppose she were building that house in China!

In Shanghai Fanny Pomeroy Brown, Y. W. C. A. secretary, considered a piece of property at 19 Yuen Ming Yuen Road as a possible place for Young Women's Christian Association club rooms. The building was in a bad state of repair, but the association took it over and began work on it. A contract was drawn up, and never was there a contract like it in this country, at least not in recent years. It contained this clause "No work on Sundays and no child labor used."

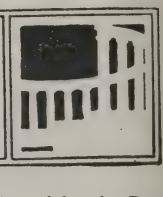
The first Sunday after the work was started Miss Brown was told the men were at work. She hurried down and in limited Chinese (fancy talking to a group of workmen in language that looks like the tops of over-pruned trees!) told them they must not work on Sundays. Now the American woman sometimes has trouble getting men to work on week days if it is over-time, but these men refused to stop until after they had had their tiffin. She had no further trouble with the Sunday question, but the child labor clause was harder to enforce. Repeatedly on entering the house, she would hear a child's voice, but the workmen would insist there was not a child in the house.

"I was not satisfied," she writes, "and one day hunted the house thoroughly, and found that upon my approach they had been hiding a tiny child laborer behind the kitchen stove. It was pitiable, but I could not help laughing."



It continued to be a game of hide and seek every time she went into the house, for the workmen insisted on having some little mite of a child as an assistant. Enforcing this clause of the contract became as difficult a task as to get the American foreman to consent to a pantry shelf that the specifications did not call for.

This little bit of a home at 19 Yuen Ming Yuen Road was finally completed, furnished and occupied, and from its employment bureau there is now broadcasted this message to American girls seeking to "do" China on their own:



"A good stenographer usually finds a position in a very short time at a fairly good salary, but for those who have had very little experience or no particular profession, it is very difficult to find work. Letters are coming to me from women of other countries asking me to find positions for them, but at present I am not encouraging them to come for several reasons: Business is poor, living is high, and salaries are lower than they were last year."

All nationalities come to this little home for employment. There were those who could not speak English, which made it almost impossible to find work for them. To overcome this difficulty English classes were started.

MUST "THE CUT" CONTINUE

I have been re-reading with much interest the report of the convention meetings in Atlantic City. They are inspiring even at this distance. But here on the field at least there is a note of sadness mingled with our rejoicing, and we detect it here and there in all the enthusiasm of those great meetings.

Certainly the debt must be wiped out. The payment of interest on a debt is about the poorest use to which mission funds can be put, and we may well rejoice and thank God, for the reduction in the debt which has been made. But when we look at the way it was made!!! Speaking now only of the foreign missionary society—"First, we reduced our expenses 25 per cent."

I will speak only of two items in that reduction. "We sent out decidedly fewer missionaries, and thereby saved $70,000. We reduced the work on the field $32,000." What does this mean on the field?

A young lady who has been in Burma only three years has been alone in Prome for the last year. I wish Baptists at home knew what that means. She has carried burdens far beyond her strength, has broken down, and we hear has been ordered home. There is no one to take her place.

Here in Toungoo the lady who has been in charge of the Burman work for something over a year, has been ill since the beginning of June. Probably her illness was not caused in the first place by the reduction in appropriations. But could some one have come to her help early in her illness, to relieve her of work and anxiety, and given her temporary rest, probably she might have recovered and have continued in the work. In most other years that might have been done. This year, owing to the cut and the scarcity of workers, it was impossible. Now the doctor imperatively orders her return home. There is no one to come here and take up the work, hence the missionary at Pegu, already overburdened must add the oversight of this mission to his load; and his furlough is due next spring. What shall we do then for both stations?

Appropriations for work on the field have been cut $32,000. That means doors of opportunity which are open before us full of promise cannot be entered, and work already in hand which is yielding returns must be abandoned.

Shall we complete the raising of the $100,000,000 before the end of this year?

A teacher questioned with herself how she should invest her savings, and came to this conclusion: "The Lord's work is always suffering for lack of funds, and all earthly securities are very insecure. I will invest in the Lord's work. If the time ever comes when the Lord's treasury is full, I may think of some other investment." She has carried out that plan, and has never regretted it. Once she deviated from it, and had much reason to regret that it did not prosper. The Lord called her to that course. He does not call every one to the same. But should we not all question ourselves, "Am I investing in the Lord's work all that I ought?"

Several members of a church were discussing tithing. One of them said, "My wife and I make it our rule to give one-half of our income to the Lord." How is it with us? Are we spending lavishly for ourselves, and giving sparingly to the Lord? In these days when the Lord is working so wonderfully what will he say to us, if we come not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?"

The board proposes to make the same appropriations for 1923-24 that were made for 1922-23. If the churches do not increase their gifts that policy is unavoidable. We ought not to go on carrying a heavy debt. But if that policy has to be carried out for two or three years, it will probably result in killing off some of our best missionaries, and will so cripple the work that when the churches get ready to go forward they will find that the work has been set back for years.

Very many churches and individuals have done nobly. What of those who have done little or nothing? Have we done all that we should have done to stir up others? Above all have we prayed as we ought? "More things are wrought by prayer, than this world dreams of."

THE FIGHT FOR A CONFESSION

The adoption of the New Testament by the Northern Baptist Convention as a sufficient rule of faith and practice seems to a large part of its constituency to be insufficient. There may be some reason for this, as many very diverse denominations would be willing to accept the same. However, as different bodies and different individuals interpret the New Testament variously there is a strong argument for some kind of confession that will be a general expression of Baptist views. Such a confession should not be so used to restrain the liberty of individuals that they must always express their understanding of truth in certain ready-formed molds. Such speculative questions as most of those relating to a millennium and the composition of the resurrection body should not be made test questions. Even the matter of evolution has no place in a Christian confession of faith.

"A Call to Arms," issued by the Baptist Union of America, states that the matter of a confession will be again presented at the next meeting of the N. B. C. The said Baptist Union, consisting of men of the stamp of Doctor Riley and Doctor Van Osdel, has revised the New Hampshire Confession of Faith for presentation to the N. B. C. Now the writer has not seen this revised confession. It may be good enough, though the wisdom of putting new wine into old wine-skins is at least doubtful. It should be remembered that at the time of the merger of Free Baptists with the main body they were required to make no changes in their confession of faith, which by the way is one that, with a few minor changes. could be adopted by all Baptists. They, however, would not expect all Baptists to adopt their confession. On the other hand, it is not at all probable that they would be pleased with even a denatured edition of the New Hampshire Confession.

Would it not be far better to adopt the Des Moines Confession? Few Baptists object to any of its articles. It is modern and not too exclusive. In fact, many Baptists could adopt a more comprehensive creed for themselves.

Then there is the confession contained in the "Fraternal Address of Southern Baptists." issued in May, 1819. Most Baptists could conscientiously subscribe to that confession, though some would object to the statement that baptism is pre-requisite to the Lord's Supper. With slight changes either of these confessions would express in general the views of Baptists. To allay fears, agitations and misapprehensions, why not recommend some such confession.

Dr. M. Carey Thomas, president emeritus of Bryn Mawr, recently returned from an extended tour of Europe and the Orient, was quoted in the press on Nov. 22 as expressing her belief that the world is suffering from the political leadership of men who are too old to have vision and imagination: "Elder statesmen are a great mistake. I believe that if the men in control of affairs in this country and abroad were under forty instead of over sixty, the world would not be in its present condition, and as far as I am concerned, I am going to try to confine my activities to applauding and backing up the younger generation. I believe in the present generation planning the things it has to put through." What bearing, if any, has this position in planning our religious activities?

Lesson Notes for January 6

A CHOSEN LEADER AND A CHOSEN LAND

Lesson Text: Gen. 12:1-25;10. Golden Text: Genesis 12:3

We begin this quarter at the source of Hebrew life and history, and we shall follow the streams flowing from that source for the next year and for the years to come so long as we continue to study the Bible, because the history of divine revelation and redemption begins in a specific way with the call of Abraham. The first eleven chapters of the Bible contain a general account, greatly condensed and simplified, of creation and the movements of men ending in the judgment of the flood and the new start made by the three sons of Noah. The account then narrows down to the semitic line and to Abraham of that line. He became the chosen leader in a chosen land to inaugurate on its human side the process by which the eternal purpose of God would ultimately be realized among men. It is with this in mind that we begin our studies for the new year.

The Chosen Leader

The leader was not chosen arbitrarily. Abraham had the necessary qualifications for leadership, and he was chosen in view of these qualifications. (Read Gen. 18:16-19.) The best interpretation we have of Abraham is given by Paul in his letters to the Romans and Galatians. (Read Rom. 4:1-22, Gal. 3:6-9.) The one thing that characterized the leadership of Abraham was faith. Another fine interpretation of this heroic element in Abraham is Hebrews 11:8-10, 17, 19. Because of his splendid faith in God, Abraham was a Christian before Christ came in the flesh. This is the gripping argument of Paul to all Judaizing teachers in the early church. The faith that is the assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen, impelled Abraham to look for a city which hath the foundations whose builder and maker is God. His faith made him the spiritual leader of the world in his day, and the father of faith to this day. Of course he was human and faulty and frail. He made mistakes, he committed sins, he even denied his faith when he went down to Egypt; but on the whole the current of his life flowed on in a steady, increasing stream of spiritual power. He was as far above the sordid, sensual, pagan life around him as the heavens are above the earth. His tent with its altar was the antipodes of Sodom. His faith made him a pioneer, an explorer, a steward, a man of prayer, of character, of vision.

The Chosen Land

At first thought it seems strange that the chosen leader should be transported so far away from the salubrious and fertile Chaldea and placed in the inhospitable land of Canaan. From a country rich in all the arts of civilization and with a unity and power which made it the United States of that era, Abraham was impelled by his sense of duty and providence to emigrate westward. At last after traveling more than a thousand miles he came with his family and his flocks to a country new to him—a narrow strip of land thirty miles wide by 150 miles long and inhabited by a number of contending tribes called in general Canaanites. When he arrived among them they called him the Hebrew or the "come-over man," the immigrant. Nothing is said of Abraham's disillusionment when he landed in Canaan; but we can imagine something of his disappointment and reaction when he found the new country compared so unfavorably with the old country which he had left. But being a man of faith he waited for light on the chosen land, and it came in due time.

He soon found that Canaan was isolated and yet interpenetrated. It was simply a bridge between the Nile and the Euphrates—it was a highway between Egypt and Chaldea, the two great civilizations and national powers of that age. Here he could touch Egypt on one hand and Chaldea on the other without being compelled to live in either place. He could maintain isolation and yet carry on intercourse without entangling alliances with either Egypt or Chaldea. It was evident that the providence of God was vindicated in the call of Abraham to this chosen land because the land was fitted more than any other place in the world to be the cradle of the chosen people who were to be the custodians of the revelation of God to men and the human medium through which God would progressively carry out his purpose of redemption in Jesus Christ

Finding a New Course of Study

By J. Sherman Wallace

Frequently Sunday-school classes which have been studying the International series desire to change to some other course. They usually look around for some one who can give them an independent course of lectures, or they instruct their secretary to write to a publishing house advertising some independent course of studies. Sometimes these plans are successful, but usually they are not.

Few communities have men or women who can prepare a course of independent lessons that will compare favorably with those prepared by experts in religious education, and who are giving their lives to such work. Few independent courses of study published by independent houses are of great value. They are too often prepared and published by those under the domination of some fad in religious thought, or who are extremely reactionary or radical in their position—either of which makes their writings unsuitable for use in our Sunday schools. If the lessons do not belong to this class, they are likely to be published by some company for commercial gain only. These lessons are made for everybody and fit nobody. Those who use them soon find themselves feeding upon a milk and water diet that starves the soul and disgusts the intellect.

The best lessons for classes in Baptist Sunday schools are those published by our Publication Society. These are all prepared by the best scholars, teachers and writers in our denomination. They are true to the best knowledge of our day, to the spirit of reverence for God and his word, to the ideal of service for the kingdom of God, and to the great principles that have placed our denomination in the forefront of all religious bodies.

Our own publications provide plenty of choice of material for Sunday-school classes. Besides the International lessons, adapted to the various age groups, our society publishes the New Keystone series, closely graded for each year, up to age seventeen; also many elective courses for young people's classes and adult classes. If you are looking for something different for your class, your society can provide it.

Besides these things, there is the question of denominational loyalty. Every Baptist Sunday-school class ought to support in every way possible the enterprises of its own denomination. Every publication of your own society is sold at the lowest price consistent with good business policy. Every dollar of profit that is made is used in Christian work. The money you spend with your own society is money invested in the enterprises of the kingdom of God. It will help the society to publish other Sunday-school literature for distribution to mission schools or new schools that cannot yet buy it. Such profits have helped to build colporters' wagons and chapel-autos, to send missionaries into the settlers' cabins, and to provide directors of religious education to counsel with the officers and teachers of your own school. By helping yourself to the best you can help your society to help others.

The Publication Society will celebrate the close of its first century of service to our denomination on Feb. 25, 1924. If you are not familiar with its work, now is a good time to get acquainted.

Christmas-by-the-yard

(Have you a bolt of Baptist Ribbon yet?)

EVERYTHING was just as it should be on Christmas Eve: the snow came down like soft curled feathers, the sleigh bells jingled merrily on the night air, little candles stood in the windows of the house across the street, and in her own house—the tree! Aglitter with its little points of light, all the presents underneath in jolly red ribbons, ready for the morning raid upon them.

With every last task done, she sat down and began idly picking up the week's accumulation of mail, the things she had merely glanced at in the rush of Christmas work. Now that there was nothing to do she quite enjoyed skimming over the contents, amused at the urgency of some of the advertisements, their suggestiveness unforgetably compelling——

"Make It an Electrical Christmas!"

Inside the pages Madam was urged to shorten her working day with a vacuum cleaner, with a washing machine, with an electric mangle, with an electric fireless cooker. Madam was further urged to curl her hair by electricity, to iron her ruffles on a trip with a light-as-air traveling iron, to get up delicious last-minute meals for unexpected guests on an electric table-stove. It was all most inviting, and "Madam" did indeed feel the urge to own practically all of the cleverly illustrated articles. Reluctantly she laid down the circular, and opened the next letter——

"Will There Be a Victrola in Your Home This Christmas?

More allurements! More pictures of highly comfortable ladies and home-staying gentlemen enjoying the strains of beautiful music which the world's leading artists were producing for Madam. "His Master's Voice"—oh yes, every Victor record was a faithful reproduction, flawless, perfect. Again "Madam" would have liked to own the handsomest of the pictured machines, although as a matter of fact she had a really excellent one, bought last Christmas. After all, the works were the same whatever the outer appearance.

With this consolation, she picked up the next letter, an advertisement of ribbons with samples enclosed across the fronts of which ran the slogan: "Christmas-by-the-yard." The little legend explained that "wherever our holly ribbons go, inch by inch they spread cheer, yard by yard they bring Christmas cheer to the jubilant recipient. Can you afford to waste this intimate reminder?"

And then, just as she was feeling amused and interested in the subtle craftiness of the Christmas advertiser she opened a fourth letter and found it was from her pastor, typed, on a double sheet of paper. On one side it said:

EVERYWHERE CHRISTMAS TONIGHT

By Phillips Brooks

Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight,
Christmas in lands of the fir-tree and pine,
Christmas in lands of the palm tree and vine;
Christmas where snow peaks stand solemn and white,
Christmas where cornfields lie sunny and bright,
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight.

Christmas where children are hopeful and gay,
Christmas where old men are patient and gray;
Christmas where peace, like a dove in its flight,
Broods o'er brave men in the thick of the fight,
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight.

For the Christ-child who comes is the Master of all,
No palace too great and no cottage too small;
The angels who welcome him sing from the height,
"In the city of David a King in his might,"
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight.

Then let every heart keep its Christmas within,
Christ's pity for sorrow, Christ's hatred of sin,
Christ's care for the weakest, Christ's courage for right,
Christ's dread of the darknesss, Christ's love of the light;
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!

So the stars of the midnight which compass us round
Shall see a strange glory, and hear a sweet sound,
And cry, "Look! the earth is aflame with delight
O, sons of the morning, rejoice at the sight."
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!

On the second page the letter said:

SOMEWHERE NO CHRISTMAS TONIGHT

"We have in our church membership 179 members supposedly in good and regular standing who are preparing for Christmas this week with no least idea that, if they had their way, Christmas should never spread another inch around the world! It means nothing to them that Baptists have twenty-nine wonderful Christian centers in the United States where there is "everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight." But that means only twenty-nine communities, twenty-nine cities out of the thousands upon thousands of other cities where there is no Christian Center and "no Christmas tonight." What shall we say of the Baptist who enjoys his usual Christmas, but never gives a thought to the far places of the earth where our over-worked missionaries have not yet had time to bring even one least hint of Christmas? In common with myself, you have no doubt been receiving certain alluring advertisements the past week—may I not tell you that whatever the adept advertiser says of his wares I can also claim for our chief Baptist ware: The New World Movement?

"For of all the Christmas presents ever given to the world, only one other was ever as great or as efficacious as ours—namely, when God, too, so loved the world that he gave! Ever since that first Christmas, has not each loyal Christian been listening to 'His Master's Voice!" Have not the Victor records of those who have heeded that voice been telling us each year of the victories of the Saviour? Did you know that the New Work Movement, since it began, has the following Victor records on file:

During the New World Movement

—More than 300,000 members have been added to Northern Baptist churches. A new Christmas for each of them, surely.)

—Workers on the foreign field have reported the largest number of baptisms ever recorded in a single year. More have applied for baptism than could be properly instructed. (Is it Christmas everywhere, however?)

—Thousands upon thousands in our African missions. (Yet somewhere in that great continent there's no Christmas tonight.)

—7,452 converts in Burma during 1922 alone. (But even this means that somewhere else there is no Christmas tonight.)

—The number of Christian centers operated by Baptists in the needy sections of crowded cities has increased from three to twenty-nine. (But are there not more than twenty-nine cities needing such centers? Somewhere no Christmas tonight.)

—The Bible has been printed in whole or in part in fifteen different languages. ("The entrance of thy word giveth understanding unto the simple." And with this understanding—Christmas, somewhere where it never was Christmas before.)

—The new International Baptist Seminary has been established at East Orange, N. J., with departments for teaching preachers for five different races. (Don't you glimpse how Christmas will spread when these students graduate and begin their life work?)

—Forty-three colporter missionaries at work in thirty states. (With the knowledge of Christ following in their wake, and Christmas dawning in new hearts each year.)

—Montana has organized six new churches, Indiana seven, South California twelve, and Colorado fourteen. These are only a few instances selected to show you how the New World Movement is, inch by inch, spreading Christmas-by-the-yard around the world!

You have planned gifts for your family, your friends, your servants, your pastor. You have even sent Christmas cards to your acquaintances. What are you planning to give to the God who so loved you that he gave? Let us each

The Place Where Christmas Forgot to Come

By Margaret T. Applegarth

ALL over the world there were little girls and boys looking at the calendar. Even those who could hardly read at all stood on tiptoe and pointed enthusiastically at the figure 25: "There! That's the day, for mother showed me; but we have to wait all these in-between days before it gets here—this day and this day, and this day; oh, it's an awfully long way off, isn't it?"

"Um'm!" moaned the others. And some of them moaned it in Dutch, some in French, some in Swedish, some in Chinese, some in Japanese, some in English: for of course you know that December 25 belongs to everybody, everywhere, for isn't that what the herald angels sang to the shepherds on the night when the Saviour was born: "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." For when those angels sang, "Peace on earth," that little word earth meant America and Europe and China and India and Africa, as well as every other country of which you have ever heard. Yet there are places and places and places where Christmas forgets to come: December 25 is no different from December 24 or December 26. But surely you are not blaming the calendar! For calendars in India are exactly like calendars in America—it is only the dear brown people who are quite different. And Rajamma was one of the many million brown people in India who are so different from you and from me because she never once dreamed that mankind had had such a wonderful Christmas present from God himself.

For it was on December 25 that Rajamma did something you have never done on Christmas Day—she put a little present of white rice on a big green leaf, and away she started toward the temple. But because she did not want to go, her little bare brown feet dragged along the roadway; and because she was really very much afraid to go, her heart was beating like a trip-hammer, which is a very queer way to act about taking a present somewhere on Christmas morning, isn't it? You must be wondering about the person in the temple to whom she was taking it: "Probably he was some one very cross," you say.

Oh no, for—would you believe it?—nobody had ever seen him open his lips, or heard him say a single word in all his life! I think Rajamma would rather have taken her present to some one who could say: "Why, thank you, little girl! Thank you!" Big silent red lips are so startling; big staring white eyes are so terrible; and as for big hands—imagine receiving a present from the dearest little girl in all India and yet never once moving a finger to touch it! Imagine never lifting it up to look at it, or patting it approvingly, or even rolling the rice into a little ball all ready to eat. Rajamma did not like those very quiet hands, she did not like those very silent lips, she did not like those very staring eyes.

Yet she had to lay her present on his lap; so the temple priest obligingly struck an enormous big bell. It boomed out on the silent air in the most astonishing fashion, loud enough to wake anybody—yet it did not awaken this quiet person! For even when Rajamma knelt at his feet and bowed her head way over until it touched the floor, he showed no sign of hearing her as she prayed: "O thou great and powerful god, hear thy little slave, and be pleased to accept this poor little present."

So now you know how India worships its idols, don't you? All because Christmas has never come to village after village after village in India; all because the people never heard about mankind's first Christmas present. It makes us wonder what sort of a Christmas Rajamma could ever have had if you and I had not sent some one to India who could say exactly what the herald angels said so many years ago: "Behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people—especially to the people of India!"

For it just happened that Rajamma's father had gone off on a trip. He rode in a rumbling bullock cart drawn by two snow-white oxen, and if anybody had asked him where he was going he would have said that he was going to buy some merchandise to sell in his booth in the bazaar; but as a matter of fact, I think he had gone to get Christmas! For when he reached the other village there was a great crowd of people listening to two strangers; he thought this was a curious thing to do in broad daylight, but he listened, too. Surely you have guessed that he was listening to—Christmas. For that missionary whom we sent to India decided she wanted a very special Christmas present. Her husband said she could have whatever she wanted, "So what is it, my dear?"

"I want a village, if you please!" she smiled.

"A village?" he said, for he could not imagine how he was ever going to tie up a village in red ribbons and stuff it inside a Christmas stocking.

But she had it all planned: "I want a heathen village where Christmas has never come! I want to ride there in our bullock cart on Christmas morning! I want to take our oldest mission boys to sing carols! I want to take our dearest Bible woman to tell the Christmas story! Won't that be our nicest present for the King?"

"Indeed it will!" her husband answered. And, just as she planned, they all rode to the far away village—Village-of-Green-Palms. And I really think that those brown boys were very much like little wise men of the East, for they brought their rarest gifts to the Saviour that day: The Boy-Who-Was-Afraid-to-Speak-in-Public managed to forget his fear as he told that strange village how he had given up the worship of idols in

A Magic Tree

By Frances McKinnon Morton

I KNOW a tree whose brightest bloom
Comes in the coldest winter days!
It stands right up inside your room
And there its magic blossoms blaze.

When first it's growing in the wood
It's just a forest-tree of green,
And looks as any treetop should
Before its buds and flowers are seen.

But when you see it in the glow
Of lamps and fires all alight,
It seems a sort of fairy show
With blossoms all so gay and bright.

It blooms with Christmas bells and toys,
And cookies round, and candies sweet,
And fruit, and gifts for girls and boys,
And lots of good things made to eat.

And so I think a Christmas tree
Does weave a sort of magic spell,
Because those gifts for you and me
Such worlds of love and kindness tell.

"DO BETTER STILL"
Philippians 3:12-14

By Carleton W. Atwater

Raphael was painting what he was going to call his masterpiece. Tirelessly and painstakingly he labored many and long days, with his colors, brush and canvas. At least, after months, it was finished. His masterpiece was completed. The goal of his life was consummated—he had achieved his highest work. He called Michael Angelo to see it. The older master gazed long at the painting. He studied it carefully. After a time he slowly walking to the painting, took up the brush and covered the canvas with great smears of paint, ruining in a few seconds the efforts of months. Beneath it he printed "Raphael amplus"—"Raphael, you can do better." Raphael's next painting was one of the world's most famous masterpieces—the immortal Sistine Madonna.

As we come to the beginning of the year 1924, it would do us all good to have some master artist of living, appear before the canvas which is the product of 1923, and wiping out that which would fill us with foolish pride and temptation to feel that we had done our best, say "Do better still."

Surely no one ever comes in contact with Jesus Christ without hearing such summons from him. Paul had lived many years with Christ, had wrought wondrously for God, and had poured out his life for the Christianizing of his fellowmen. Yet as he was nearing the end of such a remarkably useful life, he felt that there was still much to be attained, and the unfulfilled lured him to go on with more determination and intenser struggle, toward achievement. Paul never lost the vision and enthusiasm of youth. He was always looking forward. His great ideal was "Do better still." For that reason Paul never ceases to challenge young people today. The verses of our scripture give us some hints as to the method Paul employed to urge him on toward the fulfillment of such an ideal.

I. A Realization that Christ Had Saved Him for a Purpose. On the way to Damascus and in the midst of a career of wrong, Christ's loving hand had "laid hold" of him. Under its pressure of love Paul had yielded, and had turned to Christ for salvation and for leadership. He believed that Christ had "laid hold" of him for a two-fold purpose: A. In verses 10 and 11 Paul states part of this purpose "that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death, if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Now experience had taught Paul that each new contact with Christ had brought richer and more satisfying fellowship, greater capacity to die and live eternally as Christ died and lives. B. In Acts 26:16-18 Paul states the other part of this purpose: to send him to the Gentiles "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan, unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith." And because the world was still unevangelized Paul longed to "do better still' in fulfilling God's purpose in him "to apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus."

II. Concentration upon Carrying out this Purpose. "This one thing I do." Like most young people Paul had the passion to do. But he was always praying for wisdom and discernment as to what was the right course of action, so that when it came to doing, it was to do the "one thing" to which God had directed him.

God does not call us to do more than one thing at a time. Our success largely depends upon finding that "one thing" and doing it. Be a specialist not a "jack-of-all-trades" for Christ, and you will "do better still."

III. The Forgetting of Things That Should Be Forgotten. A. Though in the past Paul had committed wrong to such an extent that he felt unworthy to be called an apostle, yet he realized that if he was going to carry out God's purpose he must allow no sins of the past to fetter him. He had repented of his sins, Christ had forgiven him, and he was a new creature. He determined that no memory of a misdirected past should paralyze his present work.

No one of us can "do better still" if our minds are clogged with past errors, or our hearts burdened with the past sins of which we have repented and for which we have asked forgiveness.

B. Yet there were successes that easily could have made Paul satisfied with "doing better." So lest these past achievements should hinder him in carrying out God's purpose, he decided to forget them.

So many people are spoiled by success. Achievements of the past are sometimes so satisfying that the opportunities of the present are unseen and unused. Unless past success stimulates one to "do better still" in the present, "forget the things that are behind."

IV. Wholehearted Effort. Whatever Paul felt he ought to do, he did with all his might. As a runner with his whole body thrown forward, his hand extended and his eyes wide open straining the sight to catch glimpses of the distant, struggles on, so Paul with all his strength "presses on" to carry out the purpose God had set for him.

"Better still" is reached only through definite and strenuous endeavor, and the doing with all our strength that to which God hath called us.

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

What some people claim to be ineffective prohibition in this country is not deterring the young people of other lands from keeping up an aggressive fight on the liquor interests. "Neuen Werk Keitum" unites the youth of German in the battle against alcohol. The present economic situation in that country threatens to check the fight, advises Herr Ferdinand Goebel of Berlin. However they purpose to drive on. Recently the Reichstag, under the pressure of this organization, passed a law aimed to safeguard youth against this insidious traffic which is internationally organized. They appeal for our interests and our help. Might it not be a good thing for some of our young people's societies to write to Mr. Goebel who will send information about their fight and it may show where we can be of some help to the young people of Germany?

Joseph G. Anderson, Omaha, Neb., member of the board of managers of the B. Y. P. U. of A. from Nebraska, is "on the job." At the State Summer Assembly he conducted a class on B. Y. P. U. methods and organization which proved to be one of the most popular classes of the assembly. In October a conference with the pastor and officers of the First B. Y. P. U. of Omaha, resulted in their adopting Mr. Anderson's suggestions and solving some of their problems. The Greater Omaha B. Y. P. U. is arranging a series of group conferences in January. Representatives from two or three churches will meet in a group for the purpose of studying organization and methods under Mr. Anderson. At the recent meeting of the state convention he was for the third time elected first vice-president of the Nebraska B. Y. P. U.

The Junior B. Y. P. U. Rally of the Miami Association (Ohio) was held at Price Hill. Eight societies were represented by 115 Juniors. There were songs and yells and an interesting program during which the Price Hill Juniors presented a short play "The Bible."

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

A Notable Dedication

A recent outstanding event was the dedication of the Haskell House for Nurses of the New England Baptist Hospital. It is a stiff climb up Parker Hill in Brookline on the crest of which the hospital sits enthroned. The magnificent view, and the certain breeze, are always bracers. For situation, certainly the hospital is ideal.

A very large company of Baptists, and other friends, made a delighted and sympathetic assembly. There was abundant opportunity to enjoy and inspect the building. Both inside and outside it suggests convenience, completeness and comfort. There is nothing for show, but everything for practicalness and homelikeness. It was perhaps truthfully said by one of the doctors, that hardly a hospital in the country had better provided for the training and housing of its nurses. There are over seventy individual rooms, most of them tastely furnished by ladies societies in the different Baptist churches. The lecture and social rooms are sufficiently spacious and attractive. Nothing that makes for a complete and happy utility has been left out.

The Dedication

Of course the Greatheart of the occasion was Colonel E. H. Haskell. He put $140,000 into the building, and the delighted and appreciative company was putting a deal of joy into him. He modestly claimed his satisfaction because the home was going to be for the nurses just what he wanted it to be, and what they deserved. All were convinced of that and that he had a right to his joy.

The absence from the festivities of Miss Emma Anderson, the long-time and indispensable superintendent of the hospital, was a painful disappointment. The long burden and strain of the management, during these critical years, has broken her health, and it seems doubtful now if she can come back to any such priceless service as she has rendered so long. We were all impressed by Col. Haskell's modest leadership in the dedication service. Mr. Albert H. Curtis spoke for the executive committee in accepting the building, and other brief addresses were made. Doctor Badger's speech was a gem, both in its felicitous and heartfelt phrasing, and in its perfection as a tribute to Miss Anderson. Coming from a practising physician in the hospital, it was the more noteworthy. He virtually declared that she had been the great doctor in the hospital, supplying from her own radiant and sympathetic spirit, a backing of confidence to the doctors, and of hope and courage to the patients. It was a perfect tribute, and everybody responded to its truthfulness and sincerity. Doctor Badger is a son of our lamented Deacon Badger of the First Church, Boston. Col. Haskell called on his pastor, Dr. C. N. Arbuckle to offer the dedicatory prayer.

The Next Duty

The hospital is one of which every Baptist may be proud. It has been fortunate in such a benefactor president as Col. Haskell; fortunate in such rare superintendency as Miss Anderson's; fortunate in the brilliant doctors and surgeons who have given it a fame throughout the country; fortunate in the noble buildings that are standing, and coming, on the glorious site. It must also be fortunate in the united and generous backing of Baptists. That is the next duty. The institution has the Baptist name. It must feel the willing backing of the Baptist nature, and become a solid basis for Baptist pride. Already there is an organized movement in that direction, and happy results are expected.

December Social Union

It was a live meeting. President Rood brought on two speakers, and each speech was in its way a challenge. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery was the first, and challenged us to an intelligent loyalty to the Baptist program in the World Movement. We never heard her speak more coherently or convincingly, as she showed us how the movement had nationalized our comparatively local enterprises, and made each of us feel the whole. She plead for the preeminence of Jesus in heart and program, and for willingness to sacrifice in grasping victory after visualizing failure. It was a telling address.

The other speaker was Rev. Harold Cook Phillips of Mount Vernon, N. Y. His theme was "The Simple Gospel." He is a speaker of the electric type. You have to think of his object, more than of his process. Given a ticklish subject, and a speaker loaded with temperament and force of conviction, and part of his hearers may almost violently agree with him, and another part as violently disagree. Mr. Phillips really challenged us to go back to Christ, as to headquarters, both for life and a message. When he seemed to do despite to "the traditions of the elders," he got upon dangerous ground. That always will be dangerous ground. Still the plea was glorious, and had unusual appreciation: "get back to the living Christ—listen to him, and live in him." Why should any Christian be suspicious of it?

The Shocker and the Shockproof

It is no new thing for Boston to have a shocker. Hence long ago it began to have the shock absorber, and the shockproof. For long we had come to regard the Unitarian Christian Register as a well-established shock absorber. Under the composed administration of Doctors Barrows and Bachelor, it was a prim old model of unruffled urbanity. No upheavels in "orthodoxy" ever disturbed its self-approving equilibrium.

But all that is changed. The shock absorber has become the shocker. It makes war both upon the old equilibrium, and the new orthodox "monstrosities." It chastises the extreme fundamentalist, and characterizes the quasi-liberal. One is a peril, and the other is pusillanimous. It surveys the whole field, and sees rampant fundamentalism rolling towards us like a "tank," meanwhile no upstanding brave resists but itself! Here is the defiance: "Who combats this sort of thing? Who understands the infamy that lies back of it? We are almost a solitary voice crying in a wilderness of decadence!"

The amusing thing about all this is, that nobody seems either shocked or excited. We are either shock absorbers or shockproof. It is accounted for by the fact that Boston has always been a producing center of quick firing reformers. Men who know exactly what we think, and just what we have not the pluck to say. They acknowledge our mental clarity, and brand our moral cowardice. They accuse us of "lying down," and call attention to their own perpendicularity. They are immensely amusing to the most chronic in the wide community of "decadents." And the others are armed with patience—they have to be.

Seminary Banquets

December brings the mid-winter banquets of the Newton and Rochester men. Usually they meet in the City Club in different rooms, at the same hour, and revel in their respective schools and memories. And they always exchange salutations and enjoy each others felicities. In almost every association we have Newton, Rochester, Crozer, Chicago and Hamilton men living together in Christian amity, and yet warmly loyal to their seminaries.

These banquets gave our ministers' conference an opportunity to hear on Monday, Dr. J. F. Vichert who had come on to meet the Rochester men at their banquet. He gave us an earnest and practical address on "Pastoral Visitation." The attendance was of course unusually large, and each minister's own experience made him an interested listener. But on account of changed home conditions, will the concept of pastoral visitation also have to change? That is a query that came to some of us.

"TAKE time to be holy," run the lines of a deeply spiritual call in the hymn. We need time to reflect on vital spiritual truth. All manner of vagaries are calling for our acceptance. Can we give a "reason for the hope that is in us?" Have we thought our religion through? Bulletin, First Church, Joliet, Ill.

Melrose

The First Church at Melrose has called Rev. Walter E. Woodbury of Minneapolis. He is a Massachusetts man, graduate of Brown and Newton, with high standing as a scholar and preacher, in every way equipped for a strong church. His coming would bring a welcome addition to our ministry in the state.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. Coon

There have been some changes in the pastorate recently. The leading church in southwest Nebraska, McCook, called Rev. C. M. Foreman and he has begun work there. For six years he was pastor at Blair, and four years recording secretary of the state convention, a position he now declines. Rev. Claude Neal, after years of good service at Polk, accepted a call from Fairbury and moved there Oct. 10. The Alliance church has called Rev. E. H. Clark, pastor at Albion; it is expected he will accept. The newly elected convention pastor, Rev. W. C. Miller, of Maxwell, begins his work under the direction of the state secretary, Dec. 1.

The three Loyalty luncheons in Nebraska held in Omaha, Lincoln and Grand Island were thoroughly successful. Each called in representatives from churches in the district who took home knowledge and enthusiasm for local inspiration. This was a happy plan of the woman's organization.

Home-coming Day

Our college in Grand Island utilizes the "special day" opportunity, so it made Nov. 17 "home-coming day," at which time ground was broken for the president's home on college property, and adjoining the new home of State Secretary Ainslie. Rev. A. H. Shattuck, president of the alumni association, after using the spade, handed it to President Wells with the sage remark to keep it for future similar events. The full amount for the new building is virtually secured. On the evening of that day a large company of students, old and young, and friends of the college filled the dining-room for a rich entertainment for body and mind. The lists of Baptist students in Nebraska colleges shows seventy-five in our college. Here is some work for the Christian associations.

Stewardship

Rev. B. B. Braden is holding meetings in several churches illustrating and enforcing Christian stewardship. He gave six addresses in Grand Island, emphasizing chiefly the practice of tithing. A generous number of the members practiced this plan, but others were added making the number nearly 50 per cent of the resident membership. No more needed and no less important is a stewardship plan concerning church attendance; and a boys' organization is starting such a plan, equally good for adults.

Recent Deaths

The death of D. M. Amsberry at Lincoln recently, removes a prominent figure in Nebraska Baptist affairs during the last half century. He had long been a leading journalist in Broken Bow, served two terms as president of the Baptist State Convention and was four years secretary of state under Governor McKelvie. Few remain who were copartners with him in molding and directing denominational work here during fifty years.

Rev. Jehu Lewelling, probably the oldest Baptist minister in the state, died Nov. 5 aged 89 years. He moved to Saline County in 1877, serving as pastor at Western, Alexandria and other places. Rev. W. L. Miller, of Tobias, an intimate friend from boyhood, conducted his funeral at Western. Rev. E. M. Owings was called to El Paso, Texas, Nov. 14, by the death of his son-in-law, Prof. Byron L. Snyder, teacher in the Texas School of Metallurgy. Mrs. Snyder was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Owings.

Chicago-Iowa Letter

By J. W. Weddell

The Bible and Missionary Conference

We joined all the northern states in our fall rally to the New World Testament. Des Moines had a great conference with special interest among the young people of the university and the city who came forward a large company at the close of one of the thrilling sessions to consecrate themselves to definite kingdom work for the Master.

What a splendidly mobilized affair this series of conferences was in the interest of the forward movement! Thirty-five widely distributed mass conventions, eighty-five Loyalty luncheons carried out in a business way by the women, followed by "echo" meetings, countless in number, in the associations, with pastors and workers going here and there to spread the tidings in the various churches. It was mine to visit Clinton and Camanche in this broad quest.

The Chicago Meetings

It was more convenient and in a way congenial for me to attend the gathering in my own home city of Chicago. The same team as at Des Moines was here: Dr. Peter C. Wright known from former college days, chairman of the committee; Dr. D. J. Evans, fresh from his unprecedented Bible class work (over 50,000 thronged at one session) in Kansas City —naturally his chosen subject was "Christ and the Multitudes"; Pres. B. D. Weeks, with his marvelous story of progress among an Indian people at Bacone College; Dr. W. E. Chalmers—he was our household pastor once at Morgan Park—with his singing voice and message for religious education; Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. Manley of India, bringing us their stirring dramatic representation of the needs of the field; Dr. Benjamin Otto, telling of the demands of our great western metropolis in city missions—he knows them well, as superintendent of the executive council; Mrs. Orrin R. Judd of Brooklyn, speaking for the women's work. It was a stimulating succession of addresses on our future program. I took notes on the whole with care, the multiplicity of similar presentations forbidding fuller detail here. That was a good key note of Doctor Wright in opening his spirited conduct of the meetings, "Love goes beyond the limit of duty."

The Women at LaSalle Hotel

But I must tell you of the outpouring of the Baptist sisterhood at their Chicago luncheon, the crown, it is said, of all the women's rallies. I was a favored guest at the reporter's table, with two other gentlemen, Pastor Jennings of Lawrence, Kan., who deftly organized the Chicago Conference, and Dr. Otto who offered the prayer before the sumptuous banquet. There were 854 present (think of it!) overflowing into the adjoining apartment of the Red Room on the nineteenth floor. Mrs. Andrew McLeish was the toast-mistress. Mrs. G. W. Taft of the Northern Seminary conducted "loyalty lesson," one of the best Bible readings on missions ever put together. Mrs. Curtis Lee Laws of New York was the first speaker on the work at large as seen in her recent travels and she won all hearts. Miss Ryan gave us a new angle of vision on the wo among the Hopi Indians, among whom she has been engaged—stop calling for their heathen scalp dances, she said, they have left them behind—and Miss Irene Pennington made her dear Burma stand out in fair lines of attraction through painstaking endeavor. Mrs. Judd gave a good last word: "Stewardship is not man's way to get money but God's way of getting character."

Iowa Matters

There is not much of a newsy character to report from Iowa. We go on our orderly way, and therefore there is nothing sensational occurring. Cornfields were never larger, pigs never fatter, and hens, which have more than once saved Iowa, never more vociferous—along with the louder mouthed lords of the barnyard. Pastors are, to use a popular expression, just now "sawing wood" and getting their legitimate and normal church work done in these somewhat dull days evangelistically. Dr. Allan N. Nettleman, Chicago's recent contribution to our Iowa workers, is finding the field at Forest Avenue, Des Moines, very promising. He has had a generous welcome, along with his talented wife. On the other hand Iowa people are feeling very complacement that The Baptist has taken one of its own sons into its important and far-ranging editorial department. We look for good things.

Doctor Glover Leaves California

By John W. Johnson

Dr. Terrot Reavley Glover left Berkeley, Calif., on Dec. 5, on his return journey to Cambridge University, England, where he is a Fellow of St. John's College and public lecturer of the university.

He has just completed a semester a lecturer on Roman history in the University of California. Upon the Sathe Classical Foundation he has delivered series of lectures on Herodotus. Thi lectureship is one of the highest academi distinctions on the university campus and among classical scholars the annual Sather lectures provide the most significant event of the year.

For the first time the Sather lecturer was also the Earl lecturer, under the auspices of the Pacific School of Religion. The theme of the Earl lectures was "The Apostle Paul."

Doctor Glover has also given a series of six addresses on the campus arranged by the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s and student pastors on "The Jesus of History."

Under the joint auspices of the San Francisco Bay Baptist Ministerial Association, of which Dr. E. A. Hanley is president; the Metropolitan Baptist Bay Cities Union, of which Dr. C. E. Tingley is superintendent; and the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, the Baptists of the Bay region recently gave a dinner in honor of Doctor Glover which was attended by representatives of the faculties of five theological seminaries and ministers and laymen of all Protestant communions. Doctor Glover's address on "Four Turning Points in the History of the Christian Church" was as marked by its prophetic fire and warnings as it was significant in its masterly treatment of Christian history.

Amid many social and public demands Doctor Glover has been a constant worshiper at the First Baptist Church in Berkeley and a most appreciative hearer of Doctor Hanley's sermons. On the campus and in Christian circles Doctor Glover made a great many friends. Many visitors have been admired and praised but it is not remembered when a great scholar won also to himself the affection of so many friends. Rich in classical lore he walks boldly and alert as a critical thinker among modern men. He regards it the imperative duty of the university man to be the critic of his time and the builder of nobler thought and life for the future.

As a Christian one catches in the flash of his eye the gleam of the fire that gave distinction to such makers of Christian history as Paul, Tertullian, Augustine, Luther, of each and all of whom he is an ardent admirer. He belongs to the spiritual succession of the fathers of the church, more particularly the Latin in temperament than the Greek, and in appearance there is a striking resemblance of the profile portrait of Savonarola "peering out of the darkness" with mobile expression quivering with some new flash of spiritual genius.

Doctor Glover is the son of Principal Richard Glover of the Baptist Theological College at Bristol, England and who served as a commissioner of the British Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in an important mission to China. He is also the president elect of the Baptist Union of Great Britain, and American Baptists may be assured that all the strength of his influence will be given to the maintenance of the essential Baptist principles of liberty of conscience, an educated ministry, genuineness in spiritual religion and fidelity to the positive proclamation of the evangel of the cross.

It is earnestly hoped, and not without some grounds of expectation, that Doctor Glover will return as lecturer to the University of California and to Berkeley.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Extended revival meetings have been held at the South church Laconia, Rev. G. C. Kincaid, pastor. Mr. Kincaid has had the help of Rev. B. C. Bubar of Maine. These meetings extended through a period of six weeks; upon urgent request Mr. Bubar has remained for a seventh week. The attendance has been well sustained through the entire period and contributions have been generous. There have been a number of conversions, and baptisms have occurred on at least three different Sundays. Sixteen were baptized on one Sunday. Divine healing has been emphasized. The preaching of Mr. Bubar has been much appreciated.

At a choir vesper service in the True Memorial church, Rochester, the pastor. Rev. E. W. Churchill, was assisted by Rev. C. W. Doe of Center Strafford in administering baptism. Among the candidates was a young man attending the University of New Hampshire and also an entire Sunday-school class of six young ladies from the church at Center Strafford.

Rev. J. B. Knowles has resigned at Chester. Because of impaired health he will not take another pastorate, at least for a few months. His residence for the winter will be Derry, N. H.

The People's Tabernacle Church of Manchester, Rev. H. R. Whitelock, pastor, is fast becoming acquainted with its new surroundings in the property lately purchased by them for church purposes. This church exchanged buildings with the American Legion. The church needed larger accommodations, the Legion did not need as large as they occupied. The Tabernacle Church now has the best equipped building of any church of any denomination in the state for carrying on institutional work in connection with the regular church enterprise. The city of Manchester, it would seem, affords an opportunity for a church to minister according to institutional methods. The Tabernacle Church is certainly attempting large things for the kingdom in the "Queen City of New Hampshire."

NEW YORK

Rev. Arthur E. Harriman began his work as pastor of the Salem Church, New Rochelle, on Dec. 1.

The First Baptist Mariner's Church, Manhattan, observed its eightieth anniversary Dec. 2-9. The pastor is William N. Hubbell.

The First Church of Hornell, L. Spurgeon Clark, minister: Mr. Clark has been with the church for six months; great and growing interest is shown in every department of the church and Sunday school. Lack of an adequate church building is proving a handicap, but plans are already under way for a building project beginning next spring. The plan is to put $150,000 into a modernly equipped building in every sense of the word. The church stands second in the county of Steuben, in respect to strength.

Cook Academy, Montour Falls, continues its good work. In the opinion of those closely connected with the school, it has the finest group of boys in many years both as to moral standard and scholarship. An effort is being made to develop cooperation on the part of the students in the discipline of the school. A student council of seven older boys, chosen by the principal, meets weekly and discusses the conduct on the halls and about the campus. More and more other boys are being trained in assuming responsibility not alone for their own conduct but for some younger chap. Out of it will grow a cooperating group to aid the faculty in developing the school. Every step in the process is taken under the advice of the faculty men. As the young men take responsibility in making the school better it reacts to make them stronger and more purposeful—a careless boy becomes a student and a serious-minded young man when he senses that he is necessary part of some fine organization.

Stirring addresses and an impressive pageant featured the "home day" program of the Hamilton Church, Dec. 2, in which a record of more than a century of faithful service was reviewed. Throughout the day there were services in which the various departments of this well-organized church had expressions. In the morning there was a service of baptism, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Franklin D. Elmer. A historical address was given by Dr. A. P. Brigham of Colgate University. Communion service followed, conducted by the pastor assisted by Prof. A. E. Alton of Colgate. The hand of fellowship was given to a number of new members. Seventy-seven students in Colgate University have become affiliate members in the village church. At the service of the Bible school an address was delivered by Prof. A. B. Stewart, of the university. In the afternoon "home day" letters were read, and there was a helpful address by Pres. George B. Cutten of Colgate University. At the vesper service, the pastor gave an illustrated lecture on "The Hymns of the Continents." Luncheon was served in the church parlors at five o'clock. Groups rallies were held for children. led by Mrs. E. H. Stone; for the young people, at which an address was given by Dr. J. B. Anderson of the Theological Seminary; for the women of the church, at which Mrs. Wm. F. Langworthy spoke on "The World Work of Women;" and for the men, at which there were short talks by Dr. W. O. Stearns, Mr. Floyd Currier, and Dr. W. H. Allison. In the evening there was an historical pageant, written for the occasion by Mrs. F. L. Shepardson, entitled "Yesterday and Today." This portrayed the service rendered by the Hamilton Church and Colgate University to the kingdom in supplying young men as missionaries on foreign fields. Among those who had a part in the pageant were H. Yusufji, India; K. Watanabe, Japan; A. H. Shahbaz, Persia, all students in Colgate. During the past century Colgate has sent into the foreign fields 196 missionaries, all of whom had an active interest in the village church during their student days.

NEW JERSEY

The North Orange Baptist Church, made its annual every member canvass Sunday. Nov. 25, which resulted in $27,237 in signed pledges that day for the church budget, and well over $50,000 for benevolences, which included the live pledges to the New World Movement. The canvass was completed and the final report given Dec. 11. Two hundred and six visitors made the canvass. In addition to the above benevolences, the special cash offering for the restoration of Baptist work in Japan amounted to over $1,285, to be remitted Dec. 1. On the day of the every member canvass, five persons were baptized, and the following Sunday fifteen new members received the hand of fellowship.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Following the Bible and missionary conference held in Philadelphia, eight conferences were held in Reading, Harrisburg, Sunbury, Canton, Wellsboro, Scranton, Wilkes Barre, and Waymart. Dr. C. S. Detweiler, superintendent of Latin American missions for the Home Mission Society; Rev. O. H. Sisson of Bassein, Burma; Dr. R. M. West of Lewisburg; Rev. O. T. Steward, executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Philadelphia and vicinity; Mrs. William E. Chalmers, Dr. C. A. Soars, Dr. Arthur C. Baldwin, pastor of the Chestnut Street Church of Philadelphia; Rev. Frank A. Stanton of Carbondale, Director William G. Russell, and Mrs. Howard Wayne Smith, served on the eastern team. The conferences have made a deep and abiding spiritual impression. Some conferences voluntarily and spontaneously expressed their appreciation by unanimous vote, while from every conference came the request that a like conference might be held next year.

Rev. C. W. Macgeorge resigns at Wellsboro to become pastor at Ellwood City.

Rev. Edwin Aubrey, who for several years has been pastor at Edwardsville, and who was taken seriously ill a year or so ago, is now recovered and leaves Pennsylvania to become pastor in Illinois. He is a man of fine Christian spirit.

First Church, Williamsport, has given cordial welcome to its new pastor, Rev. Andrew W. Mayer.

Rev. A. B. Bowser removes from Ford City to Walnut Street Church, Jersey Shore.

MICHIGAN.

Rev. E. J. Witte, a former pastor of Immanuel Church, Detroit, has been called to the Carmel Street Church of the same city. He has already entered on his new work.

Mrs. George Ferguson died at the home of her son in San Diego, Calif., Dec. 5, 1923. Harriet N. Hendryx was born Nov. 5, 1829. She was united in marriage to Dr. George Ferguson in 1851, and most of their married life was spent in Coldwater. They held a continuous membership in the Coldwater Church from 1861 till the time of their passing away. Mrs. Ferguson was associational secretary for the missionary societies for more than twenty-five years. Doctor Ferguson passed away in 1910. Funeral services were held at the Baptist church in Coldwater and burial made beside the husband.

The new Grand River Avenue Church of Detroit, Rev. E. J. Parsons, pastor received forty new members in the last month. Since a year ago the membership of the church and of the Sunday-school have been doubled. The present building is inadequate and a new building is inevitable. Plans are now under discussion with the Detroit Baptist Union. On Dec. 9 the church took its every-member-canvass for current expenses and missions. The second year of Pastor Parsons' pastorate is just opening.

The Mills Memorial Baptist Church of Mayville, desires to settle a pastor to take the place of Dr. H. H. Ford who has recently accepted the pastorate of the First Church of Caro. Maysville has a splendid up-to-date church plant a modern parsonage, pays a good salary and has a people ready for hard work. Mrs. Mable Beach is the church clerk.

OHIO

On Nov. 8 the Baptist ministers of the Ashtabula Association formed a ministerial association. The first meeting was held in the Conneaut Church, Dec. 3. Rev. W. H. Hunt, the president of the conference, is also pastor of this church. After a business meeting dinner was served by Mrs. Hunt. At 7:30 a service was held with the church Rev. T. G. Erler of Geneva and Rev. A. J. Grady of Kingsville were the speakers.

The Conneaut Church under the leadership of its pastor is making itself felt in the community. Sunday evening Pastor Hunt baptized fourteen and received them into the membership of the church.

The Ashtabula Association is planing great things for the kingdom. Beginning Jan. 29 it opens a simultaneous evangelistic campaign under the direction of the state director of evangelism. Rev. C. H. Stull. Many of the pastors of this association have been out helping other churches in different parts of the state.

On Jan. 7 the Ashtabula Church will celebrate its ninety-ninth anniversary. God is blessing the labors of the pastor Rev. E. R. Fitch. During the past year over $5,000 was raised towards the indebtness of the church.

Rev. M. W. Forshay passed away at Painesville Dec. 2. Mr. Forshay was pastor of the Painesville Church for several, but, was forced to retire because of failing health.

KANSAS

Wellington: The First Church has closed the most gracious and powerful revival campaign in its history of forty-three years. The evangelist was the Rev. H. A. Manewal of Ottawa. The fearlessness with which he handled the topic of "Questionable Amusements," was remarkable and his line of thought so clearly defined that scores of church people received a new conception of the Christian life on a higher plane of morals and ethics. The average attendance for the three weeks was 380. Several nights had over 600. On the last night almost 1.000 people packed the church. At the close of the sermon, "What think ye of Christ?" between fifty and sixty men, women, and young people came forward to the altar, accepting Jesus as Saviour. Close to 150 conversions and reconsecrations were registered during the campaign.

During the month of November twelve churches of Ottawa conducted a simultaneous campaign of evangelism. All the churches held meetings at the same time. Great spiritual results have been experienced in all of the churches. The First Church had the assistance of Dr. Warren P. Behan, head of the religious education department in Ottawa University, as preacher and Rev. Oliver Potter of Bronson as song leader and soloist. A great life-service meeting was held the last Sunday night under the leadership of Dr. Behan. There were forty-three young men and women who came forward expressing their purpose to give their lives to distinctly Christian service. The regular audiences have been filling our house. January 1, W. A. Elliott closes his seventeenth year in this pastorate. They have been happy and enriching years.

INDIANA

First Church of Indianapolis, Dr. F. E. Taylor, pastor. At the last annual meeting of the church it was felt by many that the past year had far exceeded the previous years. The growth of the Sunday school has been such that even with all of the facilities of the great building of the First Church, every inch of space is now being used, and classes are even meeting in the kitchens of the church. Over $100,000 was raised and expended in the past year and the budget for the coming year will be at least $140,000. Vast audiences greet the pastor every Sunday morning and at the evening services chairs are being put in to accommodate the crowds that come every Sunday night. Dr. Taylor is preaching a series of fireside sermons on "America's Greatest Need—Homes;" "The Head of the Home—Father;" "The Home Maker—Mother;" "The Life of the Home—The Children;" "Selecting the Home Maker, or Choosing a Wife;" "Selecting the Head of the House, or Choosing a Husband;" "Things That Help or Hinder in Making a Good Home;" "Christmas in the Home;" "Our Home in 1924." One of the features of the Sunday evening service is the singing by the men of the congregation. It is an inspiring sight to see hundreds of men gathered in an audience and to hear them sing one of the old hymns of the gospel, as they do every Sunday night.

The pastor of the Valparaiso Church, W. W. Ayer, is preaching a series of sermons on "The Pilgrim's Progress." A special service for the public ordination of deacons and the consecration of a newly elected board of deaconesses was held on Sunday morning, Dec. 9. Rev. Geo. W. Taft, of the Northern Theological Seminary, was chosen to preach the sermon.

MINNESOTA

Rev. J. W. Conley of Cannon Falls, recently celebrated his seventy-first birthday. His former friends and parishoners of Oak Park (Ill.), St. Paul (Minn.)

Omaha (Neb.), and Fresno (Calif.), surrised him by the gift of a fine radio set. He wishes to take this means of exressing his gratitude to his friends for hus furnishing the means of coming in ouch with the outside world. Every unday now, though he remains in the ame helpless condition physically, he as the privilege of listening to a church ervice in his own room as well as exellent programs during the week.

IOWA

At a conference held recently at Cedar Falls, the Danish Baptist General Conference of America passed resolutions of gratitude to the Home Mission Society and the General Board of Promotion for financial support and the state conventions and their superintendents for cooperation in missionary work in the States.

ILLINOIS

Rev. Chas. A. Dougan has accepted the call of the Galilee Church, Chicago, and is already on the field.

A council of the churches of the Bloomington Association was called, with the approval of the associational committee, to meet with and to assist the Baptist church of Cornell on Dec. 3, to examine for ordination to the work of the gospel ministry their pastor Fred G. Crown. The ordination services were held in the evening with George Sneath of Normal as moderator and H. C. Wedington of Atlanta as clerk.

Since closing a temporary pastorate of seven months with the Grand Avenue Church of St. Louis, J. N. Edmondson has re-entered the evangelistic field, with headquarters at Mt. Vernon.

MISSOURI

The Antioch Church, and the entire community have been enjoying a feast of good times. Dr. Ray Palmer came here Nov. 18 and remained eleven days in a series of revival meetings. The meetings were far reaching in effect, people attending from miles around. Twenty-five were added to the church, nineteen were baptized, two others approved for baptism, and four by letter and others will follow.

NORTH DAKOTA

Jamestown: The annual business meeting of the church was held Nov. 19. Supper was served to about 150 persons. This was followed by the annual roll call and business session. All departments of the church are in active condition and all bills for the year have been fully paid. The church reports twenty-four baptisms during the year. Rev. J. M. Hupp is the pastor.

Glenburn: Brother W. W. Graham from McCausland, Iowa, began work recently on this field and the out-station at Calvary. The churches are responding well to his leadership. Last Sunday three persons from the church were baptized at Minot.

Lone Tree: Convention Pastor H. H. Sunderson, has been assisting Rev. J. N. Start in a series of special meetings. There were several conversions, and the church was greatly revived.

Sawyer: Rev. A. G. Anderson and his people are completing an addition to their church building, which will afford additional Sunday-school rooms.

Guthrie: Colporter-Missionary Philip E. Nystrom closed a series of meetings with this church Dec. 2. Three persons were baptized and others are expected soon.

Grand Forks: Rev. A. Sterling Barner from Barrington, Ill., began his work at Grand Forks, Oct. 1. The church is taking on new life and enthusiasm. The congregations are steadily increasing. Several new members have been received. Sunday, Dec. 9, was special friendship Sunday with a church-family gathering in the afternoon. Group meetings were provided with special programs of interest to the different ages. Substantial improvements have been made on the parsonage and church property.

Kenmare: Major Chaplain E. W. White of Omaha, Neb., closed a series of special meetings at Kenmare on Nov. 25. About thirty persons have already been baptized. Several others have been received by letter and experience.

Powers Lake: The chaplain is at present assisting Pastor Rev. E. Monnes at Powers Lake. Forty persons have already professed conversion. Several of these are heads of families. Following the meetings on this field Doctor White will hold a series of meetings with Rev. L. McKinnon of Page.

Park River: Rev. W. A. Weyhrauch, pastor at Valley City, assisted Pastor Richard Jensen in a series of meetings following the dedication of the new church. Four professed conversion. Pastor Jensen also held a meeting twenty-five miles west of Park River. Eight conversions are reported. Four persons were baptized at Park River Nov. 25.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

First Church, Tacoma, held its farewell service in its old building on Thanksgiving Day, also observing a "storehouse day" at which time the people brought approximately $30,000 into the storehouse of the Lord toward the new First Baptist Church building. The service was most interesting throughout. The old building, which has stood for thirty years, held many fond memories for the older members, many of whom were there and rejoiced through the tears at the prospect of tearing the old one down that a new one may rise in its place. On Sunday afternoon the Lord's Supper service was held in the First Christian Church which has extended the use of its building for this purpose until the new one is erected. The hand of fellowship was extended to thirteen new members. At the evening service in the Tacoma Theater people were compelled to stand unable to get seats. At this service five indicated their desire to become members of the church, four of them candidates for baptism. New church offices have been opened and the old building is closed, waiting the wrecker who will begin in a few days to get it out of the way for the coming of the new building. An interesting feature of the day was the announcement of the gift of a set of chimes by a Mr. John S. Baker in memory of his father and mother who were once active members of this church.

OREGON

The Bible and missionary conference held in the First Baptist Church (White Temple), Portland, Nov. 8-9, was most successful. From a point of numbers it was the largest one held in the Northwest, with 856 registrations. From a point of interest and inspiration, it met the fondest hopes. Every day was full of good things, and an atmosphere of devotion and spiritual life pervaded throughout the conference and lingers. Woman's Day, November 7, which really opened the conference, was a red letter day for Baptist women of the city and state, and will long be cherished by them. Promptly at one o'clock p. m. the program began with a "Barmecide" (foodless) luncheon. Miss Mabelle McVeigh, candidate secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, spoke on "The Measure of Our Opportunity." Miss Louise Carter, missionary from Central America, on "Opportunity in Central America"; Miss Helen Monroe, missionary from Japan, on "Opportunity in Japan," and Miss Alice Brimson, Americanization secretary, Woman's Home Mission Society, on "The Baptist Response to World Opportunity." The heart throb of personal consecration was manifest in each address and a large audience hung on every word spoken. At the close of the program Mrs. W. B. Hinson, general chairman of the ingathering committee, asked for reports from the various 14 city churches and a chairman for each church responded. A few came from over the state outside of Portland. Previous to this date each of the churches had celebrated Loyalty luncheons with a total attendance of 700. Amount contributed from "might" boxes, $814.11, from W. W. G. Girls, $98.89, and $188.20 to the Polaca, Ariz., Indian center. At six o'clock a harvest supper was served to the W. W. G. Girls in the Lower Temple, at which 230 were

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THESE ARE BUSY DAYS at First Church Rev. Rufus Keyser, formerly of the First Church of Stockton, has taken up his work as assistant to Doctor Francis. Mr. Keyser is a "real man," with an unbounded love for folks. He made a good record during his pastorate at Stockton, and comes to the field here, teeming with energy, with a splendid program for the young people. On Dec. 2 the church celebrated the ninth anniversary of Doctor Francis' pastorate. During the nine years, there has been a net gain of over 1,100 members, and the increase in the giving of the members to both current expenses and missions has been in like proportions. The congregation has outgrown the present building and plans for a new church, modern and adequate, are under way. Early in January the church will move to its temporary home which is now under construction on Sixth street between Union and Burlington. The opening event in its new home will be a series of meetings in the middle of January, conducted by G. Campbell Morgan, following which, the church will open a program for a church night, and a church institute to include a supper and a series of classes on vital topics. In response to the call for aid to the Japanese earthquake sufferers, the First Church contributed $2,089.13, and for the rebuilding of the Baptist missions in Japan, $2,077.92, making a total of $4,167.05.

DR. AND MRS. A. T. ROBINSON have been doing a splendid work in Southern California as special tithing evangelists. Their work is constructive, scriptural and in every way helpful. Some time was spent in the vicinity of San Diego, also in the Temple Church, Los Angeles, Sunnyside, Tremont, Pasadena and a week with the Santa Monica Church where Doctor Robinson was the former pastor.

IDAHO

REV. W. T. S. SPRIGGS, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Nampa, has been appointed historical secretary of the Idaho Convention. This appointment was made at a recent meeting of the board of managers. Doctor Spriggs is eminently qualified for this position. He is already busy gathering important information regarding the early history of Baptist work in Idaho.

REV. J. R. L. HASLAM who had such a successful pastorate at Notus a few years ago, is again pastor there. The members of the church and citizens of the community are delighted to have him back. Every department of the work is taking on new life—cottage prayermeetings are being held, a personal workers' class is being organized and already there have been several conversions.

REV. E. E. COX WAS RECENTLY ordained at New Plymouth. There has probably never been an ordination council called to set aside a man in Idaho to the ministry so harmonious and so satisfactory as the council that ordained Brother Cox. Mr. Cox has been colporter-missionary in Idaho for many years.

REV. E. PAUL SMITH of Liberty, Pa., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church of Pocatello. He will commence his work on the new field Jan. 1.

REV. J. H. GERVIN HAS just closed a successful evangelistic meeting at Emmett. There were twenty-seven professions of faith.

REV. W. J. AGEE IS IN HIS eighth year as pastor at Ustick. Recently the last payment was made on the parsonage. The old note, on which payments have been made through a period of years, was burnt at a special thanksgiving service. Every department of the work at Ustick is in a healthy condition. Plans for the enlargement of the church are now being considered.

REV. A. C. LATHROP, who has completed a successful pastorate of over ten years at Emmett, has accepted a call to Buhl. He began his work there Dec. 1.

REV. J. F. JEWEL, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church of Fruitland. Mr. Jewel was formerly located pastorate.

MISS MINNIE N. BYRNE commenced work at Hailey, Dec. 1 as assistant to the pastor, Rev. H. W. Vodra.

MRS. AMANDA PATEY has closed a successful revival at Wilder.

REV. J. E. KANARR, who has been with the Idaho Baptist Convention for several years as district missionary, has been appointed convention pastor.

Obituary

Clara Adelia Lasher, daughter of the late Rev. George William and Eliza Eaton Lasher, passed away in sleep on Oct. 31, 1923, at her home, Cincinnati, Ohio. Burial was at Hamilton, N. Y.

Miss Almira Starbuck was born of Quaker parentage in Boston, Mass., in 1832. The family moved to Baltimore and her childhood was spent there.

While attending school in Troy, N. Y., she was converted and later joined the Baptist church. For more than thirty-five years she was a teacher in the public school of Troy and Cincinnati

On Friday morning, Nov. 16, in the home of her niece, Mrs. J. Hurt Whitehead of Chatham, Va., the earthly life of this great woman came to an end. Interment was in the Chatham cemetery.

William A. Estaver, for fifty years a servant of Christ, was called to his eternal home on Nov. 19. For forty years he filled the honored office of deacon in Baptist churches in Worcester, Mass., Jackson, Mich., Peekskill, N. Y., and Jacksonville, Fla. "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith." Interment was in the beautiful West Evergreen cemetery of Jacksonville, Fla.

He is survived by his wife and eight children: William A., Jr., Henry R., and George W., in Jacksonville; Mrs. F. D. Hamilton, Carleton R., and Phillips Brooks, in Jackson, Mich.; Miss Esther Lee, in Worcester, Mass.; and Rev. Edward A., in Agawam, Mass.

Where Christmas Forgot to Come

order to serve only the Lord Jesus: then the two other frightened boys forgot their fear, too, and told how they were also serving Jesus, happy all day long. It was the most surprising news which had ever come to that village; merchants left their stalls to listen, and when Rajamma's father reached town he was eager to listen himself.

"But, see here," he called out to our missionaries, "how long have you white folks known about Christmas?"

"Ever since we were little children."

"Then why hasn't anybody ever told me before?" asked Rajamma's father; "if I hadn't happened to come here today I might never have heard of your God; I might have grown old and wrinkled without knowing that there was anything but a wooden idol to worship; oh, why haven't you come to me sooner?"

"Oh me!" groaned our gentleman missionary.

"Oh me!" moaned our lady missionary.

Why, indeed? But I am sure you understand that it was not their fault at all! Not when they had been working day and night in India for years and years and years telling every possible person about their glad tidings; and hadn't they even chosen the hardest, most faraway village as their special Christmas present to the Saviour? Oh no, it was not their fault that there was this place where Christmas forgot to come. It was my fault! And your fault!

Because we forgot all about being wise men (and women!) ourselves. We forgot to bring our hardest rarest presents to the Saviour. We forgot that little brown girls like Rajamma would rather have Christmas than idols.

But now that we have finally remembered all the places in the world where Christmas can never come until we do something about it, I wonder if every Young Reserve cannot bring a present this year to our denomination, so that by next Christmas there will be a little more "peace on earth" (peace in Rajamma's town, and the next town, too), and a little more "good-will among men" (good-will among the men in Rajamma's town, and the next town too!)

Week of Prayer for the Churches

strengthened and prospered in their counsels and actions.

That each nation may seek to cleanse its own life from the sins which defile and bring death to the soul of a people.

That in each land the church of Christ may become the moral guide of the peoples.

Scripture readings—Isaiah 1; Hosea 14; St. Matthew 8:5-13; Rev. 21:1-8, 22-27.

Thursday, Jan. 10

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Let us give thanks—That the races of mankind are coming to know their unity in spiritual need, and that in the hour of awakening only Christ can satisfy their hunger.

That there is a growing desire among non-Christian peoples to hear of Christ.

That in China, India, and other lands where the political outlook is confused, spiritual hopes never shone more brightly.

That to the races of Africa also the knowledge is coming of their hope in Christ Jesus.

That both at home and abroad there has been true fellowship among those engaged in this holy service, and that the missionaries and their fellow-workers have not ceased to preach Christ.

Let us pray—That in every field and in every variety of service all things may be seen in the searching light of Christ Jesus.

That the missionary societies may receive the spirit of wisdom, patience and power, so that they may know how to redeem the time.

That they may never lose the vision of their Lord and of his cross, and never fail to see all men to be objects of the divine redemption in Christ Jesus.

That every missionary may be filled with the joy and power of the Lord.

That to the church there may be revealed new ways into the heart of Islam.

Scripture readings — Isaiah 42:1-16; Isaiah 15; St. Luke 10:1-20; St. John 17.

Friday, Jan. 11

FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND THE YOUNG

Let us give thanks—For all who in the home and in places of learning have kept the fires of faith burning continually.

For all students who have entered during the past year by faith into the field of Christian service.

For all who as parents, teachers and pastors, have so lived that their lives have commended Christ to childhood and youth.

For Sunday schools, and for their teachers who give without reserve to this holy service.

For all who in every place have sought to win for the Saviour the unclaimed and unexhausted powers of youth.

Let us pray—That in the worship at the family altar, in the reading of the Bible, and in reverence for the Lord's Day, childhood and youth may be trained to meet the perils of the world.

That all Sunday-school teachers may have wisdom and a never-failing patience.

That they may seek, for the children, service and not wealth as the prize of life.

That the students of every land may hear the call of Christ into his manifold service.

Scripture readings—Proverbs 8; 1 Samuel 3; Luke 2:40-52; 2 Timothy 1.

Saturday, Jan. 12

HOME MISSIONS

Let us give thanks—For all who have sought during the past year by personal evangelism, or by the public ministry, to bring men to Christ.

For all who in the public life of the nation are not ashamed to confess their faith in Christ, and are seeking

Seeking to Save the Lost

Preliminary reports from evangelists and field workers of The American Baptist Home Mission Society indicate that additions to church membership for the current year are likely to equal those of the preceding year.

From many fields come encouraging reports that it has been easier to assemble Christian people in their churches for the deepening of the spiritual life.

Doors of opportunity are wide open. Never were there so many invitations. Never have so many asked, "Can you help us next year?"

The Department of Evangelism seeks to stimulate churches to constructive and continuous evangelism, the attainment of higher levels of spiritual life and the ingathering of souls. Throughout the year 22 field evangelists assisted by special workers have been in active service. In this intensive work the society cooperates with State Conventions, City Mission Societies, and Foreign Speaking Conferences.

The new year is approaching. We already stand on its threshhold. Is not this evangelistic activity worthy of your most loyal support? Nothing is more fundamental to our denominational progress and the advancement of the Kingdom.

to apply it in industrial and social life.

For the brave and patient service of those who commend in brotherly love the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ to all those who reject him; and for all encouragement which they have received.

Let us pray—That all within the church may hear the call to share the good news of the Saviour with those at their door who are strangers to him.

That the church may give the supremacy in all things to Jesus Christ, and have no other purpose than to unfold his truth, and to express in service his will.

That there may be an increase of personal faith, hope, and love, among workers in all departments of Christian service.

For all seeking the spiritual welfare of young men and women.

Our Book Shelf

Bible Biographies—Paul the Missionary, by Rev. William M. Taylor. New York: Doran.

A most thorough and interesting biographical story of the life and labors of the Apostle Paul. It is to be hoped that this reprint of a great work published first many years ago will be widely read today. The volume is a fine piece of character delineation.

Glimpses of Indian America, by W. F. Jordan. New York: Revell.

A graphic account of the conditions and needs of a great race of people. The writer is telling his readers about people whom he knows because he has lived and worked among them. This is no traveler's glance converted into the printed page in order to make money. We hope the volume will be widely read for it is worth-while.

What Are You Worth?, by Rev. Charles L. Goodell. New York: Doran.

A splendid volume for any one to read, but especially helpful for young people. The power of the preacher has been retained in the work of writing this book.

With Italy in Her Final War of Liberation.

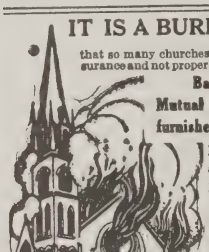
Finding the Worth While in Europe, by Albert B. Osborne. New York: McBride Co. Third Edition. Edited by T. R. Ybarra.

The author of "Planning a Trip Abroad" and "As It Is in England" some years ago wrote a guide-book of the interesting places in Europe for the special service of tourists with only a limited time for travel. The volume has been revised and enlarged so that it meets post-war conditions. The keynote of the treatment of the subject is found in the preface: "To be hampered by a sense of duty is to destroy effectually the pleasure of a European tour . . . if you visit merely the places you think you ought to see because they are famous, instead of the places you really wish to go to because they will interest you, then your trip will be spoiled . . . In no sense is this book intended to usurp the place of indispensable Baedeker, nor does it profess to enumerate, much less describe, all that is worth while in Europe; no one volume could do that. Chiefly do I try to tell the reader where to go in each land to find the things that distinguish that land from his own and from other countries, the things that are unlike the things, or are better worth while than the same kind of things to be found elsewhere."

Here and There among the Papyri, by George Milligan, professor of Biblical criticism in the University of Glasgow and of Divinity. New York: Doran. $2.

Within ten years many books have been published telling the histories of newly discovered tablets and papyri containing valuable records of their contemporary ages. To the student of the Bible and early Christianity, this author's viewpoint makes the book extremely interesting and valuable. It gives a brief history of the discoveries; it discusses the revelations made of the political, social and economical conditions of ancient times by which the centuries near the birth of our Lord are portrayed in relation to society; but to Bible students the new light those fragments of ancient history throw on New Testament terms and customs gives the volume the features of a critical commentary on many passages and terms that have been heretofore of uncertain interpretation. While the contents will be more appreciated by the average Bible scholar, yet they are so lucidly presented that the lay reader will be intensely interested and instructed by reading the book. It is a New Testament hand-book in many respects. The full indices at the close add much to the value of the contents. We omitted noting that the author corrects an impression that historic criticism has made conspicuous: namely, that the Greek of the New Testament is largely the uncouth and raw diction of uneducated men. He shows that the papyri reveal that the Greek of the sacred writings is equal to the best that was current in those days. An information that is welcome.

Adventures in Humanity, by William L. Stidger. New York: Doran. $1.50.



A prodigious title of not thrillful contents, for the "adventures" are records of personal experiences, observations and hearsays quite familiar to a clergyman who is an observant "mixer" or a good pastor. They are too expansive to be used for illustrations, and too local and personal to be a mold for a sermon. They are distinctly religious in their flavor. Given a good story-teller in a parlor, or an evangelist abounding in illustrative experiences and the contents could any time be duplicated with the possible reservation that these "adventures" are exceedingly well told so that in reading them the interest does not flag for a moment. We are reminded of the countryman's experience with his first dish of ice cream: "It tasted nice, but not much nourishment to it."

The Far Eastern Republic of Siberia, by Henry Kittredge Norton. New York: Henry Holt and Co.

Here is a discriminating, well-digested historical and political study of a great, new modern, democratic nation. The country itself stretches from Lake Baikal along the Amur Valley to the Pacific, and is nearly twenty times as large as the state of Illinois. Its history, here told, is inherently as romantic as De Quincey's tale, "The Flight of a Tartar Tribe." Nothing in the annals of the Spanish conquest in America is stranger and wilder than the conquest in the same period of the vast reaches of northern Asia by the Cossacks under such reckless and conscienceless daredevils as Yermak and Habarov. Scarcely less romantic is the story of the struggle of the Siberian patriots, balked by the policy of Japan, to reconstruct out of the chaos of the Russian revolution a regular constitutional government. The famous march of the Czecho-Slovak troops, in both its heroism and its queer shifts of partisanship, is carefully analyzed. It presents an advance type of democracy, and the author protests to almost needless lengths that it is not "bolshevistic." Finally, at the head of the government is a remarkable group of jailbirds of the old régime. The president is Alexander Michailovitch Kransnoschekoff, a graduate of the University of Chicago, with a considerable variety of revolutionary escapades to his credit. In comparison with the ability of this interesting team of statesmen and administrators, the ordinary western politician presents the aspect of contemptible cheapness. Bibliography, index and important state papers are appended.

UNCOMMON SENSE

In the December issue of The Choir-Leader (a splendid number, incidentally!) is an editorial which radiates balanced sense and what I consider to be the intelligent tolerance so much needed when we venture into the treacherous subject of our church music. Once we get the musicians and the ministers to look fairly at the matter through each other's eyes we shall be well on the way to a permanent solution of the present difficulties. Such comment as that in the closing paragraph of this clipping will materially assist such an attainment:

A Choir Resigns

"Under this caption a writer reports in one of our musical journals a typical case of an extremist in the pulpit on the one hand, and at the console on the other, and the inevitable clash that followed. Names do not matter. The organist of the C. church had built up a choir of sixty volunteer members around a salaried quartet, the reporter tells us, and that 'it rapidly attracted attention by its competent work, and during the past twelve months its services were studied by a number in the city and by visiting organists, who very favorably commented upon the excellent singing done at the special musical services.' Commenting on the decision of the choir to resign when the organist withdrew, the pastor of the church, Doctor S. is reported to have stated that it was decided to make a change in the type of musical leadership, caused by his belief in the evangelical kind of Christianity.

"A change of musical leadership was probably very much needed in this instance, as it may be needed in many another. The organist in question was an example of the fanatical 'high-brow' type. To him the organ was the whole thing, and display of its resources and his ability to exploit them evidently the chief purpose of the service. There are four organs in that church, one in each corner of the auditorium. He had the chimes ringing at the slightest excuse. Display, smartness, spectacular effect, seemed to be his musical ideal. Over against the organist there stood the pastor of the church, a hyper-evangelistic, arrogant know-it-all, and a seeker of the 'white light.' Cooperation between two such men, of course, was utterly impossible.

"The editor of the journal in which the report appeared from which we have quoted, makes the following interesting comment: 'Whatever may be the opinion of the musicians, it is certainly a fact that the pastor is the head of his church. And it may be quite possible that the very fact that the pastor is not a trained musician fits him all the better to form a correct judgment of the effect of music of one kind or another upon non-musical members of his congregation. Certainly we agree with community workers that the thing is to get the people to sing—not merely to listen, but heartily to sing. That is not accomplished by giving people the sort of music that is offered by choral societies at Carnegie Hall. What the community chorus sings is what the musician calls trash—folk music, and not the best of folk music either. It may be the same in the churches—we do not know—we cannot pretend to say. We are in the position of musicians, of all professional musicians, quite unable to judge of the effect of music upon the non-professional mind.'

"That is refreshing modesty, and it is also good common sense. If our professional organists have a fair proportion of that they will be glad to consult with the pastor and cooperate with him for the sake of the greater efficiency of their ministry. And if the pastor also meets his organist in the same spirit—and he can well afford to, for he probably has some things to learn from his organist—then there will be possible that cooperation between pulpit and choir loft by which alone the musical part of the church service can be made a real blessing." ing."

CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

From my pile of anthems and carols for the festival this month I have gradually segregated several numbers, some old, some new, which may be of interest to those choir-directors who have written in asking for such suggestions. They are listed by publishers.

Music is a strangely peculiar form of the beautiful, whose presence seems, indeed is, appropriate on occasions the most diverse in character. Its aid is alike to add to the joys of festive scenes, to soothe and elevate the heart on occasions of mourning, and to enhance the solemnity, the excellence of divine worship.—TROTTER.

Music is an important element of modern culture, a refining social influence, a subject about which few cultivated persons now-a-days are willing to be thought ignorant or indifferent, an art which in one way or another actually interests more thousands of people, more occupies their thoughts, more ministers to their enjoyment, than any science or than most branches of literature and learning.—DWIGHT.

At Fifty Years of Age

You can be guaranteed a fixed permanent income at 6 per cent as long as you live by taking an annuity agreement with the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

If you are older the rate will be higher; if younger it will be somewhat less. But irrespective of good times or bad your income will remain stable.

Rates of income, paid semi-annually, range from 4 per cent to 9 per cent for single lives, and from 4 per cent to 8.3 per cent on agreements covering two lives.

An Annuity Agreement represents a gift made to the Foreign Mission Society, in return for which the Society guarantees to pay to the donor an annual income for life. After death the net principal is released for the work of the Society.

This form of gift constitutes a financial investment in a spiritual enterprise to which the Lord gave His life. It enables the donor to furnish substantial support to the cause of Foreign Missions and at the same time, in view of financial needs, to receive an assured income as long as the donor lives.

For information write to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. All correspondence will be treated as sacredly confidential.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

In all documents, such as wills, etc., it is important that the full corporate name of the Society as indicated above be used.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

Rev. George R. Wood of Ottawa, Ill., since closing his work with the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary is free for temporary service in supplying pastorless churches or preaching for pastors who may be absent from their pulpits one or more Sundays.

The church at Livingston, Mont., is anxious to see a Baptist lawyer and a Baptist carpenter locate in that city. The pastor, Rev. Thomas L. Huxley, writes that there is a real opening for real men in these lines of work. Write to Mr. Huxley, if you are interested.

"The Baptist" wants news—fresh, vital, brief, well-written, readable. It draws the line on exploiting any man or woman who has personal interests to serve thereby. It cannot publish anything that is not good news except it be in the obituary column. Certain kinds of announcements, institutionalized propaganda, personal publicity and needless controversy are not regarded as good news. But news with constructive value and containing real information will be gladly received. The editors reserve the right to determine what is good news.

An address by Lord Birkenhead, Lord Chancellor of England, delivered on the occasion of his assuming the office of rector of Glasgow University, has created a great deal of comment on both sides of the Atlantic. Among other things he said, "Idealism in national affairs is not merely impracticable, but may easily degenerate into a deadly source of national peril." Unity commenting upon this statement says, "If there is anything certain it is that the men who controlled the destinies of Europe in 1914 were not idealists. Whoever is responsible for the welter of hate, intrigue, crime, misery, starvation, despair and cruelty that exists in Europe today, it certainly is not the idealists.... The truth is that idealism is the only motive force in the world that carries it on from age to age."

Dr. T. R. Glover, vice president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and who will assume the duties of the presidency of that body at its next meeting in Cardiff, spoke before the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention at its recent meeting in Chicago. The executive committee took steps to have a delegate present at the Cardiff meeting, and the British Baptists have already appointed a delegate to the coming meeting in Milwaukee. This is the first time such action has ever been taken and it will undoubtedly help to better understanding and larger cooperation. Doctor Glover said that the motto of the Lambeth advocates was "trust your leaders," and when their suggestions were carried to the churches the motto was changed to "trust your constituencies." Doctor Glover is on an extensive lecture tour in this country, having recently returned from the Pacific Coast, where he lectured at Berkeley and other places. He has also been engaged in a similar service at the University of Chicago.

Two contributors from different sections of New York state have sent in contributions designated towards the purchase of an aeroplane for colporter work in the Northwest. These contributors evidently know that if any one should be a pioneer in methods of colportage and Bible work it would be our Publication Society, which already has colportage wagons and automobiles, chapel cars and now also auto chapel cars. Next may come the aeroplane, with a flying colporter.

In order to secure the full benefit of the Amendment III-k passed by the ministers and missionaries benefit board whereby a minimum pension of $500 was established for members of the retiring pension fund applications, checks, etc., (6 per cent of the salary) should be in the hands of the board prior to Dec. 31, 1923. This offer is limited to ministers below the age of sixty-five who are cooperating or may cooperate to secure a pension somewhat larger than otherwise they could obtain. Other plans apply to men who have already passed the age of sixty-five.

Pastors, See Those Students

A LARGE per cent of Baptist students will go home for Christmas. They will go to church.

The Sunday after Christmas is often an anti-climax. Why may it not be made "student day"? Why may not churches throughout our territory use Dec. 29 to recognize and honor their students?

There are a number of fruitful possibilities. These suggestions here may lead to better ones. If both preaching hours are used a sermon at one on education would be fitting. If only one hour is used have the students seated on the pulpit or in a front pew. Have an expression from each one of the religious life of his school. Some may be longer talks. Special music may be featured. Any members of college fraternities present may be utilized. The house should be decorated with pennants, and flags and banners. Properly recognize all schools. In smaller towns students of other denominations may be included. Local high school pupils may be recognized and asked to sing. The work which Baptists are doing for the students through its education board may be mentioned. In college towns this service might well be held as a "welcome back" service on the Sunday after school opens.

Such a service will magnify education, will afford a novel and delightful hour, will inspire younger boys and girls to go to college, will vitally link up churches with schools, will please and assist all educational leaders, will assist the churches where schools are located, will assist in student projects and, most valuable of all, it will send these students back to their schools with the blessings and benedictions of their church upon them. Through the coming months they will remember that their church family back home remembers them, honors them and prays for them. Mighty will be the influence of such a service.

Miss Almira Starbuck, for many years a public school teacher in Troy, N. Y., and Cincinnati, Ohio, died on Nov. 23 in Chatham, Va., at the age of ninety-one. She was an active member of the Ninth Street Church, Cincinnati, and deeply interested in the progress of the work of the denomination down to the very close of her long and useful life.

The American Sunday School Union recently offered prizes for memorizing scripture passages. Four of the prize winners were Minnesota girls. The prize was a free trip to the annual convention of the northern district of the union. Sheila Nygaard, of Poupore, Alma Bromps, of Angora, Aino Kinnunnen, of the same town and Gladness Stinchfield of Brookson, were the winners. Fifty other children in the northern part of Minnesota received a week's outing. Did you notice the names of these diligent contestants?

One hundred years of Christian service has made the church known as the Baptist Temple of Brooklyn the greatest Baptist center in the metropolitan area. It began as the First Church. It has outgrown several homes and for years has been in its present location, known in its honor as Temple Square. This church has sent out many whose names are widely known for their Christian service —Mrs. G. Howard Estey, Dr. O. P. Gifford, Dr. T. J. Conant, Dr. Henry L. Morehouse. Doctor Gifford was discovered as a boy by his Sunday-school teacher. The Strong Place Church, the Hanson Place Church, the Washington Avenue are among the churches which have gone out from the mother church. The Temple today has 1,800 members. It has besides its pastor, Rev. E. L. Dakin, a corps of paid workers giving full time to the work of the church. These are John W. Gould, director of stewardship; Miss Vera Rice, associate in education; Miss Myra Carter, secretary and assistant, and Cornelius Van Rees, minister of music. The foundation of its work have been well laid and the Baptist Temple enters upon its second century well equipped for effective work.

Five new buildings were recently dedicated at Bacone College—our great college for the education of Indian youth. These buildings cost approximately $370,000, of which $250,000 was given by the Indians themselves. One of the buildings is known as the Samuel Richard Memorial Building, so named in memory of a son of Eastman Richard who gave $58,000, thus making the construction of this building possible. A daughter of Eastman Richard, Mrs. Jennetta Barnett, gave $50,000 for the hall bearing her name. A Mrs. Polokee and her daughter, Mrs. Bosen, both loyal Indians, gave $50,000, which has provided a home for girls, and Walter Starr gave a like sum for a home for the boys. These gifts, with others, stand out as memorials of Indian gratitude to the pioneer missionaries who years ago began Christian work among the Indians. We have read somewhere about casting bread upon the waters and its coming back. Perhaps this true story of Bacone College is a modern version.

Fresh from the Field

The Morgan Park Church, Chicago, has started a fund for a new pipe organ and the first week reported subscriptions to the amount of $4,000. The response assures the leaders that it will not be many months before the worship will be enriched by the use of a new instrument. Steady growth in interest is shown under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. C. R. Osborn.

In spite of the heavy cost of building Baptists continue a vigorous building program in all parts of the country. Two new buildings were recently dedicated in North Dakota, one at Park River and another at Drayton. The latter is a Swedish church. The building at Park River replaces the one which burned in November, 1920. These communities are to be congratulated for their enterprise.

The building of the church at Chelsea, Mich., is being wrecked to make way for an oil service station. The congregation became scattered and finally disbanded. It was here that Editor Killam was baptized and a number of other workers were sent out from this church. We regret to see these smaller churches disappearing, due in a measure to the drain upon them caused by the tide to the larger centers.

According to "Home and Foreign Fields," it costs more to build and equip a modern battleship than it costs to maintain for a year all the missionary work of all the churches reaching sixteen countries and 4,000 cities and employing 24,000 missionaries and teachers together with 100,000 native workers. Think of it! These great agencies of construction on the one side and this single agent for destruction on the other! Which will do the most good in the long run?

"That the next General Conference," says Zion's Herald "will be called upon to confront issues more momentous for the future welfare of Methodism than those faced by almost any gathering of its kind since the Christmas Conference of 1784 is even now, more than four months before the opening day at Springfield, quite generally admitted. Every one of the numerous major questions that will require the very best brains of the delegates should be given exhaustive preparatory study before the General Conference convenes. There are, for example, the problem of the organization and administration of the benevolent boards, including the collection and distribution of millions upon millions of dollars during the next four years in connection with the church's world program; the question of the bishops and Episcopal supervision; the need for a definite step toward Christian unity, particularly with respect to the reunion of the two great branches of American Methodism; the whole issue of Christian obligation in a day of great social and industrial perplexity; the demand for a vital utterance on world peace."

Plans are going forward satisfactorily for the Congress on Christian Work in South America to be held in Montevideo the first part of 1925. It is now nearly eight years since the holding of the Panama Congress. Profound changes have taken place in Latin America. These affect every department of work carried on by mission boards. It is necessary to make an entire restudy of the situation. The evangelical churches in South America have grown greatly in leadership. Social and educational movements indigenous to South America have developed. Conference between North Americans trying to serve the Southern continent and the South Americans themselves is of the greatest importance. The congress will be made up of some two hundred picked leaders, half of them South Americans and half of them North American board representatives and missionaries. It will last ten days. Before and after the conference delegates will visit the various countries of South America to study the mission work and general conditions in those lands.

Not a Candidate for Re-election

The committee of nine, which is preparing the plans for carrying forward our cooperative missionary work after April 30, 1924, met in Chicago on Dec. 4, and spent the entire day in discussing different phases of the plans for the new period. Much important business was transacted which will be presented to the convention at Milwaukee. Doctor Aitchison was present and made a statement which the committee received with the deepest regret. Doctor Aitchison stated that he had come to the conclusion that he could not permit his name to be considered in connection with the leadership of the new program and felt that in view of all interests concerned it was wise to make this fact known to the committee of nine charged with the responsibility of formulating the plans for the inauguration of the work of the board of missionary cooperation.

The committee was deeply concerned with the announcement and after long discussion sent a sub-committee to take up the matter with him. This committee learned that Doctor Aitchison had come to his decision after long consideration and much prayer, and that his decision was irrevocable. The committee learned this with deep regret, for it believes that there is no man better qualified to lead us forward in the new program. He has done a marvelous work during this long period of the New World Movement and won the confidence of the denomination in a most remarkable way. But in view of his own statement the committee was compelled to make the announcement to the administrative committee.

Doctor Aitchison will continue his leadership of the New World Movement until the close of the present fiscal year and until after the convention in Milwaukee.

Rev. Willard F. Dowd, who was appointed and sailed for his field in Impur, Assam, in 1900, died at his home in Kalamazoo early in December. Mr. and Mrs. Dowd were both graduates of Kalamazoo College and rendered faithful service on the foreign field until Mr. Dowd was stricken with the illness which caused his death.

In a recent address at the University of Chicago President Ernest DeWitt Burton said: "Every man who has received the measure of education represented by a university degree is under solemn obligation to continue the process of his education. It is a continual discovery of one's self and of one's world and a continual adjustment of one's self to one's world. All education is therefore, of necessity, self-education —an acquisition not an inspiration. Yet it is equally true that every man's education is a gift to him, a thing which he could by no means have acquired without the help already provided for him, quite without effort or co-operation on his part. Society itself, with all its educative institutions and influences, political, social, religious, is the product of centuries of human experience and reflection and effort, and furnishes the conditions without which such an education as you have received would be impossible. Did a Gladstone or a Darwin, a Tennyson or a Kant ever spring from a barbaric society?"

"Unity" says: "Church statistics again! A few weeks ago the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States held a convention in New York. Discussion turned mainly on the question of how to protect the Christian Sabbath from the steady and alarming encroachments of secular activities, especially sports and amusements. Sunday baseball, Sunday theaters, Sunday movies were all running full blast, and inevitably drawing people away from the churches. This statement of the situation of course called for statistics to prove the point. Thereupon Rev. John Ferguson, general secretary of the alliance, read the results of a survey of attendance in 573 churches in New York state. This survey showed that there had been in these churches a total Sunday morning attendance of 27,727 persons, an average in each church of forty-eight persons. In 386 of these churches thus surveyed, the average attendance was twenty-three persons. In the city of Washington, D. C., a check-up of forty churches "showed less than 7,000 people at worship, or an average attendance in the capital city of the nation of less than 175 persons. The same report, of course, showed overflowing assemblies in the theaters and movie palaces; thus, in Washington, in forty more than 50,000 persons were being entertained, an average audience of 1,250 persons. But it is the church statistics that concern us here. How are these to be matched, we ask, with the familiar census figures with which the country is deluged once a year as by a flood of rose-water?"

There's a Reason

The Roman Catholic church knows the value of keeping its work before the country. First to meet the needs of its own people it has eighty-nine weekly newspapers in this country. The circulation of these journals is more than a million and a half. Catholic laymen in a recent meeting in Cincinnati commended their press for its efficiency and urged that these journals be counted among the "essentials" of religious and church propaganda. We are also aware that in almost every community the secular press carries a disproportionate amount of news of Catholic doings. Do not blame these folks—emulate them. First let us give our own church journals the place they merit and then see that real news of Baptist achievements gets into the news pages of our local papers.

Killam's Kollum

I Ain't Dead Yet—

Time was I used to worry and I'd sit around an' sigh,
And think with every ache I got that I was goin' to die,
I'd see disaster comin' from a dozen different ways
An' prophesy calamity an' dark and dreary days.
But I've come to this conclusion, that it's foolishness to fret;
I've had my share o' sickness, but I

Ain't
Dead
Yet!

Wet springs have come to grieve me an' I've grumbled at the showers.
But I can't recall a June-time that forgot to bring the flowers,
I've had my business troubles, and looked failure in the face,
But the crashes I expected seemed to pass right by the place.
So I'm takin' life more calmly, pleased with everything I get,
An' not over-hurt by losses, 'cause I

Ain't
Dead
Yet!

I've feared a thousand failures an' a thousand deaths I've died,
I've had this world in ruins by the gloom I've prophesied.
But the sun shines out this mornin' an' the skies above are blue,
An' with all my griefs an' trouble, I have somehow lived 'em through.
There may be cares before me, much like those that I have met;
Death will come some day an' take me, but I

Ain't
Dead
Yet!

North Dakota Baptists regret the loss of Judge Allen of Lisbon, who has removed to California, where he will make his home. Judge Allen has been active in the work of the state convention being a member of the board of managers.

The famous lecture, "Acres of Diamonds," which Dr. Russell H. Conwell has delivered more than 6,000 times, was recently broadcasted. The response showed clearly that the lecture has lost none of its interest and charm. Over eighty years of age, Doctor Conwell asks to be relieved of the presidency of Temple University which is now finishing one unit of a great group of buildings.

Mr. A. P. Riggs of Brainerd, Minn., is about ninety-two years old. In renewing his subscription he speaks words of cheer to the editors. For many years he was the faithful representative of The Standard, and even did some work for THE BAPTIST. Isn't it great to come to the feebleness of old age with mind and heart alert? Is it not the normal thing to keep alive and to prize more highly those things which do not perish with the using?

A pleasant echo from the Baptist World Alliance was heard recently by our Publication Society. The society sent a fine display of its books for exhibit. At the close of the meetings these books were donated to the library of the Baptist Bethel Seminary in Stockholm. The society has received from the seminary a hearty expression of appreciation for this favor.

One of the Publication Society's directors of religious education tells this good story. He was being entertained by a well-to-do Baptist who owned a stock farm. After dinner the host asked his guest to walk around the farm and see its beauties and the fine herd of steers he was raising. Pointing to a fine young bull, the director said: "I want that bull." "All right," the host replied, "you may have it. But what do you want that bull for?" "I want you to raise that young bull and when you sell it, give me the proceeds for an endowment fund for religious education." And the farmer agreed.

The Christian world has suffered a great loss in the death of another great British preacher. Dr. J. H. Jowett, for seven years the pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, died in Surrey, England, Dec. 19. He resigned in New York and returned to England on account of failing health. The wide use of the printed page has multiplied his influence and greatly increased the number of his admirers. Dr. John Kelman succeeded Doctor Jowett at the Fifth Avenue Church, and recently closed his work in order to take a less strenuous pastorate.

Among the preachers scheduled for the winter quarter at the University of Chicago we note the names of Dr. Harry E. Fosdick, of New York, Dr. William S. Abernethy of Washington, D. C., and Dr. W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University. The dates upon which they are to speak are Jan. 27, Feb. 17 and Feb. 24.

The Central Church at Sarnia, Ont., celebrated this month the fifty-first anniversary of the church. Dr. A. L. McCrimmon, former chancellor of McMaster University, was the speaker. Rev. R. R. McKay, who has served the church for seven years, has seen the church make splendid progress.

The king of England and the archbishop of Canterbury both sent messages of sympathy to the family of Dr. John Clifford. The king said: "The king has heard with much regret of the death of your distinguished father. His majesty gratefully realizes the services rendered by Doctor Clifford in promoting the religious life of succeeding generations of his fellow countrymen."

The announcement that Dr. John H. Finley has been elected president of the National Child Welfare Association of 70 Fifth Ave., New York, will be greeted with satisfaction by all who know Doctor Finley's great and wide-visioned interest in children and by all who are familiar with the remarkable educational work of the association, of which Herbert Hoover is vice-president and Amos L. Prescott, treasurer.

Baptists are for the time being off the front pages of the newspapers, and the Episcopalians are on. With heresy trials pending in Texas and New York and a demand that all of the 500 clergymen who have either joined or signified their purpose to join the Modern Churchman's Union things promise to be more lively than usual in Episcopal circles. According to Dr. W. P. Merrill of the Brick Presbyterian Church, the Presbyterian ministers began a similar organization last June. It is often assumed that an authoritative creed makes for denominational unity and harmony, but does it? Presbyterians and Episcopalians have a creed.

OH, the wasted hours of life
That have drifted by,
Oh, the good we might have done,
Lost without a sigh;
Love that we might once have saved
By a single word;
Thoughts conceived but never penned,
Perishing unheard.
Take the proverb to thine heart,
Take! oh, hold it fast!—
"The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed."

Evangelist H. P. Hoskins and his singer, H. L. Fleming, on Dec. 16 closed a three weeks' meeting with the First Church, Princeton, Ind. There were twenty-five decisions. C. A. Wade is pastor.

Miss Helen Hudson has become the secretary to her father, Congressman Hudson of Michigan. Miss Hudson is well known because of her work with the woman's society. Grant M. Hudson was the director of the work of the Michigan Baptist Convention before going to Washington.

Doctor Florence E. Kraker, of Philadelphia, who has just returned from a year in China where she was on the teaching staff of the Margaret-Williamson Hospital at Shanghai, has been appointed specialist in maternal hygiene in the children's bureau of the United States department of labor.

E. D. Gilmore, superintendent of the Wesley Hospital, Chicago, a hospital under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was elected president of the American Hospital Association at its recent meeting. This association comprises more than 8,000 hospitals—Protestant, Roman Catholic, Jewish and public.

The Death of Prof. Thomas L. Angell, a former member of the Bates College faculty which occurred at his home in Worcester, Mass., Dec. 7, marks the passing of a Baptist preacher of the old school and the last of the pioneer educators of Bates, whose devoted work, spiritual ideals and far-spreading influence, laid a solid foundation for its present prosperity and high standing among the colleges of the country.

Mr. Trever Arnett and Prof. James H. Tufts have been appointed as vice-presidents of the University of Chicago according to an announcement made by President Burton. Mr. Arnett was formerly auditor of the university and for the past five years has been secretary of the general education board of New York. He will now assume the business management of the university upon the retirement of Mr. Wallace Heckman in June. The financial program for the year will require $15,000,000.

In a day when it is assumed that a student has not the time to work his way it is interesting to note that the appointment office of Columbia University furnished work for 2,357 students during the past year. Of this number 777 were women who paid their way in whole or in part. The kind of work furnished is tabulated. One man underwent blood transfusion, eleven were Pullman conductors, two were models, 144 were table waiters, ninety were clerks, twelve were plain clothes detectives, thirty-two were paymasters, 145 were proctors, thirty were employed as translators, two were umpires, one was an actor and one a minister. Miss Ethel A. Breed is appointment secretary. Doubtless our own colleges could make a similar showing.

The Baptist

The Principles and Policy of the Baptist

IT CANNOT be too forcibly and too frequently stated that THE BAPTIST occupies a unique position among Baptist newspapers. So far as we are aware it is the first time in the history of Baptists when one great organization like the Northern Baptist Convention went into the religious newspaper business on so large a scale. Baptist papers are owned by state conventions in the South, and Methodist papers are official in prescribed territories North and South; but THE BAPTIST is unique in the sense that it alone officially represents the Northern Baptist Convention and all affiliated organizations cooperating through the General Board of Promotion in the entire territory covered by the convention. This means that THE BAPTIST is the official organ of every local church which joins in the cooperative program of the convention, of every association, state convention, city mission society, foreign mission and home mission societies, publication society and the boards of the convention. When THE BAPTIST speaks it is the voice of the denomination organized and active in the Northern Baptist Convention.

However, when we say that THE BAPTIST is the official organ of these various organizations beginning with the local church, we do not mean to convey the idea that THE BAPTIST speaks officially for each local Baptist church within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention or that it always represents officially the missionary, educational and philanthropic organizations cooperating through the Board of Promotion. All of these organizations have an autonomy and independence of action which may be exercised with or without reference to THE BAPTIST. For example, a local church may cooperate in the program and budgets of the Northern Baptist Convention without cooperating with the official organ of the program and budgets, THE BAPTIST, and be quite within its rights as a Baptist church. What then do we mean when we speak of THE BAPTIST as the official paper of the convention? We mean that so far as local churches, state conventions, mission societies, and boards voluntarily cooperate with THE BAPTIST it is the official medium for the promotion of the best interests of these various organizations and of the work in which they are engaged. THE BAPTIST cannot compel cooperation; it cannot sell itself on the plea that it is the official paper of the denomination; it cannot coerce the free action of Baptists; and it must not complain if some Baptists exercise their independence in refusing to subscribe for it. Officialism is not a fruit of the Spirit, and it is capable of so much abuse that Baptists are reasonably afraid of it.

Hence, THE BAPTIST, with all the advantage of its denominational label, with all the benefit of its official stamp, with all the privilege of convention ownership, must sell itself on its merits. It must commend itself to the rank and file of Baptists and to the pastors as a trustworthy representative and guide of Baptists, if it is to command large support. It must make itself indispensable as a friend in the home, an assistant pastor in the church, an evangelist of the gospel, a trained teacher in the field of religious education, a weekly bulletin of reliable news from the entire territory covered by the denomination, a prophetic voice declaring the whole counsel of God without fear or favor. In other words, THE BAPTIST must have principles by which it is governed and a policy which permits of a large margin of liberty without the sacrifice of truth and good-will.

What are the principles of THE BAPTIST? The principles of THE BAPTIST are Baptist principles historically expressed in unbroken precedent for generations, implied in every local Baptist church covenant, and declared consistently in all Baptist practice from the beginning. The established lines upon which THE BAPTIST runs are parallel with the evangelical faith which rests upon the authority of the New Testament interpreted in the light of Christian experience and in loyalty to Jesus Christ, the Son of God and only Saviour of men. This means that THE BAPTIST is predominantly evangelistic, missionary, educational, philanthropic and biblical.

BUT we must always discriminate between principles and policies. Principles are rigid, policies are flexible. The declaration of independence is a declaration of principles, but the process by which the principles are made operative, in the very nature of the case have to be flexible and open to change and amendment. The obligation to carry the gospel to the whole world is an unchanging obligation, and that obligation constitutes a rigid principle for Baptists; but the methods by which the principle shall be applied may change and do change with changing conditions. This is applicable to every principle dear to the heart of Baptists. Policies are processes of doing things, methods of work, rules of the game.

What then is the policy of THE BAPTIST? Speaking in the language of athletics the policy of THE BAPTIST is the policy of fair-play. As referee and umpire THE BAPTIST will not sanction or wink at fouls. The Baptist game can be played by opposing teams in a fraternal spirit and strictly according to the rules. For all who accept Baptist principles and who can be trusted to play in the open a clean, manly, brotherly game we shall have the highest respect and the warmest admiration. To speak without the figure, THE BAPTIST at the present time is not indifferent to the criticism from a certain quarter of one of our great societies. We are simply waiting for all the facts. THE BAPTIST is not a prejudiced juror. It is listening to the evidence without prejudice and when it is all in and there has been time enough to study it, THE BAPTIST will speak with no uncertain sound.

It is the policy of THE BAPTIST to present the facts and to express the principles of Baptists so clearly, fraternally, constructively, continuously that so far as its influence goes unjust criticism, heated controversy, ugly recrimination will be reduced to the point of disappearance, and mutual knowledge based upon personal acquaintance with one another will make for mutual respect, confidence and good-will. All Baptists who are in good standing in local Baptist churches will have a square deal from us. There will be no unfair discrimination against any man or group. THE BAPTIST is strictly unschismatic.

It has taken more space than we like to take to say these things; but the necessity of saying them is upon us. Of course it must always be understood that the responsibility for the policy of THE BAPTIST rests ultimately and also primarily with the constituency. If the policy now in operation is too charitable, if the margin is too wide, if the Golden Rule is misinterpreted, then at Milwaukee in the next convention, the policy can be changed by majority vote of delegates. The editors are but the servants of the denomination open to instruction when it comes from the official action of the convention, and always open to suggestion from any and every source at any time. So much then for the policy of THE BAPTIST. But as to the principles, we feel that a principle of eternal truth when discovered and applied and tested and not found wanting is an established and unamendable principle in its spiritual content. THE BAPTIST takes its stand upon such principles of revealed and experiential truth as have gone through the most rigid and scientific tests in the laboratory of human life without being impaired. We are proud of our Baptist principles.

What then is the conclusion of the whole matter? Simply this—that THE BAPTIST has a healthy and normal backbone which enables it to stand erect, to look the whole world in the face, to hold up the head in self-respect; but the backbone articulates with the framework of the body, and bends when the necessity for adjustment comes, and serves as the adaptible scaffolding for both the cerebro-spinal nerve system which controls all conscious thought action and the sympathetic nerve system which controls all the emotions. The backbone of THE BAPTIST is its principles, the articulations and adjustments of the vertebrae are its policies. But only as these principles and policies are incarnated in a living body can they function with energy and service among men. It is our hope to make THE BAPTIST such an incarnation so far as human individuals and social and spiritual institutions can be made to live and breathe in the columns of the printed page.

Every-Day Religion

EVERY-DAY religion is in the air. Books are full of it, laymen talk about it, even preachers begin to take stock in it. It is no less the religion of prayer than ecclesiastical religion, but it is informal prayer taken into the shop and factory, the place of business and the school room. Prayer becomes daily conference with the unseen partner in the business. The Bible is read not to defend some theory or metaphysical process, but to find the more excellent way of life, and to be inspired to walk in that way. The church is looked upon as a spiritual organization keyed up to practical service in getting men to love God supremely and to be neighborly in the Christian sense of that fine word, and not a mysterious and mystical thing clothed with ecclesiastical vestments lighting its dim and obscure way with candles on the altar.

How shall the churches meet this movement toward the utilization of religion in every-day life? Doubtless there will be a strong tendency on the part of many ecclesiastical leaders to meet it with opposition because of the fear of losing the mystery and the supernatural element in religion. But this fear is groundless when the facts are considered carefully. The greatest mysteries in the Christian religion are open secrets. That is always the meaning of the word "mystery" in the New Testament; and as for the supernatural, the Word became flesh and tabernacled among men in order that they might see that the glory of the supernatural is divinely human and humanly divine. No one can study the gospels without being impressed with the naturalness of the supernatural and the simplicity of the divine. The wise and prudent were blind to the things revealed to little children, because the wise and prudent had become metaphysical while the children remained natural and unspoiled. The best demonstration of the supernatural in religion is seen in its power to make and keep men kind, thoughtful of others, courteous, pure in heart and honest in conduct, patient in suffering and brave in trial, aggressive for the right and uncompromising with the wrong.

Every-day religion therefore is the religion of Jesus. It sends the restored maniac back to his home and to his daily duties to glorify them with new enthusiasms; it answers the cry for eternal life by revealing the sources of the mysterious thing we call life in the common thing we call love; it takes the people down from the third heaven of ecstacy and trance and shows them a more excellent way. It is the religion of anvil and altar, street and sanctuary, politics and prayer, commerce and church, play and preaching, Saturday and Sunday. The real test of any man's religion is the acid test of every-day life. If he is big amidst all the pettiness, sweet through all the bitterness, unafraid in spite of all that is morbid, just and generous in the face of greed and graft, spiritual when materialism presses him on every side, in the world and yet not of the world, that man's religion is of the every-day variety which proves its value and immortality by its utility.

A Page of Opinion

Let Us Forgive

ON many sides today we are coming to see that what we were all apt to regard as luxuries or extras in the conduct of life are, in fact, stern necessities. For example: for three hundred years the Reformed church contended that every human being was free to acquire his own personal assurance of his standing and value in the sight of God. They contended that such an assurance was possible. Nowadays we are beginning rather to say that every human being must acquire for himself and herself some such sense of his or her value and significance in the sight of God and face to face with the vastness of life. We are beginning to feel and to have courage to say that the absence of religion is not something merely to be deplored as involving some rare and subtle blessedness; that the absence of religion is the beginning of a process which moves on through cynicism and sadness and laughter to despair. For the consequences are graver than that and are more palpable. By the time this dark spirit has corrupted a certain area of a human society, simple and more puissant nations have come upon the stage; whereupon, according to one of the stern formulas of the Hebrew revelation, Almighty God summons some such fresh and unexhausted nation to sweep from the chequer-board of life those effete ones who have had their day.

Take such a grace as the forgiving spirit. Nowadays, one is beginning to see quite clearly that without forgiveness we simply cannot proceed. We see that history is one long forgiveness. We see that, were we to sit down and remember everything, were we to work up old memories and inflame our minds with the record of old wrongs, we should lose the very qualities and restraints which keep us human. At this present moment I am quite sure that the higher spirit of this country is being held up disastrously, because on all sides there is a far too eager defense of positions which we all took up a few years ago, which we think it still due to ourselves to maintain, holding ourselves separate from those from whom, in an acute crisis we were perhaps justified, at the time and on a definite issue, in standing apart. . . .

The fact is, one is beginning to see that "die-hardism," so to call it, is the precise opposite and converse of Christianity. As a matter of historical fact, it was just there that our Lord became intolerable to the chief rulers of his own day.

I quote from a sermon by Canon J. B. Mozley on "The Duty of Equals."

"And, as a sort of vertex and climax of the life of equals, public or political life has undoubtedly great and peculiar powers of discipline. Here, it may be said with truth, there gathers to a head all that is pointed, strong, and effective in the discipline of the society of equals; here there is everything that can force a man out of brooding thoughts, out of weaknesses, out of vanity and egotism, and even against his will strengthen and brace him. Here the necessity of action is such that a man has not the time and leisure to acquire some faults which certain defects of character require. For it is true that some kinds of faults do seem to require quiet and leisure for their growth and education, and interruption disturbs them. And this public life does seem to exercise a kind of compulsion upon men; so that it will not endure some forms of the morbid temper in men which flourish with considerable strength upon more retired ground. Thus, take the principle of forgiveness—people giving up grudges and agreeing to forget injuries. In what a slow and sluggish stream does the temper of forgiveness flow in retired and remote regions of human life! One is almost obliged to substitute, even in the place of a stream of any kind, however sluggish, the metaphor of a dull, a torpid, and a stagnant marsh. It is the discredit of social life, in some sections of it, that injuries, whether real or fancied, hardly ever are forgiven in it; but that if once offence is taken it goes on for years and never stops, that it is cherished and becomes more fixed as it grows older, and that it gains in passive strength and obstinacy with the progress of time. But when we turn to political and public life we see that the necessities of that life are such that they do not admit of men shutting themselves up in grudges, and that men are obliged to obey the stringent call of circumstances, which requires them to give up whatever stands in the way of salutary action; that they are compelled to exert a force over themselves and to bend their wills under the yoke. Thus in public life we see forgiveness flowing in large and copious streams, and men agreeing to act together again, as if nothing had happened. It is an astonishing and marvelous spectacle of flexibility as compared with the rigid retention of retired life. The floodgates of pardon are opened, as the exigencies of party require, and nothing is allowed to stand in the way of large, ample, and adequate effacements and abolitions, of the very highest utility, effecting the most important and patriotic objects. And, though it may be said that public forgiveness is not quite the same as private, and though it may not be the case that reconciliations on this large scale are universally accompanied by the more tender sympathies and the touching traits of forgiveness, it is still very striking to see such a subjection of wills, such an acceptance of discipline, and such a recognition of the fact that the necessities of things are against unforgiveness, that it must give way, that there is not room for it in a world of action, and that the good of society is inconsistent with and excludes it. Such a result is a remarkable instance of the coincidence of two laws, a moral law which dictates forgiveness to the heart, and a law of business and necessity on the part of the community which demands it as the condition of public ends."—John A. Hutton in "The Christian World."

If Poverty Were Destroyed, What Then?

The greatest problem for the church today is to awaken men to the real meaning of their own lives. Materialism is always a menace to the true life of man

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR

THE word "materialism" has more than one meaning. It stands first of all for a philosophic theory of the universe. The philosophical materialist holds that there is nothing in the universe but matter, that mind is a 'mode' of matter, that matter is eternal, containing in itself the power of all life and that therefore there is no room for a master mind or a divine personality from whom all things proceed, by whom all things hold together, and for whom all things exist. The word in the second place, indicates a practical attitude towards life; an attitude which assumes that the main business of man is to eat, drink, sleep, work and play with no reference to higher considerations such as are involved in prayer, worship and spiritual fellowship.

God Is Not Regarded

The serious thing to combat today is that practical materialism which ignores all questions of personal and spiritual values and concentrates on the animal side of man. God is no longer denied; he is simply not regarded. The soul is not attacked, it is passed over as if it did not exist. The greatest problem for the church of today is to awaken men to the real meaning of their own lives. It is not pessimism which sees in the excessive rush after pleasure and in the increasing determination of people to "have a good time," independently of all moral and spiritual values, a real, ugly danger to the best interests of humanity. The book of history is open for all who will to read, and the stories of ancient Rome, Sparta and Carthage and medieval Venice written upon its pages warn us what befalls nations who refuse discipline and choose the easy way which leads to the abyss.

Can any one justify a condition of society which in the dreadful days of war, condemned millions of men to death, to mutilation, to blindness, to lameness and to nervous wreckage, and yet at the same time permitted thousands of people who stayed at home to amass enormous fortunes? Can any one apologize for a system which allows a few men in the country to be worth millions of money while millions of men and women are unable to obtain employment? Contrast the dwellings of the miner with the fine houses in the suburbs, the horrible houses in the East End of London with the stately abodes of Mayfair: the overdressed world of fashion with the rags of the poor; and then ask whether or not there is reason for discontent. If the workers of the country are organizing against society as it is, and speaking of reprisals, is there ground for astonishment at this, especially when the full story of the wrongs inflicted upon the workers is considered? The workers have had to fight for every inch of the ground they have won and the odds against them have been enormous. Within living memory, tender children of six years were sent to the mill before daybreak on bitter winter mornings; girls were employed in coal mines; education was reduced to the minimum or omitted altogether; wages were so small as to be an insult to the recipient; work was practical slavery. Lord Shaftesbury complained with bitterness that he could find with difficulty public men willing to work on behalf of justice for the child workers. Factory acts and education acts were passed after a long and bitter struggle. These things belong to history and the workers are well aware of the story. And this explains the attitude of many of them today towards the church and towards society.

They believe that society is falsely constituted and they mean to try and change it. They now enter the arena to try conclusions with an old order which they declare is neither human nor divine. They believe that their turn has come to possess the good things of life which hitherto have been denied them. And they are angry with the church which they say has betrayed them. Their one continual charge is that the church has sided with the rich, the capitalist and the privileged and acquiesced in a social order in which the worker has had no fair chance of life. The church, it is said, has preached heaven and hell for a future life, but it has made no effort to secure heaven upon earth, nor to abolish the hell in which many already live here below. As one of the socialist leaders puts it, pungently. "There may or may not be a heaven beyond this life, we do not know and we do not care very much. But we are determined to have our heaven here and now. A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." We may not like this spirit. We may easily point out the injustice of some of the charges made against the church. We may point to other causes, such as drink and crime and idleness, of the appalling conditions in which many of our fellow men live. We can easily show that the impulse of nearly all social reform has come from men and women who have been inspired with the mind of Christ. But when every allowance and deduction has been made for exaggeration or understatement we are bound to admit that men and women who have groaned under a hard lot can make out an excellent case for themselves in their demand for a fuller and happier social life. And in the main Christian people are bound to sympathize with them in this demand, and help them, in all legitimate ways to attain their desire.

We have to insist that the kingdom of God must be sought first. God is the principle of order; to ignore him or to oppose him is to invite chaos. We have to make it clear that God is not an "extra" thrown in to whomsoever cares to receive him as an adornment or a fetish. He is our life and we live truly only as we live in fellowship with him. Men are coming to understand that without the spiritual urge and "pull" there can be no true human order.

This desire for better social conditions, however, holds for the human spirit a deadly peril. Legitimate in itself, if it ends with itself it may prove to be man's bitterest curse. The transfer, to another class, of the leisure and luxury which have been the monopoly of one class, were that possible, would be merely a displacement and not a cure. The evils which were generated there, would now be generated here, but they would still be in existence, and probably at first they would be more acute, since the sudden acquisition of power generally leads to vertigo and folly. But supposing, instead of transfer, there was a general equalizing of wealth would that, in itself, secure the happiness man desires? Would it guarantee the raising of the quality of human life? If the elemental passions were left—of greed, of sex, of competition—unchanged and unsublimated by a great spiritual regeneration, the old evils would most certainly break out in other forms, not less, but perhaps more harmful to the life of man. If man found contentment in material comforts and continued to ignore his deeper nature, he would inevitably fall below his proper level and tend to the animal. The old story would be repeated "fulness of bread and animal content," leading to a slackening of discipline with all its attendant evils of self-gratification and social injustice. Materialism, whether it takes the gross or the refined forms, is always a menace to the true life of man. And it is also true that even when it takes the refined forms, the tendency sooner or later, is downward to the sensual. Both history and observation are emphatic upon this point. We are all fashioned of one clay, and when the higher influences are withdrawn, the lower stuff of which we are made soon appears.

The Peril of Materialism

This is the peril of our time. A wave of practical materialism is sweeping over the world. Men are seeking satisfaction in things of the senses. The things of the spirit are held in dislike or even contempt. With what result? This, that with more of leisure, less of work and higher rates of pay, we are already witnessing a revival of elemental passions. Prize fighting, the gambling mania, the lowering of ethical standards, the attack upon marriage, the revolt against the "restrictions" of the home, the indisposition to work—these are some of the fruits of materialism manifest under our eyes. What, then, is likely to happen if we achieve a purely material "heaven" upon earth and allow no room for the development of our spiritual life? The case of Australia is before us for our instruction. In no other country of the world is life so "easy" as there. The eight-hour day—or less—is firmly established. Shops are closed at six o'clock and at noon on Saturdays. The people have abundant leisure. There is no slavery in toil. Bush, mountain, lake, sea and river offer abundant natural charms. Fashion reigns in Melbourne as in Paris. All kinds of pleasure are provided. And life is lived in the open air. There are no slums, save such as man's indolence has invented. Every prospect pleases. Life, materially viewed, is happier than anywhere else on this planet. And yet in Australia there is discontent, greed, a lowered birth rate, serious moral relaxation and a desertion by the many of places of worship. Materialism alone and without the higher spiritual direction is a serious peril to man's life. And this is the peril which threatens us in England now that the determination "to have a good time" has come.

"Kill-joy" Christians

How shall the church present the gospel to an age which is dominated by the materialistic spirit? It may be said at once that nothing will be gained by mere denunciation. There is no positive "good news" in denouncing evils. There can be no return to the days when wholesome human pleasures were denounced as "frivolous." The Trappist, with his back turned upon society, his eyes fixed upon the ground and his lips ever murmuring "all is vanity" is no model for the men of our time. If there ever was any just reason (which I doubt) to describe Christians as "kill joys" or "wowsers" (as they say in Australia) there must be none today. The Christ whom we preach lived his life among men and not apart from them in monastic seclusion. He rejoiced in the games of children, gave his benediction to the hilarious festivity of a Galilean wedding, joined people at their meals, and likened himself and his disciples to a bridegroom and his friends upon a honeymoon. He was interested in man's material life. He fed the hungry, healed the sick, restored to society men and women who had become outcasts through their sins and defects, denounced the exploiting of widows and orphans and generally took the side of the poor and oppressed. The church that he founded was, in its earliest days, a happy family, in which all things were common and where all was carried out in the spirit of Christian brotherhood. They who preach Christ must preach him as genuinely interested in man's material life. Whatever makes for the social betterment of mankind and adds to man's pure pleasures, it is our business to further. Even if our spiritual message be rejected—as our Lord's message was rejected—we cannot absolve ourselves from the patent duty of doing everything possible to secure for our fellows an honest share in the good things of life. We are patriots as well as Christians and we have a duty to our country. We must enter the fight against slumdom and its causes, against all exploiting of workers—or masters; against squalid surroundings, against every human injustice, and work might and main for the brightening of human life and for granting to every child born into our midst a fair chance of a full life. An evangelism which ignores this obvious duty can have, and ought to have, no chance of success. What our Lord did, socially, his apostles must also do. In approaching those who see nothing more than the materialistic side of life, we must be thoroughly sympathetic. We can begin where they are and accept all that is common both to them and to us. We must make it clear that the gospel of Christ includes in its sweep everything that is human. But upon this thing common to both we have to graft that which is specifically Christian. The kingdom of God which our Lord preached and which we preach is not humanity organized according to the will of man or a group of men, but humanity regenerated and organized according to the will of God. We have to insist that the kingdom of God must be sought first. God is the principle of order; to ignore him or to oppose him is to invite chaos. We have to make it clear that God is not an "extra" thrown in to whomsoever cares to receive him as an adornment or a fetish. He is our life and we live truly only as we live in fellowship with him. We have a greater opportunity than ever to press this central truth today. The best men are coming to understand that without the spiritual urge and "pull" there can be no true human order. Robert Blatchford, socialist and former sceptic, has come to see that without spiritual force man is doomed. Giovanni Papini, atheist four years ago, is back at the feet of Christ "the only hope for our distracted and wandering race." The half gods have gone—the true God is appearing to man's mind as the one strength of human life. But the God we preach must be "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ"—the one he came to reveal, and to redeem, and not simply the God of any human conception and plan. And we must preach him in Christ's way, in the full content of his divine revelation.

The Alternative for Man

Our Lord related faith in God to a true social order. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things (food, clothing, etc.) shall be added unto you." Trust in God must come first. God will never fail us. He does not fail the universe; how can he then fail his children? Everything rests upon the character of God. The alternative for man is either to go on getting his food, clothing and other things in the best way he can—fighting, scheming, robbing, and so reducing society to endless confusion, or to "get right with God," trust him, love him, serve him, reduce all life to a single service and so eliminate anxiety and animal struggles for place and power. Between these two things men must choose. They have had abundant experience of the former, until the world has become a jungle with its law of the "race to the swift, the prey to the strong and the pickings to the crafty." All our wars, struggles, strikes and miseries proceed from a false attitude to life. In place of one divine center to which all are related, each man becomes his own center and so invites an eternal clash of interests. Change of environment will not effect the desirable alteration in human life. It is change of attitude alone that can save the world. The old message has still its ancient force "Ye must be born again." The evangelism of today must work from two ends at once. It must sound the social note of the gospel and insist upon raising the valleys and levelling the mountains to make a highway for our God; but it must also press the spiritual message of a change of heart, of the Saviourhood and Lordship of Jesus Christ. And if any should be tempted to separate the two parts, let them hear the words of the Lord concerning the part they omit "this ought ye to have done and not left the other undone."

The Road of Life

BEFORE me lies the road of life
That runs away unto the hills beyond.
Along its course the tides of time
Both ebb and flow.
And daily, too, I seek to know
More of the things about the way I go.
Early I learn that this great enterprise
Of life is large with promise;
And, too, that satisfactions come as the reward
Of toil accepted with no haunting fear.
From many morns till many eves,
I face the stern realities of time.
Knowing that faithfulness will bring
The blessings of a task well done.
And failures, too, I face and learn
That in the crucible of pain
My gold is purged and made
Both beautiful, and fit
For the cast of currency divine.
Let me, O Lord of Life, not fail,
In any task I face along this road
That leads away to altitudes of bliss!
Let me be true to self and thee
And follow faithfully
The way thou hast prepared for me,
That in the morn, when unto thee I come,
I shall find rest.

"Go Ye Therefore"

By Corwin S. Shank

A GLANCE at world conditions challenges the attention of all thoughtful people, and particularly those who are inspired with Christian ideals. Is there any immediate hope for a day of peace? What are to be the outstanding events of this world until that day? What shall Christian America do about these problems? What are the duties of the organized Christian forces towards the unorganized pagan forces that are running wild throughout the land? These and many other questions present themselves as we thoughtfully consider our share in world affairs.

Russia—what of that great country with 160,000,000 people, dazed, worn, exploited by theorists, staggering under a load of governmental perplexities which the normal mind cannot grasp?
China—in the grip of a mad civil strife in which her ancient ideals and a modern civilization are at war with each other.
Japan—lying prostrate as the result of one of the greatest earthquakes in history.
Germany—once so arrogant and seeking universal dominion, now prostrate and being torn into pieces.
France—proud, militant and facing wars at home and abroad.
Italy—exploding intermittently; while most of the Balkan countries are devoting their lives, energies and fortunes in an effort to determine what is to be their lot.
Turkey—again proud and rising as a cloud in the far east.

This is not intended as a gloomy outlook that is brought to our attention. It is simply sketching but a few human currents which are moving upon the world. These are the problems with which we must deal in some way, for they are present in the world, and we are part of its life. Is there really a cure for all this? Man alone created these conditions, and certainly man with God's help can find a way to cure them. There never was such an hour in human history as this. There never was a time when the great commission, "Go ye therefore" needed to be so thoroughly blazoned before the world. With such a challenge of world conditions as we have—with such assurance from the Master that he still possesses all power in both heaven and earth, calmly commissioning his people to, "Go ye therefore," and with such assurance that he will be with us, we ought to take renewed courage and put forth a measure of endeavor unequaled in the history of Christian activity. With these nations calling for help it is almost inconceivable that there should be faltering or hesitation by any one, to say nothing of an endeavor to stifle the channel of help and relief.

Many are considering these world problems from a standpoint of national cooperation and diplomacy, believing that America's entering the league of nations, or some other cooperative movement, will solve these problems. In other words, that human machinery and plans can cure national ills. We have a great Baptist layman as secretary of state. We may therefore safely depend upon his treating these questions, so far as lies within his power, from a Christian standpoint, but we may well ask the question as to whether we can employ the machinery of political bodies, and the avenues thrown open in the channels of diplomacy, to cure the world's ills. There must be created a world atmosphere, based upon the teachings of the gospel of Christ, in which the ideals that have made America great as a Christian nation shall likewise prevail in other lands. It was for this very purpose that Christ spoke those memorable words, "Go ye therefore." It was to utilize the power of the church in preaching the gospel of Christ to the world and make it fit for cooperative movement. The church today has the opportunity of impressing itself upon the world in a way which has never before been presented. Prostrate nations lie at the foot of the cross, and in such measure as the churches go in accordance with the great commission will the world reach a condition of quietness and self-possession, and be prepared for a day of peace.

God seems to have thrown wide open the door of opportunity for the church to make itself felt more in this generation than ever before. I ask of the people of this great denomination of ours that the great commission be read in the light of the world's present condition, and then let no man falter in this hour of greatest opportunity. Peace can only come in the world when the world is prepared to receive it and apply its principles. It cannot be a superimposed garment which the world puts on. It must be the outgrowth of the Christ life which radiates an atmosphere of good-will towards men, and then we shall have peace, and not until then. This can be brought about in a generation if the Christian people of the world will forget the machinery of state and will rise to the opportunity and give their time, their talents and their means to the spreading of the gospel which the world is now ready to accept. "Go ye therefore." When? Now!

God Made the Country: Who Made the City?

By Mrs. John H. Chapman

THE life of man began in a garden amid the rustle of leaves, the song of birds and the sweet blossoming of flowers.

When sin came like a mighty river's current, sweeping through the hearts of men, it drew them deeper and deeper into its depths, until Cain stood with his brother's blood upon his hands. Then it was when smarting under a sense of deserved hatred, lashed by his conscience, afraid of his own shadow, crying out in cowardly fear that "he went out and builded a city." I suppose that first city was only a corral—a space surrounded by a rude fence of the felled trees of the forest into which Cain gathered his followers and his possessions to protect them from storms of evil such as his own hand had loosed.

Later, as men grew in numbers and developed in mental power, the city became stronger and the wall about it a surer defense—until its name passed into a proverb of strength. "Greater than he who taketh a city" records a thought repeated over and over in songs of the ancients. David's deathless poem registers a truth from which in all ages men have tried to escape—"Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman watcheth in vain."

Early and late then, from the very beginning of man's history, the city has been a stronghold of evil and a treasure-trove of opportunity. Doctor Henson, in the days of his strength and power, used to say: 'If I were a fisherman, I would seek the wide deep streams. If I were a hunter, I would go to the forests where the game live in worth-while numbers"—and with this same vigorous ambition, Christian people who cherish the hope of the largest accomplishment should seek to encourage by every means, the evangelization of our cities.

With the advancement of science bringing improvements in transportation that enable the well-to-do to glide from the marts of trade to a beautiful home thirty miles away in an hour of luxurious riding, with the radio bringing to them in the ease and relaxation of their own parlor the choicest of the utterances of our mental giants, it is not strange if there is a growing tendency to forget the city prisoners who may not thus escape from the grind and pressure of the crowd or those more unfortunate ones who unlike Ulysses have failed to close their ears and who lose all desire for anything but the siren music the city offers. To those of us who listen, there comes louder and more insistently each year, a call for gospel service to the neglected parts of our cities. The Woman's Home Mission Society and some of our other agencies for evangelization, have begun to answer the call of the poorer classes by the establishment of Christian centers. This is one of the most effective and hopeful steps taken by our denomination in many years. Wonderful results are apparent and I would like to spend all my time in setting forth the victories to be won by a proper enlargement of these plans. It is not my purpose, however, at this time, to dwell upon this developing feature of our work. God has blessed it and it is growing and will grow.

Changes That Mean Death

There is another need, less appealing, but just as real; just as productive of results; less likely to cry aloud for its own maintenance, and it is to that need, that I wish to draw attention.

There is on every side of our city of Chicago and similarly in a measure, in every large city in the state, a series of changes that work to the death of churches and the abandonment of fields. Resident districts change gradually from homes of wealth and culture to manufacturing centers of business districts. This change takes long years, sometimes a quarter of a century or even longer—years during which the number of residents is not lessened but increased. These parts of the city do not become "slums"—they are simply deserted by the wealthy. Buildings are occupied by larger numbers of people in more condensed quarters—worthy and industrious people who must live on salaries small as compared to the income of those who support our prosperous churches. They ask no charity—if they cannot support the expensive features that make up an attractive program for a church, they must do without its services. They do not want the ministry of the mission workers. Perhaps at one time they formed a part of the large body of helpers, giving of their slender means and their invaluable service, while the larger gifts of wealthy neighbors kept the church alive. Now the rich members have gone—moved to the suburbs— the church can no longer pay a good man; the doors are closed, the building is sold to a secular or non-religious organization, and these people hunger for a while—then "go to the movies." The trustees say: "The Jews moved into the neighborhood"; "The Catholics surrounded us"—but the book of remembrance kept by the angels, registers a defeat for the Christian church in a field where the mine was showing gold enough to make a success.

Friends, if this continues, we are a defeated people, though the churches flourish like green bay trees in the suburbs, children are growing up without the church's ministry. These children will feel no need of the church's help when they reach manhood. They will not support your foreign missions nor will they continue your suburban churches. Already many wealthy churches in the cities' suburbs are closing their expensive plants in the evening and their people are giving their time to social gatherings. Why? With many it is because they lived without the church when young and poor. It is only a luxury now; it is not the center of their lives as it should be. It is not the chief aim of their ambition to promote its welfare. What shall we do? Every church has connecting links with every other church; if the churches of one community die—all suffer. We must not criticize those who seek for their children the lessened strain, the more wholesome atmosphere of the suburbs. This is an inevitable migration, wise and righteous, from which our city churches must suffer. But surely the obligation to support the gospel on the city field should not cease when these splendid opportunities are embraced. By the grace and gifts of their old-time members, some churches are still living in neighborhoods where adequate support would be impossible.

I want to crown with laurels the brows of these unselfish givers. I have in mind one church in a portion of the west side of Chicago where multitudes of people live. A neighborhood that has watched many of its wealthy members depart. And yet, that ministers today in a field where thousands of the Lord's chosen ones live and but for the devotion of its far away members, its doors would have closed long ago.

One wealthy man who once lived on the west side but who years ago sought the advantages of a home far removed, gives to the support of this church, saying: "As an alumni gives to the improvement of the college that is his alma mater, so will I give to maintain the gospel where I once lived and where I was taught to pray." Two other devoted prosperous men, who lived as poor boys under this church's ministry, but who now enjoy a North Shore home, lend a hand in carrying on the work of the church and Sunday school. Some day the boys whose development they are encouraging will reach out helping hands to save from death these useful centers. They will support our missions, establish our schools, they will stem the growing tide of evil that pours from the open sores of our modern city.

Our Master loved the city—loved its teeming thousands of people—I am glad to remember that he walked from city to city in his journey from the manger to the cross. I am glad to read that again and again "the whole city was stirred with his presence." God grant that thus it shall be said of our modern cities!

I love to remember, too, that this beautiful Bible of ours closes with a picture of a redeemed city; pure and clean and lighted with the presence of our Redeemer. It is this picture that awakens our hope, that keeps us from dismay—"Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman watcheth but in vain."

Annual Meeting of Executive Committee of Federal Council of Churches

By William H. Allison

THE first session of the executive committee of the Federal Council which The Baptist's scribe attended was held in Columbus, Ohio, in 1915, so it is natural for him to compare with that occasion the session which has just been held in the same city, Dec. 12-14. Then there was the uncertainty of a great experiment; now there is the confidence of a great conviction. Then there was the hesitation of possible misunderstanding; now there is the insistence upon information and enlightenment. Then there was suspicion lest one be committed beyond the power of recall; now there is the passion that all evangelical Christendom shall participate in the spirit and in the program of cooperation.

One of the greatest proofs of the efficiency of the Federal Council lies in the fact that although it was never doing so much of the business of the kingdom as it is doing today, there has probably never been a session of the executive committee when so little business, in the technical sense, was transacted. The organization of the council is both so simple and so adequate that most of the proposals offered for consideration can pass almost immediately to the groups most expert in the several fields of activity; moreover, the self-consciousness of the council is becoming increasingly the common Christian consciousness of the constituent bodies. It is not strange that a few denominations, in the earlier years of this great cooperative experiment, feared the rise of a super-church. There is now absolutely no danger of that so far as the Federal Council is concerned; but there is a very real peril if any strong group of evangelical Christians deprive thirty other groups of their fellowship, their Christian experience and their often intense enthusiasm through the failure to supplant an old fear of what the council might become by a real knowledge of what it actually is. The president of the National Baptist Convention, told a story that has some pertinency here. "Does your mule kick?" a negro was asked. "Yes, he sure does," was the reply. "Did he ever kick you?" "No, but he has kicked where I'se been." The Federal Council is amenable to criticism, but this should be related to what it has done or what it is, rather than to what it has not done or to what it never will do.

All the business sessions were held in the auditorium of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, while in an adjoining room an exhibit of charts, models, books and pamphlets gave some evidence of the wide range of the Council's interests. Still more were these set forth in the reports of the various commissions and of the secretaries who are generally not only efficient experts in their own departments but as well inspiring platform speakers. One of our own brethren, Rev. John M. Moore of Brooklyn, N. Y., chairman of the administrative committee, gave an illuminating "Review of Developments in the Cooperative Movement during 1923," organizing his address along the line of the parable of the good Samaritan. The afternoon session on Wednesday was devoted first to evangelism, and Dr. C. L. Goodell and Dr. H. F. Stilwell, among others, showed how cooperative methods could be used successfully in this field. Community cooperation and the broader social mission of the church were presented in several very suggestive addresses, of which the most significant was perhaps that of Mr. O. H. Blackman, associate editor of Collier's, who presented the responsibility of the churches in the development of public opinion.

Thursday morning was devoted to the consideration of "The Future Program and Policies of the Federal Council." One can only wish that every friend and foe of the Federal Council and every indifferent person might have heard the calm, clear, incisive message of its president, Dr. Robert E. Speer, with its emphasis upon service, not lordship, as the function of the council.

It is hoped that the utterances of the executive committee in the name of the Federal Council on such matters as race relationships, international justice and good-will, the attitude of Christian people toward the international court of justice, and many other matters vital to morality and religion will command the attention of the religious press and the pastors and churches throughout the land.

Significant public meetings were held in the evenings. The address by United States Senator Ferris of Michigan upon the restoration of the American home; that of Dr. Daniel A. Poling upon law enforcement; and the addresses at the closing session by Bishop McDowell and Doctor Speer upon the need of Christ in the world today gave an impetus to the results of the meeting as a whole which must have a beneficent result upon the interests of the kingdom of God.

Jobs for Baptist Laymen

By R. O. Jasperson

THERE are unmistakable indications that Baptist laymen are awakening to their privileges and responsibilities as Christian men. The awakening is not enough. It must be followed by action, else the awakened men will go back to sleep.

What is there for laymen to do? This question is asked from all quarters of the Northern Baptist area. "What can we do?"

Every Baptist church should have an organization exclusively of men. Without organization, work by laymen is sure to be less efficient. This organization may be in the form of a brotherhood, a Bible class, a men's club, or a general community club. Without some form of organization it is impossible to create a layman consciousness. Esprit is lacking. By all means organize a men's group in every Baptist church.

Many churches are already well organized. There are fully 1,000 Baptist brotherhoods, besides numerous Bible classes, etc., which are not organized under the brotherhood plan. Many of these organizations are asking, "Now what?"

Some Things Men Can Do

The tasks are so many and the workers so few that when the question is asked, "Now what?" one is at a loss to know where to begin. The question may be answered, perhaps, by asking other questions:

Are all the men who are members of your church regular attendants upon its services?

Are you satisfied with the effort being made to invite non-churchgoers within a half mile of your church to attend its services and enjoy its fellowship?

Are your young men slipping away from you? Do your men feel a personal responsibility for the young men?

Does your pastor get a "living wage"?

If he should die would you have to support his widow and children?

Does your men's group send laymen to state conventions to bring back some of the inspiration there to be had?

Do your men know what Baptists are doing as missionaries?

Does your men's group ever discuss the reasons for a Northern Baptist Convention?

Do your men have any means of cooperating with the forces of law and order in your community?

Is there a lack of cordiality and warm Christian brotherhood among the men of your church?

Does your men's group hold fellowship with other groups of Baptist men in your community, or with other Christian groups?

Does your men's group seek opportunities to minister to the sick, the needy, the distressed?

Does your men's group talk about these things, name committees and then take no further action?

Leaders Needed; Not Work

All these things are so obviously the concern of Baptist laymen that it is almost absurd to list them. The need is not to find things to do, but men to do them. Leaders are needed. Men who not only feel a sense of duty, but a real wish to do the tasks set before them.

Realizing the desirability of acquainting not only men, but all members of the congregation with those undertakings which we as Baptists have set our hand to, there is one task which can be undertaken in every church in the area.

A five-minute period each Sunday morning may profitably be devoted to the presentation of facts which every Baptist should know, facts relating to our aims and what we have achieved.

If made by some lay member of the congregation, this presentation would not add to the cares of the pastor. It would certainly enlist the interest of the speaker. It would provide an added activity for laymen. Subjects which may be treated in these five-minute talks with profit are almost unlimited. For example: "Why Evangelization of China Is Impossible Without Schools," "Results Measured by Baptisms in Foreign Lands," "How Baptists Aid Thirteen Army and Navy Baptist Chaplains," "Why Baptists Support Fifty-two Colporter Missionaries in the Homeland," "Relation of the State to the Northern Baptist Convention," "Progress of Baptist Evangelization of American Indians," "Importance of Hospital and Dispensary in Christian Missions."

Such a program must naturally have the full support of the pastor, because the pastor is the natural leader of the activities of the church and its activities. Churches that may desire to inaugurate a series of five-minute talks will be provided with the necessary material by communicating with the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen, 17 East Forty-second St., New York City.

Safety First

By Z. Irene Dahvice

A RECKLESS man in a zoological garden seized a venomous serpent by the nape of the neck and held it up before his companions. The man thought he had the serpent wholly in his power. But it began to coil its body about his arm and then slowly he was obliged to drop his hold on its neck. Quickly then it turned and bit him, and soon the man was dead.

He thought he was strong enough to play with the serpent, and then thrust it from him when wearied of his play. Many think they are strong enough to play with temptation of any sort, but they find sooner or later that the temptation has mastered them.

"Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation," said Jesus Christ.

The Sublime Optimism of Jesus

More than all men of any time, Jesus believed in humanity

BY A. R. E. WYANT

ONE of the most marked elements of power in the character of Jesus was his sublime optimism. He detected in every man the best that was in him, and by sympathetic helpfulness and hopefulness encouraged that man to realize what he had never expected to attain. He possessed a marvelous tenderness of feeling and perfection of sympathy that was the more marvelous because it was so often manifested toward those who were not deemed worthy of sympathy. The professedly religious teachers of his day could not understand this unique element of his character. Jesus sympathized with and hoped for those whom scribes and Pharisees had given up in despair and disdain. In every man Jesus seemed to detect possibilities of untold goodness. More than any other man of his day, and more than all men of any time, he believed in humanity. Jesus held a high doctrine concerning the dignity and worth of human nature in its ideal, if not in its actual condition.

There are some men who seem to take a religious delight in belittling man. Perhaps they are actuated by the spirit of the Catholics of the Middle Ages, who portrayed their saints as once the biggest sinners, so that they might the more magnify them as miracles of grace. But there is nothing gained by pulling man down to the level of the beast. According to the teaching of the scribes and Pharisees, the ignorant and degraded, Am Haarez, was a person with whom no dealings should be had. He was worthy of no more sympathy than a brute, and was excluded from sharing in the resurrection. But when Jesus makes the comparison, he exclaims with unparalleled emphasis: "How much is a man of more value than a sheep!" A man is a man, not a mere human animal.

Worms and "Wormesses"

There are some men who have so much race-humility that they seem to take a sinful pride in it. Sam Jones tells how this humility manifested itself in the correspondence of an old couple. When she wrote to him she addressed him, "My dear old worm of the dust." And when he replied, he would write, "My dear old wormess of the dust." But if man is better than a sheep, he is also better than a worm.

Christ's attitude toward the poor showed that he valued man as man. He recognized the worth of the individual when stripped of everything that externally ornaments and beautifies. It has been well said that on this naked humanity the world has ever set little value. It begins to interest itself in a man when he is clothed with some outward distinctions of wealth or birth or station. A mere man is a social nobody. Jesus valued man not because of what he possessed, but because of what he was or might become. He declared that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth"; and asks, "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life?" We persist in saying that a man is "worth so many dollars," but Jesus did not consider the outward distinctions of wealth and birth and power as worth anything in comparison with the preservation of the higher life of a man. Jesus never talked to the poor in a condescending and patronizing way. "To believe that a man with $300 a year is just as much worthy of respect as a man with $30,000 you must be seriously a Christian," said Canon Liddon.

It was for man as man that Jesus cared. He went to the homes of the rich and the poor alike. It is related that once when he was on his way to heal the daughter of a ruler of the synagogue, a poor woman, who had been sick twelve years, pressed through the crowd behind him that she might touch the hem of his garment and be healed; and the Saviour stopped and held a considerable conversation with her, while the ruler was almost beside himself with anxiety to have him hurry forward; but that poor woman was as important to Jesus as the ruler of the synagogue.

You remember that poor old blind beggar, Bartimeus, at the gate of Jericho. He hears that Jesus is passing by and shouts, "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me!" And the people rebuked him. They told him to keep still. They thought he was a poor old blind beggar who was of no account. But when Jesus heard his cry, he stopped the procession and commanded the poor man to be brought, and his sight was restored and he followed Jesus, glorifying God.

In the parable of the good Samaritan, Jesus holds up the priest and Levite to reprobation, because they passed by on the other side and neglected a poor man in need. And poor Lazarus, friendless, weak and sore, is lifted to a place of heavenly honor.

The "Friend of Sinners"

Christ's attitude toward the outcast shows his regard for the man stripped not only of possessions, but also of human friendship, respect, sympathy and confidence. With vibrant scorn in their voices his enemies called him "the friend of publicans and sinners." The little artificial distinctions of society were nothing to him. He went to dine with Matthew the publican, and was the guest of Zaccheus who was a social outcast. His defense for his sympathetic relations with the social reprobates of his day was that they received him with more than cold civility and most ardently accepted God's pardoning love. See his attitude toward the woman who was a sinner, who washed his feet with her tears and wiped them with her long, disheveled hair, while Simon the Pharisee looked on with cold dislike and icy disapproval. Jesus forgave much for she loved much.

You also remember the poor adulterous outcast whom the scribes and Pharisees once dragged into his presence. They had heaped their curses and maledictions upon her and she now stood trembling and terror-stricken before the Master. Shame and grief and despair possessed her. Her self-righteous accusers pointed at her with fingers of scorn and said: "Master, Moses commanded that such an offender be stoned: but what sayest thou?" Those miserable hypocrites knew the gentleness and sympathy of Jesus and they were tempting him to make void the law of Moses. "But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not." Then they became more bitter in their denunciations, and cried out again: "Master, Moses commanded that she be stoned. What sayest thou?" Jesus straightened himself up and with his heart-searching eyes looked right into their hypocritical souls, and said: "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." "And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground." That single sentence struck them dumb. They stood self-convicted before the judgment seat of righteousness. Ashamed and conscience-stricken, they dropped the stones from their loosening clutches, and silently sneaked out one by one. When they were all gone the Saviour looked kindly and pitifully upon her and asked, "Hath no man condemned thee?" "And she said, "No man, Lord." And Jesus saw, in this poor, penitent outcast, another citizen of the kingdom, as he tenderly said, "Neither do I condemn them; go and sin no more."

WE SHALL hope to see the needs which we share more clearly when we together bring them into the light of the One Divine Purpose. We know something of our shame and failure. "We are men of unclean lips and we dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." We shall know more when we have lifted this our world into the pure and holy light. We know something of our need of God, but we shall learn more in fellowship: we shall see with cleansed vision what it is that can fill human life with the joy of a great purpose and the certainty of an eternal destiny. Everywhere we see men seeking to fill their days with excitement in order to escape from thinking. In the failure of their merely formal religion they hope to fill the void with new superstitions. They dream that they are eating, and they will awake to find their souls empty. This we know in part; but when we strengthen each other in the fellowship of prayer and come with boldness to God, we know still more surely that nothing but faith in the living God can satisfy the soul of man.

The sublime optimism of Jesus is seen in his attitude toward the defective. To use the language of Walt Whitman, "Recall Christ, brother of rejected persons, brother of slaves, felons, idiots, and of insane diseased persons." Toward all men Jesus was a brother. He was sympathetically hopeful even for the devil-possessed lunatics who were driven out from the habitations of man. In that wild, demon-beggared man of Gadara, with manhood and mind and money and everything gone, he saw possibilities of a man sitting, clothed and in his right mind, who could go home and tell his friends what great things the Lord had done for him.

His attitude toward the degenerate and depraved also shows his sublime optimism. Did Jesus see any worth in men stripped not only of outward goods and reputation, but also of character? Yes, they are still humanity. Each bears something of the image of God that may be restored. Jesus was no mere sentimentalist, with flattering views of the actual state of man. He was not blind to the awful fact of human depravity and the havoc sin has wrought, but he still believed in the redeemableness of humanity. The optimism of Jesus enabled him to see some redeeming feature in those of whom the world despaired. And because he hoped, he sympathetically sought to help. "The worst person in all history," it has been boldly said, "is something to God, if he is nothing to the world." "If there be a devil in man," says Tennyson, "there is an angel, too." Jesus was able to see the possible angel in the actual devil. It has been truly said: "Sympathy and hope were expressed in the very terms which Jesus employed to describe the moral degeneracy of those whose good he sought." "They are lost sheep that may be brought back to the fold; they are lost coins possessing value if only they can be found; they are lost sons of God, with filial memories and filial feelings buried in their hearts, which will rise to the surface when want and woe have brought them to their senses."

The sublime optimism of Jesus is shown in his love for man as a worthful being. However little worthy a man may be, he is, nevertheless, a being of unmeasured worth. It is upon this view of the worth of man, as distinguished from his worthiness that the command to love all men is based. It matters not how degenerate and depraved a man may be, he is still worth saving. Let us not forget that the last man saved by Christ when he was on earth was the thief on the cross. The teaching of Jesus about the infinite worth of every human soul was a new thing in history, and marks the great difference between pagan and Christian civilization. Let us learn to set upon ourselves and others the value which Jesus puts upon all men. The shame and tragedy of life is that we hold the souls of others and ourselves so cheap. Only when we stand in the sacred shadow of the cross, can we realize Christ's estimate of the infinite worth of man.

OUR MOTTO:

The Promotion Board; Its Work and Function

For now three successive years and as a direct outgrowth of a larger vision of local needs and the method of attacking the same gained when our church, with no little enthusiasm and no small response in the measure of its giving, faced the call and challenge of the New World Movement (our Baptist program of world wide missions for the five-year period ending in 1924), we have been confronted each year with a definite program of objectives for the several organizations of the church and the church as a whole. The program this year, presented herewith, while seemingly similar in its presentation, is prepared upon an entirely different basis than heretofore. Some have felt that ours might become a mistaken emphasis in program building, putting the stress upon the outer at the expense of the inner, the external at the sacrifice of the internal and, of necessity, fundamental basis. A program might be but a mechanical thing unrelated to an inner, growing spiritual experience and life and, if so, a something devoid of power. With this conviction we have gone back to our Fountain Head, making the emphasis that of prayer and the earnest seeking of the leadership of God, the One who alone can inspire programs, promote initiative and furnish power by which programs become more than a printed page. As then a program inspired, as we believe, by God himself and a program the expression of our wills touched and energized by his will, we, your committee, present the following:

Space is gladly given to the following report and program of a local church of less than 400 members, because it may serve as a suggestion of what is being done in other churches and what may be done under the efficient leadership of pastors who have the vision, courage and unwearied industry to do it. The whole article is printed verbatim as we received it. We commend its careful reading to pastors and church workers and to all others who are interested in making the local church a more efficient force.

Recommendations of the Committee

I.—GENERAL GOALS

1. A comprehensive program of missionary education.

2. The promotion of a men's organization in the church, comprehensive in form and program and further, if possible, an interchurch men's organization in the city.

3. A continued stress upon life enlistment for definite Christian service, i. e., the Christian ministry, home and foreign missionary service, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. secretaryship and social service ministries.

4. Active support of community and kingdom advance beyond merely denominational interests in aid of the following organizations, e. g., the Walworth County Y. M. C. A., Sunday-school Association, Ministerial Alliance and Rural Life Conference in the furtherance of the moral, religious and cultural ends for which they severally exist.

5. Loyalty to denominational goals as comprehended in the New World Movement; loyalty to denominational agencies by active cooperation with the Wisconsin Baptist State Convention and the Northern Baptist Convention and the national societies; loyalty to a more general use in our church homes of denominational periodicals, Missions, THE BAPTIST and the Wisconsin Baptist.

II.—GOALS OF THE DEACONS

1. A continued and primary emphasis upon the life of thanksgiving and prayer for the individual, the family and the church.

2. The addition to the membership of the church during the year of fifty new members by baptism, experience, restoration and letter.

3. A continued emphasis upon the twofold mission of the church: (1) that of evangelism and this pastoral, personal and passionate, in thus utilizing the forces and resources of the church in reaching those not committed to Jesus Christ; and (2) that of nurturing life already committed to him, developing the same through religious education and the placing of responsibility.

INVO-LUTING, EVO-LUTING AND BIBLE-LOOTING

I have read with much interest the able Thanksgiving address of R. S. MacArthur on "The Crowns of Christ" published in the issue of THE BAPTIST of Nov. 24. He rightly places upon Christ's brow the "crown of creation" with other crowns, amply supporting his statements with scripture, and exalting Christ as the Son of God and the Messiah. Had he stopped here, I would applaud, but he unnecessarily undertakes the solution of the method in which Christ performed the task through which he is entitled to wear the crown of creation.

"The world," said he "was once the thought of God, as the engine was once the thought of its inventor"; "It is now God's thought materialized, incarnated, translated." He depicts God as thinking out a world, and then evolving it through law. He defines law, in this connection, as the "name which we give to the manner in which we have observed some force to act." "Law is not a process, but a form." "Back of the form is force; there stands God."

In discussion he says:

1. "It has been well said that the laws of nature are the habits of God."

2. "God's Word and God's world are only different parts of God's wonderful book of revelation."

3. "Evolution is simply God's method of accomplishing determined results." "Evolution implies an involver; nothing can be evolved which was not first involved." "There may be an agnostic and even an atheistic evolution; but there may be an evolution which is truly theistic and even Christic." "This evolution honors God with knowledge and power to a remarkable degree." "Evolution does not eliminate God from the universe" it "only puts God farther back in the line of development."

These statements are made with loyalty to God. I approach them with some hesitation. No scriptures are quoted. He apparently brings them from his own mind and reasoning relative to the structure of the earth. Through the scriptures he places on Christ's brow the crown of creation, and through a process of reasoning, taken from what we know of the earth's structure, it seems, he substitutes for the crown of creation, a crown of evolution. I am not fearful of any result of "scientific knowledge," but I protest against and fear falsehood masquerading under that term. You smile at this, some of you will call me ignorant when the subject is evolution.

Are these statements of Doctor MacArthur in harmony with scripture or shall we adjust scripture accordingly?

Taking up the statements in order, let me suggest:

1. Nature habits of God. Does he ever break such habits? That all should die is the law of nature. How about Enoch and Elijah. Shall we cut out that scripture? When one is sick unto death, it is the law of nature that death will follow. Which of us will say that God does not some time intervene? Use your scissors again and cut out Naaman and the ten lepers.

2. God's Word and God's world. The reference to the nineteenth psalm is beautiful. Yet David says: "The law of the Lord is perfect." Jesus said, "Thy Word is truth." John says, "The Word was with God." Jesus wore the crown of creation also while here. Nature through seeding and time brings corn or wheat, we change the wheat to flour and with assistance of heat and nature we get bread. Did Jesus go through all these processes when he fed the five thousand? No, he created. But use your scissors again. How about the water made wine? Birth from a virgin? Oil that stayed, and meal that failed not? Now use them again.

3. Brother MacArthur intimates a doubt of proof of evolution, but says "for all practical purposes it has been established." There may be some dispute about just what is meant by the term "evolution." Taking it from those who early discussed it, I get it from Huxley: (wording my own) Given a particle of protoplasm, and the development from this (life cells) all the organic life including man, in this world. Agassiz would have different bits of protoplasm God-given from time to time from which different germs sprang through like development. The definitions heretofore given in the Forum by Ellen A. Copp and by George H. Felton respectively, are substantially that of Huxley, leaving out the proposition of "design."

This makes man akin to all other life. Lately men have attributed intelligence to the cell of which organic matter is composed. It got ambitious and developed man. It is this relation to other animal life that Mr. Bryan opposes. When I was a boy, I learned that the blood of man was different from that of a horse or a cow. A murderer could be detected by the blood, if he had the blood of a man on his clothing. The microscope revealed.

Paul tells us that God hath made of one blood all nations of men, and speaks of us as the offspring of God. Might he have said, God had made of one blood all nations of men and all other animal life? Will we use our scissors here? Luke says of Adam "which was the son of God." The Word makes Adam a direct creation of God. I think we shall have to use our scissors again and again.

There is no established scientific fact known which is contrary to God's word, except it be evolution. Rejecting evolution and accepting it only as an unbiblical theory, we have the Bible and science walking hand in hand. No scientific theory should be accepted when it conflicts with the Bible without undisputable proof. The crown of creation on his brow means more to me than a crown of evolutional development.

"THE PASTOR AS A LEADER"

Your editorial in THE BAPTIST, issue of Dec. 15, entitled "The Pastor as a Leader" voices my conviction exactly. I have been first an evangelist, following that a pastor and at present am a social worker. By experience I can fully realize now that many of my failures were due to lack of what you call laboratory methods during those pastoral years.

The years spent as an evangelist and social worker have brought me in close association with hundreds of pastors, many of whom are highly educated but whose success in numerous instances is but meager, and I am bound to say largely because the methods adopted by them are impractical. They wonder why the church does not accept and follow their leadership without a question. Well, many of the brethren in the pews have battled their way up to a successful business through the hard knocks of experience and are able to see at a glance oftentimes whether or not a given program is workable.

The writer, while on a research trip a few years ago, visited a state prison in a certain city. Having some spare time, he walked a few blocks to a theological seminary and met several students and in the course of conversation remarked what an excellent opportunity was afforded them to study men who were lost to themselves and society. He learned they had never been inside those gray walls; that their professors had said that the curriculum was full and if they wanted to get laboratory experience it would be necessary to take it during vacation time. There you have it in perfect keeping with your editorial.

By James M. Lively

IN HIS STEPS
1. How and Why Jesus Prayed. John 17:1-26

1. The necessity of prayer. Prayer is as vital to the Christian life as breath is to the physical life. It is recorded that the disciples asked Jesus to teach them how to pray—not to preach. The one great need of the modern church is to learn how to pray—then all other problems would vanish like dew before the morning sun. Roger Babson says, "Prayer is the greatest undeveloped power in the world." Prayer was central in the life of Jesus.

2. The occasion of this prayer. It was the Master's last night with his followers. One disciple had gone out into the darkness to betray him. The others were in deep sorrow. Death awaited with the coming of the dawn. He had taught them the hard lesson of humility; had revealed his betrayal; had announced his suffering and death; had warned Peter of his weakness; had promised the Spirit which should guide them into all truth; had told them of the future life, the Father's house of many mansions, and finally he lifted up his eyes and uttered this prayer which is known as the high priestly prayer.

3. The characteristics of this prayer. In this chapter we stand in the holy of holies of recorded prayers. A German studied upon it forty years, but never dared to write on it, and toward the end of his life had it solemnly read to him three times. Some little children in an American city whose leader failed to come to their little prayer meeting, turned over the New Testament for a long time, and at last selected this prayer as a passage to read. Afterwards being asked why they chose that one. they said that it seemed to bring the heavenly Father and the Saviour down into the room. On one occasion during my boyhood days, my father felt that he was dying and asked me to read this chapter. My voice soon broke, but I was greatly impressed that this was the last chapter he wanted to hear read.

We note, "the sublime comprehensiveness of the prayer; its suggesting swell of thought; the awful depth of its self-consciousness; the limpid simplicity of its style; the movement from himself to his disciples, to the entire church, to the outlying world; the ground on which he bases every prayer; the imperial dignity of the Pleader; the total absence of any sense of personal weakness of sinfulness. We are given a look into the very heart of the God-Man. Christ himself is the greatest of his miracles."

There are many phases under which we might study this prayer and be greatly benefitted. But in this study let us note the movement of the prayer.

1. Jesus prays for himself—Verses 1-5. If Jesus felt the need of praying for himself. how much more should all his followers. The beginning of the prayer life is to pray for one's self. It is the way into the kingdom of God. Samuel H. Hadley tells of staggering into Jerry McAuley's mission and saying, "I can't pray; somebody pray for me." Jerry said, "All our prayers won't help you unless you pray." So at last Hadley cried, "Jesus help me," and was gloriously converted. If one will grow strong and effective in kingdom work he must daily plead his own case before God.

2. Our Lord prays for his disciples—Verses 6-19. A prayer that is concerned with self alone is not a Christian prayer. It is our greatest duty and highest privilege to pray for our dear ones. It is Christlike. A great teacher of boys lay dying. He said. "Take me up and put me on my knees, and let me die as I have lived—praying for my boys." How much time do we spend in prayer for the dear ones in our homes, our companions in school and in the church? To walk in his steps we must pray for those closest to us.

3. Christ prays for all believers—Verses 20-26. A Christian prayer cannot be provincial. It has an outreach that is world-wide. Jesus was interested in all humanity. This prayer reaches out to the last man of the race. When I am weak and discouraged it strengthens and cheers me to remember that Jesus has prayed for me just the same as he prayed for Peter and the other disciples. It is our privilege and duty to pray for mankind in all the dark and needy corners of the world.

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

The Pittsburgh B. Y. P. U. Association executive board maintains a committee whose function is to conduct an active research into any particularly puzzling phase of B. Y. P. U. work. This committee is now working on several problems and seeks to cooperate with any society that desires to have a research committee of its own to work out some of the difficulties. The research idea is not new, but is strange to religious affairs until recently. They are counting on great forward strides as the result of careful, prayerful and intelligent investigation and study.

Three socials in thirty days! That ought to produce results. And so it did with Trinity B. Y. P. U., Cleveland. A "corn roast" on Sept. 29. a "nutty social" on Oct. 11 and a Hallowe'en party on Oct. 29. each of which was well planned in advance. enabled this society to get a running start with its devotional meeting at the beginning of the year. This society does not believe socials are everything but it realizes that the period of youth is the zenith of social activity and that if young people can have a live social time in the church they can also have a good devotional time in the same place. Try developing more social-ability with your young people.

The hen is an advertiser, the duck isn't. The hen lays an egg and "tells the world," the duck slips away without making a sound. The result—hen's eggs are preferred the world around.

Mr. (Miss or Mrs.) Local President, if you want delegates to the Denver B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention or to your state summer assembly, you must keep telling your society about it. Better begin to make use of the bulletin board.

Below is an example of what one society is doing. One of its members has a "knack" for copying cartoon characters such as "Andy Gump," "Bringing Up Father," "Mutt and Jeff," etc., and appending a short spicy phrase about the convention or assembly or both.

Here's another suggestion. Appropriate a part of your church bulletin board and label it with "watch this space for Denver convention scenes." Each week post a new picture taken from special literature of an attractive nature which can be secured from almost any of the western railroads or from the Denver Tourist and Publicity Bureau, 505 Seventeenth St., Denver. or 610 Hartford Bldg.. Chicago.

Next week we will reproduce here a photograph of a novel desk calendar which each local president will soon receive.

Lesson for January 13

THE LONG SOJOURN IN EGYPT

Lesson Text: Genesis 37:1-50:26

Golden Text: Psa. 121:7

We pass rapidly from the chosen leader and the chosen land to the story of his famous great-grandson, Joseph. As Abraham was destined to play an important part in the land of Canaan so Joseph was providentially led to play an important part in the land of Egypt. The long sojourn in Egypt covering a period of several generations had a place in the divine plan. It was the school of the Israelites in which they were trained for the organized work which God planned them to do.

The School

The school into which the Israelites were led was located in a salubrious and fertile valley watered by the unfailing Nile. Here a great civilization had grown up. After thousands of years the discoveries being made in that ancient land are the talk of the whole world. The wealth of King Tutankhamen's tomb recently opened reveals the culture of the Egyptians of Joseph's day. The architecture and sculpture of Egypt are second only to the architecture and sculpture of Greece. Learning was far in advance of any other country of that period. The Pharaohs of Egypt at this time were friendly to shepherds because they had come from shepherds. It was therefore the providential hour for Jacob and his sons to be transferred from Canaan to Egypt. Questions may arise as to the justice of the methods by which this transfer was brought about,—questions which can only be answered by the oft-repeated quotation: "He makes the wrath of man to praise him." There is no finer story in all the Bible illustrating the providential leadings of God, no better demonstration of the truth that all things work together for good to them that love God, than the story of Joseph. Goshen became the university in which God trained his chosen people for the part they were to play in conserving his revelation and realizing his purpose of redemption for mankind. Only reverent students of history can fully appreciate the contribution made by ancient Egypt to the development of the Hebrews. The greatest organizer, leader and prophet of Israel came out of Egyptian culture. Moses was truly the great emancipator and organizer of his people. But more of this next week. It is enough to say here that while the Hebrews made some contribution to Egypt in their long sojourn in Goshen, the Egyptians made a much richer contribution to the Hebrews. One has only to read carefully through the Bible and note the points of contact Palestine made with its neighbors on the south, north, east and west to see that all the great nations of antiquity helped to educate the Hebrews. This same providence is at work today, and in our mission fields we are slowly learning that Chinese and Indians may have almost as much to give to us in their way as we have to give to them in our way. While we evangelize them, they help to educate us. We all need to go to school to the other fellow or the mother nation before we are qualified to be the custodians of God's revelation and redemption.

The Schooling

The schooling was carried on as all good schooling has ever been carried on—by segregation. The Hebrews were given the land of Goshen. The teacher will locate it on the map and tell the pupils something about it. It was a fertile country lying north of Cairo and adapted to farming and grazing. Pharaoh told Joseph that his family could have any part of the land of Egypt they might choose, but of course that has to be taken with allowance for oriental gesture and blarney. In characteristic sagacity Goshen was chosen and there the Hebrews carried on their business, built their homes, raised their cattle, and conducted their worship in their own way in the atmosphere of Egyptian civilization. Segregation enabled them to remain distinct and to develop their institutions in harmony with the faith and ideals of Abraham, while their contact with Egypt kept them somewhat cosmopolitan. This has always been God's way of educating his people. Jesus prayed that his followers might not be taken out of the world, but they might be kept from the evil of the world. History is marred again and again by records of vain attempts to violate God's order. Segregation has often been interpreted in terms of complete separation from the world, and the monastic orders are an outstanding example of the folly of this method. Latent in many of our churches is still the same idea, and one can hardly complain of it when the trend of church young people to mix with the world and lose themselves in the mixture is so strong. And yet segregation with contact, sanctification with common sense, in the world but not of the world, is God's unchanging plan for the development of his people. The highest example of this method is seen in the incarnation. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us." The Son of God became the Son of man in order that he might touch human life at every point of its experience; and yet he was without sin. He was segregated, immune, so far as sin was concerned; but so far as sinners were concerned he ate and drank with them, befriended them, talked in their colloquial phrases, and was one of them in his sympathies. It seems like a long distance from the sojourn in Egypt to the incarnation of God in Christ, but all distance is annihilated when the eternal principle by which God works in the development of his people is considered.

Dr. A. A. Holtz, secretary of the college Y. M. C. A. at Manhattan, Kan., has been secured by the Manhattan Church as stated supply until a successor to Rev. R. A. MacMullen is secured. Mr. MacMullen takes up the work at Janesville, Wis.

Rev. H. R. McKee found the church at Keokuk, Iowa, ready to respond to his leadership. New members are being received, the budget was oversubscribed, the church finds it no longer necessary to spend the energy of its members on bazaars and suppers. All in all the outlook is most promising. Pastor McKee was for some years a pastor in Duluth, Minn.

The extraordinary increase in church membership during the last two years has been due in a large measure to the work of laymen, according to Dr. Charles L. Goodell, chairman of the committee of evangelism, at the annual meeting of the Federal Council of Churches. "Throughout the country," he stated, "laymen have been trained by their pastors to work two by two in personal evangelism." Dr. Goodell declared that the growth of the men's Bible classes is unprecedented. He pointed out that whereas the churches in the South make their greatest gains in the summer, the churches in the North show the least increase during the hot weather months. He urged that steps be taken to remedy this.

Slavery today exists in one independent and nominally Christian country, Abyssinia—a fact that recently caused the league of nations to table Abyssinia's application for membership. "Slavery is only one phase of the garish, medieval life of this topsy-turvy nation of 11,000,000 black-skinned people who are as unusual as those in 'Alice's own Wonderland,'" says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society. "In Abyssinia customs identical with those of the prehistoric lake-dwellers, a Christian faith established before the German and British barbarians were converted by missionaries, and feudal government exist side by side, though not always in peace, while a European traveler reports that upon entering the thatched-roof palace

Kim's Sins Fly Over the Chip Tops

(A New Year's Story for the Young Reserves, and for you, too!)

By Margaret T. Applegarth

SOMETHING would certainly have to be done. For here was another New Year coming, and poor Kim so loaded down with last year's sins that nobody in all Korea wanted to have anything to do with him. Not even Kosiki who—being only a girl—really shouldn't have been quite so pious and particular! But then Kim was astonishingly and discouragingly sinful, more so than anybody else in town; which is what comes of being uncomfortably poor and also of having forgotten to put a sieve beside his shoes on New Year's Eve, as every one else remembered to do.

A sad forgetting that was; for, of course, when old man Angwangi came fluttering down from the upper air for his annual visit on New Year's Eve, there at the door stood Kim's shoes with never a sieve in sight to distract his attention. So naturally this cruel Korean Santa Claus tried on the shoes in high glee and left the most unpleasant gift inside—smallpox. Indeed he did! Kosiki knows it, and Kim knows it, and all the neighbors know it. For didn't Kim's father die of that smallpox soon afterwards? And Kim's mother, too? And isn't Kosiki's small yellow face pitted with pockmarks, like the little valleys on an orange skin? Oh, they tell you in Korea that if never pays to forget to put a sieve beside your shoes on that one night, for Angwangi is not a jovial soul like our St. Nick but a villainous old fiend who spends three hundred and sixty-five wicked days collecting pestilences in the upper air, so that on New Year's Eve he can swoop down and deposit them in empty shoes. But they will also whisper in your ear that an ordinary sieve works wonders in protection. Indeed it does! For it seems that Angwangi has a perfect mania for counting the meshes of a sieve—he counts and he counts and he counts, all night long, never once remembering about the nasty gifts he meant to give. With sieves at every other door in town, no wonder Angwangi did his very worst for Kim!

So it had been a dreadful year. For not only had there been this cruel smallpox, but there were also Kim's sins. Simply dozens of them! Now of course you have sins of your own; we all have, and I dare say we don't let them trouble us nearly as much as we should. We tuck the memory of them into the darkest corner of our brains and hope that God will help us to outgrow them very soon. But Kim's weren't the kind of sins you could tuck anywhere. Hadn't he gone all over town collecting them? Which is what comes of being poor when you live in Korea.

Kim was poorer than any one you know; so poor that he never by any chance had more than one meal a day—rice on the best days, the queerest roots and berries boiled up for dinner on the other days. Kosiki often used to cry from sheer hunger. And Kim would tighten up his belt right where he felt emptiest. But this was no way to live, as you can see for yourself; so Kim decided that he would really have to turn beggar, just as hundreds of older men all over Korea did on every New Year's Eve. Therefore, you are to picture him trudging down spooky lanes and knocking at people's doors to say politely: "Peace to this house! H-have you a cheyong, perhaps?"

And they did have a cheyong, oh, yes, indeed! Gladly they handed it out to poor Kim, who went home at midnight shuddering and dragging seven of them in his arms and over his shoulders. In case you are wondering why he should shudder at such a very profitable haul, I shall have to explain that a cheyong is a straw image which the Koreans make at New Year's time. Deep inside the straw body they hide a statement of their old sins and shortcomings, also a few pieces of money; and they firmly believe that when a beggar takes away the cheyong he becomes possessed of all these sins—their scapegoat, who sells his own peace of soul for money!

So now you see where Kim got such an astonishing supply of sins. There were the sins of old Widow Weephard and the sins of Butcher Bigbone, the sins of Weaver Whitegoods and the sins of Merchant Makemoney, the sins of Barber Baldpate and the sins of Schoolmaster Simpleton, not to mention the truly horrifying sins of old Robber Redfist. Oh, it was simply stupendous for any one boy of twelve to be so overloaded! Decidedly something would have to be done.

But two months passed. Then four. Then eight. Things went from bad to worse. Kim looked as withered and weazened as two sticks. Over and over Kosiki said she hardly felt comfortable living alone in the same house with him. Although, to be frank, it would have been impossible to be comfortable in that damp mud house, sins or no sins! The Korean word for house is "chip"; and if you know what a warm cozy feeling it is to sing, "Home, Sweet Home," then just try singing, "Chip, Sweet Chip," and see what a bleak, shivery sensation it gives you. Although saying chip is not nearly as bleak as inhabiting chip! So what with sickness and sorrow and sins, slim Kim spent a most unhappy winter, spring and summer.

In the fall he took all seven slips of paper which he had found inside the seven cheyongs to a certain scholar in town, thinking it might be well if he knew the worst about himself.

"Kindly condescend to read aloud the list of my shortcomings," Kim begged politely, for he himself couldn't tell an A from a B.

So the Scholar propped his big horn spectacles on the end of his nose and started in with the sins of old Widow Weephard: sharp tongue, impatient, neglect of the family idols, stinginess, greediness, a fondness for quarreling and for boxing the ears of small children.

"Pretty bad!" suggested the Scholar, wagging his head.

"Pretty bad!" agreed Kim, wagging his head.

Next came the list of Butcher Bigbones's failings.

"Very bad!" sighed the Scholar, clucking his tongue.

"Oh, very bad!" agreed Kim, meekly clucking his tongue.

So that by the time they had waded through the five other lists, including the really horrifying sins of old Robber Redfist, Kim felt as blue as indigo. The Scholar also felt blue.

"I think it would be desirable for you to withdraw your presence from my humble chip," he said, and actually bustled poor Kim toward the door, "for who knows what evil influence you may sprinkle into the air."

So Kim left the Scholar's chip, put on his shoes, and returned to his own chip where Kosiki was stewing the most abominable soup from vegetable peelings and roots. Kim swallowed a little of it, then told Kosiki she was the frightfullest cook—at this rate, how could she ever hope to get a husband?

"Tut!" she grunted bitterly, while three tears dripped forlornly down her sooty cheeks (the fire had been smudgy and low in its mind!). "I'm sure you'll never get a wife, a boy with all your sins and your wicked tongue. Bah! Something will have to be done about you."

"Yes," agreed Kim, "something will certainly have to be done."

So, with only the gloomy songs to cheer him he visited the mu-tang, the witch who lived at the edge of town. There she sat among her drums and cymbals, as wicked a creature as you ever saw. But she said it really wasn't so hard to lose sins—had he tried sinking them in a well on a moonlight night, with a grain of rice for each sin? Why no, that had never occured to him.

"Oh, it's a neat enough scheme," she hissed, "especially for a mere boy like you. How many sins have you anyhow, you beardless youth?"

Kim obligingly began ticking them off on his fingers, but no sooner had he used up all ten of them and had begun going the rounds again than the mutang spluttered: "Poof! Poof! Prodigious! Preposterous! Ridiculous! Begone from my presence, you sinful scallawag—begone, I say, Poof! You'll cast an evil influence even over me. Begone!" And she thumped her drums and clanged her cymbals to rid the lower air of any left-over sins poor Kim might trail behind him.

It was discouraging! But one week before New Year's Kosiki made the suggestion. Rather timidly, of course, since girls are only considered to be things in Korea! Even her name showed this contempt—Kosiki: "What-You-May-Call-Her!" But Kim was soon to learn what you and I know already, that girls are really exactly as bright as....or would it be more polite not to say it, since we all agree?

Anyhow, Kosiki said: "Kim, you might put your sins on a kite on New Year's Eve."

Kim stared at her enchanted. Then he actually got up and skipped the first skip that had been skipped in that chip for the entire year.

"I will!" he cried. "I will! Why, a kite's the very thing!"

He was much too poor to buy one, so he got a twig here and a bit of kindling wood there, and concocted the queerest kite you ever saw. For the paper sides were made of the seven lists of other people's sins that now belonged to Kim. Then, in order that there might be no possible misunderstanding among the demons of the upper air, he bribed another scholar to print on the eighth side of the kite: "These are the sins of me, Kim, thirteen years old, who lives in the end chip on the Street-of-the-Nine-Green-Ducklings."

It seemed as if night would never come. By sunset time, all up and down this Street-of-the-Nine-Green-Ducklings, little fires were built, one in front of each house. Kosiki had a fire in front of her chip, too, and just like every one else, she and Kim began burning the old combings of their hair and the old clippings of their nails, which they always carefully saved from day to day to be burned at sundown on New Year's Eve, —for people say, in Korea, that if such clippings and combings aren't burned, what is to hinder their falling into the hands of an enemy who could cast the stiffest kind of a spell on you by using these old left-overs of yourself? Neither Kim nor Kosiki was going to invite new kinds of destruction; so they had their little bonfire. And you may also be sure that the sieveiest of sieves guarded their shoes on the doormat all night long, so that Angwangi could count meshes till morning.

At midnight Kim tiptoed out into the courtyard, and if you had been there you would have heard a crackle or two as his kite went soaring up into the air. Up and up and up it went until the string was wrenched clean out of Kim's hands.

"They're gone!" he muttered. "All gone!" And his heart gave a huge thump as he saw those wretched sins go sailing over the chip tops. Himself, he felt as light as air.

"I haven't a sin left!" he boasted. But no sooner had he tasted the bitter soup next morning than he boxed Kosiki's ears, and said it was the worst soup yet. You can hardly blame her for wailing: "Oh Kim! Kim! you haven't lost all of the Widow Weephard's sins, for boxing ears was one of her specials! And you've still got it."

"I haven't!" he shouted.

"You have, too."

"I haven't!" and I greatly regret to say that he did another most unpleasant thing to his sister, who wept and wailed more loudly yet, and said between sobs: "A-and y-you h-haven't l-lost all of R-Robber Redfist's s-sins, either, y-you d-dreadful b-boy!"

"I have!" shouted Kim.

"You haven't! " shouted Kosiki, and the grandest rumpus would have followed except for the fact that a visitor walked in. A most unwelcome person, for under his arm he carried—Kim's kite.

"Go away! go away!" gasped poor Kim. "I've lost these sins once. Take them away!"

"See here," said the visitor cheerfully, "I bring you good news. For this is no way to lose sins! About midnight I heard them come clattering down against my windowpane, and since there was an address on the kite, I hurried right over this morning to tell you there's a God who forgives sins."

"Do tell!" gasped Kosiki.

"Do tell!" echoed Kim. "Actually a god who does that? Whatever can be his name? And where is his shrine? I'd do anything....go anywhere...."

"Men call him the 'Friend of Sinners,' and you needn't go on any pilgrimage, my boy, for he's right here inside this chip with you——"

Kosiki looked. And Kim looked. But there was no idol to be seen anywhere. So the strange gentleman sat down and began inquiring in the most always-have-known-each-other-fashion about Kim's sins: Weren't there a good many of them?

There were, Kim acknowledged, and talked for half an hour. Then Kim handled the stranger's Bible with grateful fingers. Marvelous! And Kosiki handled it—lovingly. Oh, too good to be true! To think of there being a Book Specially for Sinners, and a God who sent men all the long way from Mi-guk (America) to Korea to win sinners. Even sinners as far gone as Kim!

"Would you condescend to read once more those dearly-precious words that speak straight to my heart?" asked Kim.

So the missionary "condescended." And I think you will be glad to know that every single promise in that Bible verse has come true in Kim's life, because he accepted the sinner's God—

"Who forgiveth all thine iniquities"; (Not another sin did Kim ever float over the chip tops!).

"Who healeth all thy diseases"; (Ah yes, in our mission hospital, you know).

"Who redeemeth thy life from destruction"; (No more dread of Angwangi, no more sieves or fires at sundown on New Year's Eve!).

"Who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies"; (For didn't Kim go to our mission boarding school?).

"Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things"; (And didn't they nourish his starved little body?).

"So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's."

And this boy is just one of ten thousand poor sinners all over Korea who want what Kim wanted—a Safe and a Happy New Year!

A Happy New Year to Everybody

Dear Young Reserves,

I am just as sorry as you are that our Young Reserve columns have had to be missing twice lately! In order to entirely make up for it I am giving you a nice surprise this week, because both pages belong to you today, and if you don't love Kim and Kosiki then I certainly won't know what to think of you. But don't you call it a shame for any country to have such curious New Year's customs? It is really exactly as curious in China, however, as this account will prove:

Save Your Front Door!

For if you were a Chinese boy or girl you would be greatly worried about your front door at New Year's time. Why? Mostly because you would be so afraid that your family might have forgotten to pay all their debts! For it is the custom in China to have every single debt paid by New Year's Eve; and in case any are not paid, the person to whom the money is owed has a perfect right to come and carry off your front door. A worse calamity could not happen! Epecially at New Year's time Why? Oh, because the Chinese believe that the lower air is full of evil spirits, every single one of which would simply love to poke its wicked nose inside your front door and pester you all day and all night long during the year. Evil spirits are especially anxious to get indoors at New Year's time when they have been driven away from other people's homes, and if your front door were gone—dear me! dear me! they could flock in by the dozens upon dozens.

Even solemn old Chinese grandfathers believe this, and keep a paper door-god pasted on the front door as a protection. Every New Year's Day the old paper god is burned so that he can return to the spirits of the upper air; a new paper god is then pasted in place while a terrific firing-off of fire crackers occurs, like ten Fourths of July rolled into one; for evil spirits detest noise and scamper madly away to some quieter neighborhood.

I think you understand now one reason why we send our Baptist missionaries to China—because we really mean what we say in our greeting: A Happy New Year to Everybody (including the Chinese!)

Hoosier Who's Who

By U. M. McGuire

One must whirl like a dervish to keep an eye on all the pastoral changes, but a few of the more recent ones in the mind's eye at the moment may be noted. In a neat and quiet little game of pussy-in-the-corner, D. Heitmyer started the play by sliding from Linton to Crawfordsville. Then O. A. Cook, president of the Indiana Baptist Convention, slipped from Bedford into the vacant corner at Linton; whereupon T. J. Owens, by a long leap from Granite City, Ill., beat all players into the Bedford nook. At the First Church, Logansport, W. H. Steinkraus, lately come from Detroit, has got a good grip upon both the organization and the hearts of his people. S. I. Long, who has spent most of his time in recent years as a Chautauqua lecturer, is now located at Richmond with high enthusiasm. He promises 200 additions to his church this year; and since he knows how such things are done, he will probably fulfill his promise..

During the civil war, Gen. John Morgan, at the head of a corps of gallant Kentuckians, invaded Southern Indiana. He was rounded up and captured, but he left the Hoosiers on his route saying, "Well, John Morgan's a gentleman, anyhow." The South has never forgiven Indiana for spoiling that raid. To even things up, it planted the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary plump on our southern border, and ever since it has subjected the southern counties of Indiana to a perpetual invasion by an army of young preachers drawn from all the South. Every one of them is a gentleman and Baptist to the core, and we capture them and sentence them to hard labor for the Northern Baptist Convention. Let them come, bless 'em.

State Board Meets

Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 10-11, the state board of promotion held one of the most important and thorough-going meetings in its history. The agenda covered nearly every topic and interest with which the Baptists of Indiana have any concern. The tangled times through which we have been passing for some years have brought many difficult and perplexing situations and some keen criticism. The purpose of this meeting was to go thoroughly over all the business of the denomination so far as it affects Baptist work in Indiana, and to take the cover off everything. This was done unflinchingly and patiently. No evidence of either bad faith or bad handling of the business was discovered. No factional gaps opened up. The close of the meeting left us with a record of things achieved, with a unity of spirit and with prospect of future growth that gave ground for profound thankfulness.

Every department of our work made an encouraging report. To begin with the districts, Superintendents G. C. Mitchell and Charles G. Morse gave racy and hopeful reports of the work in the southeast and southwest districts respectively. Executive Secretary F. A. Hayward, reporting for the Indianapolis area, showed that the federated organization of the churches of the area is developing a real denominational strategy and is getting ready to meet the responsibilities of that metropolitan community of (soon to be) half a million people. Director of Promotion S. G. Huntington reported a series of financial campaigns with the churches in which nearly $400,000 has been raised within the year. Educational Director O. R. McKay is pushing the movement for better and bigger Baptist Sunday schools, and in co-operation with Chairman U. S. Clutton, of the department of religious education, is building up a notable summer assembly. Miss Myrtle Huckleberry, director of children's work, has won such distinction as an expert that other states are calling for her services. Mrs. Ella M. Randolph has built up the department of literature to the point where it has become a miniature supply house for the Baptists of Indiana, with the prospect of becoming in fact such an institution full-grown. Chairmen Roy B. Deer, C. S. Dearborn and U. M. McGuire—of the departments respectively of evangelism, men's work and social service—presented plans which were approved for more effective work. New departments of young people's work, Franklin College and stewardship presented through their chairmen Ford Porter, H. N. Spear, and A. A. Cohen approved plans for the organization of their departments. And finally, General Superintendent C. M. Dinsmore cheered all hearts by showing a returning tide of receipts for the New World Movement, and expressing the belief that Indiana is going to come out at the close of the year with pledges paid in full.

The Baptist Observer, under the editorial management of T. J. Parsons, has been steadily climbing towards self-support, and it has now a good prospect of reaching its goal. The Board of Promotion has definitely recommended to the churches a plan for an every-family subscription to be included in the missionary budget of the church.

Milford W. Foshay, 1858-1923

It is with a sense of loss that we note the translation of Milford W. Foshay. He was known to many of us through his years of service in Colorado, Michigan and Ohio. Blessed with the heritage of Christian training by God-fearing Nova Scotia ancestors, he bore every mark of a Christian gentleman, and brought to the ministry a personality through which Christ spoke with unusual clearness.

The years of his ministry were not easy, for his whole life from boyhood had been a fight for health. He had gone to many parts of the country seeking it, and finally returned to Ohio. Yet one would never believe that he suffered from any bodily weakness. For his faith was so sure and his courage so strong that he carried on an effective ministry.

His last pastorate was at Painesville, Ohio, where he kept up the work through the trying years of the war, and finally felt compelled to retire from active service in 1921. He remained in the city, however, and still took as much part in the work of the church as he was able to take. There is a tradition that it is difficult for any man to fill a pulpit with his predecessor in the pew. But in this case there is the testimony of the present pastor of the Painesville church, that he had no more loyal or sympathetic member than Brother Foshay who was always most kind and helpful.

His faith was strong. There was no uncertain note in it. His testimony was clear and true. He knew the best in literature and wrote with a skillful pen. Passing on at the age of sixty-five he still was making plans for writing, plans that he was not permitted to carry out.

The funeral services were conducted in the Painesville Church by his successor, Willis S. Webb and Rev. Frank Dann, who is also a deacon in the church and had been a close and sympathetic companion of Brother Foshay during his last pastorate. Mrs. Foshay and one son survive, and are both at Painesville.

Milwaukee Doings

The Immanual Church has had the assistance of Dr. C. A. Daniel of Chicago in a week of meetings. The church was blessed and strengthened.

Miss Leona Chase, one of our fine young women who gave herself to Christian service a couple of years ago, will begin her work as missionary for the West Allis Baptist Church the first of the month. She has been efficient as a schoolteacher, and has been president of the Milwaukee Baptist Young People's organization for the past two years. She plans to enter the training school in the fall.

On Sunday, Dec. 16, the ministers of the city exchanged pulpits. This was done at the request of the laymen's committee of the Baptist Union. The common theme of "Our Baptist Heritage" was presented by all the pastors. This is one of the ways which the laymen's committee has of crystalizing a denominational consciousness in the city.

On Friday evening, Dec. 7, the Christian center folks held open house to the Baptists of the city and the friends of the center. The building has been renovated and put into excellent shape for such a type of work. The Milwaukee Baptist Union is backing the work, and it is expected that the staff will be increased and the work enlarged with the passing of the months. A large crowd was present to enjoy the program of the evening. Dr. D. W. Hulburt, Miss Maimie Passolt, the missionary, and Oliver Wergin, who is doing work with the boys each spoke. Mr. M. M. Rock, the efficient superintendent of the Sunday school, was in charge. Refreshments were served by the center.

The South Church of which the writer is the pastor, has been on its new field since the middle of March, and since that time the Sunday-school enrolment has increased from eighty to 228. Recently nine were received into membership—two, a young married couple, by baptism. During the present pastorate of more than four years 107 have been received into the membership, of which fifty-nine have come by baptism, or approximately one-fourth more by baptism than in other ways. In addition, the first unit of the new building has been erected. The church has just closed its first school of missions.

On Dec. 13 the new Baptist Community Church of Woodlawn received its first members into fellowship, and the recognition services were held. This church was recently organized with six members, and on that evening nine others were received into fellowship. The recognition sermon was preached by Rev. Robert W. Shaw on the subject, "The Church of the New Testament." Dr. D. W. Hulburt gave the hand of fellowship and welcomed the new church into the Baptist fellowship. Miss Zevenhausen has recently been employed by the Baptist Union and the church as a missionary.

Out in the State

Word reaches us that the First Church of Madison is rejoicing in the leadership of its new pastor, Dr. Norman Henderson. This is good news, but it is just what the friends of Doctor Henderson expected. This is an important field and the church has a great opportunity in dealing with the students at the state university. A new plant is needed badly.

Elmer G. Hamley, who for many years was a pastor in this state, is now taking post-graduate work at the state university at Madison. He is available for lectures and pulpit supply. He is well informed on the Indian question, and on the Indian legends of northern Wisconsin. He can be addressed at Madison.

In response to the referendum on the matter of the new program of the denomination, about fifty churches sent in reports, all of which were unanimously in favor of the project save one. This is a good showing, as many of the friends of the proposition expected. Perhaps with the right sort of cooperation on the part of the leaders of the denomination, as well as the pastors, better results can be obtained next time a referendum is had. The tragedy of the church situation for the past few years has been that everything was expected to be sidetracked in favor of the larger denominational interests just whenever our leaders proposed, and the result has often been to weaken and make impotent the work of the local church. How would it do to resume the "efficiency program" of seven or eight years ago which was junked in favor of the "five-year program." That, as we remember it, was an emphasis by the local church on evangelism, social service, missionary education and stewardship. Surely these are fundamental to the life of any church.

Oregon Letter

By Leonard W. Riley

Oregon has 95,607 square miles, with a population of 783,389, according to the last census. Educationally these people are served by three state institutions—the University of Oregon, the Oregon Agricultural College and the Monmouth Normal School—and ten independent colleges—Albany College, Presbyterian; Columbia College, M. E. South; Columbia University, Catholic; Linfield College, Baptist; Pacific College, Friends; Pacific University, Congregational; Philomath, United Brethren; Reed College; Eugene Bible University, Christian; Willamette University, Methodist. With the exception of Columbia College, located at Milton in the eastern part of the state, all of these institutions are in the Willamette Valley. Here, of course, is likewise found the greater portion of the population. Being thus so closely centered, fellowship between these institutions is not difficult to maintain. The eight denominational institutions and Reed College are organized as the Conference of Independent Colleges.

The Conference of Independent Colleges

This conference meets annually at the Thanksgiving recess. The gathering this year was held with Linfield College and each institution was represented by a large delegation. The president and one member from each of the faculties constitute the voting membership. This year the general topic of discussion was "The Christian College and World Problems." "The Christian College and World Peace" was presented by President Levi T. Pennington of Pacific College; "The Christian College and a Better Social Order," by President Clarence W. Greene of Albany College, and "The Christian College and a Christian World" by Dr. William J. Sly of Linfield College. These papers brought out very clearly the part which the Christian colleges may have in bringing about new world conditions.

Those who were present unquestionably caught a new vision of the great opportunity which is given to a college teacher in directing the thinking of the young men and women who are to be our leaders a decade or two hence. A banquet is always held on Friday evening, at which time these college presidents and professors lay aside their dignity and proceed to have a general good time. President Clarence W. Greene of Albany College was elected president of the conference for the ensuing year.

This conference was organized in April, 1908, and has served a good purpose in bringing together the representatives of the colleges of the Willamette Valley. In former days there was a tendency to look upon each other as competitors, but now all fully realize that they are co-laborers in a good cause.

Church News

The oldest Baptist church on the Pacific Coast is located at Oregon City. This church has a long record of splendid achievements. The present pastor is Rev. Willis E. Pettibone, who graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary in 1900. He is now in his fourth year with this church and is rejoicing over the purchase of two very desirable lots on which the church expects to erect a $100,000 plant thoroughly equipped for institutional work.

The pastor of Grace Church, Portland, is Rev. J. F. Huckelberry. Since coming to this field two years ago he has had the pleasure of receiving 118 into the membership of this church. Forty-six have come since last August, thirty-eight of these by baptism. The Sunday-school attendance is about 300 and a mission Sunday-school is maintained with an attendance of over sixty. All departments of the work seem to indicate an excellent spirit in this church.

The pastor of our church at Independence is Rev. Harold L. Proppe, who is this year a senior at Linfield College. This church, while small in numbers, is thoroughly in line with our New World Movement. A loyalty luncheon held recently brought to the membership of the church the inspiration and enthusiasm of the recent Bible Conference held in Portland. Members of the church impersonated the speakers at the conference. Following the program a luncheon was served in which fifty women participated.

The Weather

A general impression abroad gives Oregon the reputation for many rainy days. As a matter of fact the annual precipitation of this state just about equals that of New York City. The difference is that New York City has much snow, while this rarely falls in Oregon. The entire fall this year has been unusually low and a great deal of exceptionally pleasant weather has prevailed. The rains, however, began the past week and have been accompanied by heavy winds which have wrought some havoc among the ships on the Pacific Ocean.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

Thinking Black

Probably no northern city has had a higher percentage of increase in its negro population than Detroit.

The migration from the Southland started nearly 100 years ago when run away slaves began to look upon Canada as the promised land of freedom. Gradually the "underground railway" developed its many ramifications and laterals, but Detroit became the objective of the many branches until thousands of fugitive slaves landed safely on Canada's shores. This is a wonderfully interesting part of our ante bellum and civil war history. Nearly every public library has the literature.

But I started out to write of the migration that is identified with the great world war. This has been the greater migration as millions have been involved instead of thousands and the great cities have been called upon to meet industrial, social and religious problems of the first order. The earlier migration diffused itself more over the agricultural area of Canada and the northern states and no serious problems were involved. This later migration has involved great housing problems that at times have been acute. When thousands were coming day after day even so large a city as Detroit found itself put to the test and not until the summer had passed and the migration had ceased and a reaction set in was the situation brought under control. The negro group, of course, felt the burden most keenly and overcrowding of homes and apartments, the use of churches, parks, and every available resource was pressed into use as temporary expedients. It takes time to assimilate such hordes of newcomers, especially of the black race. It involves the shifting of vast neighborhoods because the negroes crowd out nearly every other race. Coming from the miserable cabins of the Southland they are quite willing to occupy what only the poorest and lowest of the whites will endure in the North.

The migration of the present year has brought a better class of negroes, more virile, more prosperous and independent and our great industrial institutions are glad to get their strength and vigor to meet their pressing demands. Then the negroes speak our language, are acquainted with our American customs, the vast majority are willing workers and uncontaminated with the red theories of the European groups. The negroes find they must speed up in the North but the climate and big wages help them to attain and maintain the new standard.

The high wages paid in Detroit has been the chief magnet although there have been many other elements to enter into the reasons for the movement northward—the virtual financial slavery, exploitation and discrimination of the South. In the North there are no Jim Crow cars, the children can attend the public schools with other children, full freedom to vote, greater freedom and unbelieved-of wages. These are some of the explanations. There are still others.

The change in our immigration laws impelled northern manufacturers to look to the southern negroes for their manual labor supply. The Ford Motor Company at its present plant on the River Rouge employs negroes as one-third of its employes. Other great industries can make a similar showing. They are also largely used in building operations, public improvements such as paving, sewer, and water extensions. Thus they are fitting into our industrial life in a large way.

The housing problem adjusts itself in time. One or two negro families will find an opening into a neighborhood and soon the whites will begin to sell and scatter to newer neighborhoods. These adjustments require months and years. They are going on in many parts of the city, but there is a limit to the capacity of any city to take on large additions of negro people.

The negro migration has been a peculiarly Baptist problem as so large a percentage of the newcomers are Baptists or lean toward the Baptist faith. In a little more than five years negro Baptist churches in Detroit have grown in number from two to forty-five, while several of them have grown in numbers by hundreds and thousands. Some say 75 per cent of the newcomers are of the Baptist persuasion. At any rate the Detroit Baptist Union, along with all its other trying problems has been struggling with the most baffling difficulty. The Detroit environment is so different from that left in the Southland. The housing, social, vice, political and industrial methods are so different. Then blessed or cursed with plethoric wages, the changed situation has bewildered and confused the average negro.

Many negro Baptist churches have almost moved bodily from the southern environment to Detroit bringing their preachers with them. The latter are quite as much out of their element here as the church members and find it much more difficult to adjust themselves. Many are unschooled, rather loose in morals, and yet the average southern negro preacher has a quality of leadership that goes with his people but which cannot be maintained in the North. As the younger generations get into the public schools and especially the high schools, the southern preacher's oratory loses its appeal and as a result an opportunity and responsibility is growing that must be wisely met in all our northern cities.

The Detroit Baptist Union has organized an advisory council made up of white and negro brethren of equal number. A social center has been established under competent negro leadership and several of the more promising churches aided in securing more worthy houses of worship. I would not dare to relate all the experiences we have battled with —lack of confidence, lack of cooperation, the czarism of many of the preachers, the wicked exploitation by members of their own race, lack of appreciation of educational advantages, immorality and many other things might be mentioned, but through it all real progress is being made. Rev. R. L. Bradby, pastor of the Second Church, born and educated in Canada, has been acting as superintendent of the negro work under Dr. H. C. Gleiss.

The last meeting of the advisory council held about two weeks ago was the happiest and most forward looking meeting yet held. The negro brethren spread a generous dinner at the Christian center for the members of the advisory council after which cheering reports and addresses of appreciation were made by pastors of the more progressive churches —sort of heart to heart talks—as white and black brethren discussed the serious problems that confront Christian brethren in this great city.

The Detroit Baptist Union has just contracted for the purchase of a large brick church building on the south side, a former Catholic church in Delray, for the First (negro) Baptist Church of Delray, possession to be had about March 1. The church has been laboring under great handicap even with competent pastoral leadership. This purchase will make possible a great work in this important industrial district.

Early in January the new Hartford Avenue (negro) church edifice will be dedicated. The church overestimated its ability to finance such a building proposition as they needed in this choicest of negro residential districts. The Detroit Baptist Union was appealed to in their distress, took over the property, cleaned up its entanglements, and will have completed the splendid brick building at the corner of Hartford and Milford Avenues. Rev. C. A. Hill, a former assistant pastor at the Second Church, is pastor. This addition will greatly strengthen our negro Baptist work in Detroit.

There are many others that need the assistance that the Detroit Baptist Union is glad to aid on proper standards of cooperation.

Already the membership of the negro Baptist Churches of Detroit outnumber the membership of the white churches even when we include all of the churches of the foreign-speaking groups.

Thinking White

Sunday, Dec. 16, the frame chapel of the Hazel Park Baptist Mission on the Nine Mile Road (in Oakland County) was dedicated. This is in a rapidly growing residential community on the Stephenson car line, at the corner of John R and Nine Mile Road. A mission Sunday school, a branch of the Highland Park Baptist Church, has been in operation there for nearly three years starting with a feeble beginning, but now numbering 250 souls. The Detroit Baptist Union took over the interest the present year, purchased a strategic site, and has erected at a cost of nearly $5,000 a chapel that will minister to the growing community until a permanent church building shall be necessary. Rev. Geo. E. Dawkins, of Royal Oak, Doctor Gleiss, and several lay officials of the Detroit Baptist Union spoke at the various services. The faithful brethren back of the enterprise are grateful to God for the happy condition they are in in their desire to provide church advantages for the community.

The new brick edifice of the Hurlbut Avenue Baptist Church will be dedicated the second week in January. This is a splendid building, greatly needed for the work of this aggressive church and located in a rapidly growing community on the East Side, known as St. Clair Heights. The property is valued at $45,000 and is a distinct addition to our modern church buildings. The site is just off Warren Avenue, East, and the lot is large enough for an addition which will probably come at a not distant day to better care for the church school and social life of the church. Rev. C. F. Hamilton is pastor.

Our Detroit churches are nearly all planning definite evangelistic programs. Under the Detroit Council of Churches again during the pre-Easter period a noon-day down-town meeting will be held at one of the big theaters to be followed by evening services in the residential districts. Dr. F. E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, will be one of the preachers during this program, the evening services to be held in the First Baptist Church for two weeks. Doctor Taylor has served Detroit before in these city-wide pre-Easter services and will be most cordially welcomed back. He has many friends in Detroit.

Jottings of Journeys

In a recent visit to Denver, Colo., where we addressed the Baptist Union at its annual meeting we enjoyed the gracious hospitality of Judge and Mrs. Fred W. Freeman in their beautiful home near City Park, lunched with Charles R. Brock at the University Club, visited with Dr. Fred B. Palmer, and met scores of Colorado Baptists. In the circle of our rounds we had the pleasure of stopping for a few minutes on the campus of Colorado Woman's College, catching the inspiration of the ozone, seeing the grandeur of the mountains to the west, speaking briefly to the faculty and students at the chapel hour, and incidentally noting the warm place President and Mrs. James Asa White have made for themselves in the hearts of these altitudinous Baptists. Pastor H. W. Cole of the Calvary Church proved his vision and powers of leadership in his clear, comprehensive and strong report to the Union of what Baptists ought to do in Denver by way of church extension in the next decade. Other reports and especially that of the recording secretary revealed the fact that Denver Baptists are doing things. The eleven years of Pastor A. H. C. Morse in the First Church have witnessed much substantial progress which has recently eventuated in plans to build a modern church plant on a lot near the capitol. W. R. Schoemaker is the happy and successful pastor of the City Park Church which is located in one of the finest residence sections of this rapidly growing Rocky Mountain Metropolis. He numbers among his members the families of Bruce Kinney, John Hipp, Judge Freeman and others. The Galilee Church and Joshua Gravett are really interchangeable names. Both have grown up together and have kept pace in spiritual stature. It was a disappointment not to find Joshua in the city as he was in New York on business connected with the Foreign Mission Society. We noted among the people present at the dinner Dr. J. D. S. Riggs, formerly president of Shurtleff College, and Mrs. Riggs, and they seem to have found the elixir of life in the atmosphere of this mile-high city. The 7500 Baptists of Denver are united, evangelical, aggressive, and if the sample 200 of them at the annual dinner so generously and daintily served by the women of the Calvary church is a fair criterion we predict for Denver Baptists a great era of progress in the next ten years.

MAINE

The historic First Church in Bangor has extended a unanimous call to Rev. W. L. Robison of Blue Hill to become its pastor. Mr. Robison's pastorate at Blue Hill has been one of fruitful and progressive service that has been of blessing to the church and community. He has also rendered a helpful ministry in other towns of the vicinity, and is now the representative of Hancock Association on the convention board. Should he accept the call his ministry in Bangor would be one of broad service to both city and state.

Farmington Association: The village of East Dixfield was the center of this association last week. To it came representatives of twelve churches, and they were royally entertained. Pastor J. A. Hamlen deserves much credit for the success of the meeting. Among the speakers from outside the association were Rev. H. H. Brown of Augusta, Dr. W. H. Jones of Immanuel Church, Portland, and Doctor Whittemore.

Hallowell: The work at Hallowell is prospering and enlarging under the faithful ministries of Pastor and Mrs. C. E. Young. Evangelists Harry and Ruth Taylor held a week of services, beginning Dec. 16.

VERMONT

Rev. L. W. Champney and the Wilmington Church people are greatly encouraged in their work. All the services are well attended, and on Nov. 25 Pastor Champney received five into church membership by baptism. The Baptist church is the only one in the community sustaining an evening service, and the church is active and influential in the community.

The new church at Springfield, which is still pastorless but under the efficient care of Assistant Superintendent Walter F. Sturtevant of the state convention, is making progress. Last Sunday there were over 100 present at the morning service and nearly as many at the Sunday-school. Seven new members were received by baptism. The outlook for a good strong church is exceedingly encouraging.

The Poultney Church, having a splendid property, consisting of church edifice and parsonage, capable of paying about $2,000 salary and giving a man a splendid opportunity for work, has not yet found the man it desires for its leader. The pulpit is being well cared for by supplies.

The West Brattleboro Church and parish, about 100 persons strong, recently invaded the parsonage occupied by Pastor C. W. Bishop and wife, and presented them with two tons of coal, a purse of money and all kinds of provisions. The presentation speech was made by Deacon John McKay, to which Mr. Bishop fittingly responded. A social evening was enjoyed, the program consisting of readings, songs and instrumental music.

NEW YORK

Dr. R. E. Farrier, director of the state board of promotion, is rejoicing in the number of churches that are now pressing hard to meet their payments of pledges in full before April 30. Already seventy-three churches are on this list, but these are going on "over and above."

The Bible and Missionary Conference held in Buffalo was attended by over 1,200 registered delegates, and was marked by a spirit of harmony and prayer. Among the speakers were Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. Judd, Rev. J. H. Telford of Burma, Dr. Emory Hunt of Bucknell and Dr. Eubank. The addresses were inspirational and practical. The Bible expositions and address by Doctor Hunt were peculiarly timely and helpful. Rev. F. L. Carr proved himself a master in planning and carrying through a great conference. Dr. H. E. Dutton returned from his successful conference work in New Jersey to take the direction of the meetings in his own city.

Rev. R. D. Williamson has had a successful pastorate in Weedsport, where he has placed the Baptist church as the leading and aggressive church of that town, and it is with regret that the people of Weedsport and the officials of the state release him to take up the national work under the stewardship committee.

The Emmanuel Church of Batavia has been rejoicing in a year of real progress. The church has released its earnest missionary pastor, Rev. C. P. Collett for a short time to aid the churches in the Buffalo Association.

Rev. J. W. Richardson has accepted the unanimous call to the prosperous church at Tully, thus leaving the fine church at Gouverneur without a pastor.

The Baldwinsville church has been a long time looking for the right man to lead its work and rejoices in the coming of Rev. B. Iver Ellson in January.

Rev. Frank Whelpley of Valois has settled in Oneonta, where he is leading forward the united forces of the First and Second West Oneonta churches.

The South Glens Falls church is happy in the coming of Rev. Benjamin Herr as pastor.

Rev. James G. Hill, after a successful pastorate at Hamburg, has accepted the call to the Cazenovia Church. This is one of our strong village churches, located next door to a Methodist Seminary.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Centre Union Church in Centre Association: Under Pastor McIlroy recent evangelistic services conducted by the state superintendent of evangelism, Rev. A. B. Strickland, resulted in the conversion of fifteen people, whom Pastor McIlroy expects soon to baptize. This church recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its organization in a week of special recognition services. Dr. C. A. Soars, Rev. William G. Russell. Rev. Thomas Phillips, Rev. C. L. Hunter, Dr. S. F. Forgeus and others participated in this recognition. The outlook in this church and that at Stone Creek also is very encouraging.

HUNTINGTON CHURCH, Rev. C. L. Hunter. pastor: A recent luncheon arranged for the furtherance of interest in the New World Movement, under the auspices of the Women's Mission Circle, brought together ninety earnest workers of the church. State Director Russell was present and spoke on Baptist achievements. The pastor followed with an illustrated lecture. A committee of twelve women is vigorously at work promoting interest in the payment of the church's obligations towards the New World Movement Fund.

MOUNT UNION CHURCH, Rev. George W. Hatch. pastor, is rejoicing in a united church and a growing attendance at the church services.

REV. J. F. JENKINS has recently removed from the Wyoming Association and is now residing at Saltillo.

RHODE ISLAND

CALVARY CHURCH, PROVIDENCE, had a practical demostration recently of the working value of the group organization. The church announced a reunion. called it "fellowship night," and set the group leaders to work to secure a record attendance of their groups. A friendly rivalry was kindled. Telephones and doorbells worked overtime, and Uncle Sam carried many an urgent appeal to members to be in on the round-up. The result was that 563 members were present on fellowship night, besides friends. A great baseball coach under whom the secretary once worked used to say of hard plays, "You can get 'em if you go after them."

THE RHODE ISLAND State Convention has purchased the North Congregational Church building on Walling Street for the use of the Russian Baptists. The property is in the heart of the Polish, Lithuanian and Russian colonies, all of whom speak Russian. It is an attractive modern structure of brick and wood, with a splendid auditorium and a Sunday-school and lecture room on the ground floor. The building is equipped for immediate use with pipe organ, pews, pulpit furniture, Sunday-school furnishings and has a good heating plant. There are 10,000 ft. of land, valued by the city at 40 cents a foot. One portion of it will make a fine playground for the children. Business men who inspected the building and its equipment declared they could not be replaced for $65,000. The convention secured the entire property for $10,000. Its purchase for our expanding work was plainly a leading of Providence. There was no money available in the convention's treasury for this purpose. but generous-hearted friends responded to the secretary's appeal with their gifts. Approximately $2,500 has been contributed. The Russian Christians also have covenanted to raise $2,000 in addition to caring for the operating expenses of the building. The convention confidently believes that many more gifts will come from friends for this enterprise.

STATE EVANGELIST P. C. BACK has conducted two series of revival meetings at Sheldonville and Crompton. In both of these engagements Christ honored the preaching of his Word. The Sheldonville Church is pulsating with new life and hope; the Crompton people are rejoicing in a vitalized spiritual atmosphere. Both fields will have additions by baptism. Brother Back has established himself in the affection of these churches. With the exception of one open date his schedule is male up to May, 1924.

LAST MONTH the New World Movement collections in Rhode Island showed a decided increase over previous months. So much so that total receipts for the period May 1 to Nov. 15, 1923, surpassed the receipts for the same period a year ago. A thoroughgoing follow-up system of collection of pledges in all the churches will keep the state in the lead. Rhode Island has taken a front rank position in payments on the New World Movement. It hopes to finish the year at the head of the list of states.

ILLINOIS

REV. A. S. KELLIE has closed a four years' pastorate—his first—at Divernon. There have been about forty additions by baptism, the church property has been kept in good repair and a troublesome debt paid off recently. The construction of a basement for social purposes is now going on under Mr. Kellie. Sunday-school and morning worship were successfully combined in one service, beginning at ten o'clock and finishing by eleven thirty. Mr. Kellie and family were given many royal farewells before leaving for their new field at Morris.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH at White Hall has passed through a great revival. The pastor, Rev. L. E. Ellison, did the preaching. There were seventy-five professions. Thirty-seven have already been baptized.

DENMARK, A COUNTRY CHURCH several miles from any town, has been graciously blessed in special meetings. The pastor, Rev. O. Hendrickson, writes that there were thirty-two conversions, three renewals. and one added by letter. Twenty-four were baptized on Nov. 18.

REV. L. W. HOSTETTER held a revival in his church at Newton which resulted in fourteen additions to the church by letter and baptism.

REV. C. W. WEBB OF TREMONT assisted Rev. W. W. Hodge, pastor of the Bethany Church in the Alton Association. in special meetings. There were a number of conversions. Bethany is one of our live and up-to-late country churches.

THE GOING OF REV. G. H. MURCH from the Centralia church is much regretted. Mr. Much had a successful pastorate here. and he was greatly beloved by the people both in and out of the church. He was compelled to give up his work on account of his health. With his family he will spend the winter in Little Rock. Ark.

PASTOR P. D. LOCKE IS HAVING splendid success in his work at Roxana. Three weeks of special meetings were held. As a result several have come into the church by baptism.

THE HARTFORD CHURCH IS REJOICING AT being entirely out of debt and having nearly $100 for some needed improvements. A special service was held on Nov. 27 and Dr. A. E. Peterson delivered the address. Pastor J. W. Patterson baptized six candidates in the Mississippi river on Nov. 25.

REV. T. O. MCMINN AND REV. N. J. HILTON conducted four continuation campaign conferences in the Alton Association. These conferences were held at Litchfield. Centralia, Alton and Belleville.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS was well represented at the Loyalty luncheon at Springfield on Nov. 20.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH of Amboy laid the corner stone for its new building. December 2. A large crowd of towns people and many visitors from surrounding towns, assembled at the First Methodist church at 2:30 o'clock, for a short devotional service, led by Rev. Chas. T. Goodsell of Mendota. At the tolling of the church bell, they marched in a body to the Baptist church, where an impressive service was carried out. Short addresses were given by Rev. Fred Baldus, pastor, District Supt. E. A. Gilmore and the pastors of the Methodist and Congregational churches.

REV. WALTER INGRAM, RECENTLY CALLED to the First church of Moline, writes that the church has just passed through a gracious revival. More than 100 persons made a public confession of Christ for the first time or have come back to him with a renewal of their vow. The church is in a good spiritual condition and is beginning an aggressive work.

REV. A. R. PIXLEY, RECENTLY CALLED to Utica, writes that the parsonage is being thoroughly renovated and decorated. One hundred and ten sat down to the annual father and son banquet, the following Sunday 191 out of an enrolment of 219 assembled.

DURING THE WEEK OF PRAYER THE churches of the Tri-Cities are planning to have a promotional rally in each church. A team made up of ministers and laymen will put on the program.

DR. J. L. JACKSON OF BLOOMINGTON HAS resigned, the resignation to take effect shortly. He thus rounds out fifty years of active service in the ministry, most of which have been in Illinois and nearly half of which has been in Bloomington. Here he has had two long pastorates. A strong man will be needed to take care of this important center.

THE URBANA CHURCH UNDER THE leadership of Rev. C. C. Long has closed a successful school of missions. There were four classes—boys and girls, high-school young people, older young people and adults. Meetings were held at six-thirty each Sunday night and the usual attendance was over 100.

DR. MARGUERITE EVERHAM FROM Swatow, China, is in Chicago, for her furlough. Her address will be that of her sister, Mrs. Wm. Lamphear, 1412 E. 73rd St. The World Wide Guild girls of Illinois, who have been supporting her in China, will be glad to learn that she is now in their midst.

CLINTON, UNDER THE LEADERSHIP of Rev. O. P. Miles, has again accomplished its annual revival meeting, adding forty new members to the church, mostly adults. Evangelist A. W. Miller, Irvington, Ind. assisted the church. For five years annual meetings with large additions have taken place in this church which has changed it from a weak struggling church to one of the leading churches in the Bloomington Association.

MICHIGAN

An aggressive work is being done at Ganson Street Church, Jackson, under the leadership of R. H. Taylor, pastor. Chaplain Hopp of the Michigan State Prison was the speaker at the recent father and son banquet. He stressed the value of Christian education, stating that not a single inmate of the prison had ever attended a denominational school.

Portage St. Kalamazoo, is conducting a flourishing school of missions, including story telling for the little folks. Bohemian supper is served, following which classes are held up to nine o'clock. One period is devoted to a service of prayer and song.

Nearly fifty new members have been received into the First Church, Lansing, since the coming of Ralph W. Hobbs as pastor. Baptisms are frequent, and the church is planning a program of advancement. Rev. H. B. Pilcher is receiving hearty cooperation in working out a comprehensive program among the young people. Their activities include the educational, social and spiritual needs of the departments.

Rev. Albert A. Trembert, pastor of Third Avenue Church, Flint, states that his church is the only one of any denomination ministering to the thickly-settled neighborhood of the Durant public school. This school building cost $250,000 and has been in use only about a year, but is proving entirely inadequate and the board of education is seeking temporary quarters to accommodate the pupils. Along with many other centers in Michigan cities, Third Avenue work demands enlarged quarters to meet the community needs.

Our veteran missionary in the Upper Peninsula, Rev. Joshua Roberts, continues to visit neglected fields, preaching the word of God and ministering in the homes as best he can. The work on his special field at Tawas City is shaping up hopefully.

Twenty-six new members have been received by Rev. C. A. Salyer into the church at Three Rivers. Attendance at all services is increasing and the prayer meetings have doubled in numbers since the coming of Mr. Salyer.

Portland church, of which Rev. Vincent C. Webb is pastor, has organized a Sunday school at Collins with forty members. This is a promising location five miles from any church, and it is hoped an organization may be effected soon.

Cowboy Evangelist Joe J. Payne closed one of the most successful evangelistic campaigns ever held in Northville Dec. 1. The attendance continued to increase until people were turned away; the spirit of the church has been revived and people from every walk in life in the town have been helped in their spiritual lives. Pastor A. K. McRea expects several additions to the church.

A plan of adult supervision for a combined junior and intermediate B. Y. P. U. has been carried on in the Portland church since last April. Four adults act as advisory council with the young people and rotate the work of supervising the devotional service on Sunday evening. The society has grown from a membership of fifteen to thirty-three, and the young people are enthusiastic over the work which is steadily gaining in interest.

Rev. H. H. Ford has left Mayville Church and moves to Caro.

Rev. H. B. Hartzog has begun his sixth year as pastor of Mason Church. His people are loyal supporters in attendance upon the services and keeping up the work in the various departments of the church organization. The pastor has been preaching a series of sermons on the "Sabbaths of our Lord," and will follow this with another course on the theme "What Did Jesus Mean?" A company of young people are to be baptized the first Sunday of the New Year.

INDIANA

The Emerson Avenue Church of Indianapolis, Paul Judson Morris, minister, has closed a seven weeks school of missions. One evening each week for seven consecutive weeks the church met for supper at six thirty, followed by a devotional period after which four groups, adults, young people, junior and primary, assembled for a forty-five minute study period using the foreign mission text books on Japan. After the class hour the church again reassembled in the gymnasium for a social hour which lasted until nine o'clock. The attendance ranged from eighty to 150. Only two evenings did the attendance drop below the 100 mark. Especially notable was the attendance and interest of the men and the young people during the sessions of the school. In addition to these classes, six groups of women, with an enrolment of over fifty, under the leadership of Mrs. C. M. Dinsmore, wife of the superintendent of the Indiana Convention have met once a week to study the book, "The Child and America's Future." In January the church expects to spend a week under the instruction of Dr. M. D. Eubank of China.

W. A. Steinkraus is now pastor of the Baptist Temple, Logansport. He began the work there on Nov. 18. His former field was Monnier Road and Scotten Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

Rev. W. F. Bostick, pastor of the LaPorte Church, through the cooperation of his friends in LaPorte has arranged to give the community a series of lectures, beginning Thursday, Jan. 10, and continuing until Feb. 28. These lectures are free, no admission, no tickets and no collections. Among these lecturers are Shailer Mathews, A. G. Baker, C. T. Holman, P. G. Mode, and G. B. Smith, all of the University of Chicago

OHIO

The Northwood Baptist church, Rev. Miles W. Smith, pastor, has concluded a week of evangelistic services. The meetings were introduced by the singing of the oratorio "The Holy City" by the church choir and invited soloists. A congregation of approximately 1600 was present. Mr. Smith preached each evening and there were twenty-two accessions to the church membership. Mr. Homer L. Wood of Jacksonville, Ill., conducted the song services. On Tuesday night four of his gospel solos were broadcasted by radio station WLW. The meetings were so successful that plans are being wade to resume them after the Christmas holidays.

Rev. Arthur D. Hilton, pastor of the First Church of Marietta, has been delivering a series of sermons on stewardship, that have been stimulating to say the least.

There were ten delegates from the Marietta Baptist Association in attendance at the Bible and missionary conference held at Columbus, Nov. 21-23.

An "echo" luncheon was held in the First Church, Marietta, on Dec. 12. It was a success. One of the delegates in attendance at Columbus, gave echoes from Doctor Earl's Bible exposition, What if he had been present!—"Pleased or displeased?" In the evening the W. W. G.'s of the First and Valley churches presented the pageant "On Trial" to a large audience.

MINNESOTA

Dr. W. B. Riley and members of the First Church, Minneapolis, expect to dedicate their rebuilt edifice Jan. 6. The First Church will now have the third largest Baptist auditorium in America.

Rev. W. E. Woodbury closes his pastorate with the Trinity Church, Minneapolis, to become pastor of the First Church, Melrose, Mass. Brother Woodbury will be greatly missed in Minnesota. His genial personality, vital messages and constant endeavor for every Baptist cause has gained for him a large place in the hearts of all Minnesota Baptists.

Rev. A. J. Dahlby of Parkers Prairie has accepted a call to the Central Church, Duluth.

Rev. J. W. Luchridge is serving the Central Church as ad interim pastor.

On Dec. 30 the new church building at Little Fork was dedicated, and the completely remodeled building at Truman will be dedicated the first week in January. Little Fork is a missionary field in the extreme northern part of the state and Truman a good church in the southern section presided over by Pastor Dimmack.

Through the efforts of Pastor Marston and his people the first unit of the new building at LaPorte is now ready for use.

A new church was recently organized at Nary.

Things Baptistic are looking up at Northfield under the leadership of the Baptist minister and student chaplain, Rev. Stewart G. Cole. A number were recently added to the membership by baptism and letter. Dr. Frank Petersen recently addressed the newly formed Baptist student's union.

The beautiful fall weather has favored evangelism. Successful meetings have recently been held at Stillwater, Canby and LeRoy by Evangelist Naylor. Brother Alvord has held meetings at White Oak and Minnesota. Evangelist Fernlund has held meetings at LaPorte. Pastor Harold Olson reports nine additions at Artichoke. This is an open country field.

Canby has called a minister and the church building is undergoing extensive improvements.

The Battle Lake church has acquired the much needed lot adjoining the church property. Rev. R. E. Cody, pastor at large for northern Minnesota, supplies this field once a month.

Long Prairie and Reynolds is prospering under the leadership of Pastor Tingley.

Rev. Mrs. Edith French is Minnesota's only active woman Baptist minister. She is pastor at Lake Benton and well liked by church and community.

H. A. Stoughton, pastor at Windom, is also pastor of the German Church at Jeppers, preaching in English, of course.

Waveland Park Church, St. Paul, recently gave a delightful reception in honor of its pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Briggs.

Reports of baptisms have come in from so many churches that space does not permit naming them all.

The recent death of Mr. W. B. Patton of Duluth was a great loss to Minnesota Baptists. Brother Patton was for many years a valued member of the board of trustees of the state convention. He was president of the Duluth Baptist Union.

Rev. Howard Vernon, pastor of Judson Memorial, Minneapolis, recently narrowly escaped death at Faribault when the taxi in which he was being driven to the train was completely wrecked in a collision. Brother Vernon was taken to the hospital in an unconscious condition but fortunately has completely recovered. Brother Vernon was returning home from an echo Bible and missionary conference.

Mrs. F. C. Nickels is delighting Minnesota Baptists with the story of her personal observations of the foreign missionary work being done by Northern Baptists.

At the West Duluth Baptist Church, Duluth, the pastor, Rev. H. W. Clough, has made a good beginning on the third year of his pastorate. In the two years of his ministry the membership has more than doubled, altogether sixty-seven new members having been received, the majority by baptism. Also improvements have been made on the church building and old debts paid. Finances are in a much better condition than in many past years, so much so that the church has increased the pastor's salary $300. The outlook is bright for future development, as the church is centrally located in the midst of a large and growing industrial population.

WISCONSIN

The First Church, Janesville, at its last church night service passed a "vote of appreciation" of the helpful service Dr. Henry Clark of Racine is serving as interim pastor until the coming of Rev. Robert A. MacMullen Jan. 1.

A neighborly act was performed by the young people, choir and Pastor Bill. of Beloit, when they went overland to Janesville, and presented the pageant "Elijah" at the evening church service. The proceeds will be used toward sending delegates from the two societies to the B. Y. P. U. convention in Denver.

IOWA

Lake City has closed a two weeks' revival campaign conducted by Rev. John M. McFarlane, pastor of the First Church, Austin, Minn. Twenty-five persons inquired concerning the way of salvation and six were baptized Sunday morning, Dec. 2. The first Sunday of Mr. McFarlane's work with Clear City, Rev. James M. Wilson, pastor of the Clear City church, preached at First Church, Austin, Minn.

Rev. Henry L. Steel was one of the welcome visitors at the September meeting of the Davenport Association in Comanche, Ia., where twenty years ago he was the honored pastor. His old friends will be saddened to know that he has since passed away, Nov. 9, at the home of his sister in Cleveland, O. He was a veteran not only of the cross but of the G. A. R. and worthy of all honor.

Rev. Wilson Mills, general evangelist of the Home Mission society closed a two week's series of meetings with the Webb Church on Dec. 16. Thirty-eight responded to the invitations either as converts or for reconsecration.

NEBRASKA

The First Church of Superior held a soul-winning conference Dec. 2-9. Rev. J. A. Sandefur, the new pastor, assisted by pastors from Hastings, Guide Rock, Glenvil and the state secretary put on an inspiring program carried out in afternoon and evening services. The church is putting through a building program. Harry Jones, the St. Paul architect, is working on the plans for a $25,000 church. The expectation is to begin building at the close of special meetings which will be held in February or March. Rev. A. P. Renn, of Indianapolis, will be the evangelist.

MISSOURI

A gracious revival closed with the First Church, Gainsville, Dec. 9. The pastor, Rev. T. W. Wiles, did the preaching, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, evangelistic singers of Topeka, Kans. There were forty-five conversions.

MONTANA

Dr. James H. Spencer has been engaged as stated supply for the First Church of Billings, beginning Jan. 1.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH AT BOZEMAN, Dr. E. R. Curry, pastor, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the church during the week beginning Dec. 16. Dr. J. F. McNamee, for twenty-five years pastor at Helena, and Dr. J. H. Spencer of Denver, the first missionary pastor ordained in the state, were among the special speakers.

DR. G. G. CROZIER OF Manipur, Assam, spent three weeks in Montana during December visiting eighteen churches. His work was of a high order.

REV. WILLARD OSBORN, after six years of service in Montana, became district missionary with headquarters at Lemmon, S. D., on Dec. 15.

REV. J. A. HOFFMAN AND TWO daughters recently from Montana, have conducted successful evangelistic meetings at Burton and South Tacoma. Rev. C. R. Luther at Tumwater and Ferndale and Rev. Mr. Townsend at Charleston.

THE CHURCH AT PORT ANGELES, Rev. R. W. King, pastor, has finished and is occupying the Sunday-school department of its new building, which cost approximately $9,000. First Church, Mt. Vernon. Rev. J. E. Noftsinger, pastor, is nearing the completion of its new building, which when finished will be the most complete and commodious meeting house owned by the Baptists in this state. This building will cost between $50,000 and $60,000. Raymond, Rev. E. M. Bollinger, pastor, is ready to begin the construction of a new building to cost $15,000. The First Church, Tacoma. Dr. C. O. Johnson, pastor, will begin early in the new year the construction of a $250,000 building on the site of the old building, which gives it the only central down-town location. Fremont, Seattle, Dr. Elbert H. Hicks, pastor, has set April 1 as the date for beginning its new $50,000 building. The University Church, Seattle. Rev. Frank B. Matthews, pastor, expects to begin work on a new $75,000 building early in the new year. Queen Anne Church, Seattle, Rev. B. P. Richardson, pastor, is formulating plans for the construction of the first unit of a building, at a cost of $20,000.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

ON DEC. 6, REV. AMOS S. AKIN, who has been the pulpit supply at the Ocean Beach Church for the last three weeks, was ordained as a minister by a council which met in the East San Diego church. Rev. Edwin B. Singer, pastor of the East San Diego church, was moderator of the council and Rev. Joseph D Page, pastor of the La Mesa church, was clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. J. D. Page. Mr. Akin and his wife and daughter were Presbyterians before they joined the Baptist church.

Compassion for the Multitudes

Out of the congestion of the cities and from the midst of the multitudes the Association of Baptist Standard City Mission Societies sends an appeal for prayer, for life and for support.

"Jesus saw a great multitude and was moved with compassion toward them." Matt. 14:14.

"He beheld the city and wept over it." Luke 19:41.

BIG OPPORTUNITIES ARE WAITING

Downtown church properties must be preserved; foreign language churches must be maintained; Christian community centers must be established; churches must be built in rapidly developing areas.

BIG ACTIVITIES ARE IN OPERATION

These include: Church Worship, Bible Teaching, Open Air Preaching, Religious Education, Fresh Air Work, Kindergartens, Day Nurseries, Student Work, Foreign Language Services, Stewardship and Prayer Leagues, Christian Americanization and Church Vacation Bible Schools.

BIG RESPONSIBILITIES MUST BE MET

These include: Gospel preaching in foreign languages, construction of churches in non-Christian neighborhoods; training religious leaders; development of volunteer service in religious education, and establishing a Baptist City Plan for the adequate evangelization of the big cities.

FINANCIAL NEEDS

Funds are required for the operating budgets of the City Mission Societies, for the reduction of mortgages, for fellowship funds as well as for advance work. The maintenance of this fundamental, evangelizing service depends on the support of the denomination through the New World Movement.

Will you like the Master be moved with compassion toward the multitudes and help meet the problems of the American city?

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

HOLLYWOOD: On Dec. 4, 1903, twenty-eight men and women banded themselves in the organization of the First Baptist Church of Hollywood. They raised a budget of $330 for current expenses and $8 for missions. The Home Mission Society made them a loan of $300 to purchase their property for which they paid $2,100 and which is now valued at $50,000. Now, the church has become one of the outstanding churches of the Pacific Coast. with a membership of 700, a local budget of $12,000, a like figure for missions. and during the past few weeks they have raised another $12,000 with which to pay off the mortgage on their beautiful temple of worship. The twentieth anniversary was fittingly observed on Tuesday evening. Dec. 4. There have been seven pastors. Revs. H. J. Powell and C. R. Welden and Drs. W. H. Walker, R. S. Walker, A. H. Smith, J. Snape and Samuel J. Skevington. the present pastor, who is now in the fourth year of his leadership. Greetings from these former pastors and messages from President C. S. Shank and J. Y. Aitchison and other denominational leaders were received. Gracious words of felicitation were spoken by Dr. C. S. Maddux, president of the Los Angeles Ministers' Conference; Rev. J. B. Fox, Dr. F. G. Davies and Dr. A. W. Rider. The climax of the service was reached when the official announcement was made that the mortgage had been fully paid and the official paper was burned. Rev. Herman J. Powell, first pastor of the church, has been called to serve as the first assistant pastor.

OREGON

REV. J. D. CHAPPELLE OF THE chapel car "Good Will" is holding meetings at North Bend in the Coos Bay country. At last reports twenty-three had been added to the church and six more applications for membership had been received. A B. Y. P. U. has been organized with Prof. Thomas Shotwell of the high school as president. This church bids fair to be one of the strongest in the Coos Bay region.

AT REDMOND, REV. J. W. CABEEN, pastor there is a splendid Sunday-school. The folks realize that they must soon have an enlarged building to meet the needs of their work. Archie Brown of this church is the president of the Deschutes Association. One of the features of the church is a great young people's class in the Sunday school.

Goals and Touch-Downs

III.—GOALS OF THE TRUSTEES

1. The program of systematic stewardship.

2. A budget for current expenses, salaries, etc., to be presented in detail at the annual meeting.

3. The beautification of the church grounds and the necessary repairs of the church property, the church building and the parsonage.

IV.—GOALS OF THE BIBLE SCHOOL

1. A daily vacation Bible school in the summer of 1924.

2. The achievement of the denominational program of religious education for the church Bible school, including the following objectives and emphases: October, training; November. equipment; December, worship; January, home cooperation; February, young people; March, evangelism; April, juniors; May, primary and kindergarten; June-July, vacation training.

3. A budget covering the following items:

|---|---|
| $400.00 | for papers, lesson helps, supplies and equipment. |
| 125.00 | equipment and superintendence vacation school. |
| 52.00 | pledge New World Movement and denominational missions. |
| 50.00 | social and incidental needs. |
| 5.00 | pledge County Sunday-school Association. |
| $632.00 | Total for all needs. |

V.—GOALS OF THE WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

1. The purchase of a new communion table.

2. The recovering of the pew cushions of the church.

3. The care of the interior repairs of the parsonage.

4. The decoration of the church, each of the four groups in rotation being responsible for three months a year.

5. The continued publication of the church bulletin, including cost, postage and envelopes, for sending same to non-residents and shut-ins through the non-resident secretary.

6. A social program: (a) The four groups having divided between them the responsibility of keeping in touch with the constituency of the church, including strangers and newcomers; and (b) each quarterly meeting of the society as a whole being social in character, socially attractive to the women of the church and particularly so with a view to making strangers welcome, the social arrangements for each such quarterly meeting being in charge of the respective groups in rotation.

VI.—GOALS OF THE WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY

1. The sending of bedding, canned fruit, Christmas and Easter remembrances to the Maywood Baptist homes for the aged and orphans.

2. Continued White Cross activities for the Toppings in Japan, the Meyers in the Philippines and Rev. J. Winfield Scott with the Washoe, Piute and Shoshone Indians in Nevada.

3. An increase in the active membership of the society, this through special programs and meetings, novel and attractive; and an increase in the interest of those who are members by a more active participation in the annual reading contest.

VII.—GOALS OF THE COSMOS GUILD

1. Responsibility for missionary education in the Bible school.

2. The recovering of the pew cushions of the church through the White Cross work.

3. Assuming charge of certain Sunday evening services by special programs, pageants and missionary dramas.

4. White Cross work for the Toppings in Japan, the Scotts in Nevada, Miss Nelson's Italian work in Racine-Kenosha and securing hospital supplies for Kityang, China.

5. Affording advice and, when needed, leadership to younger missionary groups, the World Wide Guild, the junior missionary societies and the Crusaders.

VIII.—GOALS OF THE WORLD WIDE GUILD

1. The presentation of missionary pageants and biblical dramas.

2. A special program in aid of the Bible school promoting its growth.

3. Provision for expenses of delegates attending Wisconsin Baptist Summer Assembly at Green Lake in summer of 1924.

4. Special Christmas giving in aid of specific needs of certain missionaries. Miss Nelson at Racine, the Toppings, Meyers, Scotts, etc.

IX. GOALS OF THE CRUSADERS

1. Missionary reading contest.

2. Missionary plays and pageants.

3. Special handwork for selected missionaries.

4. Acquaintance with missionaries through reading and by correspondence.

X.—GOALS OF THE LOYAL UNION

1. A definite social program.

2. A program of pageantry and biblical dramatization.

3. The adoption of a ten months' series of special, devotional meeting topics covering stewardship, valuation of the Bible, training for worship, community service, evangelism, missions, etc.

4. A program of service: (a) Assuming charge of several Sunday evening church services; (b) bringing Christmas cheer to the needy; (c) special deputation team services in aid of East Delaware and other churches in Walworth Association; (d) undertaking some special work for the church, e. g., financial support for the daily vacation Bible school.

5. A budget covering the following items:

$40.00 for social needs.
15.00 toward D. V. B. S.
20.00 miscellaneous needs.
50.00 for delegate expenses to Omaha B. Y. P. U. convention, July, 1924.
75.00 for delegate expenses Green Lake, August, 1924.

Peloubet's Uniform Graded Quarterlies

THE tremendous growth of the Sunday Schools of the world for the past fifty years can be in a large measure attributed to the Uniform Lessons.

A Few of the Advantages

They teach the Bible
A common subject
Home and family study and discussion
Make teachers' meetings possible
Fresh texts each year.

The Peloubet Series of Sunday School Quarterlies are used the world around, because they place before the scholar the salient points of the Scripture texts in such a manner that they are quickly comprehended and easily remembered.

We also publish a Series of Teachers' Quarterlies which contain helpful material for the teacher to use in preparing the lesson and which have become very popular during the past years.

We should be glad to send free samples and catalogs giving full detail to all intending purchasers

Our Book Shelf

Spooky Hollow, by Carolyn Wells. Philadelphia: Lippincott Co. $2.

The versatile college professor has added a fifteenth to her list of "Fleming Stone" detective stories, a type of literature formerly read by American youth in the hayloft or other secret hiding places; but now generously provided at any public library and fully accredited by the head of the family as a harmless sedative in this age of a thousand forms of excitement. A mysterious country-seat in Vermont is the scene of a horrible murder and an unaccountable disappearance in the same night. The young lady member of the household is threatened with loss of home, name and fortune as the result of the tragedies. Her lover finally takes a hand and calls in the great Fleming Stone, who solves the mystery and exposes the villian in the approved style. The story embodies improbabilities, which are well-nigh inevitable in this sort of tale. For recreational reading, however, it is harmless and entertaining, and will serve well to relieve the tedium of the journey or the sick-room.

"The Red Man in the United States," edited by G. E. E. Lindquist, with foreword by Hon. Charles H. Burke. New York: Doran. $3.50.

This volume, prepared under direction of the committee on social and religious surveys, has fully justified the aim of the committee to combine the scientific method with the religious motive. Every citizen of the United States knows that there are some Indians in the country; but few persons know where these are located and what is their condition. Now and again there is some Indian trouble in one of the reservations, and recently we have had many newspaper stories about the Indians' oil lands, about the wrong against the Puebloes, about the failure or success of the government's policy. The first thing was to get the facts and state them clearly. This the authors have done, and we have a vivid description of the various tribes scattered through the country. Then we have an account of the condition of the Indians and the things that are being done by the government and by the country to help these original Americans. The volume admits that many mistakes have been made; but it shows that on the whole, friends of the Indian, and particularly those fast friends of his, the faithful missionaries and the no less faithful officials of the Indian bureau, have reason to feel gratified by his present status. There are about 340,000 Indians in the United States. Of this number approximately 185,000 are now citizens. 70,000 Indian children are now in school. Of the total number there are 80,000 Protestant and 65,000 Roman Catholic adherents. The book is a mine of information; it is a fascinating story of progress; and it is a valuable reference volume.

Sermons for Juniors, by Thomas Wilson Dickert. New York: Revell. $1.50.

Why sermons for juniors? They are not present to hear them! And often when we hear these sermons they are apt to be so juniorish that the older part of the congregation shun them by their absence. He is a rare sermonizer and a rarer preacher who can command the ear and heart of childhood to be present for even five minutes Sabbath morning to hear a discourse that will draw them to come again. We never have heard the author of these sermons preach so we are unable to comment on his attracting manner and personality; but we have looked into these "sermonets" and we can frankly write of them that in the common sense of their message, the simplicity and lucidness of their diction, the brevity and point of their discussion, and the merits of their objective, they are as good and helpful as anything of the kind we have read. We advise ministers who contemplate the experiment of preaching to children to buy this book and study some feature in it. We believe it will greatly help them —if they need help in such a venture.

If I Miss the Sunrise, by Rev. J. H. Chambers Macauley. New York: Doran. $2.

The publishers introduce the author as "a new religious thinker and writer to add to that notable roll of Britons who have given us the very finest body of theological literature." He may be classed with P. Carnegie Simpson, Prof. T. R. Glover, and R. F. Horton, in his familiarity with modern biblical literature, his fearless use of the results of recent research, his sturdy defense of the New Testament gospel, his unwavering loyalty to Jesus Christ as God manifest in the flesh, and his profound spiritual insight.

The title may be most easily understood by the quotation of a verse of H. Hamilton King which embodies the theme:

"And shall we then be restless in the search
For other proofs and witnesses of God,
Before our hearts have rested on the One
He gave us in our very flesh to know?
Impatient for the noonday, shall we miss
The sunrise we shall never see again?"

"The title explains itself," says the author in his preface; "to search for 'other proofs and witnesses of God,' and not to concentrate attention on 'the One he gave us in our very flesh to know,' is to miss the supreme reality." "The reality of religion can be discovered in no other way than in the verification of an experience of the Divine Life....There is a permanent reality that reveals itself in Jesus Christ to every man and every age."

Religion is defined as "personal contact with the living God," and that contact is established and maintained through Jesus Christ, the Lord of Life. "The Christian faith meets the need of man's abyss in Jesus Christ. 'Through this Man is proclaimed unto you the remission of sins' is the revelation of God to every age and to every type of personal necessity....Modern thought enters the abyss without hope, if it misses Jesus Christ."

This thoughtful and careful "study in the reality of religion" covers four sections: Impressions, realizations, experiences, reflections. A strain of autobiographical reminiscence runs through the book, especially in the first section, wherein the problems of religious thought are stated. The second section deals with the validity of the gospel narratives and the unimpeachable fact of the incarnation of God in Jesus Christ. "Experiences" advances the argument for reality into the realm of the soul's actual personal contact with the Redeemer and the assurance of forgiveness through faith in him. He delivers from the "abyss" of sin and from the "trap" of death; and the "secret" of that deliverance is the love of God. The final section appears to have somewhat less of unity and cogency than the other three. The closing chapter, however, fulfils the cycle of thought in a courageous and inspiring vision of "The Sunrise:"

"God never lets go....Amid rabbinic theologies and the breakdown of traditions, amid bewildered agnosticism and futile socialism, the reality of God works, and time takes its course, and man comes to his self-discovery, and the shepherdless multitudes find their life and leadership in the Truth....Jesus did not live and die and become the Lord of years in vain. He is present and vital all the time. Self-communings pass into absolute confidence concerning the sunrise of him who was and is the Light of the World."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CHOOSING AN ORGAN

Without question the problem that faces the church planning to install a new organ is a difficult one to solve. The average committee in the first place knows next to nothing of the mechanical and technical features of the matter, and too often it is led astray by the specifications which boast the largest list of stops, whether or not the various names each represent an individual set of pipes, or are merely part of a camouflaged duplexing system. Since this music page was instituted three years ago, it has been my privilege to serve as a sort of advisory uncle to many bewildered committees, in many parts of the country, and with regard to organs, running from one manual and pedal keyboard, to four manual and pedal monsters—from modest expenditures of $2,000 to $40,000. At all times I have endeavored to give honest, unbiased advice, never recommending only one firm, but several, who, in my opinion, were best fitted to meet each particular need. Always, I have advised that the same outline should be submitted to the chosen list of organ-builders, together with a general invitation for constructive criticisms or suggestions. After the resultant bids have been compared, and final bids made on the standardized (or equalized) specifications, then the church is prepared to make an intelligent final decision. Incidentally, it is always wise to secure a list of legitimate church installations and get a definite report on musical values, mechanical efficiency, and cost of upkeep in each case—all this before signing the final contract. No first-class firm will object to this procedure; the dishonest builder cannot bear it.

Therefore it was with keen appreciation that I came across the subjoined letter sent out by a western chapter of the American Guild of Organists, and I am glad to be able to give it this additional publicity, for its points are vital, honest and plangent!

"The American Guild of Organists, Northern California Chapter, wishes to reach all churches, lodges, or private individuals that are contemplating the installation of new organs or the rebuilding of their old instruments along modern lines.

"The guild offers its services to church committees and others facing organ problems, and will be glad to aid them in planning instruments that (1) fit acoustically the buildings for which they are designed, (2) that possess the variety of tone-colors so essential in preventing monotony, (3) that have the dignity and the grandeur necessary in the king of instruments, (4) that are built to endure and satisfy for years to come. The guild would also urge upon committees the grave necessity of allowing ample space for the organ when plans for a new edifice are drawn.

"In our opinion, the most successful method to pursue in contracting for a new organ is similar to the methods adopted by a building committee in awarding the contract for a new edifice. This method is, first, to engage an organist or expert not connected with or prejudiced towards any particular firm of builders, whose duty it shall be to advise the committee with regard to the drawing up of specifications for an organ adequate and suitable for the building. These specifications should be complete in every detail, even to the materials used in every pipe and the tone-quality desired in each individual stop. We are particular to emphasize the above, because specifications offered by some organ-builders are far from being ideal, in many cases not even specifying the number of pipes in the organ.

"When the specifications are complete, they can then be submitted to several organ-builders for their bids. Then, and then only, can a committee have a definite basis upon which to compare the figures offered by various firms, because, by this method, each company works on the same scheme, a plan decided upon by the purchaser and the organ architect jointly. The organ architect should be responsible to the church for a satisfactory artistic achievement, passing upon the plans, and personally seeing that his ideas concerning tonal regulation and mechanical details are faithfully carried out.

"There are those who might think expert advice superfluous in case the organ to be built is limited in size. On the contrary, we urge that with the smaller organ comes the greater problem. It is quite possible to have an organ of six or seven stops which will be complete and perfectly satisfying, but the planning and tone-regulation of those few stops is an artistic problem of the greatest importance.

"Lastly, we wish to warn our friends to beware of two types of organ. First, the stock organ, built to a cast-iron, unchangeable specification. In other words, we do not speak of 'buying an organ,' but of 'building' to a special design for each instrument. The second type of organ is often heard in the theater. This instrument, by means of excessive 'borrowing' of stops, is capable of a limited, but sometimes noisy volume of tone, but this volume is usually obtained at the expense of refinement and variety of tone-coloring. The principles of 'unifying' and 'duplexing' of stops may possibly be employed to a limited extent when economy is an object, but organs built entirely on this 'unit' scheme are usually impossible from an artistic standpoint. To make matters worse, the specifications for such organs are sometimes positively misleading and dishonest, notably when a stop used on two different manuals is given two different names. This effort to make the buyer of an organ think he has two sets of pipes when only one is used is a practice that we cannot condemn too strongly.

"Fuller information regarding the guild's ideals concerning organs may be had by writing to any member of the committee here undersigned." Its only desire is to aid churches in getting the best results for the money used and to uphold the highest standards of organ excellence.

A movement is on foot to provide the missionaries with a copy of Professor Goodspeed's translation of the New Testament. It is hoped that some individual or individuals will present to the missionaries this book. The University Press will give interested persons full information. Address University Press, Chicago.

The bell that calls the worshipers to the church at Ongole cracked and the community lost the peal which reminded it of the religious services. A missionary from the Ongole field spoke last spring at the Greenwich Light Church, Philadelphia. He told the story of the silenced bell with the result that this same church purchased a new bell weighing a ton and it is now in the tower of the Jewett Memorial Church. The first time its sound was heard 1,000 persons met for prayer. Miss F. M. Clymer is pastor of the Greenwich Light Church.

Dr. Robert A. Ashworth in the "Metropolitan Baptist Bulletin" writes: "Some one remarked to me only the other day, 'It is money that they want; why not come out frankly and say so?" There are those who become impatient to the point of irritation when it is reiterated that the New World Movement is not a mere money-raising campaign, but primarily a great spiritual enterprise. We must, however, take the risk of being judged to be wholly disingenuous by these astute souls by insisting afresh [illegible] has for [illegible] of motives for every form of associated Christian activity. It is certain that we shall never be moved to do our duty until we know what it is. The ignorant mind is always inactive. Most Christian men, for example, are almost hopelessly behind the times in missionary intelligence. You will not even pray intelligently for the missionary enterprise unless you understand it. Certainly you cannot serve it. God cannot talk to you about anything of which you are ignorant. He cannot move you to do something for the missionaries on the Congo if you don't know that there are missionaries there; nor can you help them intelligently, if you don't know what they are doing or what they need." He might have added with all the information help of the Bible and missionary conferences the denominational press—the neglected press—is still the most powerful educational influence in our cooperative effort. Week by week it brings far-reaching results by keeping alive the facts of our personal obligation to meet the needs of the world.

A group of Christian laymen in Cincinnati have organized the Radio Bible Service to give the world daily a message from the Word of God by radio broadcasting. "The solution of the evils and social unrest which trouble the world today—for right thinking and right living—is the practical application of the teachings of the Worl of God."

A Statement by the Board of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

Answering a widely circulated attack upon the evangelical soundness of some of the missionaries and secretaries of the society.

Inasmuch as extracts from the correspondence files of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society have become the ground of a widely circulated attack upon the evangelical soundness of some of the missionaries and secretaries of the society, the board of managers appointed a committee of five, consisting of Henry Bond, chairman; William T. Sheppard, Rev. Carter Helm Jones, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, Rev. M. J. Twomey, with whom was associated Rev. Joshua Gravett as vice-president of the society, to read all the letters from which these quotations had been made, and further to read all letters from any source that were relevant to the inquiry.

The board reports that after a painstaking search by the committee and a careful reading of all relevant material before the board, it was the unanimous decision of the special committee and of the board that the correspondence, when read in its context and with a knowledge of the attendant circumstances, does not justify such attacks upon our missionaries and secretaries.

It is true that in the letters of a few missionaries are phrases and sentences that the board feels might be misunderstood, but nothing has been disclosed that cannot, we believe, be met in correspondence and counsel. Apart from such sentences, the reading of these confidential letters has disclosed an evangelical spirit and devotion to the service of the kingdom and a faith in Jesus Christ as the divine Lord and Saviour that has confirmed the confidence which the board has in our missionaries and secretaries.

The board again declares that its purpose is to send out only such missionaries as are entirely evangelical in their faith and spirit.

The board is preparing a statement which will take up the more important specific allegations and answer them. All who are interested are cordially invited to send to the headquarters of the society for a copy.

By order of the Board of Managers.

Frederick L. Anderson,
Chairman.

William B. Lipphard, Recording Secretary.

Mr. Geoffry Shakespeare, son of Dr J. H. Shakespeare, and formerly secretary to Hon. David Lloyd George, was defeated in the recent general election in the British Isles. Mr. George carries his constituency.

The River Avenue Church, Indianapolis, Rev. J. R. Quick pastor, recently closed a series of special meetings, and reports that seventy-six new members will be received, fifty-three of the number by baptism. Evangelist J. H. Deer assisted the pastor.

The "Herald and Presbyter" says "The last echo, or as one paper describes it, 'the final shiver,' of the Interchurch World Movement, preceded its dissolution Dec. 13 as a corporation. There were reports that it had a petition in bankruptcy, and that there were claims against it which were denied. The last report is that the dissolution was assured in the Supreme Court when representatives of the State Attorney-General's office did not appear to oppose the action. A default was entered."

The annual Social Union City Missions dinner will be held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, Jan. 10, at 6:30. Dr. Charles H. Sears, executive secretary of the New York City Baptist Mission Society, and also the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens, who has just returned from a seven months' sojourn in Europe, will be the main speaker of the evening. Hon. Lawson Purdy, general secretary of the New York Charity Organization Society, and former president of the department of taxes and assessments, New York City, and of the National Municipal League; and all connected with the New York city plan and its environs, will speak on "The City Plan." This gathering of New York Baptists is to take the form of a welcome home to Doctor Sears.

Plans for taking over the copyright of the American version of the Bible now held by private interests in the publishing field are announced by a newly created committee shortly to be incorporated as the American Foundation, in order that the self-sacrificing labors of the American revision committee which resulted in the American Standard Bible may bear fruit in a wide and free distribution of their Bible. Arrangements are yet to be concluded for making the copyright free to the world. But it can be safely said that those now holding the copyright stand ready to make the assignment to the foundation, it is announced, providing a responsible committee of public-spirited men and Bible scholars will continue to safeguard the purity and accuracy of the text of the American revision and will provide sufficient funds to carry out the purpose of the original revision committee. Concerning the work of the Foundation Mr. C. L. Dixon, executive secretary, says: "There has been widespread criticism of the fact that the copyright of this splendid version should be held by private interests."

Fresh from the Field

At Del Rio, Texas, there have been 104 Mexicans baptized during the past eleven months. In that state there are 600,000 from across the border.

The Jewish Theological Seminary in New York recently put on a campaign for $1,000,000. It has been a success, and reports show that it was to be completed Jan. 1.

Dr. Theodore Kemp, for fifteen years the president of the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, has become associate secretary of the commission on international justice and good-will, a department of the work of the Federal Council of Churches.

The "universal week of prayer" begins Jan. 6. We trust our churches will so far as possible observe the week of prayer. "We cannot limit the range of believing prayer; the world has still to learn what may follow upon the fellowship in prayer of all the people of God. To the discovery of that secret in experience we call the churches for their own sake, for the sake of the world, and for the sake of him who waits and has waited long for us to offer him this road."

The new Mormon temple dedicated during the late summer at Cardston, Alberta, Can., cost, complete, $781,479.90. The new temple in Arizona is progressing, the corner stone being laid in November. These folks seem to be able to get all the money they need for extension work and according to these press reports they must be doing some "extending." We forgot to mention a splendid new building completed not long ago in Brooklyn. It cost $100,000. Brigham H. Roberts who was refused a seat in Congress as representative because he is an avowed polygamist is in charge of the "Eastern States Mission."

Mr. James C. Colgate, treasurer of the General Board of Promotion, sends greetings to the churches of the convention. He says: "While at this season of peace on earth, good-will toward men, the Christian world seems rent with angry dissension, the treasurer of your Board of Promotion ventures a New Year's wish. May the New Year bring you peace and prosperity—the peace which comes with the knowledge of duty done and sacrifices made for the Prince of Peace; the prosperity which comes to the church in which the Spirit of the Master rules. As individuals may we not be confused by the babel of tongues or inflamed by heated controversy, but, with minds set steadfastly upon the task in hand, follow, as did our Master of old, the path of duty, confident and unafraid; walking always in the spirit of love and humility, not judging those who worship in a different way our common Lord, for God is a Spirit, and they who worship him must do so in spirit and truth."

Rev. John R. Brown has been engaged as stated supply at the First Church, St. Paul, where Editor Earl was until recently pastor. Mr. Brown is the executive secretary of the united charities of St. Paul.

At the Chicago ministers conference at its last meeting Dr. Charles W. Gilkey of the Hyde Park Church spoke upon Christmas Contrasts. The meeting on Dec. 31 was the union ministers conference and on Jan. 7 Dean Shailer Mathews will speak on "Why I believe in good will."

Dr. O. E. Bryan, whose invitation to become executive secretary of the Missouri State Association we announced some weeks ago has felt obliged to decline the call. He believes that the completion of the 75 million campaign is the most important task to which he can give himself in 1924. He is stewardship director of the conservation commission.

Some time ago we reported the return to Cuba of Evangelist Fred J. Peters and Mrs. Peters. His first meeting was with Juan Carmona, a layman who had given up his business to give his full time to the preaching of the gospel. The meetings were held in the house where the pastor lives. Large crowds came to the meetings. On one evening twenty-three confessed Christ. The Sunday after Mr. and Mrs. Peters had moved on to another field the faithful Juan Carmona saw ten others openly confess their Lord. Within a period of a few months this church has secured a membership of 150, the greater part of which came out of the special meetings.

A debate was recently staged in New York on the question: "Resolved, The Bible is the infallible word of God." Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, took the affirmative, and Rev. Charles F. Potter, pastor of the West Side Unitarian Church, the negative. Great crowds heard the debate and three judges selected by common agreement of the debaters gave the decision. The audience as a jury gave expression to their sympathies in applause. The judges made their decision on the merits of the debate without reference to their sympathies. On the first debate held Thursday night, Dec. 20, in the Calvary Baptist Church, the decision was two to one in favor of the negative debater. The other questions debated in a series of five were: "Resolved, That God made the earth and man by evolution"; "Resolved, That the miraculous virgin birth of Jesus Christ is a fact and an essential Christian doctrine"; "Resolved, That Jesus Christ is the only divine Son of God"; "Resolved, That Jesus Christ will return in bodily presence to the earth and establish the universal reign of peace and righteousness." On the first of these Doctor Straton took the negative side, on the others the affirmative. We are doubtful of the wisdom of dragging holy things into the atmosphere of a heated debate; but compensation may come from the wide publicity given to religion through the reports of the debate in the daily papers.

Rev. Luther Wesley Smith is the new pastor of the First Church, Columbia, Mo. He is a Harvard man and graduated at Newton Theological Institution only last June. According to the Burrall Class Special he has already made many friends among the students.

Daniel E. Thomson, one of Canada's greatest Baptist, says the Canadian Baptist, has passed away. For years he devoted his marvelous legal talent, inspired by a noble Christian spirit, to placing, the Baptist work in Ontario and Quebec upon a flawless basis. This was true in a special manner of McMaster University.

"Salute! Hats off to thee, thou alma mater" says the Central Christian Advocate. President Walter Dill Scott of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., has announced gifts for new buildings amounting to $3,500,000. These buildings are to adorn the new campus which was the gift of Alexander McKinlock. Mrs. Montgomery Ward gave $3,000,000 of the amount and Mrs. Levy Mayer $500,000 for the building of a law building.

The twenty-first national convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America will be held in the city of Washington, Jan. 12-16. This meeting is counted the most important ever held with the exception of the meeting ten years ago in Columbus, Ohio, when the league declared for nation-wide prohibition. The enemies of the Volstead law and eighteenth amendment are in evidence with the activity of desperation. The laws of the land are flouted. Decent citizens are becoming tired of the anarchistic, lawless element that is constantly being exhibited to the public gaze through the newspapers of the country. Keep your eyes open for the reports of this meeting.

Prof. Andres Osuna, secretary of the interdenominational and cooperative work in Mexico, is to be in the United States during December and January to attend various annual meetings and represent Latin America to the students of the North American colleges at the Student Volunteer Convention, to be held at Indianapolis. Among the noteworthy accomplishments of Professor Osuna are the results of his work along temperance lines. The rapid progress of temperance in Mexico is due in very great measure to Professor Osuna's activities. He will visit the temperance organizations that support his program in Mexico and meet with the secretaries of the mission boards that have work in that country, at the annual meeting of the committee on cooperation in Latin America. Present conditions in Mexico and the unusual opportunity for the development of the evangelical work lead us to rejoice more than ever in the fact that such an outstanding leader as Professor Osuna is heading the forces for cooperative evangelical enterprise in Mexico. The Mexican Union Press under his direction, has had an unusually satisfactory year.

We Refer You to the Society

Rev. C. B. Hilton is pastor at Galva, Ill. He writes THE BAPTIST as follows: "Will you tell me, or will any one tell me what use Baptist pastors make of individual communion sets? This morning's mail brings a personal communication from the Judson Press containing a pink sheet of suggestions for gifts. 'For the Pastor: Individual communion set in leather case....$10.50.' Ought I to have such a case? How should I use it if I had one? Information will be greatly appreciated by one who desires to conform to Baptist faith and practice." Who will answer the brother's question?

Killam's Kollum

A Plain Hint

The Record of Christian Work for January reports receipts from individuals amounting to $1,208. This money is to provide free subscriptions to missionaries, institutions, libraries and worthy individuals. These friends during the past month provided for 604 annual subscriptions. THE BAPTIST has received gifts each year to provide for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST for similar cases. We can use a much larger sum to good advantage. In some parts of the country the crops have failed. There are cases where sickness and adversity make it impossible to renew THE BAPTIST. Here come the checks. Thank you. We will give you the name and address of the individual or institution which profits by your generosity.

We Hit the Vital Spot

"All right! Here enclosed is your subscription money. All right, Killam, jab us. Jab us, we mean, in the Kollum. It don't hurt much to be jabbed there. Only please don't jab anywhere else, especially in our pocketbook. It is a sensitive spot. We read the Kollum without much hesitancy and we must confess we sometimes read it first." J. D. Freed, Goodwin, S. D. Suppose we failed to jab you in the vital spot? We would soon be on the rocks. How about your label? You can avoid that painful process.

We Fervently Hope Not

We often read strange things in church papers, calendars and bulletins. Here is the latest. A newsy little sheet published by an enterprising church contains a bit of news and a pointed question. "We were happy to note that Collis Young has returned home and was present in the services Sunday. Will the devil be in the service Sunday night?" Small evening congregations are the rule. We hope that he did not attend the evening meeting.

Trinity of Service

"Wise utility executives," says Public Utility Advertising, "realize that three things are necessary if the public utility industry is to thrive. They must give the best possible service. They must give this service at the lowest possible cost. And they must tell the people." THE BAPTIST is making an honest effort to give you and your church the best possible news service. We can prove that we are giving it at a very low cost. And here we are telling the people.

You will find on the young people's page the reproduction of a calendar gotten out by the society featuring the thirty-third annual convention in Denver in July, 1924. It is a good piece of publicity.

Dr. A. Wakefield Slaten became a member of the faculty of the Pacific School for the Ministry, Berkeley, Cal., on Jan. 1. Until difficulties arose over statements in a book published about a year ago, he was engaged as one of the faculty of William Jewel College.

Hillyer Straton, son of Dr. John Roach Straton of Calvary Church, New York is a student in Mercer University at Macon, Ga. He has equipped his room with a radio and enjoys the service in his father's church each Sunday. Query: Will this kind of church attendance meet with the approval of the father?

Evangelist and Mrs. B. R. Robinson, who have been doing excellent work in Texas and more recently in Louisville, Ky., visited in Chicago, the home of Mrs. Robinson, during the holidays. They are open for special meetings with pastors for the winter. Address 1549 W. Ormsby avenue, Louisville, Ky.

The property of the Walling Street Congregational Church, Providence, was recently purchased by the Rhode Island Convention for the use of Russian Baptists. It is reported to be a fine property which could not be replaced for less than $65,000 although it was bought for $10,000. There is ground room for a playground. The building is in the heart of the Polish, Lithuanian and Russian colonies.

The First Church, Bridgeport, Conn., Rev. C. A. Decker pastor, gave "The Child of Prophesy" at the evening service, Dec. 23. The greetings of the pastor enumerated some of the matters for which the church should be thankful. There was the beautified house of worship, the enlarged church organ, eighty-four persons who during the year have received the hand of fellowship and the fact that the losses of the church by removal and death have not been great. The Bible school is in a contest with the school of the First Church, Schenectady, with the latter leading with 360 points against 248.

At the recent meeting of the executive board of the Baptist General Convention of Texas it was decided to set out a vigorous campaign to raise for all missionary and educational purposes $3.000,000. The appropriations for state work is to be limited to $200,000. The working force is to be reduced by one person in each department. The convention some years ago adopted the policy of aiding the ministerial students where aid was necessary and the students in turn aid the convention in supplying churches and in other ways. The ministerial students last year reported almost as many baptisms as the state missionaries. The sum of $35,000 was voted to aid these students.

Inquiries have been made as to the oft-repeated statement that in one place in Russia on one day more persons had been baptized than on the day of Pentecost. Doctor Rushbrooke informs us that while in Russia he learned that this rests upon the official report of the brethren Petroff and Fastoietz, representatives of Siberia to the All-Russian Baptist Union. The exact date is not on record, but the year was 1921, and the baptisms took place at a village near Omsk. At Slavianka, in the same neighborhood, very large numbers were also baptized in 1920 in the course of a three days' convention at Whitsuntide. Many hundreds of candidates were then presented for examination and baptism, and the rite was almost continuously administered.

BE strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift,
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it. 'Tis God's gift.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long.
Faint not, fight on! Tomorrow comes the song.
—Maltbie Babcock.

Underlying all the discussions at the recent executive meeting of the Federal Council of Churches was a recognition of the importance of evangelism as the heart and core of the church's work. There was an unmistakable recognition of the fact that however much one may emphasize public righteousness and the application of Christian principles to the social and international problems of the day, the supreme need is for the type of character that springs from personal loyalty to Jesus Christ. As Bishop William F. McDowell said in the address on the concluding evening: "The world is in a bad way and does not quite know what it wants or what it needs. It quite largely thinks it wants to shift power and privilege from the hands that have it to other hands. It is not so sure that it needs or desires to have all hands made clean. The under dog thinks he has been an under dog long enough and desires to be the top dog. He does not have any equal desire to be a new, better dog. This is the attitude of nations and of groups within nations. But the world's need is really an ethical need, a need in its character. It is there that the world has broken down. Its finances and governments are bad enough to appall us, but at the heart of it the collapse is in its character. And character is wholly personal. This is why Jesus Christ came. Only a person could meet a personal necessity. God must come to the persons in need in the person of his Son. And I will stake Christianity's fate on the power of Jesus Christ to meet and satisfy the world's present needs."

A number of new members have recently been received into the membership of the church at Grand Forks, N. D. Rev. A. S. Barner is receiving the hearty support of his people.

For a number of years the Home Mission Society has been promoting a plan of "every-community service endeavor" by which some kind of gospel work would be undertaken in every community of the newer states. During the year three more state convention areas—Wyoming, Southern Idaho and Northern California—have entered into the plan. Two others, Western Washington and North Dakota are formally asking for it immediately. That makes with Montana, where it was inaugurated four years ago, six states now committed to the plan. Utah has it substantially, as arranged by a deputation of the home missions council several years ago.

President Coolidge sent a message to the representatives of the Federal Council of Churches in the recent executive committee meeting of that body. He said: "Profoundly impressed by the high ends, and thoroughly practical achievements of the council, I should be glad of an opportunity to express to the gathering, my hope for its continuing usefulness and my appreciation of what it has done in the past. To my regret an absence from Washington at the time of this gathering is impossible. I am constrained, therefore, to express the hope that you will be good enough to communicate my good wishes to the members of the council, my appreciation for the kind expressions you have communicated, and my high hopes for the fullest measure of useful service on the part of this splendid organization."

Dr. John M. Moore, of the Marc Avenue Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., dramatizing the cooperative work of the churches, opened the sessions of the executive committee of the Federal Council. He said in part: "The good Samaritan saw no barriers of race or national prejudice between him and the wounded man on the Jericho Road, and our commissions on race relations and international justice and good-will have dealt with those conditions out of which riot and war grow, seeking through the holding of inter-racial conferences and the creation of international agencies of good-will and friendship to bind the life of the world with bonds of brotherhood. Christ's incomparable story of the good Samaritan illustrates the work that the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is trying to do through cooperative action. The social breakdown on the Jericho road reflects the tragic need of our times. Here are bandits whose philosophy of life is the philosophy of force. 'Take what you can get and keep what you can hold,' is the rule of action that has well-nigh wrecked civilization. Every international highway is strewn with the victims of this philosophy. Ecclesiastical religion has proved ineffective; its interests are elsewhere. The Federal Council in the

Destructive or Constructive Criticism

CRITICISM is natural and necessary. The art critic renders a valuable service to society in keeping art up to a high standard of excellence, in educating the public to appreciate the best in painting, sculpture and architecture, in exposing the shams that parade in the guise of originals. A similar service is offered to society by the worthy critics in the field of literature, music and the drama. In manufacturing and selling goods, in farming and marketing the products of the farm, in the cost and efficiency of labor, and in all other things that enter into the organization of modern business and industry there are experts who, while not called critics, are competent and reliable judges of what good business is. As a matter of fact such experts are a necessity in business today, and their service is sought by great and small corporations and paid for generously.

By taking advantage of expert judgment on the management of his business regularly, a merchant or manufacturer may be saved the pain and loss that will inevitably come if a close check is not kept upon his affairs. In addition to this he will learn how to expand his business without straining his credit or narrowing his margin of safety. Such expert judgment is only another name for constructive criticism. It is a bit strange that while business and industry seek such criticism, religion should be so apathetic and sometimes antagonistic to it. Few local churches ever employ an expert on church organization to study its field, finances, efficiency and problems. It is assumed that the pastor is an expert in that line, but the facts will not always support the assumption. Most pastorates are of short duration largely, we believe, because of the failure to bring constructive criticism to bear upon the church, and this results in destructive criticism which usually focuses upon the pastor who is soon seeking another field.

Coming to the general organizations through which the local churches do their missionary work at home and abroad, we discover the same situation that we find in the local church with reference to the employment of experts. Nothing of this sort is done only as it is done by the secretaries who are sometimes euphoniously called missionary statesmen. It should be said in all justice to these overworked servants that they are indeed experts in their departments, but no one of them can see all the departments in perspective, and all of them are so close to the whole task that for them to attempt to give a full and adequate appraisement of it would only reveal their inability to do so. Besides, the secretaries themselves need the fair, fraternal and impartial judgment of competent and Christian men who have studied the whole situation sympathetically. Such experts should have a standing in public esteem as high as that of any reputable firm of certified public accountants. The assurance that such experts are employed by our great missionary societies would go far in the direction of conserving the confidence of the constituency in the administration of the affairs of the societies.

Failing to take advantage of this sensible system of constructive criticism the door was left open and destructive criticism entered like a spy in time of war bent upon finding damaging evidence against the patriotism of its suspects. This is exactly what happened recently in the case of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. Wide circulation was given to statements based upon alleged evidence taken from the letter files of the society by the methods of destructive criticism, apparently showing that missionaries who deny the evangelical faith are supported in their denial by the society. Stray quotations taken from letters regardless of their setting and context and without reference to the consecutive unity of the entire correspondence were strung together to give color and argument to the suspicion that all was not right in the rooms of the society or among the missionaries on the foreign field.

OF course the officers of the society had to meet the situation. And they met it by the only system that is worthy and reliable—the system of constructive criticsm. The best men to do this critical bit of work were called to New York—men of recognized standing and ability in the denomination and representative, and for a week they waded through the letter files reading all correspondence that had any bearing upon the charges of disloyalty to the evangelical faith. The first general statement has been made and published based upon the findings of this investigation. A fuller statement will follow. It is enough to say that the charges of disloyalty to the evangelical faith made by destructive criticism against the society were found to be without foundation according to the facts.

While we deplore the tendency to indulge in destructive criticism, no person or organization burdened with the responsibility of administering a public trust for a great Christian denomination can hope to be entirely free from such criticism, especially in these days when suspicion has broken down the fine spiritual thing we call confidence. Distrust is epidemic in the world, and nobody is immune from its ravages. Whole nations are held in the grip of it. The only antidote for it is careful and unprejudiced study of all the facts with constructive criticism and counsel based upon the facts. If there is anything in the organized work of the Baptist denomination that will not stand the light of constructive investigation carried on in the spirit of Christ by Christian men competent to discriminate in such matters, that thing should be condemned.

Therefore we return to the wisdom of adopting the plan of constructive criticism. If we might be permitted to paraphrase the inspired words of Paul we would say, "Be not overcome of evil as organized in destructive criticism, but overcome the evil of destructive criticism by the good of constructive criticism." Destructive criticism is evil even if good men sometimes indulge in it. It is evil in anything it touches. It is the bane of politics, the blight of the yellow press, the bankruptcy of business, and the blot upon the Christian religion. It was destructive criticism that crucified Christ, made Paul the prisoner of Caesar, burned John Huss at the stake, and flogged the Virginia Baptists for their faith. Baptists have always refused to persecute, because they held to the sacredness of freedom for all. But while standing for freedom of conscience they have rigidly held to their own convictions of truth. We believe that the great mass of Baptists still hold to their Baptist heritage.

"Padded with Stupidity"

THE caption of this editorial is not at all complimentary to the people who are padded with stupidity. However, it is not the aim of the writer to condemn the other man and exonerate himself. There is a very real sense in which all men are more or less cushioned with coarseness. One has only to go back along the road of history to find multitudes of people in every age who give ample proof of our unadorned statement. The most striking illustration of it is found in the life of our Lord as recorded in the Gospels. Against the sensitized surface of his wisdom and love and righteousness the stupidity of men never seemed so coarse and incurable. The mystery and spirituality of regeneration meant nothing more to Nicodemus, a teacher of the Jews, than a repetition of physical birth. To the woman of Sychar the hidden sources of eternal life went no deeper than Jacob's well. The religious leaders utterly failed to see the symbolism of spiritual reality in flesh and blood, because flesh and blood meant to them the material tissue only. And, of course, leaven in the language of the dull disciples stood for bread and never for the subtle influence of the Pharisees. Even Peter, padded with stupidity, saw no difference between the touch of the faith of a woman in need and the jostling of a curious crowd.

All who have ever shared the spirit and passion of Jesus have knocked in vain against the thick wadding with which so many people have wrapped themselves around. The prophets of the Old Testament register their protest in all their inspired utterances against the torpor of desensitized souls—protests which find their common focus in the memorable words of Isaiah, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." All the apostles of the New Testament found themselves in hearty agreement with Paul when he rebuked the Corinthians for being almost incurably childish. And our words need not be confined to the past for the same difference exists today between the people who are padded with stupidity and the people who are propelled by sympathy.

The cause of this padding is not far to seek. Allowing for all of it brought into the world with us at birth, we must still account for the fact that so little of it is stripped off as we develop. May not the real cause lie in the fear of the shock and the suffering which will inevitably injure us unless some means is provided of absorbing the shock and neutralizing the pain? One must choose either to expose his nervous system to the reaction of sympathetic response to spiritual stimuli, or cushion with coarseness his finer feelings against the touch of vicarious sorrow and altruistic pain. Facing such a choice and compelled to decide, it is not strange that most of us reach for the wadding and insulate ourselves against the cross currents which are bound to draw upon our sympathies if left unprotected.

Padding is contrary to the religion of Jesus Christ. Wherever he found men seeking to follow him on the basis of their own safety first he dealt summarily with them and denied them entrance to the circle of his friends. He himself welcomed pain and loss. He kept himself so sensitized to the call of human need that there was always instant and glad response. One would be quite within the rules of interpretation if he should quote his prayer in this fashion: "For their sakes I sensitize myself that they themselves also may be sensitized in truth." The finest evidence of personal sanctification on the part of any of us is the quick response of genuine sympathy with our Lord in his redemptive purpose and in his atoning sacrifice for the world. It is also interesting to note that the Holy Spirit who took up the work of Jesus where he laid it down on earth is chiefly characterized by sensitiveness. The one eternal sin is the sin against the sensitizing process which the Holy Spirit carries on in the hearts of men. Therefore the people who are in danger of an eternal sin are the people who pad themselves with stupidity and stolidity and thus become impervious to his influence. While on the other hand those who yield to the sweet influence of the Spirit are marked by a delicacy of feeling, a responsiveness to human need, and a sensitiveness to the truth, which enable them to reflect the very heart of Christ himself.

The prevailing materialism of these times in its many forms, some of which are found in the very sanctuary of God, has atrophied the nerves and hardened the arterial walls of the body of Christ. The heart action is rapid but it is the rapidity of disease and not of spiritual energy. The shedding of blood without which there is no remission is almost unheard of, and the quick response to emergency moves with the tardiness of senility. There is too much fat and not enough healthy tissue. We need to call for a fast that will last long enough to reduce the obesity with its attendant stupidity and bring the body of Christ back to health and strength and resilience. This is the need of the hour—a need that can be met only as Christian men and women discard the padding and heroically follow him who endured the cross without resorting to the crude anaesthetic, which if taken, would have stupified him. The cross is eternally opposed to the cushion. Therefore choose today to be propelled by sympathy rather than to be padded with stupidity.

The English Language and Prosperity

IF the world today has one dominant trend it is because the world is approaching a dominant language. And that is the English language. Some people foolishly object to that statement because they fancy it is part of some subtle pro-British propaganda; they associate English language somehow with English government. It is well for such people to know, however, that there was an English language before there was an England. There is nothing political nor geographical in the use of the term "English language." It comes about as near being universal as anything we have in this world.

If there were no English language, the greatest republic and the greatest empire in the world would have been impossible, and in their places would exist a hopeless, futile chaos of little factions. There would be no unity of opinion possible in the world, no large expression of definite human ideals. There would be no strong drive toward peace and prosperity and progress—three elements which accompany the English language wherever it goes. Wherever you find the English language, you will find certain fundamental liberties in existence or being brought into existence. This is the whole secret of the colonizing power of the language—it bears with it elements that tie men and communities together in a bond of principle.

Take industry for example. It is undeniable that where industry is run by the English language it is a different kind of industry with a different kind of spirit than can be said of industry which is administered through any other language. The type of industry that sets the pace for the world, and supplies ideas to the world, and fills the major part of the world's industrial needs, is the industry that has been developed under the clear, adaptable, forceful language which is used by the dominant portion of the industrial world. This is not mere accident. It is not as if the same men could have done as much in another language, or in a mixed variety of languages. For a reason which may be fully discovered some day, the very speech itself was one of the fundamental ingredients in the achievement.

Prosperity has a meaning in English that it does not have in any other tongue, and you have only to attempt to sow some of our most commonplace American industrial ideas into the minds of foreigners who use another tongue, to discover how different are the very bases of thinking. You may converse with industrial leaders from every country in Europe and discover that to them prosperity means only the prosperity of the employer. Their employes?—why they look at you in amazement! Pay the women as high wages as the men?—they scrutinize you to see what kind of an American joke you are working off on them! They are always looking for a market outside of their employes. Never do they consider making their employes prosperous enough to become possible purchasers of their product. In Germany the hope of prosperity is that somewhere else in the world there is a working class prosperous enough to buy what the German working class has never been prosperous enough to buy.....

It is not good, however, that one or two nations should forge so far ahead of the rest of the world. It is not good for the balance of life. And this is one of the causes for gladness that the English language is spreading over the earth and among all the races of men; it is going to serve as a great power to restore the balance of the world, to put all the nations in more equal relations one with another.

—Henry Ford in the Dearborn Independent.

Man's Best Thought

THERE has been a very definite progress in our thinking in the last fifty years. We have had an open-minded study of such questions as: Is there progress in religion? Where and how did we get our Bible? How did we get our theology? What is the source of authority in religion? What are we to think of Jesus and his program? Is the church really standing for the teachings of Jesus? Is organized Christianity reactionary and essentially capitalistic?

Many old and cherished traditions have suffered in the process and well-informed men are coming to see that the old theologies were man-made; they bore the marks of the limitations of human knowledge; they do not always accurately represent our down-to-the-minute understanding of the teachings of Jesus, but they are nevertheless priceless treasures of truth and he who would treat them with a sneer and throw them aside lightly as a museum of antiquities commits sacrilege.

The older creeds were the product of the best thought of the best men of their age and their teachings have helped to make our modern civilization. Yet they are not to be made fetiches. They must never stand in the way of a re-study of Christ himself and of his meanings for the new generation.

—Bishop Thomas Nicholson.

What Is the Chief Business of the Church?

"Plumb down in the crypt and abyss of every man's soul is a hunger and craving for other food than earthly stuff and the churches know it."

By W. H. Rogers

CHRIST'S mission has been clearly defined in his own words: "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Our mission as his followers has been just as clearly defined in the words of the same authority: "As the Father hath sent me, even so I send you," and in the parting commission so well known among us, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

The great ruling passion of the heart of our Lord Jesus Christ was evangelization. He devoted his entire nature to it and laid upon every disciple of his the imperative duty to win others to him. The one without that holy passion is void of the spirit of Christ. He may be brilliant in intellect, classed as a star in the social world; but without the passionate desire to evangelize, he shares not the travail of our Lord's soul.

Evangelization means the offer to a sinful race of Jesus Christ, the Saviour and King with all the clearness, forcefulness and conviction which the Spirit of God can make possible through the combined powers and energies of a regenerated people. It is the joyous announcement, in the name of God and in the power of the divine Spirit, that salvation is complete, available and free in the living Christ.

A Spiritual Diagnosis

As a physician needs to diagnose the condition of his patient before he can offer a cure, so it becomes necessary for us to diagnose the spiritual condition of those to whom we are sent. Many conclusions may be reached from such a diagnosis, but we will all agree that the present humanity is suffering from a spiritual famine. The writer of that popular story "If Winter Comes," says this striking thing: "There's some universal thing that's wanting. I think it is something that religion ought to give but doesn't. I tell you that plumb down in the crypt and abyss of every man's soul is a hunger and craving for other food than this earthly stuff, and the churches know it."

Yes, the churches know it. We know that man was made for God and is restless till he finds his rest in God. We are all aware that mankind needs Christ. In every human heart there is a craving which only he can meet; the longing, articulate or inarticulate, which only he can satisfy. "Sir, we would see Jesus," is the unspoken prayer of many a soul. The men who hate the gospel need it and that is our hope concerning them. The men who most fiercely attack the Christian faith, in their confidential moods will confess to longings, yearnings and strivings which being interpreted, mean "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." Witness such proofs as given in Papini's "Life of Christ." And also the remarkable conversion to Christianity of Blatchford, the editor of the Clarion, a paper which was the organ of atheism for so many years. In their moments of bleakest doubts, these men knew the reachings of the soul after the Father and found that only in the Son could they see him.

We've seen the puzzle of many pieces of wood which form no true pattern until arranged in the shape of a cross. So the passions and aspirations of man can only find their true harmony and purpose when they run into the form of that sacred symbol.

The churches know that. But there is also the fact that so many of the hungry people do not know what they are hungering for—therefore our mission is to interpret their needs as well as to offer the remedy. They go to "broken cisterns" (of which there are many) and some evangelists spend too much time in crying aloud against the cisterns or condemning the people who build such cisterns when they should be intepreting their need and proclaiming the remedy.

In the biography of that faithful servant of God, R. W. Dale, the story is told of the way that minister reviewed the methods of his own preaching. It weighed upon him that he was failing to reach men. He was haunted with a sense of failure. This was the judgment he put upon himself. "The truth occupies too large a place in my thought, and I have been so occupied with the instrument, the divine instrument for effecting the ends of the ministry, and too little with the actual person to be restored to God. This comes from a moral and spiritual condition which involves serious guilt. God forgive me. I have a dread of aiming at the popular method of treatment arising from a dread of aiming at popularity, but the two aims are wholly distinct, and it has been a sin not to aim at the first." We must know the people we have to evangelize.

God will never fail us. He does not fail the universe; how can he then fail his children? Everything rests upon the character of God. The alternative for man is either to go on getting his food, clothing and other things in the best way he can—fighting, scheming, robbing, and so reducing society to endless confusion, or to "get right with God," trust him, love him, serve him, reduce all life to a single service and so eliminate anxiety and animal struggles for place and power. Between these two things men must choose.

—Frederic C. Spurr.

They are sinful but how are they going to be convinced, in these days of a lost sense of sin? Only by bringing them into the presence of him who knew no sin. In that presence the heart cries out, "My God, how I've sinned." "Against thee, and thee only, have I sinned." The lost sense of sin grows out of the lost sense of God.

Another condition we find in our diagnosis is that to many Jesus Christ is not a living reality. To them he is only a good man who lived nineteen centuries ago and did many wonderful things and died when he was thirty-three years old on a wooden cross, but why they do not know. They have an admiration for him as they have for Abraham Lincoln, but they do not regard him as a living Christ who walks and talks and lives with men. Even in the church there are many to whom Christ is nothing more than the name of a dead friend. If we are going to reach such we shall have to join in the triumphant shout "He lives!" and proclaim his Lordship in the power of the Holy Spirit. This was the great emphasis of Pentecost.

A Social Passion

Then we find a persistent passion for a social redemption. "Give us an evangel that will bring about better conditions of living and working. Give us something that will save society from its present chaos," is their plea. With some it is a cry of fear. With others it is a passion for social regeneration. As servants of Christ we need to know that and recognize it. We cannot escape the fact that monopolies and competitions have created conditions which prove a positive hindrance to the acceptance of the gospel of Christ. What are we who are sent in Christ's name going to do about it? Either the gospel will go on being hindered or we shall labor for an evangelism potent to overturn the vested interests that block the kingdom of God.

There are other conditions we find in the world today which space will not allow us to mention. These we have mentioned to make way for the plea for a varied and comprehensive evangelism—varied in approach and presentation, and comprehensive in the knowledge of those to whom it is addressed; an evangelism that admits of no tampering with the essential gospel, but which labors to present it as it can be best understood and received; an evangelism which knows how to assimilate the best results of knowledge without losing the simplicity of faith, which understands that the real emphasis of the Christian truth lies in the eternal verities of faith and experience, which no criticism can destroy. Such an evangelism is to be found in the very gospel we are commissioned to proclaim. It is good news for a sad and sorrowing world. The elements of joy, hope, victory and optimism are in it. It brings light to the man in intellectual, moral or spiritual darkness. It brings liberty to the fettered man and announces the way of escape. It comes to the man under the sentence of death with the life abundant. If we preach the gospel, we shall proclaim Christ for he is the center and heart and life of the Gospel.

We are concerned, some of us, to carry to others, not the Christ of the Gospels, but our view of Christ. In doing that we depart from the successful preaching of the early apostles. Look at the first sermon preached in the power of the outpoured Spirit. From the beginning to the end it centers round this thought, "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." The very first word of Paul to the Corinthans was "We preach not ourselves but Christ." In our day there are those who really care nothing for the Lord Jesus Christ himself, because they are so possessed with some theological notion concerning him. We need to get back by the grace of God to the view of Jesus Christ himself and see him as Peter and Paul saw him and preached him in the power of the Holy Spirit. To them he was a real, living, personal Christ who could do things and not a mere fairy tale of a distant past. To them he was Saviour, Lord and King. Let us declare him as such and the conscience will be quickened and the soul will cry out "What then shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?"

The Practical Results

We are not to defend him, but declare him. We are not to explain him, but exalt him. We are not to philosophize about him, but preach him. We are not to argue about the doctrine, but adorn it. We are not to debate it, but demonstrate it. Does it work? It did in the days of the early church and human need is just as deep today and it is the very same need, and the same remedy will meet it. Here are the sinful. Their very condition pleads for the proclamation of a "Saviour who can save unto the uttermost." Here is a soul withering from petty jealousies and envyings. How cruel and foolish they become in the presence of him, "who went about doing good" and "who took a basin of water and girded himself with a towel and washed his disciples' feet!" Here is a man with a passionate love for money which is eating out the soul of him like a leprous disease. What a wretched thing it appears to be in the sight of him who said, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal but lay up treasures in heaven—." Here is another suffering from mental or spiritual pride. How contemptible it becomes in presence of him who said, "Whosoever would be great among you let him become the servant of all." Take our silly criticisms of each other. They all die away before him who said, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another." Think of our divisions—what hurts Christ cause more? How wicked they look in his presence as he prays "Father I pray thee that they all may be as one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." He works. His gospel accomplishes things.

What is the chief business of the church of Christ in this critical hour of human life? The answer is found in his word, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." The church is Christ's body, the medium through which the Living Head expresses himself in the world. The church is his witness to mankind. It exists to be vocal and active for him. It has no other reason for existence than this. When it becomes satisfied with being a debating society, an athletic club, an entertaining organization or a company of self-satisfied religious formalists, it suffers eclipse and becomes a misnomer and justly earns the contempt of men. Our business is to bear unceasing witness, by life and lip, to the crucified, living and exalted Lord who is working through human instrumentalities, delivering from the grip and guilt of sin and empowering life for service. The authority of this witness is the Word, the heart of it is the cross and the inspiration of it is the reigning Lord.

A Church Clinic

By A. LeGrand

A FEW months ago the writer of this article passed through a clinic for the first time in his life. First there was a careful examination of the eye, ear, nose and throat. After that he was passed on to a dentist who examined the mouth. From there he was taken to the X-ray room, then to another room where blood tests were made, heart, lungs and kidneys examined. When all was done, an experienced physician studied the charts and prescribed the remedies.

Recently the writer of this article attended a church clinic (called the annual meeting of the church). Experts had made a study of the church finances, benevolences, Sunday evening services, the Sunday school, the young people's work, the woman's organization, church calling, the social life. Never did we attend a better or more thorough church clinic.

We wished that a chart had been made so that all the facts might be before us. On the whole there was a pretty healthy condition although there were some ailments. Not every organ was functioning just right, and since all the organs are part of the body, the body was not entirely healthy. On this particular occasion we wished for an opportunity to tell the patient the cause of the trouble. We really wanted the privilege of prescribing.

Many physical troubles may rightly be laid to the heart. If the heart is not functioning as it ought, the whole system is affected. We felt that this was the trouble with this church. There was something the matter with the heart, and out of the "heart are the issues of life."

Ills are not cured by trying to remove symptoms, but by reaching the real cause of the trouble. We felt like asking, "Is the heart right with God?" We wondered how much prayer life there was in that church.

We talk about our pastors as if they were the whole secret of church success or failure, when as a matter of fact, the membership has much to do with the success of the church. I do not underestimate the place of the pastor, but if each member had a warm, loving heart, a heart beating in unison with the heart of God, the pastor would be a better pastor.

If members prayed more for the pastor, then the pastor would accomplish more. If when the pastor went to the pulpit platform he could see a well-filled house and a people whose countenances showed that they were in touch with God, praying for the success of that service and for the power of God to manifest itself through the sermon, then even an ordinary preacher and pastor would be a man of power. But how can a preacher really preach if a large proportion of the membership stay at home and if many of those present are indifferent to the message and never offer a single prayer for him? If folks will stop looking for the pastor's faults and seek more to exalt his strong qualities, stop their spirit of criticism and pray more for the pastor's success, then many church problems will be solved.

The same holds true in the Sunday school, the young people's work, etc. A praying people will be an interested people. If folks prayed more we would have sufficient folks to fill the various offices of the church and others would be coming to aid in the advance movement for the kingdom.

The same thing is true concerning our financial problems. Let's stop talking money, and let us talk and pray for spiritual power. This we think is the prescription of the Great Physician.

When Miss Elizabeth Bacon, a teacher in the public schools at El Paso, Tex., was told by her physician that her death was imminent she called for her check book and completed the payment of her pledge of $250 to the 75 million campaign of Southern Baptists. Perhaps we will not have that much warning. Better pay now thy vows unto the Lord and to the work of his church.

Fair Play for the Bible

There are two ways in which we are sorely in need of the Bible: As a means of power; as an aid in correct thinking.

By Henry G. Weston Smith

TO ALL who prize the name of him who saves from sin the Bible must remain a priceless treasure because it is the avenue through which comes knowledge of so many human experiences revealing God's character and purposes. Of this all Protestant denominations must be conscious. Through the Bible we look far back into the life of a people especially gifted in religious insight. We are enabled to travel with that people down the long centuries during which they were gropingly reaching out after the great loving spirit of the Father. We walk with the prophet and the psalmist through the valley of vision, and feel that we are nearer to the true light than we possibly could have been but for the impassioned teachings of the inspired writer. In the glowing pages of the New Testament we walk with the Saviour himself and with those who knew him personally; and our lives are enriched beyond estimate. While all the Protestant Christians are compelled thus heavily to lean upon the Bible, the compulsion is still more urgent among Baptists.

Through many generations we have quite consistently clung to the conviction that the Bible itself, and especially the New Testament, must be our guide. Though others may become careless, though others may not "give diligence" because they have creeds and forms upon which to lean, we must handle "aright the word of truth." Our very position requires it. Of all denominations Baptists should be students of their Bible, never being found guilty of a lack of precision in treating that which is so vital.

How We Need the Bible

There are two ways in which we are sorely in need of the Bible: (1) As a means of power; (2) As an aid in correct thinking. In considering only these two we are not closing our eyes to the fact that the Bible must function in us as a body of truth expressed in a living example. Action is really a part of true power and true thought.

What do we mean, then, by the use of the Bible as a means of power? Simply this: Too little is it being read today even by those who find time to read much else. Too little is it being used devotionally in the home, though the time for such use of it could be found if there were a sufficiently strong inclination. Too little is it being used devotionally even by those of us who aspire to be prophets of the living God among people who, because of the frenzy of the crowd, have lost their way. There are perhaps logical and fairly worthy reasons for all this; but the sum of them is that we have simply forgotten how much the Bible can easily mean to us as a finger pointing out the highest values of life. If we approach this great collection of books, then, as a reflector of power, in order to be inspired and strengthened by it, we do not of necessity have to be widely informed about each book nor about the author of each book. We are coming with the untrammeled longing of a child who is hungry and wishes to be fed and believes that, by coming to his mother, he will be fed. How absurd it would be to suppose that food given by a mother to her child could do the child no good unless the child first knew how the bread was made; what were its chemical elements; how old it was; who made it and where; and what was the baker's purpose! All the child need do is to eat the bread; and though most children sooner or later actually do ask all these questions it is a noteworthy fact that food is as nourishing without this knowledge. So is our sense of devotion to the purposes of the heavenly Father. It is not a process of thought, but an experience of fellowship. Consider, for example, the familiar Twenty-third Psalm:

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures;
He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul:
He guideth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil; for thou art with me;
Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me. . . ."

John Bunyan, languishing in jail; Robert Raikes, bearing in his heart the problems and sorrows of a city; and the untaught girl, dying at midnight in the ward of a city hospital—can all feel the power that comes from this inspired passage. There is no need for fine analysis. The hungering soul eats and is made stronger. And this shepherd psalm is illustrative of a truth which applies equally well to many of these beautiful hymns of the Hebrew people.

Again, such a passage as that from Isaiah will be found to reflect the same power to lift up the heart:

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwelt in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined. . . . For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace."

The power of this passage is evident. It needs no interpretation before it can have devotional value. It breathes an immediate blessing upon those of us who come like the child to his mother—hungry—craving nourishment. Indeed, there may be found a multitude of such beautiful and inspired passages.

That fine picture given by the Master in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew is one:

"But when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all the nations: and he shall separate them one from another. as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. . . ."

Merely to read this majestic verbal picture is to feel the practical chastening of the living spirit. To this end no textual or historical knowledge is needful.

Or here, again, is that stirring passage in the last chapter of Matthew:

"All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

What vigor is here! How these words have carried heroic souls on into desert and jungle and pagan darkness, bearing to hungering spirits "the light of the world!" Did they all have knowledge of the textual history of this passage? Did they all know equally well the story of the transmission of the gospel? No. Here was a true reflection of power; and it was power rather than process that concerned them.

For Healing and Strength

Or again, under the shadow of a great discouragement or sorrow, we turn for healing and renewal of strength, to such a passage as that beautiful one in the Revelation:

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away; and the sea is no more. And I saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem. coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of the throne saying, Behold the Tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God: and he shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more; the first things are passed away."

Does the sorrowing mother or plodding pilgrim need to know anything more concerning this passage than is learned by immediate fellowship with the Spirit that breathes in it?

And so every one of these passages and a host of others to which we are strongly tempted to point, lift up the soul of him who reads with the simple hunger of a child. There is no demand for historical or textual or psychological knowledge, provided only that the reader brings to his Bible a simple and sincere "hungering and thirsting for righteousness."

The values are there ready for any one. Doubtless in many cases these values will, to certain minds, be made more evident if their background is known. But on an average, so far as concerns their power to lift up the heart of the worshiper, the untaught and the scholarly can use them with equal benefit.

Very, very much are we in need of such a hungry attitude of approach toward our Bible. It has springs of living water and sustaining food which we do not use, because our approach to it has not been made in the attitude of humble hungering—the attitude of the child.

But there is another way in which we often wish to use the Bible, that is, as an aid in correct thinking.

We call ourselves Christians because we are proud to trace our life directly back to Christ. We may, therefore, properly wish for a better understanding of the Christ—for a more exact knowledge of that which he taught. However we may apply his teachings to the life of today, essentially it is his original message that concerns us as followers who wear his name.

Knowing the Purposed Message

In order best to understand his message, then, we feel the need of knowing well the purposed message of each writer of the law and the prophecies, the psalms and other literature to which Jesus and his contemporaries fell heir. Again, we feel that we must accurately know how those who were leaders in the life of the very early Christian church interpreted the Christian message; for if we can know what Paul and Peter and James and John and Mark and Luke and some of the others believed and taught concerning their Master it will surely be of high value to us in our effort to form a correct appreciation of the Christian religion as we should practice it today.

But let it be clearly observed that our purpose now is avowedly to build a body of correct doctrine. Again we approach the Bible with the same childlike attitude; but this time our hunger is for correctness of view rather than merely for devotional food.

In this case, then, since we are trying to find exactly what the Bible teaches, our method must be that of accurate examination. Our pursuit now is doctrinal rather than devotional. We are trying to draw from our great religious treasury trustworthy data to help us in our thinking.

If we use the twenty-third or any other psalm, then, as a means of learning what the psalmist teaches about the "nature" of God and the character of his moral requirements of man, obviously we must proceed by using the best available data to throw light on the authorship and exact purpose of the psalm we are considering; for now we are trying to analyze rather than merely to enjoy.

Our question this time is as different from our devotional hunger as the child's question about who made the bread and how, would be from his act of eating the bread.

If we turn back again to that beautiful passage of hope and promise in Isaiah, "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light, . . ." and examine it with a view to determining its prophetic bearing upon the Christ, we have to ask this time: "What was the historical background of the author and exactly what is his purpose and method of teaching? To just what was he actually referring?" If we are not studying the doctrinal significance of the passage we do not need at all necessarily to do this; but if our quest is doctrinal we simply must.

Or again, if we are looking to the words of Jesus concerning the final judgment or concerning the gift of the Holy Spirit or concerning the nature of his resurrection body or concerning the nature of his relation to the Father, we cannot merely quote the words as they are and consider that their meaning is perfectly obvious. We are looking now for an accurate meaning; and we may just as well not have consulted the scriptures as a means of correcting our views, if we are not to consult them carefully and fairly in view of the purpose of the authors themselves.

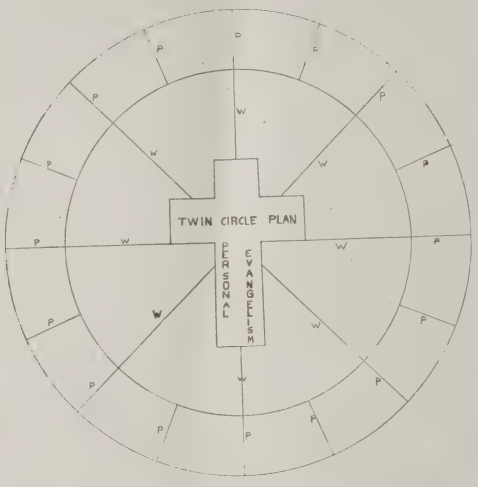
Comparatively few passages that we use as a means of forming our doctrine are of such unquestionable clearness as to indicate at once and on the surface their entire accurate intent. Most of the shorter passages we use are a part of a large theme no fraction of which, if taken out of its setting, can be wholly comprehended. This is particularly true of the passages that we so frequently draw from the Prophets, the Gospels, the Epistles and the Revelation; but it is true also of every passage in the Bible.

The vital importance of the rather obvious distinction we have made between the use of the Bible as a means of power and the use of the Bible as an aid in correct thinking will be seen to be real in the case of Baptists. A fair consideration will convince us that the distinction is pertinent to the thinking and methods of procedure we should adopt as we weigh any body of doctrine supported by many scripture citations drawn from books in the Bible often widely separated from each other in the purposed messages of the authors. While passages often seem to fit very logically together, we must remember that if we draw them out of their true setting we are mutilating the message of the inspired writers.

Some years ago I went into a famous studio where artists were at work constructing the most beautiful stained glass windows. Each artist had a picture upon which he himself was working. One man was finishing a picture of the Good Shepherd; one was working on a magnificent and costly window in which the stalwart figure of Martin Luther was central; one was constructing the beautiful lines of cathedral spires on a background of delicate clouds; another was making a panel of lilies; another, a scene in the Garden of Eden. Their work was in all stages of progress. I watched them for some time; for to me it was an intensely interesting process. As, piece by piece, the artist selected just the glass that would fit his purpose, I could not help being impressed with the thought that it was the artist's purpose that gave meaning to the many pieces of glass. Here in the picture of the Good Shepherd, for example, were many pieces of glass. I noticed that these many pieces might have been put together in a much different relationship and so have presented an entirely different picture.

This is a parable. The Bible is a gallery of masterpieces wrought by the most highly inspired artists of all time. The gallery is open to all. The pictures are preeminently for the profit of those who look upon them to feel their beauty and power. But if any would visit the gallery with a view to finding the prevailing message there, let them not construct their own picture by mutilating and taking fragments from the many, picture-puzzle fashion; but let them rather strive to know the unity of the entire message of each artist and from the sum of these messages find the unity of the whole.

A Circle of Communion and a Sphere of Service



By F. L. Currey

LET us thank God and take courage, that the spirit of evangelism is irrepressible. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." The work of redemption is the colossal work of all time. God is as willing and able to give us a great victory now as in the first days of the church. " The divine agent is always ready and ever operating." "It is the human preparation which is never adequate which has never been in any time or clime." Some one has said that God's power has affinity for willing workers. Our problem is to enlist the willing workers, and so coordinate the divine and human factors and thus produce a perennial revival of personal soul-saving. The double circle plan, which I will now outline, is not an untried theory, but one which has been successfully tested in a three months campaign by the writer, and in all my reading and experience I know of no better plan.

The inner circles include all the active members of the church divided into units of eight, and the outer circles include all the unsaved people of the community who naturally gravitate toward your church, divided into units of sixteen. You can adapt this plan to the smallest church, and it is also capable of indefinite elaboration to meet any situation in large and difficult fields. Let us confine our thought now to a single inner circle. The eight men of this circle have a great challenging goal, which summons them to a great devotion and to a supreme service, namely, the winning of the sixteen men in the outer circle to Christ.

The circle on this card fully illustrates the twin circle idea. Make your outer circle about twenty inches in diameter on light-weight bristol board and the inner circle about fifteen inches in diameter. Where the letter "W" appears on the lines of the inner circle write the eight names of the inner workers and where the letter "P" appears on the lines of the outer circle write the names of your sixteen prospects.

The men of the inner circle are a secret service organization, and meet once a week in the home of one of its members. The only officers are a secretary and assistant secretary chosen from their membership. They gather around a table, and with the double circle before them, the secretary assigns to each man in the inner circle two men in the outer circle, and explains that his special task is to win his men to Christ within the period of three months. It will be the duty of the secretary to train his men in the very best methods of soul-winning. The inner circle is a school of instruction in evangelism. Let us think now of just one man in the inner circle, who has been enlisted and fully instructed by his pastor and circle secretary. After prayerful consideration, as to his fitness, socially and otherwise, two men have been assigned to him from the outer circle. So to speak, he is to camp on their trail for three months in a supreme effort to win them to Christ. He is expected to cultivate a burden of soul for their immediate salvation, daily to offer intercessory prayer on their behalf, to meet them socially whenever possible, to invite and urge them to attend all church services, including Bible school and mid-week prayer meeting, and especially to make them feel at home when they are present at any church service. In a word, the inner circle men are trained as Andrews and Philips to bring their friends to Jesus.

May I suggest some advantages of the twin circle plan and note first, that it visualizes the primary purpose of the church. It enlists, enlightens and enlarges the workers. It is a summons to each man to bring his men across the line, which separates them from God. It socializes, mutualizes and individualizes responsibility for souls. It develops a team consciousness, which creates power, inspires courage and stirs to action. The vision, the faith, the consecration of eight men will become the possession of one man. Another advantage is very great, as you may hold your evangelistic campaign right in the middle of the three months twin circle campaign, which will splendidly prepare the church and community for your special meetings, and you will be fully organized for a successful conservation program immediately following the campaign. The last and best thing about this plan is that it follows the method of Jesus. He formed his inner circle of devoted men. This was his school of evangelism and when his men were fully trained he sent them into the outer circle of the world to make disciples and win the world to himself. I believe with all my heart that men and women, boys and girls, can be won for Christ by love and sympathy and it remains for us to provide new channels for the outflow of the grace that saves. "Plan for it, swing the church in line for it, pray for it, sacrifice for it, work for it, advertise it, clear the deck for it, believe it. Let God lead."

MASTER, be merciful to this poor, mangled World!
Is it not a frail, a passing thing at best?
Upon it how often come, in madness hurled,

Doctor Rushbrooke's Tribute to Doctor John Clifford

Address at the Memorial Service, City Temple, London, November 26, 1923.

I AM here at the request of Doctor Bloomfield the president of the Baptist Union, who, had it been possible, would have offered his own tribute on behalf of the denomination. He might have found a more eloquent substitute; but certainly none that could render more completely whole-hearted and single-minded homage to him whose memory we are celebrating. John Clifford was my pastor; my "father in God," to whom I owe "my own soul also"; my master; the friend who won my love and admiration in the days of youth, and held them in ever enlarging measure throughout the years. I saw in him as did others the mighty champion of great causes, the Christian democrat and tribune of the people, utterly fearless and untiring in his public activities. But I knew also, as perhaps few knew, the man behind, in the sincerity, the humility, and the overflowing generosity of his nature, its sunny kindliness and radiant hopefulness. In the study, the sick room, or the pulpit; in intimate personal talk, in the denominational council—even in the political caucus;—the same man all through, a character "without seam, woven from the top throughout." Never was a more intense devotion to Jesus Christ; the motto of his friend, Hugh Price Hughes, was his also: "Thou O Christ art all I want."

The Individual

Let me note without any attempt at completeness a few characteristics of the man. I would place in the forefront his intense interest in the individual. The spirit of him that talked with a woman at the well, that looked upon a young man and loved him, that checked a great procession for the sake of a blind beggar, dwelt richly in John Clifford. He preached with particular men and women and their special needs in mind. Through the long years of his pastorate he held sacred the hours marked off for personal intercourse with his people. I have heard him speak of his anxiety regarding this man or that, and could name one whom through a dozen years with tireless patience he strove to win for his Christ. What made him the comrade of Gipsy Smith in evangelistic effort? His profound sense of the need of personal reconciliation to God. What was it that stirred him even to a campaign against the "living-in system?" Direct contact with the results in the lives of men he knew. If he used the abstract term "humanity" it always meant to him individual men and women "for whom also Christ died."

Next I name his intense loyalty to conviction. He had as vivid a consciousness as any Old Testament prophet of a word that he must speak. No preacher ever set himself more simply to tell out the message entrusted to him, "whether men hear or forbear." Not that he despised such popularity as he gained; he was rich in affection for his fellow-men, and rejoiced in their approval and support. But he never trimmed his sails to catch the breeze of popularity. He reverenced his conscience as his God. How many men left him during the South African war, when his burdened soul could not repress its sorrow and indignation at what he deemed the shame of his country! Westbourne Park Church was financially enfeebled by its loss, and he felt keenly the desertion of some who were old friends; but far worse would have been the loss of his inner rectitude. He could not be untrue to himself; he dreaded the stain that none might know but himself and his God. Very rarely has a man of such tenderness repelled so many as John Clifford repelled by his prophetic passion for righteousness. I was a member of Westbourne Park Church for several years, and could name not a few who turned away to seek elsewhere a ministry they might "enjoy," and frankly confessed that they could not endure his searching of the conscience and his exalted ethical standard. No one could serve God and mammon, and be at home with John Clifford!

Let me add an immense charity, not always found associated with such deep and passionate conviction. Clifford in other ages could have been a martyr: I cannot imagine him an inquisitor! He could never have consented to torture the worst of heretics. He fought many a battle; he was "ever a fighter," but his sword was "bathed in heaven" in the sense in which Phillips Brooks' famous sermon understands those words. Utterly destitute of malice was John Clifford, incapable of making differences of conviction a ground of personal hatred; unfailingly generous in his judgment of those from whom he differed. The Down Grade Controversy never drew from him in public or in private one acrimonious word; indeed, he loved and reverenced his great opponent all the more because he recognized in him loyalty to conscience akin to his own. He was profoundly distrustful of schemes for organic ecclesiastical union; but never lived there one who could say more fervently: "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ." He might find himself deeply divided from a friend on some particular issue, but never did he so act that the friend became an enemy. The man is not born that could hate John Clifford, if he knew him!

> Every day is Judgment Day,
> Count on no tomorrow.
> He who will not, when he may,
> Act today, today, today,
> Doth but borrow > Sorrow.
> —John Oxenham.

Tribute has been rendered again and again to our revered friend's immense capacity for work. Speaking today as representing his denomination, I may venture to say that no one to whom British Baptists ever said farewell has rendered in the counsels of the denomination and throughout the land a service so prolonged, so varied and so effective. Already the Baptist Missionary Society has born eloquent testimony through Mr. Fullerton: the Council of the Union has not yet spoken, since its last meeting was the gathering interrupted by the home-call of Doctor Clifford. He was the last survivor of a trio whose fame is gone forth to all nations, and after Spurgeon and Alexander Maclaren had passed away he stood out as the greatest of living Baptists. He was the first president of the Baptist World Alliance, and at the time of his death its president emeritus, loved, admired, trusted, revered by his brethren over the whole earth.

He Preached Good News

I have not touched on his wide learning, or the extent of his public work—he was a great citizen, a great Londoner, and a great Englishman; or on the qualities in him with which others have sufficiently dealt. But this must be added. John Clifford preached the gospel, the good news. How could he refrain? How could he be aught but evangelical? Behind his ministry was a conversion that gave the tone and direction to his entire life. He spoke of it often and linked it with the singing of Doddridge's hymn:

> "The soul that longs to see My face
> Is sure My love to gain:
> And those that early seek my grace
> Shall never seek in vain."

No one knew this man that had not heard him pray. Yet tender and intimate as his public prayers were, it was in the quiet room with two or three that the richness and intimacy of his fellowship with God in Christ most clearly appeared.

It is privilege unspeakable to have known and loved him. He guided the steps of multitudes, as he guided mine, to a living faith in his Christ. Many that he influenced have passed on before. How rich must be his welcome on the other side, for he could fitly have adopted the words of F. W. H. Myers' "Saint Paul:"

> "Hearts I have won of sister or of brother,
> Quick on the earth or hidden in the sod,
> I.o, every heart awaiteth me—another
> Friend in the blameless family of God."

How to Grow Souls in Soil

By Brayton C. Case

THE Pyinmana Agricultural School is the first school of its kind started in Burma and its opening celebration Aug. 28, 1923, attracted a representative gathering of about 500 people mostly from the jungle villages around Pyinmana and the rural cooperative societies of the district. Among the visitors from a distance were Mr. MacKenna, the development commissioner for Burma; Mr. Wiatt, the mission field secretary, besides other missionaries, men of the agricultural department, U Ba Khin, one of the Karen Christian members of the Burma legislative council, and other interested friends.

Eight half-hour demonstrations were given in the morning, in which the students worked the various implements used on the farm, while Mr. Leslie Whitaker, the principal, went ahead and arranged each demonstration, and Mr. Case, the superintendent, explained in Burmese the advantages and uses of each. These ranged from the simplest hoe and weeder to the complex kerosene engines, tractor and thresher.

In the demonstration of plows, a new iron plow point with moldboard cast in one, which would turn over the sod as native plows would not and could be attached to any ordinary wooden Burman plow, attracted much attention. The cost of it was no more than the native plow point. Mr. Rollo, the government agricultural engineer, had recently invented it. In the demonstration of seeding, the broadcast seed sower scattering the seed over a strip forty feet wide, the hand-corn planter, and the Indian seed drill which distributes the seed through bamboos and plants it in rows of any desired width, were inexpensive and useful types of implements shown. Planting nursery-grown paddy one or two plants only to a set, was demonstrated as an improved method for getting a higher yield of grain than planting ten to fifteen plants as commonly done in Burma. A mowing machine, with reaper attachment drawn by oxen which would cut four or five acres of paddy a day in ordinary rice fields and drop it in small piles, was a great labor-saving implement over the sickle for farmers able to pay Rs 350/— for it.

A Needed Machine

A water lift of the Archimedes screw type, consisting of a double screw inside a wooden cylinder, was demonstrated as a simple device which could be constructed by any carpenter, and by its use one man could raise 500 gallons of water a minute. This should prove a most useful machine for irrigating rice fields and nurseries.

In the machinery building were arranged exhibits of bamboo and cane work done by the students; crops grown on the school farm, and of implements in use. These included varieties of maize selected on the farm, rice, gram, beans, sugar cane, and vegetables. Barred Plymouth Rock and White Leghorn poultry and Pekin ducks were also shown. One exhibit of special interest showed a pure bred Plymouth Rock rooster on one side, an ordinary Burman hen on the other, and in the center a rooster and hen the result of the cross. These were of the size and markings of the pure-bred bird, showing how one pure-bred rooster with a flock of mongrel hens could at once change the offspring and make them similar to the improved male bird.

At three o'clock in the afternoon refreshments were served to invited guests who had the opportunity to inspect the exhibits and students' vegetable gardens. Following this came the formal opening celebration of the agricultural school. The students of the school sang a number of songs and Mr. MacKenna, the development commissioner of Burma, was the first speaker introduced by Mr. Case, the superintendent, as one who had much to do with making the school possible by having given his support for it at some very critical points in its development.

Burmans Are Agriculturalists

Mr. MacKenna said that with 70 per cent of the people of Burma engaged in agriculture a school of this kind filled an important need. The whole country would look at this school and as it succeeded or failed, the agricultural education of the country would be affected. He hoped the school would keep in mind the need of making its instruction simple in character and the implements required to carry out its instruction sufficiently inexpensive to place them within the means of the average cultivator. In the past the mistake had often been made of trying to improve agriculture by introducing machinery which was too expensive and too complicated to be kept in use by the people of the country. However, it was to be hoped that one of the contributions of this school would be to turn out men in large numbers who would be able to operate and keep in repair modern improved agricultural machinery. Pyinmana is the center of one of the agricultural circles and a large government experiment farm would be opened here soon. He was sure the relationships between the agricultural department and this school would be most cordial and mutually helpful, and hoped the school could assist by growing the department's selected seed and helping in its distribution. He was here to express the interest of government in this experiment in agricultural education which so far they have not had the courage to undertake themselves, and wished the school every success.

Mr. Wiatt, field secretary of the mission for Burma, then spoke. He said that fifty years ago missionary societies would have considered that starting an agricultural school was outside the province of their activities. Even David Livingstone had been dropped by his mission board because he gave his time to exploring Africa in order to open up the country and expose the slave trade of the Portuguese. But things have changed, and today any mission society would be glad to claim Livingstone. Also in mission work it has come to be recognized that the agricultural and economic improvement of a people is related to its moral and spiritual betterment. The American Baptist Mission Society is also watching the development of this school with keen interest and wishes it success.

Mr. Case then made the following address on the work and aims of the school:

"This occasion, which marks the opening celebration of the Pyinmana Agricultural School, is to me personally a great and memorable day. Fifteen years ago, when I was a student in the University of California, the purpose came to me to come to Burma and start this agricultural school. I saw how scientific agriculture could change the desert into fields and gardens, and I desired to bring that knowledge to the relief of the farming people of Burma. It is through persistent purpose and the continued struggle of many years that on this day we celebrate the opening of this school. It is through the support of many friends, among whom are Mr. MacKenna, the development commissioner, and Mr. Wiatt, the mission field secretary who have stood for this institution at critical periods when its destiny hung in the balance, that we now have the opening to celebrate.

A Choice Location

"Pyinmana was chosen as the location for the school because it lies at the meeting place of the wet and dry belts where all the crops of the plains of Burma can be grown on its fertile lands It is also centrally located in the midst of the Burmese, close to the Karens, in contact with the Chins, adjoining the Shans and Taungthos, and easy to be reached by the Kachins and Talaings Being on the main railway line it has good communications with Upper and Lower Burma and with the branch line to Taungdwinggyi, it is easy for the people to reach us and for us to reach the people.

"The first class of the school started on the sixth of June this year. The students speak nine different languages and come from a radius of 600 miles hailing from Mergui to Myitkyina and Bassein to Karenni. The requirement for admission is to pass fourth standard in a vernacular school although most of the students have studied further. Practically all are sons of cultivators and most are poor. All the students wo on the farm from 6 to 9:30 in the morning and are paid one anna an hour. From 10:30 to 1:30 are classes in literary subjects, and from 2 to 4:15 classes in agricultural subjects and manual training. Our aim is not only to teach the knowledge of scientific principles of agriculture, but also to train character and teach new habits of industry which Burma so much needs. The uniform of our students is a bare back and a farmer's hat, and they are not ashamed to do any kind of useful work. We aim to teach the dignity of labor by making it skilled, remunerative and intelligent. We do not consider a student educated till his education has gotten into his fingers where he can do something useful with it. In the first year the courses aim to teach a student to earn a living with a hoe and a dah (knife); the second year with a pair of oxen; the third year with a hoard or flock of animals; the fourth year to operate and repair power machinery and manage a farming business. The students will be able to use their training with the simplest implements on the smallest area of land, or on a more extensive scale.

"As there have been no agricultural schools in the country there are no text books and no teachers available here, the distinctly agricultural teaching, aside from that of the superintendent and principal, at present must be given by men of the country selected for their practical ability in the different operations of farming. One of our instructors is a successful Burman gardener, another is a Burman carpenter skilled in making things useful for Burman farmers, another is a mechanic trained in Mesopotamia during the war. The only way to get instructors for the practical work, is to gather a group of men like these, each of whom knows his own line, and working with these various men the students will get a well-rounded training.

"The building in which we are now meeting is the machinery building and it contains two workshops, two classrooms and on the upper floor two storage godowns. The residence of the superintendent and dormitory building are under construction. A class-room building and another residence are included in the plans approved for the school.

The school farm contains 200 acres. This past year we plowed about forty acres with our Titan tractor, crushed cane and threshed rice and beans with the six-horsepower kerosene engine. We selected and tested maize seed obtained locally and planted thirty acres of it and intercultivated with oxen. Forty acres of rice were planted, some of it with a seed drill, and practically all the rice was reaped with an ox-drawn mower with reaper attachment. This cleared the land so quickly that we were able to harrow the ground and get a good crop of gram (chick pea) off the land after the rice was harvested, during the dry weather. The European moldboard plow reduces the labor of plowing and harrowing about one-half. The labor connected with the farm is being carried on largely by the students. In addition each student has a one-twentieth acre vegetable garden plot which he cares for as his own project. White Leghorn and Barred Plymouth Rock fowls and Pekin ducks have been imported and are being multiplied and distributed. The Plymouth Rock is especially popular being large in size and a good layer.

"Some extension work has also been started. The demonstrations carried on today are a sample of this form of work. Short courses in agriculture have been given and agricultural conferences held. The school desires to go out to the people as well as have the people come to the school.

"The Pyinmana Agricultural School is dedicated to the uplift of the rural life of Burma. In the past the education in this country has largely tended to take away the best life from the village. This school aims to train the young people of the country districts and send them back to their villages with a conviction that in them is offered a worthy field for their best talents, and there to share the scientific methods they have learned, and to spread the contagion of new habits and a new spirit for the transformation of village life.

"I tell the students that the future of the school depends on them. They are not only building up the school physically but they are building the spirit the school will have. However, the future of the school not only depends on the students and the staff, but also upon you who are its friends. If you believe in this school and the ideals for which it stands, it is up to you to spread these ideals and win for the school the interest and loyalty of the people outside. We in the school give our best endeavors to do our part, and we ask you our friends also to do your part."

At the close of the meeting the audience stepped outside where a British and American flag were draped over the cap stone at the front of the machinery building. Mr. MacKenna pulled a rope which parted the flags and displayed the stone consisting of a white cross carved with the letters 1923 A.D. and pronounced the formal opening of the school with the words: "I declare the Pyinmana Agricultural School open, and may much good accrue to this Province from its labors."

How to Avoid Blunders in Building a Church

By Emery B. Jackson

THE purpose of the department of architecture is to assist churches in the solving of their building problems. It advises committees how to plan for worship, for evangelism, for religious education and for social work. It hopes to arouse enthusiasm for church buildings that are beautiful and which will stand as worthy symbols of Christian faith and love.

The department prepares preliminary sketch plans at one-sixteenth inch scale, showing arrangement of church auditorium, provision for departmentalized church school, rooms for social and recreational work and the possibility of future expansion. It visits churches about to build or remodel, studies with them the situation and needs and assists in the forming of a program. It shows how the required accommodations can be obtained with economical construction. It gives information in regard to equipment and advises as to contracts. It helps in the selection of an architect and cooperates with the architect.

The role of the department is that of consulting architect. It does not prepare working drawings and specifications nor does it undertake the supervision of building construction. Stock plans are not furnished. On the contrary, the department approaches the design of every church building as a new and special problem and takes into consideration in its study all the special conditions of site, climate, local building customs and the particular uses of the individual building. The department gives the same careful consideration to a project costing $4,000 as it gives to one costing $400,000.

The department offers a unique service. It is not only skilled in church architecture, but, as a part of the church itself, is thoroughly conversant with its needs and purposes, and fitted to study the problem from the point of view of the church. Much time and unnecessary effort can be saved if a building committee will communicate with the department and obtain its advice at the very beginning when it is formulating its program. The problems which confront the committee at that time are of prime importance. An initial mistake in solving any one of them may bring a train of further errors, which are impossible to overcome at a later stage.

The first step is to submit to the department, on its questionnaire form, complete information in regard to the local church which will serve as a basis from which a special plan may be developed. The department will wish to know something about the community in which the church is to work. It will need facts regarding the site which is being considered for the building, and the character of its environment. It will wish to know the present membership of the church, the enrolment of the church school, and also the probable growth and the future program of the church in so far as that has been determined.

On receipt of this information, a careful study is made of the particular problems involved. Preliminary sketch plans are developed and sent to the building committee for criticism and suggestions. These sketch plans are revised repeatedly, or new studies prepared, if desired, until they conform with the final instructions of the church. When the plans are accepted, the church places the sketches in the hands of the operating architect who proceeds, under the usual terms of architectural practice, to make the working drawings, write the specifications and supervise the construction of the building.

The department has a large and growing acquaintance with the best architects in the country and is ready, if requested, to assist in the selection of a competent architect. The department will endeavor to name at least three competent architects for work in a given locality. It cannot be said too emphatically that a good architect should be secured for even the smallest building enterprise. A church should choose the best available architect and expect to pay him the standard fee. The attempt to obtain a bargain in plans often results in the employment of an incompetent architect whose plans are not designed to meet the needs of the particular church.

A charge of 1 per cent of the proposed cost of the project, as determined by the church has been established for the study of a project. One half of this amount is to be paid at the time the sketch plans are submitted and the remainder at the time the sketch plans, redrawn if necessary, conform to the final instructions of the church. This charge assists the department in becoming more nearly self supporting, yet it adds nothing to the architectural fee paid by the church. The building committee can arrange with the operating architect to deduct this 1 per cent from his usual fee, because the architect is saved the expense of making this study. Churches have made such an arrangement with representative architects throughout the country. Conferences at the office of the department are without charge. For those held elsewhere the department makes a charge at the rate of $25 each. Where conferences at a distance are requested, the department will also charge for the traveling and hotel expenses of its representative. Where several churches are visited on one trip, the travel costs are prorated. When the department is engaged to study the project, the $25 paid for the conference is credited to the church as a part payment on the 1 per cent charge.

Where churches have had architects' plans prepared for their building prior to coming to this department, the department, under certain conditions, may undertake to restudy these drawings, making studies to illustrate such rearrangements as to it may seem desirable, and writing a report in explanation of the changes it suggests and the reasons therefor. For this service the charge will be one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated cost of the structure. The department is organized for service, and operates without financial profit to itself. All connected with the department are on salary and receive no other remuneration resulting from the work done. The department is not supported by money from the home mission funds raised by the churches and it aims to be self-supporting. The study given to each project costs in nearly every case more than the fee charged, but the deficit is covered by the income from a gift.

Two Women in a Car

By Charles L. White

A FEW years ago I was riding in the train from Santiago to Havana. The car in which I sat was nearly empty, but it contained two women, whose faces I shall never forget. The first one sat in the seat in front. I was sitting by the aisle, she by the window. I noticed that she was examining the money in her pocketbook, which was well filled with lottery tickets but which contained less than a dollar in silver money. She was eagerly counting it when the door of the car opened, and a woman entered with lottery tickets which she advertised in a loud voice. The woman in front of me bought one for 25 cents, with suppressed excitement, which did not escape me. Her custom was to spend her earnings in this form of gambling, which is everywhere rife on the island. "Poor woman," I said to myself, "only the gospel will teach you the way of life."

A few minutes later, I strolled down the aisle of the car, and as I approached a woman in middle life, I noticed a Bible which rested in her lap. Seeing that I recognized it, she smiled, put her right hand on her heart, and, touching the Bible with the other, lifted it toward heaven. Just at that moment, the conductor, who spoke English as well as Spanish, approached and acted as interpreter. The woman told me this story:

"About ten years ago, I met a Baptist missionary, who told me where I could get the word of God for which I had been searching for many years. I purchased this Bible; have read it carefully every day since, and as a result of the preaching of that good man, I have become a Christian, and was baptized into the fellowship of a Baptist church." I recognized the minister who led her to Christ as one of the missionaries of the Home Mission Society. All these years she had been serving our Lord. She once bought lottery tickets and lived a gay and careless life, but when Christ came into her heart all was changed. I asked her where she was going. She said "To a new home, for all that is left now in my family is my son, who has gone to work in a sugar mill on a new plantation." When I asked if there was a church there, she said "No, not yet, and no Sunday school but when I reach there tomorrow, which will be Thursday, I shall go out immediately into the new town that has sprung up around the sugar mill, and invite the boys and girls to study the Bible. We will begin our Sunday school next Sunday, and according to the promises of God, it won't be long before some of these children will be Christians. We shall have a revival there; the missionary will come down to preach and then the children will be baptized, some of their parents will be won to Christ, history in Cuba will repeat itself, and we shall have a church." That is the way our work has grown from the beginning. She left the car at a junction from which she was to travel to her new home, where the experiences at Ephesus were to be repeated.

Let us hope that the younger woman has been led to Christ. If she was, she has been taught the charm and power of a personal trust in Christ. "In the morning sow thy seed and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

We do not live larger lives than our forbears. They took time for essential things. Driven by the modern programs we accomplish little or nothing in soul cultivation. The call of today is to spiritual introspection, to meditation, to prayer, to the quiet hour. Let each of us set aside a few moments daily to look deeply into the eternal realities.

The story of the recent exile of U. R. Haya de la Torre, president of the Federation of Students in Peru, sounds like a tale of the "inquisition." About a year ago an attempt was made to get the National Assembly of Peru to approve a concordat with the pope. This movement having failed, through the opposition of the students and others, the president and archbishop agreed to consecrate the republic to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Sr. de la Haya, who exerted tremendous influence both among the students and laboring classes because of his splendid spirit and leadership, succeeded in arranging a manifestation against this proposed consecration. During the demonstration the students and their followers collided with the government and clerical forces and five students were killed. Followed another demonstration at the burial of these heroes and Sr. de la Haya was forced to hide from the government authorities who had instructions to deport him. He was later imprisoned and after a short prison term was exiled. Landing at Panama he received a cable from the department of education of the Mexican government inviting him to serve in that department in coordinating the work of Latin American students for the promotion of modern educational methods. He has accepted the invitation and is at present in Mexico City. Sr. Haya was a teacher in one of the evangelical schools, so clerical influences attempted to involve the director of the school, Dr. John Mackay, and also Rev. John Ritchie director of an evangelical printing house. Orders for the deportation of these two missionaries were only withdrawn when the British minister intervened on their behalf.

SHOULD A MINISTER SMOKE?

There is a difference of opinion in ministerial and church circles over the question which heads this article. Many ministers indulge in the use of tobacco, particularly in the South, while a great many others abstain from its use for what they consider good reasons. Needless to say, the practice is either right or wrong, that is, either both lawful and expedient or lawful but not expedient. The writer, who holds the latter view, begs leave to state his reasons, partly in self-defense and partly in the hope that some brother minister who "is like a wave of the sea driven and tossed" regarding this question may be led to think it through and settle his doubts. For "he that doubteth is damned if he eat." Romans 14:25a.

There are three fairly plausible, but logically untenable, arguments in favor of a minister indulging in the use of tobacco. One is, "I like it." If there is no opposition, this motion carries the house—although it might be pointed out in passing that the same "reason" is advanced by those who indulge in practically everything that is undoubtedly wrong.

A second reason advanced is, "I can think better" or "I can do better work" by smoking. One wonders in this connection if George Bernard Shaw was right when, in his essay on "Going to Church," he wrote "Tea and coffee and cigarettes produce conversation; lager beer and pipes produce routine journalism; wine and gallantry produce brilliant journalism, essays and novels; brandy and cigars produce violently devotional or erotic poetry; morphia produces tragic exaltation (useful on the stage); and sobriety produces an average curate's sermon." This must have been written before the clergy began to produce smoke rings and good sermons! Surely a conception of stewardship which includes the body and mind along with other things must of necessity exclude the formation of any habit which makes it necessary for a minister to absorb a certain quantity of nicotine, caffein or some other drug in order to pull himself up to approximately his normal self.

The third reason is, "It puts me in the good graces of the men of the community who smoke, removing all embarrassment when I am present at banquets, etc., and making them feel that I am a 'good fellow.'" Yet in practically every group of business men gathered at a Rotary or Kiwanis club, may be found men who have never touched tobacco and these same men are frequently among the most popular in the city. The average man of today is sufficiently broad-minded to respect, in all good-will, the sincere convictions of the other man, and it is questionable whether any minister ever lost the respect of a man whose judgment is worthy of consideration, by abstaining from the use of tobacco. It may not be out of place to observe also that in most cases the kind of popularity which is secured solely by doing as the group does can be secured much more easily and quickly by relating unclean anecdotes—and it lasts only until the minister's back is turned.

Over against such considerations as these there stand at least three good reasons why the leader of a Christian congregation ought not to smoke. The first is the expense which the habit entails. Without reference to the cost in lung tissue and in the quality of the speaking voice in later life smoking burns up an astonishingly large sum of money in a short time. He who preaches a consecration to the point of sacrificial self-denial and giving until it hurts may well practice it. The fact that he has certain luxuries which are common to normal modern life and which have positive values for himself and his family does not justify burning up a dollar or so a week in an unnecessary and harmful indulgence of drug appetite without any beneficial return to himself or to others.

Second, the practice of smoking is sometimes an actual handicap in pastoral work. For example, much of the most effective and permanent pastoral work done by the average minister is associated with visiting the sick. Very frequently either the sickness itself or the diet and medicine required for its treatment renders the patient particularly sensitive to strong odors. Nothing can be much more disturbing to a weak stomach, or more incongruous to a soul hovering in the sacred twilight of the great shadow, than the strong, pungent, distasteful stench of tobacco exuding from every pore of a spiritual adviser.

Third, there is a strong body of sentiment in every community, backed by the mothers of small boys—and often by the fathers who themselves smoke—that is solidly against the influence of a minister who uses tobacco. To the conscientious pastor here is a paramount consideration. Even if he can see no objection other than this; even if these people are narrow, bigoted, ignorant and old-fashioned, they are his brethren in Christ. Does he have any right deliberately to cultivate an unnecessary habit which will cut him off from much of the influence that he would otherwise have? To do so is to ignore a considerable portion of the New Testament which deals with sacrificial living for others, obligations of the strong toward the weak and causes of offense. Cf. Romans 14, I Cor. 8:8-18 etc.

While we agree that "all things are lawful" let us also agree that a great many lawful things are "not expedient." And when we consider the question of this article not from the standpoint of personal privilege or selfish indulgence but of consistency, efficiency and spiritual leadership, there will be found very few things commonly practiced by Christian people more inexpedient for the minister of the gospel than the habit of smoking tobacco.

"WISDOM LINGERS"

Recently in a great city the pastor of one of our most famous Baptist churches engaged in debate with another clergyman on a question the chief point of which seems to have been something about the infallibility of the Bible. At least the papers reported that his opponent declared that he accepted the challenge only because of the presence of that word in the question discussed. The Baptist pastor lost the debate. Has the cause of faith in the Bible gained anything by this rather spectacular defeat? Would anything worth while have been gained if a different list of judges had awarded the decision to the Baptist pastor?

Apart from the wisdom of public debates over theological questions, a query concerning the wisdom of committing the cause of the Bible to the jeopardy of extreme claims seems to be in order. There are multitudes who believe in the divine inspiration, authority and trustworthiness of the Bible, who accept its statements as historical and not mythical, on whose lips the confession of faith in its cardinal doctrines rests without hesitation, who nevertheless are confused by this word infallible. What is infallible—the printing or the translation, the transcription? What about various readings in the manuscripts? If it is the so-called autographs that were infallible, none of these is now known to exist. Why contend about them? Is there not some better word than infallible? If the Bible is trustworthy why not say so and stop with that perfectly understandable term?

Almost every worthy cause from the foundation of the world has suffered from the zeal of its friends. The church of Christ today is fighting over again the battle against Gnosticism. No more deadly contest has ever been entered against Christ than is now being waged by those who, like Cerinthus, deny his supernatural birth. Why divide and confuse the ranks of conservatives by extreme assertions and the use of terms that invite disputation?

ON THE MARCH IN JAPAN: ADVANCING FOR CHRIST

John 4:35-36. (Missionary meeting.)

Material for this page furnished by Baptist Young People's Union of America, Edwin Phelps, General Secretary, 143 No. Wabash, Chicago, Ill.

Facts and fiction about Japan there is aplenty. A presentation of a few of both will create a new interest in and admiration for Japan as it has moved out from the clouds of mystery into a place of prominence among the nations —now one of the "big three."

More Ancient Than Rome

Paint a word picture of this land with a civilization 600 years older than the Christian era. The first thousand years are shrouded in myth. The second thousand form the gray dawn of history. On pages 1 to 7 of "Japan on the Upward Trail" you can find out all about the early days of Japan.

"The Land of the Gods"

Imagine having to choose between or conform to several religions, each with its peculiar appeal. Shintoism makes its appeal to the sense of beauty. Confucianism seems to inject iron into the blood. Buddhism adds the artistic to the culture of Japan. A very interesting account of these religions, descriptions of them, etc., are to be found on pages 109-133 of Fisher's "Creative Forces in Japan."

Replacing the Cherry Blossoms

Reveal the present extensive industrial condition with its problems of congested cities and labor difficulties. The old handicrafts and the quaint charm of the landscape are sacrificed to the god of industry. In terms of lives, the sacrifice has been even greater. On pages 66 to 77 of "Creative Forces in Japan" and on pages 133 to 137 of "Japan on the Upward Trail" will be found astounding truths about the industrial problems of Japan.

On the Downward Trail

Consider the former world civilizations which rejected the Christ and have passed their zenith. Ancient history tells about the passing glory of Greece and Rome. Perhaps you can look this up in your old school book and find out some of the details about it which will be interesting to reflect upon in considering this topic. Why not apply the same conclusion to the future Japan?

From Hermit to Host

Explain the advance that has been made since Commodore Perry knocked on Japan's door, 1853, and insisted upon shaking hands. From pages 7 to 14 in "Japan on the Upward Trail" you will glean some information about how Japan, the hermit, became host. Tell also of the uplifting force of the Christian message, as is manifest in the lives of so many of the Japanese people. On pages 155 to 157 of "Creative Forces in Japan" and from pages 65 to 91, "Japan on the Upward Trail" will be found some examples of the effect Christianity has upon the individual.

The New Heroes

Introduce some of the characters that have sponsored and accomplished this advance. Mr. Axling, in his book "Japan on the Upward Trail" tells in a wonderful way about some of these pioneer heroes and heroines. In the chapter "The Trail of the Pioneer" and up to page 57 of chapter 3, "Following the Gleam" you will find stories, which seem in a way like chapters of a fairy tale.

No doubt your pastor or the president of the woman's society has a copy of each of these books which you can borrow.

A Daily Reminder

We want to help every young people's society keep the Denver B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention continuously before its young people's society members for the next six months. Desk calendars (5¾ x 3⅜) like the accompanying reproduction, are being mailed this week. The funds available for convention publicity limit the amount that we can spend for this initial piece of advertising. Because of that, and the large number of societies, we can send only two or three calendars to each society.

We wish every member could have one of these on his desk or dresser. Any local that is interested in having enough to supply each one of its members can secure additional copies at practically cost, plus postage, 25 copies for 60 cents, 50 copies for $1.05, 100 for $2.00. Address B. Y. P. U. of A. headquarters.

Meeting Helps

Under this caption, beginning with the first issue of 1924, the B. Y. P. U. of A. column in Young People (senior department Sunday-school paper published by the Publication Society) will contain two sets of "helps," one for the devotional meeting of the Sunday on which the paper is distributed and the other for the devotional meeting four weeks later.

The "help" for the current week is a method of presenting the topic, "a last minute suggestion" as to how to "get across" the idea of the topic. Now we do not believe in leaders putting off preparation so late that this material becomes wholly depended upon by those who have a faculty for suddenly remembering after dinner Sunday that they have to "lead" that evening. To counteract that, this "help" is followed with another suggesting material bearing upon the topic four weeks later and indicating how the material might be used. This latter is not a discussion of the topic but a pointer toward helpful material. If you do not get Young People in your Sunday school, you had better rush in a subscription for your young people's society.

Lesson Notes for January 20

"MOSES CALLED TO DELIVER ISRAEL"

Lesson: Ex. 1:1-12:36
Golden Text: Heb. 11:24-25

From Goshen to Midian is a long journey but we have taken that journey between the last lesson and this one very much as Pullman passengers take a journey in the night without being conscious of the distance traveled. We left Jacob and his sons established in Egypt, we now meet Moses in Midian. The intervening space is covered by the last chapters of Genesis and the first two chapters of Exodus. Four lessons in this series are given to Moses, only one lesson is devoted to each of the other Old Testament characters. This indicates in a general way the comparative importance of Moses.

The call of Moses to deliver Israel is our theme, and we shall consider it under three heads, viz., the preparation for the call, the revelation of the call and the cooperation with the call.

Preparation

God is never in a hurry. It takes a thousand years with us to make one day with God. His week therefore is 7000 years, his month 31,000 years, and his year 365,000 years. With God it is less than two days since Christ was crucified. The preparation of Moses for his call took eighty years, but with God that was only two hours. Therefore measuring time by the divine calendar, God works intensively, but measuring it by our reckoning he works deliberately. The best things in the world of nature are the most mature. It takes 2000 years to produce a giant redwood tree, but less than six months grows a crop of cabbages. Diamonds are rarer and immeasurably more valuable than soft coal because they are older and have been submitted to a severer process of metamorphosis. When Moses was forty years old he thought he was fitted for leadership, but God had to send him to school for forty years more before he was ready. His schooling consisted of the academic learning of Egypt and the more valuable learning received in the school of experience in Midian. It takes both to make a real leader. Back of all the learning was the heritage of his race and religion, and interpenetrating all the preparation was the over-ruling providence of God. The more important the call the more prolonged the preparation. That is the rule of preparation for all great leadership.

Revelation

The revelation of the call of Moses to deliver Israel came through a humble bush on the hillside. It burned and yet was not consumed. Something gave the bush immunity. Moses' curiosity was aroused. He sought to investigate the cause of this strange sight when he was arrested by the voice which was to speak to him again and again in fire and plague, in law and ritual, in judgment and mercy. The burning bush was a symbol of the things to which Moses was called, it was a revelation of his task. He was to lead a people as feeble as sage brush and yet as glorious in their mission as the bush that burned without being consumed. He himself was revealed in that burning bush because though conscious of his weakness, with God he was to become a flaming evangelist and emancipator to his people. God was revealed in the burning bush as a God who though high and holy yet condescends to dwell with all who are of a humble and contrite heart. The cause to which Moses was called was also revealed in the light of that bush. It was the cause of justice, liberty, redemption expressed through poor human mortals who were to become immortal in their struggle against the oppression of Pharaoh. "Earth's crammed with heaven, and every common bush aflame with God; but only he who sees takes off his shoes,—the rest sit round it and pick blackberries." Every true leader is a man of vision.

Cooperation

The preparation for the call and the revelation of the call were completed in the cooperation of Moses with the call. Of course Moses raised objections. "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh?" was his first reaction, and his second was made of the same stuff when he begged off on account of his lack of eloquence. God met the objections, and Moses was man enough to yield the point and step into the breach as the human agent through whom God would manifest his power. The law of cooperation is God's method of working with men. He never gives man power to use independently. Man is but the wire through which the power is transmitted from the infinite dynamo. Moses was one of the best conductors of the power of God ever used, because he always knew he was but a conductor and not a dynamo except on one occasion when he lost his poise and claimed to be a source of power forgetting that he was only a channel. The dynamo must have the wire if the power is to be transmitted; the wire must be connected with the dynamo if it is to be energized. The two must cooperate.

A Blind Alley or An Open Highway?

By Eugene L. Exman

In his closing chapter in "The Debt Eternal," Doctor Finley recalls the time he lost his way on a snow-drifted road in the New York mountains. From a lad in a nearby farmhouse he inquired where the road would lead him. The boy answered, "It don't lead nowhere. It just goes up here a little ways and stops." A more fitting analogy to the religious education program in most of our churches and communities could hardly be given. As a result of inadequate leadership, an unscientific teaching method, a limited program, and meager equipment, the Protestant churches are following a road that "goes up here a little ways and stops."

Just what is the task that is involved in what we so often glibly speak of as religious education. Simply put, it is to develop the "Jesus way" of living in each individual. This means developing personalities so that in the complex of decisions each person is called upon to make in his active life, the right choices may be made. Further defined, it is the constant making of the right decisions in similar, recurrent alternatives—the forming of habits that are Christ-like. And when we talk of developing personality and forming habits. the field of endeavor largely is limited to the periods of childhood and youth, in the so-called formative periods.

The developing of leadership in the church with a view of all its activities as educational—even as Jesus said in his great commission—is a slow and limited process. A quicker way out of the present situation, and one in which all may cooperate, is the revision of the teaching methods in our church school and young peoples' societies. Better, perhaps, to say the obtaining of a real vision as to what the teaching of Christian truths really involves.

In an intermediate class the teacher spent most of the half hour in an attempt to get the boys to "pay attention" to the lesson. Most of us have been guilty of wasting our time and energy making a boy or girl fit into a system of truth, rather than applying such to the life and needs of each individual. We have been theorizing Christian living for the teen age group instead of helping them practice it. It would be folly for the football coach to limit his coaching to an explanation of plays by blackboard diagrams; likewise it would be unthinkable for a business executive to employ men but keep them out of the concern until they learned the theory of his business—he puts them to work and they learn by doing. I remember reading editorials in the farm journals my father used to take in which were presented the arguments as to why the boys should stay on the farm. But now we hear of all sorts of pig clubs, garden clubs, stock-judging clubs, and the like, organized and directed by the boys and girls themselves. Needless to say which type of endeavor is keeping them on the farm.

But She Furnishes Us the Blocks

Forbearance

My little son was kneeling on the floor
Building with blocks. I stood by to adore.
He smiled
And, blue eyes, trusting, loving, raised,
"You never touch things, do you, Mother?"
praised.

My little son will build his house of life
With press of outer things; a home, a wife.
Please, Lord,
Help me to satisfy his eyes
And—keep my hands from touching,
Mother-wise.

—By Daphne A. McVicker.

When Our Mother read this poem she looked off into space. Our Mother is very nice. She has sweet little waves in her hair, and they wave harder than ever when it rains. Our Father says he always knows when to take an umbrella by one look at Our Mother's hair. She is nice in every other way, too. There is nobody like her. Sometimes we look at all the other mothers on our street and we think rather dreadful things about them. It makes us snuggle closer into Our Mother's knees and add a little bit of a quiet prayer all our own when we go to bed that night, because we would really like Dear God to know how glad we are all on account of Our Mother. We keep supposing we had one of the other mothers on our street—oh, it wouldn't do at all! Dear God was very good to us. Danny and I snuggle closer into Our Mother's knees to tell him so.

Well, Our Mother saw this poem in Good Housekeeping one day. I read it over her shoulder. I whispered close into the sweet little waves over her ear: "That's you and Danny, isn't it, Motherest?"

Our Mother smiled her special smile. She smiles too lovely. You glow all up and down inside you just to see her do it. "Yes, it's a very nice poem," she nodded, "provided the mother furnishes the proper blocks."

"But isn't that what mothers are for?" I asked, most awfully surprised.

"Yes," she smiled (still special); "only, some mothers don't."

"Oh, me, oh my!" I sighed, for this sounded too upsidedown. I began wondering about Mrs. Next-Door-Neighbor. Was she furnishing blocks? "Are they special blocks, Motherest?"

Our Mother said they were. Very special. The blocks you build life of must be formed first of all in mother's hearts and mother's hands and mother's eyes, day by day, till you got to be old enough to do without blocks. It sounds int'resting! There's something new to hear almost every day, isn't there, if you keep your ears open? That's why I'm glad I'm still so little and young, with days and days and days of new things stretching ahead of me until I get to be a tired old lady like Granny.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of The Baptist.

Well, about those blocks. I said: "If only everybody knew it would be nice, wouldn't it? " Our Mother said oh yes indeed it would. Only they didn't. Half the mothers simply never—dreamed—of—furnishing—blocks. It seemed too bad.

"Have they names, those blocks to build life with?"

"Oh the dearest names! The clearest names! You can't escape them! You can't forget them!"

I danced on my tiptoes. Isn't life fun? Especially when Our Mother shares grown-up secrets. "What's the very first block, Motherest?"

Our Mother smiled: "I think it's called the Beauty of Holiness." Somehow it made me think right away of the stained glass windows in our church, or when the organ plays so deep that you know the angels are in church right around you. But I wouldn't have guessed how really lovely this all was if Our Mother had not gathered me up into her lap and said: "When you see the little twigs budding in the spring what do you think of, darling?"

"Mostly I think how amused God must be watching them get fatter and fatter."

Our Mother squeezed me tighter. I love living in a squeezing family. Some families don't, I find. "And when the organ plays in church what do you think of, Meg?"

I fished all around inside my head for an answer: "We-e-l--, I feel little and tiny, Motherest. Quiet, so I can hear right. Air is so queer, Motherest. Dear God made it so quiet, and then people fill it with noise. But organs are lovely noise, as if he was speaking in earthquakes and then in a still small voice, like the verse you taught me."

"That's the Beauty of Holiness," said Our Mother. "Seeing God. Feeling God. Thinking God. Being hushed and quiet and loving before him." Danny came nearer. "Then I've got it inside me too, Muvver," he said.

"Yes, precious," she said. But of course Danny's pretty small to have such big lovely things sprouting in him yet. But I suspect Our Mother has planted the seeds.

"And block number two?" I asked hurried, for it was getting near to a nap time.

"The Bible!" said Our Mother seriously. "Meg dear, who loves the Bible in our family?"

I laughed at such a queer, queer question. "You do!" I cried. "Why, Motherest, you know you do! I come tiptoeing up the stairs to 'sprise you after school and there you sit with it open on your lap. And the dearest look all over your face, Motherest."

"Muvver lubs the Bible!" Danny lisped.

"It's all inside your head, isn't it, Motherest? Every story of it, and every verse of it? I do just love those stories."

"I cwyed all 'bout Mrs. Lot," Danny sighed. "But she was too naughty."

"I love dear little Samuel, Motherest. You would have made him a sweet little new coat, too. When the Bible people are real and true to me, is that a block to build with?"

Our Mother nodded. "Prayer, too," she added. "Just what is prayer, Meg?"

"Telling God things."

"Asking him for things? Or thanking him? Or telling him?"

"Oh, telling him, mostly. You see, he's so int'rested. He was little himself, and I guess he's kept right on caring what children do."

Our Mother hugged me. "It's your most precious block, darling. Now tell me—what about money?"

How I laughed! Money is our big lovely family secret. Nobody else on our street seems to dream what a lovely magic thing it is. How it really is all Dear God's. Then he lets me have some, and trusts me to use it right. You see the secret isn't really a secret at all if you honestly know God and read the Bible a lot, for then you can't help but see why Our Mother and Father give back part of all their money to Dear God. It's a part called a Tithe. It's very int'resting how you do it.

Like this: Suppose you have a little pile of money. You add it up and divide it by ten. I guess that's why we have the "goes-into" tables at school, maybe. Well, when you've divided it by ten then you know exactly what you owe to Dear God. It's the nearest thing to being a fairy I ever heard of, for you can do the most unexpected magic things with God's Tithe. Places you could never go to, even if you lived to be almost a hundred, you can reach with God's Tithe right off!

Maybe it's a heathen in China. One of those dear polite heathens in blue cotton trousers and a pigtail. Well, you get sorrier and sorrier thinking how the poor child bows down to pray to a horrid wooden god. You don't want her to. You'd like to run over to China and say: "Get up, little heathen. Dear God loves you!" Only, of course, being so small and in school and everything, you can't very well make the trip; but God's Tithe can go!

If it's a quarter, it can buy a Bible which speaks Chinese to that little heathen. She'll be ever so 'sprised over Mrs. Lot and Samuel and the lovely Jesus stories. She'll just get to 'bominate that silly painted god. And God's Tithe did it, just as easy! Well, maybe the tithe will be a whole dollar, enough to pay a missionary for part of day to visit that little heathen. Nothing will ever be quite the same for that little girl again. Did you ever know such fairy magic? The really-truly kind that even little unimportant boys like Danny can "work."

Oh yes, Our Mother's stories about the tithe are our pet stories. If Danny ever gets ten pennies he dashes to Our Mother with one of them: "What's my tithe going to do, Muvver?" He just can't wait to hear! Neither can I! God's world is the reallest place to Danny and me when Our Mother puts her finger on the map and says: "Right here is a little boy" . . . We want to hear all about him. Our Mother tells us. We just love helping Dear God to save his world.

Our Mother says that the little Lord Jesus was only twelve when he said: "I must be about my Father's business." So we know he likes to have us beginning even earlier.

And now you know the blocks Our Mother has given us to build our life with: God, the Bible, Prayer, the Tithe. It seems so strange to Danny and me that the other mothers on our street don't give their children these blocks to build with it. We snuggle our faces deep into Our Mother's knees at night to thank Dear God we have her; so maybe if your mother knew all this, she'll give you our blocks to play with! For there's nobody in our town any jollier or happier than Danny and I. We flourish like the green bay tree, the Bible tells about. We skip like the little hills, for joy!

The January Mail Bag

I have always loved the word January because it comes from the Latin and means the month of Janus. Janus was a two-headed god of the early Romans, and he had two faces—one looked back, one looked front! Surely an appropriate name for the first month in the year, when we can't help looking back over the past year, neither can we help looking ahead at what is to come. I hope, among other things, that there may soon be a new contest in which you may compete, and possibly a new series of stories about some of the people who get us the things we eat and wear and use every day. It is always a great delight to me when your letters come, and I am going to share some of them with the rest of you, for that will be our "looking backward" part this first week in January!

"Dear Miss Applegarth,

"Thank you for telling me where I can find about 'Rubbish Heap.' I loved that story. Since you wrote to me our house has been on fire. It was very exciting, for it happened at night, with smoke everywhere and the neighbors carrying things out. It only burned one room badly, so we will get it fixed for Christmas. It burned our plants and melted our fireplace until you wouldn't know it. I stayed out of school the next day because I was nervous but papa went to work and mamma gave her lessons just the same. I was afraid for my kitten but he knew enough to run away. Then he came home. No more for now. Your little friend,

Agnes Arnold."

"Dear Miss Applegarth,

"Our Sunday-school teacher told me that if I wrote you about our class you would like it. I have never written before, so you must forgive mistakes. Our class has ten members and we did not know until lately that our teacher gets her party ideas from your page, but we have a very good time at her parties and now we know who gave them to her. Last year we had an India party and did the India games you wrote here for Young Reserves. I remember yet how we laughed at the one you play like Going to Jerusalem, only your way we couldn't sit down until we had told one new fact about India. Well some of us couldn't sit down at all. It was very funny and we learned a lot. This year we are studying 'Next Door Neighbors' in our mission club, for that is what we are. A class on Sundays, but a club in the week. One week I was Sotsi. Do you remember that story? I had a tub and washed a suit in it with a dirty idol and it spoiled the suit so that my brother (he was only my make-believe brother) cried. It was a nice story and we acted it out. Then we pasted postcards for our Chinese mission in California. It seemed more real to us. It must be very nice to be Chinese if Americans will only be fair to you. We thought you would like to know about our class. I am the secretary so I wrote. Could you write to us some time? I am

Your respectful friend,

Lois E. Woodward,

New York, N. Y."

One of the most astonishing things has happened to us, Young Reserves, for one of our own little poems was actually quoted on the front page of The Baptist a few weeks ago, in Killam's Kollum! We really had not supposed that the editors ever cast an eye on our page; but they do! They do! And poems, written to us they plop over in full sight of the wise grown-ups!! Well, here's another poem written to us—we don't know where it may appear next, but here it is for the present, anyhow. Don't you love it? Leonard is nine.

Spreading Christmas

He who reads the Young Reserves
Often painfully observes
How the people of the earth
Do not know that Jesus' birth
Was for them.

I have read these pages through
And I want to say to you
That no youngest Young Reserve
His title does deserve
Unless he's getting ready now
To go out with hoe and plow
To destroy the ugly weeds
Planting deep the gospel seeds
Through the earth.

All the stories written here
Challenge us to spread this cheer.
Let's be up and fight for right
So next Christmas may be bright
Through the earth.

New Year's Day in Japan

"Lo! housecleaning is here!
Gods of Buddha and Shinto
Are jumbled together
Out on the grass,"

a Japanese poet once wrote, for the greatest of all celebrations in Japan comes at the beginning of the New Year. It sounds rather like Christmas to hear that just as our boys and girls rush to feel their stockings early in the morning, so the Japanese boys and girls feel eagerly beneath their pillows to see if Takara-bune is hidden there! This is a picture of a Treasure Ship with the Seven Gods of Good Fortune on board; the ship is supposed to come to harbor every New Year's Eve bringing such weird rare cargoes as the Lucky Rain Coat, the Inexhaustible Purse, the Sacred Key and the Hat of Invisibility.

At four o'clock in the dark, dark morning the father of the family always arises, puts on new clothes, then goes to worship the idols on the god-shelf and the ancestral tablets, then he hastens to congratulate his aged parents: "Honorable parents, may you be as old as the pine and as strong as the bamboo; may the stork make nests in your chimney and the turtle crawl over your floor!"

This seems like a curious wish, but it is the height of politeness in Japan where the stork and the turtle are symbols of long life.

Meanwhile, mysterious decorations are stretched across the front gateway: on each side stand guardian pine trees between which is stretched a rope of rice straw. A number of little (and big!) objects dangle from this rope, such as a red lobster, a green fern, a budding leaf. These all have a deep meaning, and to the Japanese mind they say: "May the folks in this house live till their backs are bent double and their beards reach to their knees, like the back and the feelers of this lobster. And may they have as many children as there are leaves on this fern!"

Oregon Letter

By Leonard W. Riley

The Annual of the Oregon State Baptist Convention has just been issued. It contains the minutes of the associations which were held last April, May and June and of the convention, which was held in July. This makes the news contained therein somewhat ancient, but interesting nevertheless. There seems to be no real reason why such publications should not be issued more promptly. To do so requires immediate attention and some very hard work, but it is worth while. The statistics show that during the year reported the state convention had 169 ordained ministers, 116 churches, 16,654 members and 1,363 baptisms. Forty-six missionaries were employed by the convention. More recent information as to what is doing in Oregon is found in the Oregon Baptist Bulletin, which indicates that these Baptists are making

A Great Record.

Since January, 1923, $60,000 in gifts and loans have been invested by the convention in twenty-one churches and parsonages. These new buildings will add to Baptist property values approximately $375,000. Other churches, without the assistance of the convention, have made improvements to the extent of $50,000, and other building enterprises about to be undertaken will cost an additional $250,000. Five new churches have been organized during the year and the net gain in membership has been more than 2000. A real effort is being made by the secretary, Dr. C. C. Wright, and his colaborers to put Oregon at the top of the percentage column in the table showing the collections of the various states for the New World Movement.

Student Volunteer Convention

Great interest among the educational institutions of the Northwest has been aroused in the ninth international convention of the student volunteer movement held in Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 28—Jan. 1. Considering the distance, a large delegation went from nearly all our colleges and universities. Linfield College sent four regular delegates and five special delegates. In fact, this institution was the first to ask for credentials for special delegates. The expense for each delegate was approximately $200 and the funds are being contributed by students, churches and friends of those who plan to attend. The railroads are likewise being generous in the assistance granted to these delegates. It is interesting to note that the chairman of the executive committee of the student volunteer movement is our own Dr. J. C. Robbins, and that the chairman of the committee on convention arrangements is Prof. Kenneth Scott Latourette, a graduate of Linfield College.

A. M. Petty, D. D.

Few men are permitted to enjoy the right letters both before and after their surnames as is our beloved brother Dr. A. M. Petty. The first pair was given by his parents, while Linfield College and Redlands University vied with each other in bestowing the second couple upon him. Doctor Petty is about to undertake a special task under the auspices of the Board of Promotion and the Home Mission Society. On Jan. 1 he leaves to visit our negro schools in Virginia, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina. On Jan. 18 he will sail from New York, in order to visit the work of the Home Mission Society in Haiti and Jamaica and thence via the Panama Canal to Central America to inspect our Baptist work in Honduras, Nicaragua, Guatemala and San Salvador. He expects to be gone nearly four months on this trip.

In view of this special service, the readers of The Baptist will certainly be glad to hear something concerning the record of Doctor Petty. He came to the Pacific Coast in 1884 and spent twenty years as pastor of various churches, particularly in California. After a brief service as state evangelist in Oregon, he became secretary of the Southern California Convention, where for six years he did a remarkably fine piece of work. During this time the giving of that convention was increased from $3,985 to $25,000 per annum. In 1907 he became district secretary of the Home Mission Society for the Pacific Coast and continued in this capacity until 1913. One year was then spent as financial secretary of Redlands University, following which he gave five years of service as joint district secretary on the North Pacific Coast. For the past five years he has been one of the general workers of the Board of Promotion, in which capacity he is still serving.

In all these various positions of responsibility Doctor Petty has shown more than usual ability as an executive and as a platform man. He has made friends both for himself and the causes which he has represented on the whole Pacific Coast. Thus, for the sake of himself and his work, he is entitled to the appreciation of Baptist workers everywhere, and an additional obligation rests upon all to honor him in view of the fact that he is the father of Dr. C. Wallace Petty, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., and of Dr. Ray Petty, pastor of the Judson Memorial Church of New York City. Still another son is a successful surgeon in Los Angeles. Let us hope that Doctor Petty will have a pleasant and safe journey and return for many more years of efficient service in behalf of the Master whom he has so ably represented through all these years.

News Items

Hon. O. P. Coshow, Jr., of Roseburg, has been appointed by Governor Pierce as associate justice of the Supreme Court of Oregon to succeed Judge Lawerence T. Harris, who has held the position since 1915. Mr. Coshow has been a leading member of our Baptist church in Roseburg, Ore. for a quarter of a century, has twice been president of the Oregon Baptist Convention and is now a member of the board of trustees of Linfield College.

The pastor of our church at Albany is Rev. B. F. Fellman. His church now has a membership of 518. During the past twelve months 108 persons have been received on confession of faith. The pastor conducts a large class in Bible study which meets once each week during the fall and spring. For twenty years past in Omaha, Des Moines and Albany he has done the usual thing in leading the church choirs, as well as preaching the gospel. Doctor Fellman during the past year led his church in taking a positive stand against the "tongues" claim. On Dec. 30 special meetings began under the leadership of the Vom Bruch evangelistic party.

Rev. F. E. Dark, since resigning his pastorate of the Tabernacle Church in Seattle, has spent three weeks with the Arleta Church, Portland, in preparation for the dedication of their new building, and for the past three months has supplied our church at Salem. Following a series of stewardship sermons sixty-seven signed the pledge to tithe. For the next three months he has an engagement to assist Dr. F. A. Agar in his great work.

Philadelphia Letter

By Arthur C. Baldwin

The North District B. Y. P. U. has been conducting a training school for young people modeled on the summer assembly plans. For six Friday evenings study courses have been offered on the Bible, and early Christian history, missions, and training for leadership and Christian work. The faculty includes Pres. Milton G. Evans, Miss Edith V. Myers, missionary editor of the Publication Society, Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser and Rev. J. W. Elliott. It is reported that twelve societies have cooperated and the enrolment has been more than 100. It has been a stimulating and helpful series. I think I may add that the education board, Rev. J. W. Elliott, secretary, would be ready to operate similar training schools in other parts of the city. Why wait for the summer assembly, pastors?

Dr. Russell H. Conwell has completed forty-one years in the Temple pulpit. Many of his friends met at a dinner in the Temple to do him honor. The record of the forty-one years includes 7,000 communicants who have been received into the church, Temple University, with more than 10,000 students and three large hospitals, the Samaritan, the Garretson and the Greatheart. It is reported that Doctor Conwell is talking of retiring—from the lecture platform and the executive work of his various institutions—in order that he may give full time to his pulpit and its ministry. That is the only sort of retiring that Doctor Conwell knows. Why should a man who is only eighty-one years of age think of anything more? He will wait until he is old before he thinks of giving up his preaching.

Our Baptist friends over in Pitman are rejoicing in their continued and growing prosperity. They are among the many who realize that the new Delaware River bridge is going to bring an increase of population and opportunity, and discounting it in advance. They have just purchased a new parsonage and are dedicating it with a grand house warming on Dec. 13. Rev. E. Edward O. Clark is pastor.

Our friend, Harold Phillips, came down from Mt. Vernon, N. Y., the other day and addressed the ministers' conference on "Modern Aspects of a Young Minister's Faith." It was one of the most brilliant and illuminating treatments of modernism that the writer has heard in a long time. Non-controversial, irenic, discriminating, the paper revealed a wide research and careful thinking. The young minister was defined as one of childlike, teachable, receptive spirit. There are young old ministers, while some who are young in years may lack the docility of the open mind. We may read God's message in the rocks as truly as Moses read it on tables of stone. The Bible is not sun but sunlight. God is the author of its truth. Truth was incarnated in Christ. He has still many things to say to us. Science is descriptive, religion is interpretive and there can be no conflict between them. I wish that other conferences might hear this paper and that it might be put into print.

At the risk of being personal I shall speak of a plan that the Chestnut Street Baptist Church is now following. In cooperation with two large Presbyterian churches a monthly series of Sunday evening community services is being conducted. The great apartment house district, of which they are the center, has been canvassed and each resident receives a personal message every month. In the services themselves the choirs are combined, outside talent engaged, and a most attractive musical program and community "sing" enjoyed. The sermon is a serious, dignified, evangelistic message. I should not speak of this save for the hearty and remarkable response that the community has made to this novel method of religious approach. Congregations that have taxed the capacity of the auditoriums have appeared. It has seemed like a real spiritual awakening. The net influence of it appears to be that religion is emphasized and denominational differences are at a minimum. The spectacle of these large churches uniting has impressed the community. The word of Christ has found access to many who would have missed it other wise.

Pittsburgh Association

By R. G. Pierson

The outstanding event of the month was the twelfth annual banquet of the brotherhood on Dec. 7. About 250 were present, representing most of the churches of the association. Mr. T. H. Edmunds, the president of the brotherhood, presided in his usual happy manner. Mr. R. Harry Tully, jr., was the song leader. Music was furnished by the orchestra of the Mt. Lebanon church under the direction of Mr. R. E. Letcher. Special program features were solos by Mr. Tully and Mrs. Letcher. The guest and speaker of the evening was President Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester Seminary who spoke on "The Lure of the Regions Beyond." He called attention to the undiscovered countries in the realms of the intellect, the senses, the Bible, world peace and the Christian life. Doctor Barbour was at his best and gave a timely, heart-searching address.

On December 8 about fifty leaders of B. Y. P. U. work in and about Pittsburgh gathered at the Sandusky Street Church for annual conference. Dr. L. E. VanKirk, president of the B. Y. P. U. had charge of the conference. All phases of young people's work were considered. It was an inspiration to our future leaders as well as to those who are older in the service.

Ministers' Meeting

The ministers always have an interesting time at their meetings but the past two weeks have been especially so because the papers have stimulated lively discussions. On Dec. 10 Rev. N. Mecklem of Swissvale read a thoughtful paper on "The Reality of the Ideal." This paper showed that the author had read widely and had made a careful study of his subject. "Evanescent Church Membership—Its Cause and Cure" was discussed by Rev. Henry Madtes of Belle Vernon, on Dec. 17 in a very practical manner.

The ministers bade farewell to Rev. E. Paul Smith at a luncheon on Dec. 17. Rev. N. J. Mecklem, Rev. J. E. Darby and Dr. H. W. Ewalt, representing the laymen, were the speakers. Brother Smith has been pastor of the Library Church for three years. He goes to the pastorate of the First Church of Pocatello, Idaho.

Union Church gave a hearty welcome to the new pastor, Rev. M. R. Palmer and Mrs. Palmer on Dec. 11. The welcome of the church was given by Rev. G. S. Buck who has served as regular supply. The greetings of the South Side churches was brought by Rev. W. L. Sampson of the U. P. Church. Dr. A. J. Bonsall and Dr. W. C. Chappell welcomed Brother Palmer in behalf of the Baptist churches and the association. The Union Church is located in a section where it is necessary to do the institutional type of work. A Christian center is needed here. Mr. Palmer's pastorate has begun under favorable conditions.

Our efficient Religious Work Director, Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker, is emphasizing attendance at Sunday school by having the schools adopt the 90 per cent attendance standard. It is expected that most of the schools of the association will enroll. Pittsburgh and Cleveland are having a friendly contest. Several churches of the association have entered into the spirit of the contest and have challenged their neighbors—Coraopolis vs. Woodlawn, First Homestead vs. Mt. Lebanon, Sharpsburg vs. Sheraden.

Notes by the Way

Three of the leading churches of the association are still without pastors—Wilkensburg, First McKeesport and Bellvue.

Eleven conferences on evangelism in the Sunday school have been held recently in different sections of the association.

The First Church of Jeannette is rejoicing in the progress made since the coming of its pastor, Doctor Cober. On Dec. 2 at a large service of unusual interest a freewill offering was taken to clear off the indebtedness of the church. More than the amount needed was secured.

The Wilkensburg Church has pledged itself to raise its full quota to the New World Movement.

The Mt. Lebanon Church put on a campaign to underwrite the New World Movement pledge and the reports indicate the full amount will be raised and about $1000 above the quota.

The Bucknell University Glee Club will appear at the First Church on Dec. 26 under the auspices of the B. Y. P. U. of the First Church and the local alumni association.

The second annual meeting of the young people's societies of the Hungarian Baptist churches of this district was held recently in the Homestead Church. The churches of Youngstown, Ohio, New Castle and McKeesport were represented.

The dedication jubilee of the First Swedish Church of Pittsburgh was held early this month. In connection with this meeting the quarterly session of the Middle East Conference was held with addresses by the pastors. Dr. Olof Hedeen, executive secretary of the Swedish Baptist Convention preached the sermon of dedication. Doctor Chappell and Mr. J. H. Stauff congratulated the church on its progress and achievements. The church has been decorated throughout—electric lights installed and a new baptistry built at a cost of $3700.

Mrs. W. A. Carter and Rev. R. G. Pierson have been elected to the Board of Directors of the Association to fill vacancies.

At Elizabeth, Rev. Eugene Neubauer, pastor, a long desired goal has been reached—as many at the morning service as at the Bible school. Thirty new members have been added to the school.

Good reports come from Oakmont where Rev. D. M. Lenox recently began his pastorate. Seven new members were recently received. The church has voted to make an effort to raise its full quota to the New World Movement.

The Saltsburg church, Rev. L. L. Bradley, pastor, has been helped by union evangelistic meetings. All cooperating churches have accessions.

Detroit Baptist Doings

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

The Women's Society of the First Church has established a beautiful custom in giving a Christmas party for the consecrated women who through the long months minister so faithfully to the women and children of our mission churches, especially the foreign-speaking churches and missions. I cannot attempt to tell of all the distracting and discouraging experiences they encounter and so our big-hearted women endeavor to prove to these fine girls their appreciation and love because they think of them and pray for them as their representatives in those trying positions. The party was given at the First Church, Dec. 18. Mrs. T. T. Leete acted as chairman of the meeting. Representatives of the state and associational boards were also present. Doctor Gleiss looked in upon the happy company and had his say. Miss Alexander, directress of the Christian center (negro) was numbered among the appreciated workers. There were not only hearty talks of appreciation but also showers of gifts that will prove to be reminders of the love and sympathy of the women who so loyally back up all our mission work in this great city.

I should like to give a list of the gifts that the various departments and classes in our larger church schools contributed to the various mission schools but this would require a special number of The Baptist. Miss Harriett Cooper, who is the supervising missionary for women and children for the Detroit Baptist Union, is a veritable Santa Claus. She has a wonderful faculty for getting everything she needs for her many Christmas parties, and making the givers feel the choicest of Christmas spirit in their giving. Then, in turn, there are riotous times at her Christmas parties in the various mission Bible schools—white, black, and foreign-speaking.

The Immanuel Church held its annual meeting, Dec. 19. It was certainly a happy and harmonious occasion. Doctor Klyver came as the pastor about one year ago, coming at a real sacrifice, but appreciating the opportunity for service. The reports showed all bills paid and a surplus in the treasury, while in the way of missionary giving, the church had exceeded all former years. Then Doctor Klyver was dismissed—while the church voted him an increase in salary of $500 per year. The church was never in better condition. Doctor Klyver is not only highly appreciated by his congregation but is fitting helpfully into the larger work of the denomination.

Dec. 23 at the Woodward Avenue Church, the First Polish Baptist Church—as yet without a church building—held a baptismal and communion service. A member of the church presided at the great pipe organ while Pastor Rzspecki baptized thirteen converts in the presence of a large company of members and friends. A communion service followed at which Doctor Gleiss and Rev. A. S. Morze, of the Second Polish Church, acted as deacons. That new building must be built this coming year. A strategic site has already been secured and paid for.

At Northwestern Church, Sunday, Dec. 23, a fine program was rendered. Some weeks before Pastor White had asked his people for $1000 to help meet the extraordinary expenses incident to occupying their beautiful new house of worship. The offering was over $1500 and an equally generous offering by the church school for the spreading of Christmas joy throughout the city. The church is largely increasing its membership and Pastor White is beaming with good cheer.

Woodward Avenue Church held a "pledge redemption service" the week of Dec. 16, which Doctor Hoag testifies has proven to be a great spiritual blessing because there is abundant evidence that the church will finish its task. Since the plans for redemption day were made the sum has passed the $10,000 mark. This is proving to be the greatest year in the history of this wonderful church.

Dearborn, probably the most rapidly growing suburb of Detroit, is very much in the limelight. It is the birthplace and home of Henry Ford and the administrative center of all the Ford Motor Company's great enterprises. The Baptists have purposed for several years to be worthily represented there but other denominations had first located there so that until recently a Baptist effort has been unjustified. It has been on our program for five years but not until December, 1923, was it possible to make a purchase of property. A chapel, located south of the M. C. railway, in the rapidly growing residential section, will be erected at once. Rev. S. W. Phelps, late of Milwaukee, Wis., is pastor of the new interest and is enthusiastic as to its future.

In February, the board of managers of the American Baptist Home Mission Society will hold its mid-winter meeting in Detroit. At the same time, the coordinating committee of the foreign-speaking conferences will gather here. It is expected that our Baptist pulpits in and about Detroit will be filled by visiting notables. We are delighted to have our brethren come and look us over. Since the great cities have come to be the strategic missionary centers of our country, Detroit has developed into a real missionary field. We call it a home missionary field but it contains some of the most complicated foreign missionary problems in the world—fifty-seven varieties.

Christmas was beautifully and fittingly observed in all our churches and Bible schools. The spirit of giving rather than receiving was emphasized as has been our custom for years. As a result the holiday season has been a most happy one.

VERMONT

The Continuation Campaign, under the leadership of Mrs. George W. Peck, jr. of Rutland, is well organized in Vermont. At the Loyalty luncheon held in Burlington in November a large number of women from all over the state were inspired by the addresses given by the members of the luncheon "team" and helped by the practical conference which was conducted. Mrs. W. B. Smith, associational director for Windham Association; Mrs. Olin D. Gay, director for Woodstock Association; Mrs. E. J. Seamans, director for Shaftsbury Association; Mrs. W. A. Davison, director for Lamoille Association; Mrs. Rex. A. Fullman, director for Vermont Central Association and Mrs. C. E. Gould, director for Danville Association have secured a leader in each church and have distributed through these church leaders the "might boxes" which are being used. One church has already sent in to the state convention office its full continuation campaign quota. The associational directors have also arranged echo luncheons which have been held at Brattleboro, Bellows Falls, Saxton River, Chester, Ludlow, North Bennington, Newport, St. Johnsbury and Montpelier, so that now practically every church has been reached with the inspiration of the Loyalty luncheon held in Burlington in November.

THE LAYMEN, WITH HON. HENRY BOND as chairman of the laymen's evangelistic committee, are well-organized and busily engaged. Mr. Bond has secured the following state committee, made up of one layman from each association: Windham Association, Carl S. Hopkins of Brattleboro; Woodstock Association, Olin D. Gay of Cavendish; Shaftsbury Association, George H. Steward of Rutland; Addison Association, F. R. Dickerman of Bristol; Lamoille Association, Harry L. Ford of Burlington; Vermont Central Association, Rex A. Fullman of Montpelier; Danville Association, J. H. Blackburn of Newport. These associational chairmen have in turn secured a church chairman in each of the churches of their associations. During the past two weeks a conference, arranged by the associational chairman in each case, has been held at Brattleboro, Chester, Rutland, Vergennes, Burlington, Montpelier and St. Johnsbury. A spirit of earnestness has characterized each of the conferences. To each conference the pastor and chairman in each church in the association were invited, the state convention paying all traveling expense and also for the luncheon with which each conference began. Mr. Bond, with the state secretary, conducted each of the conferences. The plan decided upon in each conference was (1) to get individuals to make a list of those for whom they will pray definitely, handing these lists to the pastor, (2) to hold group prayer meetings, called by the pastor, of those who have handed lists to the pastor, and (3) to hold in different sections of the town, village or city cottage prayer meetings, perhaps leading up to a series of evangelistic meetings. At each of the conferences the matter of the collection of the New World Movement pledges was also discussed. It was voted unanimously by each group not to put on the drive for mission funds for 1924-25 until the second Sunday in May, it being the opinion that people who had not paid their New World Movement pledges would not make new pledges. Emphasis was laid on collecting present pledges and then, when they are out of the way, getting new pledges for the year 1924-25.

THE FUNERAL OF REV. J. MERVIN HULL, well known writer for our denominational papers and a man of unusual culture and scholarly attainments, occurred at Ludlow, his native town, on Dec. 14. Mr. Hull was baptized into the fellowship of the Ludlow Church in 1867 and was graduated from Black River Academy in 1873, from Middlebury College, with honor, in 1877, and from Newton Theological Seminary in 1880. Upon graduation from the seminary, he married Miss Abbie L. Fuller of Ludlow, and then began his pastoral work at Windsor, where he was also chaplain of the state prison. Throughout his pastorates in this and other states, as well as the time in recent years when he has devoted himself to writing, his unselfish service for others won and held a large circle of friends, whose sympathy is with Mrs. Hull in her bereavement.

THE FRIENDS OF REV. E. E. ENO of South Londonderry will be sorry to learn of his illness, and hope for his speedy recovery.

REV. H. B. RANKIN, pastor of the First Church, Newport, since 1911, has tendered his resignation and closed his work on that field in order to accept the call to the Ludlow Church, where he is now happy in his work. During Mr. Rankin's pastorate at Newport practically a new church edifice was built in 1917-18, the missionary benevolences have been increased threefold and an endowment fund of $9,000 established. Pastor Rankin has been able to maintain a worth-while prayer meeting, and a Baptist consciousness has been created and a spirit of united action begotten among the various denominations of the community. Mr. Rankin has been a leader along all lines of helpful work for the boys in the community. The churches and people of the city showed their appreciation of Pastor and Mrs. Rankin in various ways: First by a union service in the Baptist Church on Sunday evening, Nov. 25, with Pastor Rice of the Congregational church presiding. Rev. F. E. Davison, a Congregational minister, Pastor Martin of the Methodist church and Rev. J. H. Blackburn of the Main Street Baptist Church, brought greetings from the other churches and spoke of how helpful the life and service of Mr. Rankin had been. On Monday, Nov. 26, the community gave a reception to Pastor and Mrs. Rankin in the Armory. Mr. H. S. Root, the oldest citizen of Newport City, presided, and Judge Frank Williams delivered an address and presented Mr. Rankin with a purse of $130. On Friday evening, Nov. 30, the church gave a reception, at which addresses were made by the local pastors and ex-Governor Josiah Grout. Mr. Carroll Huntington, in behalf of the B. Y. P. U., presented Mr. Rankin with a gold fountain pen, and in behalf of the members of the church a gold ring with ruby setting, and Mrs. Rankin with a purse of money. Mr. Rankin is a member of the board of trustees of Vermont State Convention, of the board of directors of the state Y. M. C. A. and other denominational and interdenominational organizations. All are glad to have him remain in the state, and the Ludlow people are fortunate in having him for pastor. Mr. Rankin's removal leaves one of our best churches pastorless, but affords an opportunity for some other good man to take up the work with a splendidly equipped church.

THE MANY FRIENDS IN VERMONT of Mrs. F. S. Tolman, wife of Dr. F. S. Tolman, formerly pastor at West Rutland, St. Johnsbury and Randolph, but now residing in New York, will be grieved to learn of Mrs. Tolman's death at the home of her sister, Miss Bertha H. Conery, in Read's Ferry, N. H., on Nov. 10. Mrs. Tolman was a consecrated Christian woman and a faithful and able helper to her husband in the different fields where he labored.

REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, pastor at Brandon, has tendered his resignation and closed his work on that field. The church unanimously voted him the use of the parsonage until he finds another field or they find another pastor, and also as unanimously voted him one month's salary. Brandon is one of our most beautiful villages, on the Rutland Railroad. The church can pay a man a fair salary and give him a comfortable house with all conveniences in which to live, and a good field for aggressive work.

THE CHURCHES AT READSBORO, Townshend and South Strafford are all at the present time looking for a good man to become pastor. Each field will call out the best there is in any man.

MISS KATHERINE ALDRICH, who has been the faithful and efficient worker among the Italians at Barre, has tendered her resignation to take effect Jan. 1, because of ill health. She hopes to remove to the South. It is hoped to find another worker at once to take her place in this mission among the sons and daughters of sunny Italy.

RHODE ISLAND

PROF. HENRY WRIGHT OF YALE University recently held a two days' conference at Brown on personal evangelism. Five sessions were held, a group of twenty carefully selected men attending all the sessions.

PRESIDENT FAUNCE WILL MEET the alumni of Brown University in Chicago on Friday, Feb. 22. On Sunday, the twenty-fourth, he will preach at the University of Chicago in the morning and speak at the Sunday Evening Club in the auditorium on Sunday evening. Monday afternoon he will address the ministers of the Chicago Federation of Churches.

MANY OF THE RHODE ISLAND CHURCHES have made a notable record this fall in their schools of missions. The secretary had the joy of speaking to the men of the South Church school on its closing night. This school has maintained an average of 142 for the six weeks' term, the high-water mark being reached when 217 were present at a single session. The large proportion of young life in the school was an outstanding feature. The school at the Fourth Church, under the leadership of Dr. Frank L. Wilkins, is going strong. The attendance has been large and interest sustained. The night the secretary lectured on "Picturesque Japan," an appreciative audience greeted him. Two other schools are making a notable contribution to the missionary intelligence and interest of Rhode Island Baptists; they are the First and Calvary church Chautauquas. It has been the happy privilege of the secretary to visit both these schools and lecture to the assemblies.

THE LITTLE PASTORLESS CHURCH at North Foster has been visited by a refreshing revival. Assisted by earnest pastors and the secretary, Colporter Watt carried on a series of meetings. The response was eager, indicating that the living Lord was in the midst. One after another of the seekers entered Christ's school. Sunday, Nov. 25, in the presence of an audience which filled the church, Colporter Watt baptized eight, among them a husband, wife and two children, in a baptistry which Mr. Hammond, a state senator and the husband just referred to had built with his own hands. The baptism was followed by the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, in which the deacons of the North Sterling church served the emblems. It was a tender memorial service, which witnessed the reconsecration of more than one life to Christ. The little church now has thirteen members, eleven having been added by baptism and letter. Another series of meetings are in progress at Nooseneck; in these Messrs. Parsons, Buker, Cooper, Green and Swift have given valuable assistance.

Rev. Raymond W. Cooper of Pawtuxet gave two weeks recently to the Mt. Pleasant Church in special meetings. They proved a season of refreshing in the presence of the Lord. Thirty-eight made choice of Christ as Saviour and expressed a desire to follow him in baptism. The whole church has been vitalized. Pastor Cooper won a host of friends by his genial spirit, and his unwavering confidence in God.

An event of more than ordinary interest to Rhode Island Baptists was the reception tendered Rev. W. T. Green of Natick on the thirtieth anniversary of his ordination anl also his call to the parishioners, representatives of organizations with which Mr. Green is identified, and a host of friends. All joined heartily in the effort to pay a worthy tribute to this much loved minister. A unique feature of the program was the rendering by the same choir, even to the soloists. of the very anthem which was sung at the ordination service of Mr. Green thirty years ago. High tribute was paid to the character of Brother Green and to his devoted services to the church and community. As an expression of their love for their pastor, the Natick Church presented him with a membership certificate in the pension fund of the ministers' and missionaries' board.

MASSACHUSETTS

Two important luncheons have recently been held in the Ford Building. The first was in the interest of the drive just started for the New England Baptist Hospital. The project is fully organized for effectively covering the churches through the pastors and select laymen. The leading spirit is Mr. Albert H. Curtis. chairman of the executive committee. His lieutenants have established headquarters in the Ford Building. and it is a busy place. $40,000 is the figure. A modest amount since Baptists began to think and talk in millions. The other luncheon was in the interest of the Bible and missionary conference. Doctor Heath presided. Secretary Floyd L. Carr was the livest sort of a promoter. He filled the 150 ministers present with information and enthusiasm, and clarified the elaborate arrangements made for reaching the great objective. We are looking for a large assembly in the First Church, Cambridge, early in January.

Rev. Walter Woodbury acccepts the call to Melrose, first church. Pastor Woodbury will give strong leadership, and intelligent competency in Baptist enterprises will be felt.

Rev. William Grimes has been publicly welcomed to the pastorate of the church at Danvers. Mr. Grimes comes from the Methodists. having been baptized by Doctor deBois at the First church, Boston, about a year ago. He gives promise of making an earnest, able and tactful bishop of a Baptist church.

Rev. H. C. Abbott, of the Maplewood Church. Malden, is doing a work that attracts attention. He had solved two problems that often baffle the average minister—the Sunday evening service and the prayer meeting. He has specialized on the prayer meeting: that is the fire under the boiler. and keeps everything in church and Sunday school in full and energetic efficiency. Everything seems quiet and undemonstrative as it goes and grows.

Rev. Harry J. Moore has been long enough at First Church. Wakefield, to demonstrate his fitness for such a large task. He too has made the evening service the strongest in the town. He is an incisive and arresting preacher, with an objective, and courage to reach it; and the people are finding it out.

NEW YORK

Evangelist George R. Stair, 17 Lansing Ave., Troy, has concluded three campaigns at Saco, Washburn and Presque Isle, Maine, all of which were most successful in results. The first of the year he went to Alton, Ill. after which he will conduct campaigns at Brunswick, Rockland and Mars Hill, Maine, Winchester, Ill., Central Y. M. C. A., Chicago and Kalamazoo, Mich. The interdenominational Ministers Association of Aroostook County, Maine has invited Evangelist Stair to conduct ten campaigns in as many centers, during June to September. On this trip he will be accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Dr. C. S. Savage of Rochester, N. Y., has been engaged as acting pastor of the First Church, Adrian, Mich. He will begin his services Jan. 6. Rev. T. J. Hopkins of the Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, was until recently the pastor.

Rev. Homer F. Yale, who has been in educational work for a number of years, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Valois.

At the annual business meeting of the First Church of Livonia, Friday, Dec. 14, the reports from all departments showed the past year to be one of the best in the history of the church. There remains just a little on the New World Movement pledge, and the church confidently expects to meet its pledge in full. The membership of the church during the past two years of the pastorate of the Rev. Arthur E. Cowley has increased over 20 per cent. The pastor has been scoutmaster of the community boy scouts for two years and last summer was the principal of the community daily vacation Bible school.

The First Church of Auburn celebrated the greatest day in its history on Sunday, Dec. 9. It was the occasion of a new method of finances in the work of the church. One year ago the church discarded the old method of an every-member canvass. and decided to put its work on the scriptural basis. No longer will the people be called upon by members of a canvassing committee. The scriptural method is that every member should bring in his or her own pledge, voluntarily, on the basis of stewardship. After a careful educational campaign, the first effort was crowned with success one year ago, the church raising over $11,000, an increase of $4,000 over the previous year. This year the same method of bringing-in was adopted and after a much shorter educational campaign the church brought in over $17,500 for the work of the church. The method is a simple one. At the front of the church is placed a small model "storehouse." After a message from the pastor, the entire congregation marches past the storehouse, singing, and each one deposits his own pledge in the storehouse. The most marked increase is in the number of subscribers. Two years ago, under the canvassing, 152 subscribers were recorded. Under the new method, nearly 400 are regular givers. The membership of the church is about 500. The church is under the leadership of Rev. Harold N. Geistweit, the son of Dr. W. H. Geistweit of Dayton, Ohio. Mr. Geistweit came to the church two and a half years ago, and the entire organization and work has been completely transformed. The church is now open every day and every night, with a special program every evening for young people, a story hour for children every Thursday afternoon, and a special hour for children and grownups on Friday afternoons. The church has a full-time secretary, who began her work this fall. A program of rebuilding has just been completed, calling for the transformation of the entire educational plant and the equipping of a complete recreation hall. The budget of the church has been increased from $5,800 to $17,500 this present year. The missionary pledges have increased from $1,200 to nearly $4,000. In early November ten days of evangelistic meetings were held, with Dr. W. H. Geistweit as the evangelist. The meetings resulted in a marked spiritual life. The church has never been in such strong condition as it is now. The pledges to the New World Movement will be entirely paid by next April, and it is expected that the church will more than double its pledges to missionary activity.

Rev. A. B. Mercer, Niagara Falls, has had the joy of baptizing over seventy-five converts, the result of a union evangelistic campaign. Twenty-two of these were husbands and wives.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The conferences and loyalty banquet held at First Church of Wilkesbarre, (Pastor Reush), the metropolis of the great anthracite region, and center of something like 200,000 people, were well attended last month. The teams included Doctors Russell, Steward, Sears, Secretary Detweiler, and Mrs. Wayne Smith as special speakers for the occasion. While much interest was created in the Northern Baptist Convention's general missionary work, it was natural in this region that Secretary Detweiler's report of the adoption, and gradual development of the new Haiti mission field, should have a special attraction for local pastors and representatives of both Welsh, and English associations—for it was from here the Rev. L. Ten Evans, leaving one of the finest, and most active missionary churches, launched forth as a pioneer missionary, and superintendent of this important missionary enterprise of giving the Gospel to, and pleading everywhere for the practically 3,000,000 Christless negroes of the Caribbean sea, close to these American shores. Those present rejoiced at the fact of this strategic field being at last annexed to our A. B. H. M. S.'s already wide territory, and sincerely pray that much success will follow Doctor Hovey, and Secretary Detweiler's wise, and aggressive leadership.

Monday evening, Dec. 3, one of the largest and most representative parting receptions tendered Rev. and Mrs. Edwin Aubrey its "godspeed" with deep regret. Ten years of conspicuous success as pastor and missionary workers at Immanuel Baptist Church of Edwardsville and throughout this section, has been the record until the break-down of Mr. Aubrey's health. Presentations were made by the women to Mrs. Aubrey, and by the young people of a Schofield's Bible with gold lettering to Rev. Aubrey.

The Sacred Singing Festival emphasized by Lloyd George on his recent visit as characteristic of the Welsh folks, has just been held. A revival of Welsh singing is the precursor of a revival of spiritual religion in the heart. Hence, the North East Pennsylvania Welsh Baptist Association made a wise move, and was happy in its selection of Brethren Anwyl, Jones, and Griffiths, as musical committee to select appropriate hymns, and arrange for local ministers, to translate from Welsh to English, and the reverse to suit present-day conditions. The festival becomes an annual institution, of the North East Pennsylvania Welsh Baptist Association.

Lewistown and Lockport churches, Rev. Thomas Phillips, pastor: A new building of the Lockport Baptist Church is now in course of erection. This is located a mile and a half from the previous location and in the community of Lockport. It will serve as a community church and expects to hold dedicatory services at the close of this month. The building will cost about $7,000, and is admirably adapted for community service. Pastor Phillips of the Lewistown Church is encouraged over large attendances that greet him at the morning and eevning services. A young people's society, with an attendance of nearly 100, gathers each Sunday night, many of them remaining to the church service. This church is hoping to realize fully 100 per cent on its pledges to the New World Movement.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Mrs. C. Walton of St. Davids, Philadelphia, has given a sum sufficient to furnish the day nursery at Rankin, in honor of the late Mrs. Reuben Mapelsden, who was so much interested in the center. The room will be named after her. Books for the library at the Rankin Center are also neeled.

ILLINOIS

Gilman Church has called A. J. Graham of Moody Bible Institute as student pastor. He has been preaching there acceptably for some time. The church also plans for evangelistic meetings during the holidays with the assistance of Moody men. The spirit of a church which leads its members to life service is very commendable.

Chatsworth, until recently served by Rev. S. L. Buchanan, now of Benson, is not a large or wealthy church but is is rich in its contributions to the workers of the kingdom. One of its former pastors, George Woodly, is a missionary in Africa, another of its sons, Rev. Fred Harris, is pastor at Sublette, Ill., and two more of its number, Miss Irene Askew and Alfred Snell are now in school preparing for life service. The district superintendent, Rev. J. W. Merrill, recently baptized five into the fellowship of the church.

Chenoa will dedicate its rebuilt house of worship on Jan. 6. Dr. A. E. Peterson, Rev. J. W. Merrill and Rev. L. C. Taylor will assist in the dedication. Rev. Frank Woodhull a former pastor will also be present and follow with evangelistic meetings.

Lexington has located a student pastor in the person of Rev. Andrew Carlson of the Northern Seminary. He is getting a good hold on the church and community. This church has spent several hundred dollars outside and inside of its building and now has a finely renovated house of worship.

Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Holbrook of Warren, Ind., assisted Pastor J. S. Brinkman in a revival meeting at Roodhouse. While the visible results were not large, the good seed was sown to bear fruitage in the days to come.

The church at Carrollton is looking forward to the erection of a new church edifice. Recently a helpful revival was conducted by the pastor. Rev. J. A. Carwile.

District Superintendent N. J. Hilton assisted Rev. R. E. Carney of Kane in special meetings. During the meetings ten were received for baptism and a number came in by letter, a total of twenty-eight professions and renewals.

Evangelist L. C. Bauer of White Hall is holding a revival meeting with the Bethel Church in the Greene-Jersey Association. Rev. B. F. Drake of Palmyra is pastor of the church.

Rev. J. J. Schuler recently baptized two candidates at Bunker Hill. The church will put on a thorough every-member canvass.

A ten-day revival meeting was conducted by Rev. T. O. McMinn with the Beach Grove Church. The meetings are being continued by the pastor, Rev. T. H. Evans, with good interest.

Rev. T. O. McMinn is assisting Rev. J. H. Blythe in meetings at Boskydell, four miles south of Carbondale. The outlook is encouraging for a successful meeting.

Rev. Wm. Coleman is assisting Rev. Orville Hendrickson in special meetings at Cambria.

Revs Orin Copher is engaged in a series of meetings with the Palestine church, four miles north of Benton. A fine interest is being manifested. Mr. Copher is pastor of the church.

Pastor G. M. Milford is in a series of meetings with his church at Hillsboro..

Rev. W. E. Anderick has closed a successful pastorate at Manistee, Mich., and began his work at Assumption. For some time he has been wanting to return to the milder climate of Illinois.

Rev. A. S. Kellie, formerly of Divernon, recently called to Morris, is having an interesting time. The auditorium has been beautified and carpeted, new lighting system installed, at an expense of $1,200, congregations are growing and interest is fine.

Rev. J. M. Jones of East Moline is greatly encouraged because of evidence of a substantial growth during the year in all departments. He recently baptized twenty-three into the fellowship of the church.

The First Baptist Church of Paw Paw has redecorated the interior of its building, built an addition, installed a new furnace and brick-veneered the entire structure with a very fine grade of brick, making an attractive and serviceable building, one that will better represent the Baptists of the community. Appropriate opening services were held Sunday, Dec. 16, and the other churches united with them in the evening service. District Supt. E. A. Gilmore preached at both services. The pastor, Rev. R. D. Walter, is greatly appreciated by his people.

THE ORDINATION OF JAMES GREENE took place at Melvin, Dec. 17. Rev. George Waid of Capac was moderator and A. R. Ferguson of North Branch, clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Mr. Waid, charge to the minister given by Mr. Ferguson, and to the church by Rev. Gilbert Niles.

MISSOURI

St. Louis

THE OLD FOURTH CHURCH is now in the midst of a building enterprise which has been on foot for many months, but the actual work on the structure started only recently. It is a most worthy endeavor in a down-town section of the city. Rev. Oliver Shank is the hard-working pastor.

The Tower Grove Church, of which F. A. Lowrey is pastor, has outgrown its present quarters, and that church also is engaged in the erection of the first unit of what is to be one of the best meeting houses of its size in the city. The Sunday school now numbers nearly 400. Other churches are planning to build at an early date.

Rev. H. C. Combs of the Compton Heights Church will give up his pulpit work for some time on account of severe throat trouble. It is reported Doctor Combs has purchased a book store down town which he will run during the time he is out of his pulpit.

Upon the whole the Baptist churches of St. Louis seem never to have been in a more hopeful and prosperous condition. The pastors report frequent baptisms, growing Sunday schools and increased congregations.

The work of the Grand Avenue Church under its new pastor, J. L. Watson, is encouraged and full of hope. One need is a suitable Sunday-school house to care for the growing Sunday school. However, there is little prospect of getting such a house very soon. A Bible school is held each Friday evening which is open to all. It is planned to start a second class next year, one the third year, and one the fourth year, and have one class completing the Book each year after the fourth year.

KANSAS

MARKED PROGRESS ATTENDS the ministry of John Bunyan Smith, pastor of the First Church of Wichita. The Thanksgiving offering amounted to $9,500. The church is now out of debt on all its property. Four lots have been purchased for a new church in a growing suburb. The pastor has been baptising every Sunday since his return the middle of August. The goal of this church of one member for every day has been reached. Doctor Smith spent two weeks in revival work with Dr. H. W. Virgin of the First Church of Amarillo. One hundred and fifty-four united with the church during that time. The growth of the Sunday school has necessitated the moving of the men's Bible class into a down-town theater building. Attendance the first Sunday was 503. The total Sunday school attendance last Sunday was 1,333.

DURING THE YEAR 1923, 160 persons have joined the church at Parsons, 100 of these by baptism. H. A. Smoot, pastor, did the preaching in a two weeks' meeting in November, in which seventy joined the church. A storehouse tithers' band will be organized in this church the first of the year with a good membership.

REV. ROY HILLYER began his work at Horton, Jan. 1, after a four-year pastorate at Hiawatha. Mr. Hillyer's going leaves one of the finest churches in northeast Kansas pastorless. The membership is 150, salary $1,200 and parsonage to a real leader.

numbers of the negroes from the South, the incoming of large numbers of foreign-speaking peoples and the massing of Jews in certain sections all have vitally affected the work of some of Cleveland's churches. Adaptation to the changed conditions must be made or eventually the church must remove to some other locality farther out, selling the present plant to some negro or foreign-speaking body.

Three churches have rejoiced in building developments this fall. The new church in West Park dedicated its new chapel in September. The Lakewood Church, after years of patient waiting and service, dedicated its fine new building in September. The church in Nottingham laid the corner stone for a new edifice in October. These three churches are growing fast.

Two churches have no pastors at present. The Church of the Master is rejoicing in the interim pastorate of Dr. J. S. Kirtle while it takes time to enlist the interest of the right man for this great place. The Heights Church is still pastorless. This suburban church faces one of the great opportunities of the city.

The Euclid Avenue Church still holds its down-town situation and thrives under the leadership of Dr. W. W. Bustard. The church expects to start in the spring erecting a new structure to cost over $1,100,000—a building to be fully equipped for every phase of church activity.

Two conferences of importance and of spiritual results were held this fall. The first one was the Bible and missionary conference held under the auspices of the promotion board with a strong team of expert leaders here. The other was the school of methods for the Bible schools and young people's societies held in November.

The splendid work of our Executive Secretary A. M. McDonald is a matter of delight to all Baptists in greater Cleveland. With rare judgment and great tact, with keen vision and inspirational leadership he is directing the work to a definite goal of achievement.

IOWA

Rev. J. O. Staples, pastor of the Centerville church, gave real inspiration to a Good Fellow Fund. Following an address by Mr. Staples, the Kiwanis Club gave a substantial cash contribution. The work of the church is prospering.

ARIZONA

The Baptist Bible and Missionary Conference held in Phoenix, Nov. 16-18, was all that was expected—the largest and best Baptist gathering ever held in the state. For five weeks Rev. John R. George of Spokane, Wash., was here as conference secretary. As a result there were 770 registrations, with an attendance reaching 1,000. The people came with their expectations high and none were disappointed. The sessions of the conference began with the Loyalty luncheon with an attendance of about 200 women. The dining room of the First Church was crowded to capacity. The team of speakers for the conference could not have been surpassed. No one who heard the Bible messages of Doctor Villers, Doctor Padelford on education, Doctor Main on stewardship, and the appealing missionary addresses of Doctor Moody of the Congo, can ever forget them. Judge Freeman of Denver and Secretary Jasperson of the National Laymen's Council also brought helpful messages. These messages will go to all our churches through the messages of pastors and others present and through the Loyalty luncheons, until every Baptist in the state has heard them.

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Bennett and daughter, Grace M., of Lincoln, Nebraska, are spending the winter in Phoenix. Mr. Bennett is a member of the board of managers of the Nebraska Baptist Convention, and Mrs. Bennett is secretary-director of the woman's work for the state.

Rev. John S. Stump, church edifice secretary of the Home Mission Society, has spent two weeks in the state. While here he visited the churches needing new meeting houses and in most places he conferred with the pastor or committee about plans for future work.

Rev. J. D. Springston, director of Christian Education in Arizona and Southern California, attended the recent Bible and Missionary Conference in Phoenix, and is now conducting institutes in Winslow and Prescott.

Pastor-at-large Darnell, has closed a meeting with Pastor Gordon at Clemenceau. A splendid spirit prevailed during the meeting. The whole church was greatly revived.

Mrs. Carrie A. Robinson of San Francisco, working under the auspices of the General Board of Promotion in the territory of the South Pacific District, has just completed two months' work in the state. Mrs. Robinson has held institutes, conferences and given her stereopticon lectures on Japan. Her coming has been a great blessing to the churches, especially in relation to the work of the women.

Stockholders' Dividends or Missionary Salaries?

The Foreign Mission Society last year spent $19,298.20 in interest on money borrowed at the banks in order to finance its work.

Instead of paying the salaries of eight missionary families which this sum would easily have provided it was paid to the banks and thus helped to pay dividends to their stockholders.

A substantial amount of the money on which interest was paid had to be borrowed because contributions from churches were received at the end of the fiscal year instead of in regular monthly or quarterly payments throughout the year.

Nearly two-thirds of the total contributions from churches and individuals last year were received during the last third of the year. This ought not so to be.

Will you not help us to avoid such interest charges this year? Pay promptly your own pledge to the New World Movement. See that your church benevolent treasurer forwards regularly the contribution of your church.

Which will accomplish more for the evangelization of the world—missionary salaries or bank stockholders' dividends?

NEW WORLD MOVEMENT COMPLETION CAMPAIGN.

Rev. Ben Matthews of Tempe recently assisted Pastor Moore of Yuma in a series of special meetings. This meeting was the best held in Yuma for several years. There were twenty-eight additions to the church, about fifteen being by baptism.

The Glendale Church has called to its pastorate Rev. E. G. Butler, recently of Durant, Okla. He has accepted the call and has begun his work. Mr. Butler has made a splendid impression among the Baptists of Phoenix and Glendale. His coming among us adds another strong man to our force of pastors.

Rev. R. S. Beal has recently closed a successful meeting with the Douglas church, where he assisted Pastor Campbell. As a result of the meeting there were twenty-five additions to the church.

Rev. Hardie Connor reports splendid progress in his work at Willcox. He is receiving new members in almost every service. There are forty young people in the B. Y. P. U. He says: "You may cut the support to Willcox down in the amount of $25 for this month, and for each succeeding month for several months." He also says that he is refusing to leave Willcox for a call to the pastorate of the Ocean Beach Church of San Diego.

Rev. Wm. MacIntosh, who came to the pastorate of the Nogales church, has resigned and returned to his home in Illinois.

Rev. F. E. Hawes has resigned the pastorate of the Mesa church to accept an appointment of the Publication Society as chapel car evangelist. He will be on chapel car "Messenger of Peace" and will work in Idaho. About 175 have come into the membership of the church during his pastorate. The Mesa church has called Rev. W. B. Percival to succeed Rev. F. E. Hawes. Mr. Percival has been acting pastor of the First Church, Phoenix, during the past year.

Rev. Richard E. Day of Riverside, California, has accepted the call of the First Church, Phoenix. Mr. Day has been in Riverside for five years and has built up a large congregation.

COLORADO

A remodeled church building was dedicated at Eckert. The dedicatory sermon was given by Secretary F. B. Palmer. Ten nearby Baptist ministers with delegates from their fields attended the service. D. S. McGlashan is the pastor.

Ground has been broken for a well designed bungalow type of meeting house at Limon, where work is rapidly making progress under the leadership of Chapel Car Evangelist A. C. Blinzinger.

Converts have been received by the score from Convention Evangelist E. M. Steadman's revival meetings at Mt. Olivet, Denver, Montrose and Palisade.

These important fields are now pastorless: Monte Vista, Hooper, Center, Hotchkiss, Olathe, Delta and Palisade. Rev. A. D. Berry, who recently returned to Colorado from Chico, Calif., has accepted a call to Emmett, Idaho.

Rev. and Mrs. Thos. Moody, of Congo, Africa, will visit some twenty churches in deputation work during January. Rev. F. E. Dark, stewardship and tithing expert, will be here in deputation work Jan. 27-Feb. 8. Director of Promotion Palmer has plans well under way looking to the visiting of every church in the state by a convention or promotion committee representative, hoping to secure a local committee of at least five to evaluate unpaid New World Movement pledges and secure the largest collections possible before May 1.

Recently Wm. Jackson, pastor at Salida, with a small company of friends, went bear hunting with Theodore Roosevelt's old guide, high up in the Rockies near Yampa. Mr. Jackson was the only one to secure a 600-pound grizzly bear after an exciting chase. Upon returning home Mrs. Jackson served a bear meat banquet to a large company of church friends. Brother Jackson as Boy Scout leader is the idol of all the boys in Salida.

Rutherford L. Decker of Colgate, now pastor at La Veta, was united in marriage to Miss Gladys Jarnigan at the bride's home in La Veta, Wednesday evening, Dec. 5, Secretary Palmer officiating.

Evangelist G. G. Laughlin recently gave the dedicatory address for a commodious new church building at Campo, Rev. C. S. Dean, pastor.

Dr. W. J. Bingham, pastor of the Bethany Church, Denver, who has held several successful pastorates in Colorado, will go to Puebla, Old Mexico, early in January to take charge of a hospital under appointment of the Home Mission Society. Miss Hazel Shank, a member of the Greeley church, under appointment as special missionary at Moulmein, Burma, is to sail Jan. 21. The women of the Rocky Mountain District are undertaking to provide a $350 outfit for Miss Shank.

Director of religious education W. E. Ripley is enjoying a much needed vacation visiting a brother in California. Director of Religious Education Hansen of Minnesota was in Denver during the holidays to secure headquarters for the Minnesota delegation numbering over 100 for the B. Y. P. U. A. Convention in July.

Secretary Palmer has been speaking two or three times a week to large audiences over the state on the Stockholm World's Alliance and his visit to mission fields in Europe.

The Denver Baptist Union held its annual meeting at Calvary Church Wednesday evening, Dec. 13. Encouraging reports were made from all departments of city activities. Editor Earl of The Baptist was the honored guest of the evening, bringing an inspiring and challenging message, and incidentally "selling The Baptist" to the more than 200 present. The ladies of Calvary Church served a turkey dinner.

UTAH

Missionary interest on the part of the Utah Baptists has been greatly stimulated by the Bible and Missionary Conference, held in Salt Lake City, Oct. 22-24. Thirty-five per cent of resident Baptists in Utah registered for the conference. Attendance was splendid and the team, under the direction of Frank W. Padelford, brought great messages.

Rev. E. B. Pace, formerly of Monmouth, Ore., is now pastor at Soldier Summit. Mr. and Mrs. Pace arrived on the field on Oct. 15 and have a strong program under way.

Burlington Church, Salt Lake City, Rev. Henry Jacobs, pastor, dedicated the first unit of its new building in October. There is a splendid Sunday-school unit, consisting of several class rooms, primary room and large room used temporarily as the auditorium. Outside finish is in pressed brick and presents a fine appearance. With the new building have come new opportunities and the church is enlarging its program to meet the needs of the community.

First Church, Ogden, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. L. A. Garrison, has completed the first unit of its new building. Special services were held during the week Dec. 16-23, with dedicatory services on Dec. 23. The unit consists of class rooms, well-equipped kitchen, banquet room, gymnasium and other rooms to care for their growing Sunday school. They will go forward with the erection of the main auditorium in the spring. When finished this will be one of the most complete church plants in the inter-mountain section.

EVANGELIST HARRY O. ANDERSON, of Berkeley, Calif., will hold revival meetings in Utah during January and February. The first meeting will be held at Immanuel Church, Salt Lake City, beginning Jan. 27. This will be followed with a meeting with the First Church, Ogden, and then with other churches in the state.

IDAHO

REV. A. D. BERRY, WHO HAS just closed a successful pastorate at Chico, Calif., has accepted a call from the First Church of Emmett. He arrived on his new field of labor Jan. 1.

REV. E. C. KNICELY, PASTOR of the Roswell Church, reports that his church is in the midst of a great revival. Already over thirty have been baptized.

Pacific Coast

OREGON

ANOTHER CHURCH WITH A COUPLE OF splendid young folks classes is the Prineville church. This has a great class of grammar school girls and an equally large class of girls of high-school age. Mrs. Still is the superintendent. This church is at present without a pastor.

THE NEW EDIFICE AT BEND IS NEARING completion. When it is finished the Baptists of Bend will have one of the best buildings in the state, and by far the best Baptist edifice East of the Cascades, in Oregon. Rev. F. H. Beard. the pastor, has been on the sick list.

BURNS IS THE METROPOLIS OF HARNEY county. This county contains 9,933 square miles of territory. a tract as large as the combined states of Massachusetts anl Rhode Island. North of it lies the largest unexploitel tract of yellow pine in America. In the immediate vicinity are beds of the finest building stone in the state. Next spring the railroad will reach Burns from Ontario on the Snake River. Rev. C. A. Waterhouse is pastor of the church there. He has an almost unlimited field as there are but three pastors in the entire county, all denominations included. The Harney valley contains nearly 500 square miles of arable land, and Burns lies right in the center of the region. With the coming of the railroad and an outlet for their products there cannot help being very rapid development. anl the Baptist church is preparing to meet the coming period of expansion.

THIRTY-THREE MILES FROM BURNS IS THE present railroad terminal, Crane, and then 128 miles down the Malheur river at its confluence with the Snake River is Ontario. There is a fine church here. Rev. C. H. Blom, pastor. Some idea of Oregon's extent can be obtained when one learns that Ontario is nearer Salt Lake City than it is to Portland—it is 505 miles from the latter place. In order to reach Portland one must cross the river and go through part of Idaho. then up through the valleys past Baker and La Grande and over the Blue Mountains to Pendleton, Umatilla and the Columbia River.

AT LA GRANDE, PASTOR A. R. SITTON and his faithful band hold the fort. La Grande is a fine town of some 8,000 folks. The largest church edifice in town is that of the Mormons, which seats some 2.000 souls. In this Mormon stronghold the Baptists are gaining ground, and some day before long must expand as their really fine edifice is getting too small.

ON JANUARY 6TH AND THE WEEK following Rev. F. G. Huling and his live church plan to redidicate their enlarged plant. The church edifice has been remodelel with Sunday-school and young people's work in view, and is practically doubled in capacity.

A Blind Alley or an Open Highway

Certainly we teachers of religion must apply the same principle in our work. Children will learn and live religion in so far as it is made a part of their every day life. They are bundles of interests and impulses, and it is the job of the teacher of religion to direct and develop those interests and impulses. He must use that valuable time in the class hour in reliving the activities of the past week, or forcasting those of the next, using the lesson material to give the correct standard and real meaning to those activities. Religion is not something apart from life—instead it gives content to our experiences. If this is true, then the child should be lead to develop religious habits the same as the general run of habits, and this can be done by motivating his life with religious attitudes so that he will express them in the countless crises that are ever recurring in his waking moments.

Heretofore we have thought that there was a certain spiritual potency in mere attendance. We have utilized that competitive factor in child life to boost statistics, and often we have got what we were after, and little more! There are three measures of success that a teacher of religion should apply in an invoice for the work he has accomplished. (1) What usable religious knowledge are my pupils getting? (2) What religious attitudes are they developing? (3) What practical applications are they making of the truths taught?

The council of religious education has reported that "The Protestant church schools are in charge of an army of untrained and unsupervised teachers and officers," but a daily paper has given a more direct charge by saying that "Many teachers are not abreast of their day in the knowledge of its problems. They lack not only educational method, but familiarity with the questions which the immature minds of their scholars may be asking."

With the development of the right type of leadership and teaching method, there will certainly will come the realization that the present programs are for the most part limited and inadequate for the purpose of "training up a child in the way he should go." If we have allowed twenty-seven million children of the present generation to grow up with no religious training and have given only a half hour a week to a little more than half that number, we must concede that our programs have been narrowly conceived.

collective name of the churches has sought to bring in a new spirit. In a time of terrific theological controversy, it has born its testimony to the preeminence of life and work in the religion of Christ. Its evangelistic department has been engaged in the work of producing 'good Samaritans.'"

The Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society announces the election of Rev. A. W. Rider, to the position of field secretary of the society. Doctor Rider has been in the service of the denomination for many years and has had a broad experience first as district secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, later as joint secretary for the foreign and home mission societies, and more recently as general representative of the Board of Promotion. In all of these capacities Doctor Rider has shown ability of a high order and has the fullest confidence both of the board and of the constituency. Doctor Rider will retain his residence in Los Angeles but will serve the board as field representative throughout the whole of the middle and far west.

According to the "Western Christian Advocate," a great many physicians are attempting to diagnose Methodism in order to determine what is the matter with her. It seems she has suffered much at the hands of many physicians. "There is nothing the matter with Methodism other than those pains and aches, and the restlessness and discontent which come from a recent period of rapid expansion and growth," says the Advocate. But "if there is anything the matter with Methodism it is the result of restraints being placed upon her; of hobbles about her ankles; of blinders placed over her eyes; or the dinning on her ears by the working of a megaphone. What she needs is to be released and given an opportunity to resume her task with her normal vigor." This restraint, the editor thinks, is due to three actions of the last General Conference. The first was the authorization of the Centenary and the creating of the machinery necessary to put it across. Second, removal of the time limit on the district superintendents' tenure and the third was action sought to further develop the area plan of episcopal supervision. In the case of the machinery of the Centenary the Advocate says: "This new machinery extended throughout the church, with an area secretary, whose business it was to assist the bishop in drawing the lines as tight as possible over every pastor until the work of collecting the Centenary pledges was brought to a termination. The degree to which this was done was such as to rob every pastor of his own personal program and to call upon him to give himself to such teamwork in sub-district, district, and Conference Centenary matters as almost to make him lose his identity. The program for his local church was outlined for him even down to the hymns that his people were to sing, while his sermons were almost designated even down to the place where he should release a joke, shed a tear, and expect his people to say 'Amen.'" There is still some little advantage in being a Baptist.

The evangelistic association of New England of which Rev. B. T. Livingston is general secretary will hold its annual meeting in the Park Street Church, Boston, Jan. 10. A strong program has been arranged.

From time to time we are alarmed by reports showing the extent of illiteracy in the United States. There has been great activity in the building program of the schools throughout the country. Compulsory attendance laws have been generally enacted and still the amount of illiteracy is appalling. The magazine Education says: "The first great, definite task of the United States is thoroughly to eradicate the illiteracy of certain localities in its own body-politic. The greatness of this task is greatly underestimated by many we believe. The work requires the interest, the intelligence and the cooperative effort of all patriotic Americans. It will call for breadth of vision, depth of thought, generosity in effort and promptness in action. It is not, primarily a matter of politics. It is a matter of intelligence, of altruism, of righteousness."

The national home missions and church extension boards cooperated with the Federation of Churches of Rochester through the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions in the holding of a national interdenominational home missions conference in Rochester. It was the first meeting of its kind held in America and was similar in several of its features to the world mission conferences held by the foreign mission boards a year ago. A line drawn around all of the forty-eight states, and then extended to include Alaska, the Sandwich Islands, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Cuba, Porto Rico, Haiti, Jamaica and Santo Domingo would represent the dimensions of the home mission enterprise as it was portrayed in Rochester pulpits Sunday, Dec. 9. Within this area, the home mission agencies are ministering to the Indians, to the Jews, negroes, Eskimos, the Orientals (including Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Koreans, and Armenians) as well as all other immigrant groups. It remained for the Federation of Churches of Rochester to conceive of a program like that, making possible 150 services in Rochester and outlying communities, all centering about the one theme, home missions. Addresses were delivered and open forums conducted by national experts in their respective departments of work. Local workers in church and civic affairs of all ages had the opportunity to engage in discussions that were interpretative of modern home missions. All religious and civic groups in Rochester and vicinity were urged to send representatives to attend every special conference and mass meeting.

A bishop is at the head of the national council, and a layman of the Episcopal Church, Mr. Louis B. Franklin, is vice-president. Mr. Franklin has issued an appeal for laymen to take the place they are best fitted to take in the local church. He predicts that the time is near at hand when the churches will have business managers, as well as ministers. We are glad to record the fact that many of our churches have a small group of laymen who give careful consideration to the business affairs of the organization. They feel that bad business practice on the part of the church is a reflection on them as business men.

Editor Gwaltney at the New Year greets the readers of the Alabama Baptist with these words: "Men are old just as soon as they lose the youthful heart. Accordingly, to be hypercritical of young people instead of sympathetic toward them, even in their folly, is a mark of senility. A grandma said to her son of the second generation, son, why do you whistle so much? Granny, what makes a bird sing? was the boy's reply. Well, said the mother, I don't see any use of that either. Had the dear soul kept a singing heart even down to old age she would not have been bored by birds and boys. There is more of life than death in the world, more of joy than sorrow, of the young than the old. To ward off old age deny it a place in thinking and swear allegiance to a youthful spirit. Be young and you are young, it matter now how many winters press down upon your shoulders and heart." We say "amen" and pass the greeting on.

A book of rare interest to churchmen everywhere is the one which Ruth Muskrat, a young Cherokee Indian girl, on Dec. 13 presented to President Coolidge in the White House, in the presence of the committee of one hundred on Indian affairs. This volume, dealing with the present-day life of the American Indian, the result of a survey made by G. E. E. Lindquist under the auspices of the Institute of Social and Religious Research, 370 Seventh Ave., New York, was enclosed in a beautiful beaded cover made by a Cheyenne Indian woman, and offered to the Great White Father as the gift of the Indian students of the United States. Its donor, Miss Muskrat, is a junior at Mount Holyoke College. President Coolidge replied by declaring that he would always hold the volume in high regard, both because of its pleasant associations as a token of the esteem from the Indian students of the country, and because of the useful information the book would give him. He commended Miss Muskrat's appeal for new trails for her people to follow, and declared that if the red man follows these new trails along social, economic and religious lines as she outlined, there can be no question of the speedy solution of the Indian problem. Later the young Cherokee Indian girl from the Spavinaw Hills in Oklahoma sat at luncheon in the White House, with the nation's chief executive, and discussed with him conditions among her people.

Have We Slumped?

THE denomination is in the last year of the five-year period which will come to a close on April 30, 1924. Are we able to give an account of our stewardship? Viewing the results in the light of the definite tasks set forth in the Denver survey, how do they appear? Have we advanced, have we held our own, or have we gone back? Only a careful, comprehensive and comparative appraisement of the whole situation will reveal the results. The pamphlet, "On the March," issued last year, was an attempt to register the progress in all the fields covered by the cooperative program of the denomination. But in the very nature of the case the pamphlet could only take a segment of the period and make a very cursory comparison between the ideals of Denver and the actual realizations. The denomination awaits an authoritative, trustworthy and complete account of our successes and failures. In the meantime "The Baptist" gives in this issue a composite picture of the situation as it is contributed by reliable witnesses who are close to the things they report. If the readers of this number will form a jury and listen carefully to the evidence as it appears in the testimony of these witnesses we have no fear of an honest verdict.

The Marriage of Modesty to Publicity

UP to this time modesty has forbidden us to say much about THE BAPTIST. But while still personally modest, we are at length constrained by the pressure of the sense of duty to take our people into our confidence. Many readers have acknowledged with favor and some with enthusiasm the changes that are gradually appearing in the contents of THE BAPTIST from week to week. They have noticed that THE BAPTIST is becoming more and more a genuine newspaper, but the process by which it is becoming so is our secret, and we now propose to reveal the secret to the world.

More than two hundred newspapers largely religious but some secular covering the entire world are carefully scanned every week with a view to selecting, digesting and editing the vital news from their columns for insertion in the pages of THE BAPTIST. To busy men and women who can afford neither the time nor the money for such an array of papers, this system of giving them news that they can get in no other way is of incalculable value. THE BAPTIST makes this edited digest of news one of its leading features, and from a careful poll of our readers we learn that this feature gets first and largest attention. In addition to the newspapers digested for news THE BAPTIST selects interesting items from scores of church bulletins and gives to its readers local atmosphere from a wide range of territory. Moreover, our regular correspondents send news-letters from all parts of the world.

It is also the aim of THE BAPTIST to print only articles that have news value in that part of the paper devoted to the longer articles. There is enough of human interest in the Baptist world to provide for the columns of THE BAPTIST well-written and illustrated accounts of living people and things being accomplished without the necessity of resorting for copy to philosophy, homiletics, exegesis, propaganda, personal exploitation and unprofitable discussions of theoretical questions. In this day of radio the religious newspaper must clothe itself with human interest, but the clothes must be in style and not the garments of a past age.

Here are some of the styles that will be shown in THE BAPTIST in the near future: "State Conventions that Are Doing Things." "What a Grocer Started" (Illustrated)." "Men Who Manage" (Illustrated). "Some Down-town Churches that Live and Thrive in Difficult Places" (Illustrated). "Are Baptist Churches Adapted to Modern City Conditions?" "Women We Seldom Hear or Read About" (Illustrated). "How Can the Just Compensation of Pastors Be Determined and Secured?" "The Ethics of the Pastoral Office." "A Pastor who Took His Medicine Sweetly." "What Business Has the Foreign Mission Society in Europe?" "The Far-Flung Battle Line" (Illustrated). "A Debate on the Strength and Weakness of the New Plan of Cooperation." "A Successful Experiment in the Laboratory of Citizenship" (Illustrated). "A Field or Two on God's Farm" (Illustrated). "A Few Samples of Unknown Laymen" (Illustrated). "Fifty-seven Varieties of Local Churches" (Illustrated). "Can Laymen Stabilize the Denomination?" "Young People Who Are Doing Things." "Young People and Their Problems." "Modernizing the Antiquated Methods of the Sunday School." "A Model Sunday School" (Illustrated). "How the Evangelical Faith Lives in the Atmosphere of the New Learning." "Some Plants in the Garden of Christian Education" (Illustrated). "Paying up Pledges under Difficulties and How It Is Done." These are only samples of the things we have in store for our patrons during 1924. The regular departments of religious education, the chimney corner, public opinion, and others will be continued on the same high standard that has formerly marked them.

We read a sign once over a restaurant in a small Iowa town that made its lasting impression—"If you don't eat here we'll both starve." We invite the pastors, women and laymen of our churches to make their own application of this sign in securing renewals and new subscribers for THE BAPTIST.

Mr. J. W. Badenoch, a well-known Chicago layman, has been elected as one of the trustees of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago. The association has a large program laid out and is seeking a number of new men to help it realize its goals.

The B. Y. P. U. of Hamilton Square Church. San Francisco, gave the pageant, "The Birth of Christ," at the service Dec. 23, with a cast of thirty under the direction of Harold E. Doty, student assistant to the pastor, L. J. Sawyer. Hamilton Square has recently installed an acousticon with sufficient number of ear pieces to accommodate the members and friends who by reason of their affliction would otherwise be deprived of the privilege of engaging in the services.

The Rev. Charles B. Althoff on Jan. 6 celebrated his tenth anniversary as pastor of the Lorimer Memorial Church of Chicago. During this time the church has made rapid progress, the membership has increased three-fold, the finances five-fold, and a beautiful new church edifice was dedicated a little more than a year ago.

Dr. M. P. Boynton, who is a trustee of the National Anti-Saloon League, is attending the annual meetings of the league being held this week in Washington, D. C. No man among us is more enthusiastic and courageous in his fight for the eighteenth amendment. While carrying on an aggressive gospel ministry in a great and growing church of which he has been the pastor for twenty-five years, Dr. Boynton finds time to cooperate in an efficient manner with the forces organized to put lawlessness and indecency out of business.

The Zionists recently held a convention in Chicago. Dr. Weizmann, president of the world organization, said: "It is true that we possess only 4 per cent of the land of Palestine. But two years ago we had only 2 per cent. In those years 30,000 persons have moved into the new Jewish land." More than 1,000,000 trees have been planted, roads built and a credit system devised, according to the president.

The fourth anniversary of the eighteenth amendment occurs in January. In view of this, Sunday, Jan. 13, has been designated as prohibition anniversary Sunday. The various church temperance agencies and other temperance organizations join in the request that all churches, Sunday schools, young people's societies and other religious bodies participate in the proper observance of the day.

And It Will Be Done

"The enclosed is for my 1924 subscription. The year of 1923 the paper has been just a bit above its high average. I am delighted that Doctor Earl is relieving the sadly overworked 'force,' but credited as he is with being a wise man he has wisdom not yet credited to him, if he knows before hand where to start in to improve THE BAPTIST."—Rev. M. E. Bollen, Fullerton, Calif. We blush! Such charity is above price. What won't climate do? But nevertheless, Brother Bollen, the paper will be improved.

We Thank You

Scores of church calendars come to our desk each week. They help to keep us in touch with the work of these churches. We want to express our appreciation of the space devoted to THE BAPTIST and Missions in many of these calendars. Send us your church calendar. We scan every one carefully and many of the items of real news come from these weekly visitors.

Not Fifty-seven Varieties

"This is the fifty-seventh time I have renewed my subscription to THE BAPTIST and its predecessors. It grows better and better." Thus writes Mrs. James Walters of Waupon, Wis. What a record! Who can tell the story of the influence of such a paper going into a single home for more than half a century? Pastor, when you influence a young Christian to subscribe at once for his church paper you are doing a far-reaching piece of work.

Think He Has Good Sense

"There is a fellow named Blowers who every time I meet him says, 'Have you seen this week's BAPTIST? It has some extra good things in it this time.' What do you think is the matter with him? Kindly find check enclosed." J. E. Neighbor, Oakland, Cal. We think Blowers has good sense. This man Neighbor is a lumberman, but is evidently interested in building the kingdom. THE BAPTIST will, beginning with Jan. 1, 1924, help him build wisely and well.

"Look the Part"

Methodist human nature is very much like Baptist human nature and all human nature is a little queer. To sell the church paper is a job for real salesmen whether it is an Advocate or THE BAPTIST. The church paper that sells itself is not yet published. Read what the Central Christian Advocate says: "There are ways—and again ways—of making a success of the Advocate subscription campaign. A pastor who has never failed in any charge says that he has always made his Advocate effort 'look the part.' That is to say, he put sympathy, sincerity, alertness, and aggressiveness into his canvass from start to finish. He never failed to win out." Some pastors "never fail" to make a success of a periodical campaign for they always "look the part" and act the part. Some always fail because they never act at all. "A building pastor" takes time to lay foundations for intelligent cooperation. A booming pastor just booms.

Rev. C. H. Eyman of Chicago has accepted the call of the church at Humboldt, Iowa. He began his work Jan. 1.

The church at Ford City, Pa., has called Rev. Clarence R. Hammell of Johnstown and he will begin his work Feb. 1. The church has purchased a new parsonage.

Rev. Clarence C. Walker of Susquehanna, Pa., has accepted the call of the Park Avenue Church, Binghamton, N. Y. Rev. George H. Thompson was pastor of the Park Avenue Church for nineteen years.

Rev. E. M. Martinson closed his work as pastor of the First Church, Lafayette, Ind., Jan. 1. Before going to that church he was for several years the pastor of the church at Marquette, Mich.

The "Baptist Observer" of Indiana states that "the auditorium of the church at Greencastle is so far completed that it was occupied for services Dec. 23." Dr. U. M. McGuire, formerly one of the editors of THE BAPTIST, is pastor at Greencastle.

The Baptist Union of Great Britain proposes to undertake a great evangelistic program reaching all parts of the country. At a recent meeting Rev. Douglas Brown was made "evangelistic commissioner," for the purpose of helping churches and ministers in arranging for their part in the movement. The Baptist Times and Freeman devoted the first issue of the new year to the work of the movement.

Mr. Clarence P. Leety has been appointed for full-time service as director of men and boys' work at Rankin, Pa. Mr. Leety is not only admirably equipped by training and experience for this position, but his part time work at Rankin for the past two months has proved him to be just the man for the place. Several individuals have presented books to the Rankin Center library. Others are sending packages. It is a good investment for any one. A woman to take charge of the day nursery is needed at Rankin.

The "Continent" gives its ministerial readers this bit of advice. We believe this is good advice and so pass it on to the Baptist brethren: "Potomac University of Washington is the latest concern to advertise doctor of divinity degrees to be obtained by 'correspondence.' The circular says the degree may be 'earned.' We greatly fear that the circular alludes to the 'earning' that gets the money and the 'correspondence' which remits it. Things have come to such a pass in these days that the only really safe manner in which a self-respecting minister can allow the 'D. D.' suffix to be used after his name is with a parenthesis following to designate the school from which he obtained it. If a minister wouldn't be proud of that arrangement, let him discard his 'doctorate' altogether."

Rev. S. J. Hall has accepted the call of the church at Manistee, Mich. He was formerly pastor at Leslie.

Dr. Geo. F. Burlingame is acting pastor of the church at Chico, Cal. He has been engaged in educational work during the past year, serving under the American Bond.

Rev. F. Paul Langhorne of the Petworth Church, Washington, D. C., has accepted a call to the Berwyn Church, Berwyn, Ill., and began his work there Jan. 9. Mr. Langhorne went to the Petworth church eight years ago, when it had only forty members and no house of worship, and built it up to a thriving church of over 400 members, with a new, modern building. This new building, which was dedicated last June, cost over $100,000 and is practically free from debt.

F. PAUL LANGHORNE

Berwyn is growing rapidly and there are opportunities for a great work there. The Berwyn church has been most fortunate in having had for its supply pastor, during the past year, Dr. A. G. Baker of the University of Chicago. He has done a good work in strengthening the church and it is now in splendid shape to go forward to a great work under the new pastor.

At a reception offered by the city of Prague to the delegates from Slovakia attending the Czecho-Slovak Protestant Congress, the mayor of Great Prague, Doctor Baxa, appreciated warmly the importance of the Slovakian evangelical ministers. "Their position," he said, "is between the past bondage and between the doubtless victory of liberty. The evangelical minister of Slovakia was, during the worst periods, the only man who for the oppressed Slovak was the symbol of hope and faith. National consciousness of the Slovaks is the merit of the evangelical ministers, who even in the heaviest times of suffering never went astray, but remained faithful. They were true shepherds of the people."

At a ripe old age Rev. S. Baring Gould, author of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and other well-known hymns, died Jan. 2 at Lew Trenchard, England.

The mid-year meeting of the General Board of Promotion will be held in Chicago at the Chicago Beach Hotel, Feb. 5-6. This being the last meeting of the board before the close of the New World Movement period, it is of great importance.

The Ohio Northern University, a Methodist school, at Ada, is completing a new $100,000 law building, which will be dedicated in May, 1924. By a vote of the trustees and with the consent of Mrs. Harding, the college of law will bear the name of Warren Gamaliel Harding College of Law.

Dr. John W. Crouch of LaGrange College writes of the deep sense of loss felt by the college on account of the death of Prof. Howard G. Colwell of Loveland, Col. Professor Colwell was for a number of years a teacher in the college and in the Central High School of St. Louis. "Training for kingdom service was his meat and drink."

In this "era of gifts" Bucknell University is being well remembered by its friends and graduates. A $500,000 stadium, $400,000 increased endowment from the alumni, a pledge of $250,000 from the Rockefeller general education board, and two tracts of land have all come within a year. We have already announced the gift of land near Washington by Dr. James Swartz of New York. The latest gift is made by Henry Loftus of London, Eng., of land adjoining that given by Doctor Swartz. This gift is conservatively valued at $30,000.

The "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate" in an editorial says: "An illustration of how easy it is for an earnest and really great Christian man to be unjust and actually un-Christian toward another great Christian man is found in the fierce philippics which Charles H. Spurgeon hurled at the late John Clifford in the famous "Down Grade" controversy. In the heat of that controversy and of his zeal for what he regarded as orthodox truth, Mr. Spurgeon accused Doctor Clifford of "making infidels," of "deriding the inspiration of scripture" and of preaching a religion "which is no more Christianity than chalk is cheese." It is to the credit of Mr. Spurgeon that he afterwards exempted Doctor Clifford from the above indictments and recognized him as one who held "all vital evangelical truth" despite his view of the scriptures, his sympathy with new views in theology and his defense of men denounced as heretics; for whom he pleaded that they might have freedom to express their convictions." In the heat of our present controversy hard things have been said on both sides. We believe that the spirit of Spurgeon and Clifford will finally prevail, for it was the spirit of Jesus Christ.

Reading Between the Lines of the Survey

"READING between the lines" is only another way of saying, "Visualizing the survey," or "Putting perspective and pigment into the picture." It is more easily said than done. It takes a Shakespeare to paint a Shylock so that we can see Shylock without too much mental strain. Stevenson can throw upon the canvas of the imagination such pictures of men and things as lift us above the necessity of reading between the lines. Many other men and women of literary genius whose works are easily accessible enable us to see things at a glance. But the men and women who have written at our request for the world survey number of THE BAPTIST do not claim to be specially gifted with powers of literary genius. They are hard-working missionaries, evangelists, secretaries kept so close to the mountainous task which we have given them to do that large perspective is almost impossible. If one would see the mountains in their grandeur and be able to compare the foothills with the snow-clad ranges beyond, he must have the distance that "lends enchantment to the view."

Therefore it is necessary for the many people who take THE BAPTIST to read the world survey number between the lines. In other words, the reader must supply the atmosphere, the background, the perspective, the human elements which are often lacking in the necessarily brief and almost bare accounts which a single world survey number gives. Take, for example, the statistics with regard to the number of baptisms in any particular field, and what do the statistics mean to the reader who is unable or unwilling to visualize them in a human way? They mean to him nothing more than the multiplication table. But to the reader who has imagination and sympathy, the statistics of baptisms in Burma are pictures of men and women, boys and girls, animating some woodland scene along the banks of a tropical stream as they await with glad anticipation their turn to go down into the water in obedience to the newborn conviction that this is the first step in following their Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. More than 3000 baptisms in Burma last year mean to the reader with vision, homes in which Christ becomes the head of the house with the old idolatrous practices abandoned, churches strengthened and revived, bringing new courage and joy to the Christians, schools filled with pupils eager to learn the truth which always accompanies the gospel, and the whole community touched with the impact of moral character and Christian brotherliness.

We speak of the statistics of baptisms in Burma only by way of illustration. The whole survey of Baptist organization and work in the world will need the same treatment if readers are to get much out of it. We have sometimes wondered if Jesus did not have this power of imagination in mind when he spoke so highly of the little children. There is no time in our lives when we are so highly visionary as when we are children. The rag doll of the little girl is the perspective of a maternity which is yet far in the future, but the rag doll is as real to her as the new-born babe to the happy mother. A little boy will play with a toy radio set and get more out of it than the grown man with his real equipment. To men sunk in the mechanical logic of tradition and ceremony there was no appeal in the parables and illustrations of Jesus. The words of Jesus were too imaginative, too vivid, too colorful, too human, to touch men buried in the rut of literalism. So Jesus turned to the little children and to grown men who still retained the spirit of little children, and there found the response to his human appeal.

Possibly this suggestion may in part diagnose the trouble from which most of us are suffering today in our religious point of view. We lack sympathy and imagination. We have substituted logic for love, philosophy for fraternity, propaganda for performance, stupidity for sympathy. One who reads this survey number of THE BAPTIST logically, mathematically, literally, will probably throw it down with the exclamation, "punk," and the exclamation will be strictly logical because punk reading always finds punk writing. Was it not Cicero who said: "The eye sees only that which it brings with the power of seeing?" His remark has stood the test of time because it is eternally true. Therefore if we come to the world survey number of THE BAPTIST with heart aflame with missionary zeal, with mind alert for good news, with imagination keen to catch the colors which lie hidden in the drab reports, we shall get a good deal out of it because we put a good deal into it.

HERE are a few suggestions that may help the people who read this number or who may be inclined to throw it aside. Visualize the nine million Baptists of the world, eight-tenths of whom are found in the United States, and picture to yourselves the fact that every thirteenth person one meets in the United States is a Baptist, while only every one hundred and sixtieth person one meets in the world is a Baptist. The world survey number will have a humbling effect upon us and will enable us to be more charitable with others if we only have imagination enough to see that Baptists are numerically weak when compared to the teeming millions of the world's population. However, to balance this sense of depreciation of ourselves we need to picture the moral and spiritual strength of the Baptists in the world. Here we need sanctified imagination to arrive at a modest appreciation of the Baptists in their contribution to the evangelization and Christianization of the world. If it is true that one shall chase a thousand and two shall put ten thousand to flight, then the Baptists alone without the help of their brethren of other evangelical names might evangelize the world in a single generation. If each Baptist were equipped and free to do evangelistic work it would only mean after eliminating other Christian forces from consideration the reasonable task of one chasing one hundred.

We are pardonably proud of what Baptists have done and are doing in the world, but we are far below 100 per cent efficient. After the ambitious and hurried attempt to standardize our mission in the world as Baptists of the northern states in the survey adopted at Denver in 1919, and our failure to meet the standard financially, we lost morale and courage. There has been no attempt since to look the facts in the face and confront ourselves with our failure. One cannot read this survey number of THE BAPTIST without sensing in the implication and seeing in the explicit statements from many correspondents the evidences of the failure of the denomination to realize the fond hopes of enlargement of the work born in the hearts of missionaries nearly five years ago. We need again to face the situation frankly and fearlessly. This survey is an incomplete and inadequate inventory, but it suggests the need of taking stock and giving the facts in their proper perspective to the constituency from sources that are non-partisan, representative, and competent, with an authority based upon the truth seen in the light of all the circumstances. It may be too late now to get this information to the denomination before the convention which meets in Milwaukee the last of next May, but if it is not too late, steps should be taken at once by the General Board of Promotion to make a complete survey of the field and forces of the Northern Baptist Convention for the information, humiliation, and inspiration of the constituency which is asked to support the new board of missionary cooperation in its budgets and plans for the next fiscal year.

Can Baptist Laymen Function on a Big Task?

PASTORS, evangelists and other official workers have their definite place and function in the task of the denomination. The women have established their reputation for doing things in their own way, and through their going missionary organizations they command the confidence and support of the churches. There is therefore no question about the particular function which these exercise in the organization and work of the denomination. But when it comes to the laymen there is no clearly defined and particular service for them to render as an organization. All kinds of things have been tried with laymen to hold them together and induce them to function as a body in the effort to reach certain objectives. Baptist brotherhoods have little to commend them save the alliteration. The Men and Religion Movement was a flash in the pan. Various other attempts to segregate Christian men in organizations for definite ends have either failed or met with indifferent success. The failure of laymen to function through laymen's organizations has so often occured that it is now almost chronic.

We are compelled to diagnose this situation and if possible find the cause or causes of the failure. The fact that men succeed in holding together in clubs and lodges and commercial associations forbids us assuming that there is any natural barrier to laymen's organizations. Laymen are just as gregarious as women or preachers. They like to get together and stay together and work together for the accomplishment of some common and worthy objectives. Why then do they fail in maintaining a vigorous organization for the accomplishment of certain tasks in the sphere of religion? We believe they fail because the tasks have never been clearly defined and the leadership necessary for the development of the organization commensurate with the tasks has never been fully developed.

Having said this much, we are compelled by common fairness to attempt such a definition and to set forth the process for the development of leaders capable of guiding and inspiring a denominational organization of laymen keyed up to the accomplishment of certain definite things.

The greatest need of the local church today is one which only a thorough-going organization of laymen can meet, and that is the need for standardization. There is really no standard at present by which to measure the efficiency of a local church and to which all local churches should conform. There is no standard of living, of giving, of service, of spirituality, of faith, of knowledge, or organization. Fifty-seven times fifty-seven varieties of local churches attest the need of some system of standardization common to all. What is an efficient Baptist church? That question has never been answered by any competent authority, and it never will be answered until consecrated laymen get together and present to the denomination for its voluntary approval and adoption not only a standard of faith but also a standard of giving and living. Let us have articles of faith, of course, and let us also have articles of practice embodied in a common covenant less rhetorical and more definite than the covenant now read occasionally in some Baptist churches. If laymen are courageous enough and honest enough to face the situation as it now exists in most of our churches, even with regard to one tender spot, viz—the matter of giving, or the stewardship of money, as it is euphoniously called, and bravely attempt to standardize it, they will begin to realize the necessity of a strong laymen's organization to give tone and backing to any effort in this and other directions.

Here is the first great task for a laymen's organization. The local churches of the denomination must be standardized upon a basis that is fair to all, and by a method that will not interfere with the autonomy and freedom of any, and in a spirit that will commend itself to every reasonable man. There is little use of skirting around the edges and trying to cover the entire territory of the Northern Baptist Convention with general appeals. We must get back to the local church and give it a standard of measurement. We must help every local church to adopt the standard and work according to it. We must furnish the means and method of checking up on our churches regularly in order that those churches which fall below standard may be encouraged and helped. We must create enthusiasm among the churches in their attempt to reach the standard.

We are well aware of the almost insurmountable obstacles that stand in the way of standardization, and we are quite as well aware of the dangers that lie in the path; but the best things that have ever been done were regarded at times as impossible of accomplishment. We should not be deterred by obstacles nor frightened by dangers. Therefore, let the laymen of the denomination already organized in the National Council of Baptist Laymen turn their undivided attention as an organization to the matter of standardization, beginning with the local church and reaching out as quickly as possible to the association, the state convention, the city mission society, the great societies and boards of the Northern Baptist Convention and finally to the convention itself. This is a task big enough, definite enough and practical enough to enlist the enthusiastic cooperation of every Baptist layman. If it is too big to tackle all at once, then standardization on a few needful things may be sought in the local churches of the denomination in 1924. For example, since 60 per cent of the members of local churches do not support the worship and expenses of the church, and since so large a proportion of the members are non-resident, and therefore non-active and non-contributing, the attempt at standardization might well begin at these weak points.

No extraordinary powers of imagination are required to picture the excellent results that would come to our churches, associations, conventions, societies and boards from a sustained effort on the part of the Laymen's Council working in harmony with the pastors and secretaries to bring all the organized work of the denomination up to a reasonable standard of efficiency. But of course the laymen's organization would first have to standardize itself, and this means that the laymen who constitute its active and working force should set a standard by which the council can check on itself to discover whether it is at par, above par or below par. We believe the laymen should be more closely organized. The present national council is not well articulated, and this is largely due to the fact that the aims of the organization have not been definite enough. Should the laymen take seriously our suggestion with regard to their task, then the organization would logically take on the concreteness, the cohesiveness and the character of its definite objective.

Having defined the task of the laymen's denominational organization a closing word should be said with reference to the development of leaders for the task. We believe the leaders should be laymen. Preachers who have had ordaining hands laid upon their heads should be kept strictly out of the leadership of a laymen's organization. The task of the ordained minister is big enough to keep him busy without taking on the specific work which belongs to the laymen's organization. He should be sympathetic always, but never meddlesome. When the laymen begin in earnest to standardize the churches they will find leaders who already having vision and ability and initiative need only to be harnessed up to a definite and worthy denominational task. The very process of standardization will develop the leaders, for part of the method will be the standardizing of individual Christian men. There need be no fear of destroying variety and individuality by any wise method of standardization because the variety and individuality will necessarily enter into the elements that make up the standard of efficiency.

If a thousand laymen are brought to the next convention at Milwaukee little will be accomplished unless the idea herein outlined is sold to them. They must go back to their local churches not simply with the memory of having attended a great convention, but with enthusiasm for a definite task and with instructions to begin at once with the backing of the National Council of Baptist Laymen to enlist others in local laymen's organizations which will have for their first objective the standardization of the local churches to which they belong.

The Solvent of Problems

CHRISTIANITY is promoting the spirit of good-will which makes it possible for great and divergent civilizations to exist side by side. The great problem of the modern world is to teach men and nations to live together in the spirit of peace and good-will.

There is in this spirit of good-will the solvent of the problems of labor and of capital and of the problems of international relationships. The resort to force and intrigue has been determined to be a failure. The will to peace must be created.

Europe needs America's help. In the same spirit in which we entered the world war we must help. We went not for personal profit, not for national aggrandizement, but in the best way we knew at the time we sought to make the world safe for democracy that was based on the principles of the New Testament and on the teachings of Christ.

I do not urge that we enter Europe's scheme of diplomacy or of political combinations. The farther we keep from that the better. But I do urge that in every way we cooperate with Europe and with the nations of the earth in all well-directed efforts of justice that shall settle its disputes in the way of righteousness.—Bishop Thomas Nicholson.

Is the World Growing Better?

By W. B. Riley

There are two sides to every question, and certainly the question herein discussed by two men well qualified to handle it is not like the handle of a jug—all on one side. Appearing in connection with the World Survey Number of The Baptist we believe the discussion will add zest and flavor to our menu, and if after reading the discussion any reader is unable to make up his mind on the question at issue we refer him to the survey for additional evidence.

THIS is no new question. The fact that intelligent men have for many centuries debated it, is prima facie evidence that it is not a one-sided question. The answer one gives to it is often simply an expression of a personal viewpoint. The "improving-world" philosopher has on his side popular applause. Men like to believe they are making progress; that they are marching from monkeydom to supermen! It produces the delightful sense of self-satisfaction, and one who wishes to be kindly, hesitates a bit to destroy the hilarity of even a drunken man, or the splendid sense of superiority enjoyed by the egotist.

But The Baptist's reason for inviting this discussion was evidently that of bringing truth to its readers, and in the end it is better to know an unpleasant truth than to enjoy a delightful falsehood.

The Bible teaches that Adam and Eve were "made in the image of God." If this be true, who will undertake to demonstrate that man has given some desirable finishing touches to himself? We hold that the most perfect man, physically, mentally and morally, the world has ever seen, Jesus Christ excepted, was Adam; and the most ideal, competent and desirable woman the world has ever known was Eve. If this be not so, then one is compelled to accept the argument that sin has no deleterious effect. If sixty centuries of inherited and acquired iniquities have detracted nothing from Adam's descendants, then who will say sin is a serious matter? The current notion that man began a four-legged creature, and developed to the high level of the modernist professor, is pitiably short of proof. That philosophy would be more readily received had the nineteenth century produced another Moses, or the twentieth century another Solomon, or the modern seminary another Isaiah; or were America now producing such a generation of great ones as Greece brought to the birth and lifted to eternal fame something more than 2,000 years ago. If one would appeal to scientists in proof of this position, they stand ready to back him, even though it is an argument opposed to their common view.

Prof. A. H. Sayce of Oxford University, said: "Neither in Egypt or Babylonia has any beginning of civilization been found. As far back as archeology can take us, man is already civilized, building cities and temples, carving hard stone into artistic form and even employing a system of picture writing, and of Egypt it may be said the older the country the more perfect it is found to be. Instead of the progress we should expect, we find retrogression and decay." No wonder he asks, "Is it possible the Bible view is right after all?"

Joseph Clark affirms that the beautiful language of the people on the Congo, black, nude, betel-eating as they are, is an inheritance from the great sires of hundreds of years ago who made Africa the leader of the world in their day. The civilization of Rome also was leagues ahead of Italy's present estate, while Spain by a better civilization than it now knows, ruled the world hundreds of years ago. High civilizations of the world today garnish their culture with Grecian contributions.

Dr. James G. Walsh, professor of psychology in Cathedral College, New York, says "Man has not progressed. The unhappiest age of the world is right now. There has not been a new thing in architecture in four hundred years. The greatest novel ever written is over three hundred years old, Don Quixote; the greatest play ever produced was Aeschylus' 'Prometheus.' Homer, the wandering Greek poet, wrote the greatest epic poem centuries before Christ."

The same writer goes so far as to say that the Maya Indians in Yucatan had the finest civilization America has known in sculpture, art and humanity.

Sir Alfred Wallace, an evolutionist, in his volume "Social Environment and Moral Progress" admits the fact that the physical characteristics of the Australians are those of the Caucasians in their lowest tribes, which has led many to conclude that these interesting people may have been descended from much more remote ancestors and are thus an example of degradation.

Prof. Conkling of Princeton, one of the outstanding evolutionists and liberals of the day, concedes that in the two centuries between 500 and 300 B. C. the small and relatively barren country of Attica, with an area equal to about that of Rhode Island, produced at least twenty-five illustrious men, such a galaxy as has never been found on the whole earth in any two centuries since that time.

It is not even needful to take up the question of morality. He who believes that this age is a moral one will have to address people who do not read the daily newspaper, if he carry his point. In fact, where have you found people who have not heard of the world-horrors that have swept it, like another flood, rising above every mountain peak of righteousness and remaining in its deluging and destroying power for nine full years, 1914 to 1923!

The Nation, an extremely liberal paper, declaring its utter sympathy with modernism, has a remarkable article in the Dec. 26 issue, in which it says, "Some there will be who accepting the beauty of the modernist theology will perhaps sorrowfully question its truth, while others will point to the fact that enlightened modernism has been scarcely more successful in making its believers the uncompromising protagonists of a warless world or of human brotherhood than has rigid fundamentalism."

Is the World Growing Better?

By W. S. Abernethy

MY own positive conviction is that such is the fact. I very well know that there are those who will point to 2 Timothy 3 and solemnly avow that this is a true picture of present day conditions. People have said that all through the centuries whenever a time of crisis appeared.

It may be argued that it requires a supreme degree of optimism to look at world conditions today, with all the hatred, strife, distrust and unrest that exists, and still affirm that the world is growing better. But it is as unfair to view the tiny segment of time embraced within the years 1914-23, the years of terrible warfare and almost as terrible peace, quite as unfair, I say, to look at this brief period of time and say that it is representative of the trend of world affairs as it would be to select five minutes of a man's life and say that whatever he happened to be doing then was the true index of his character.

We need the telescopic, not the microscopic view. Compare the last ten years with the decade of prosperity immediately preceding and one might be obliged to agree with the prophets of disaster. But compare the last five hundred years with the five hundred immediately preceding the birth of Christ, or the nineteenth century with the fourteenth, and the results are startlingly different.

It must not be forgotten that following every great war, every period of calamity and disaster and social unrest, there have been those who have said: "The social order is breaking up, the world is going to smash." They have always said it. The talk we are hearing today about these being the last times is nothing new. History is repeating itself. It was but natural that following the terrific upheaval of the great war, the chorus should begin its doleful chant.

But the editor would have facts and not generalities and theories I am sure. Is the world growing better? I shall not argue from the standpoint of material advance. Such a proposition is self-evident. The civilization of today is so far ahead of that of the first century or even of that of the nineteenth as to leave no room for argument. But of course this sort of advance, universally admitted, is entirely beside the question. Dan Crawford tells us of an African native who was told of the wonders of modern science, how a button could be pressed and a room flooded with light, how swift trains carried one at frightful speed, and air-planes took passengers to dizzy heights. He was told of the telephone, the telegraph, the phonograph and when he had heard it all he sagely remarked: "To be better off is not to be better." He was perfectly right. After all the real test of progress is character. If this proposition is affirmatively proved, the proof must be found in men's morals, ideals, standards, yes in their very lives. Are men better at heart, their morals better, their standards higher, their motives worthier? Would a cross section of humanity taken today reveal a moral advance over a similar cross section taken a hundred or five hundred years ago? I dare to affirm that it would.

What is the attitude of the world today toward great social questions? There is not the slightest doubt but that a tremendous advance has been made here. Slavery, once not only tolerated but excused and valiantly defended, is now outlawed. Civilized man revolts against the very thought of one human being in subjection to another.

The steadily increasing feeling that the use of intoxicating liquors is utterly debasing and from every viewpoint wrong—I say this in spite of the fact that my morning paper of this date informs me that two thousand socially prominent Washingtonians have been discovered to be patrons of local bootleggers. The law breaker is still here, but I recall that when prohibition went into effect, 85 per cent of the territory of the United States was then under prohibition through local option. And if the question were submitted to popular vote, there is not the slightest doubt but that the eighteenth amendment would be upheld. Compare this with conditions a hundred years ago when Lyman Beecher said, "Rum consecrates our baptisms, our weddings and our funerals. Our vices are digging the graves of our liberties." As late as 1826 the ministerial association of Rhode Island and Connecticut provided wine and liquor for the annual meetings of the clergy. Law breaking today? Certainly, but even so the moral consciousness of the people is on a distinctly higher level and with respect to intoxicating liquor the level is still rising.

What about the twentieth century valuation put upon human life, compared with that of other days? Go into the old castle at Nuremburg and inspect the grim "Iron Maid." What fearful stories this monster could tell if she could talk. Take a careful look at the iron rings in the Castle of Chillon to which miserable human beings were chained and left to die. Walk through the ghastly rooms of the Tower of London and inspect the rack and thumbscrew and a hundred other instruments of fiendish torture, too diabolical almost to mention. Then talk about the "good old days" if you can. These are all relics of a day when human life was as cheap as dirt and the agonizing cries of tortured human beings was sweet music in the ears of incarcerated devils. Civilization has outgrown all this. What else can it mean than that man has attained to higher levels of thinking and doing?

More than a hundred offenses were punishable by death in England as late as the close of the eighteenth century, and most of these were for crimes that would be called minor. When Liberty bell pealed forth its tidings, more than twenty crimes were punishable by death in Pennsylvania and twenty-seven in Virginia and Kentucky. How about the good old days?

Or take the position of women. Shakespeare expresses the view once held: "She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house, my household stuff, my field, my barn, my horse, my ox, my anything." Today she stands on a level with man or above. She is queen of the home, maker of the nation's ideals and morals. What is this but a growth toward better things?

Four hundreds years ago little children were hung for minor offences. Fifty years ago there was a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals but none for the prevention of cruelty to children. Today things are different. The child is about the biggest asset we have, and society has very definite and emphatic measures which it takes with that man or woman who disregards the rights of the child. Think of the laws regulating child labor, working hours, machinery, safeguards, accident liability and the like and compare them with a hundred years ago or even less. It looks as though things were on the upgrade in some respects at least.

I have the boldness to assert that a world peace consciousness is in the making, though such a thing may be scoffed at by those who say that war will continue until the end of time and base their contention on their own interpretation of prophetic utterances. I maintain nevertheless that a peace consciousness is in the making. Hundreds of ministers who six years ago preached sermons which if they did not actually glorify war at least justified it, will never do so again. Today they are declaring in no uncertain terms against the very idea of war as a means of settling international disputes, and thousands of people are saying today with the late President Harding: "It must not be again."

Yes, I believe the world is growing better. I find people more willing to talk on religious matters than at any time in the twenty-five years of my ministry. I find them willing to discuss religion as one of the most interesting and important topics of the day. This is wholesome and encouraging.

If I entertained the hopeless, utterly pessimistic idea that this world of human beings was on the down-grade and gaining momentum with every passing moment, with a smash-up in prospect at the bottom of the hill; if I believed this, I am sure it would take the very heart out of me. I have the conviction that God is in control, and that Jesus Christ is leading on. The Bible is not pessimistic in its outlook. It is anything but that. Paul was not talking about conditions in the twentieth century or any other century than the first when he wrote to Timothy: "Know this that in the last days perilous times shall come * * * evil men shall wax worse and worse." He was picturing to Timothy conditions then existing.

I shall have to have better evidence than my own eyes and ears and judgment are able to give me: evidence beyond that which a sane, historical interpretation of scripture affords before I shall ever believe with the prophets of disaster that the world is on the downgrade.

First Impressions of Haiti

BY A. GROVES WOOD

The American Baptist Home Mission Society has just commissioned its first missionary to Haiti. The evidences of Baptist work which he found upon his arrival, are the results of the preaching of the gospel by Haitian pastors and occasional foreigners, supported by contributions from Jamaican Baptists and from the Lott Carey Convention of negro Baptists in the United States.

I LANDED at Cape Haitien, the first port of call on Tuesday, Oct. 26, and as the boat had to discharge some cargo here I was able to spend a few hours ashore. The most prominent object, viewed from the ship was a Calvary, a small hill in the center of the town, around which wound a tortuous path, with numerous crosses sprinkled along it, and at the top a life-sized crucifix. The streets are narrow, and an open gutter runs through the center of most of them. The market seemed particularly dirty, both here and at Mireguano, the other town in which I saw a Calvary.

In the latter place the great stone "Christ" towered above a veritable cesspool. To return to Cape Haitien, I went, of course, to see the Baptist church, and after some difficulty I found all that was left of it—the four walls. The building was destroyed by fire in 1911, since when the mission house only has been rebuilt, and the little church with forty-three members meets in one of the rooms of the mission home. The missionary was out, but I found him in a little room by the market buying coffee, which he says he has to do to keep body and soul together. The country districts of Haiti are particularly open to the gospel, but so far as I could gather, Brother Jean Jacks has no village station. It seems a pity to buy coffee rather than to go into the districts which are so ready to hear the Word of God.

Our little ship stopped at several ports along the coast and I went ashore at most of them. One has to pass nearly half way round the island, however, before there could be seen any other Protestant work of any sort, and here at S. Marc I found a church divided against itself. In connection with this sphere, however, there is a splendid work going on in the out-stations on the island of La Gonave. The missionary stated that there are three stations in the island, and that the total monthly congregations are well over 1,000.

Port-au-Prince, the capital of the island, is situated at the head of a harbor, protected by the island of La Gonave. The town is on the only plain of any size in Haiti. But even here the mountains are near enough to be dotted with the residences of the wealthier classes in Port-au-Prince. The town is well built, and clean—for Haiti. As usual the only prominent building is the Roman Catholic cathedral. Protestants are represented here by a small, and gloomy Baptist church (judging by the building, which is covered inside with texts painted in gold on a black background). This church has a membership of about thirty, in a city of 150,000. There is also a Wesleyan church that appears to be more alive. Its missionary, however, has separated from the home church for some reason. There is also a new building put up by the African Methodist Episcopal Society. I met the missionary, who seems to be an earnest man; but he, too, is discouraged. Altogether, Port-au-Prince is a challenge to the church of Christ. There is one other body, a native Episcopal church of some sort, that carries on in the capital. I saw only the outside of one of their buildings.

I have seen the interior of several Catholic churches. They are packed with gaudy images, decorated with paper flowers. In front of each image is a padlocked money-box, and in some cases a suitable reminder of the virtue there is in giving to the church. The eastern end of the church is filled with various scriptural scenes depicted in life-size statuary. As one remains a few moments in the building he sees a stream of the ragged supporters of the Roman Church come, one after another, to pray, and then put something out of their poverty into one of the collecting boxes.

I reached Jacmel a week after touching at Cape Haitien. It is not easy to describe the difference between this Protestant district, and the rest of Haiti as I have seen it. The streets are clean and the people prosperous and respectful. In fact Jacmel is entirely different from the rest of Haiti. I was welcomed by Brother L'Herisson, the Baptist missionary. He is a man of God. Around him is the fragrance that one recognizes instinctively as coming from fellowship with God. I soon learned the secret. For years he has made a habit of rising at 5:30 for his "cult" as he calls it—his worship. The enormous work done in this district, is an evidence of what God can do when his methods are adopted and when he is really depended on for results. But that is another story which I hope to tell another time.

The school, named "Siloe" (see John 9:7), is situated about a mile from the outskirts of Jacmel. There is a house containing four large rooms with the usual outbuildings, this is at present occupied by a young man and his wife, who help in the school. We shall live there, however, as soon as I can get the home furnished. A stream flows through the property, just below the house. There is a grove of bananas on each side of the stream. Two rooms large enough to hold twelve beds each have been put up near by. At present we have six girls, and nine boys in residence. (We expect to have twelve of each by next month.) There are also some day scholars. Some of the children are quite young, and very backward. One of them cannot write his own name. They are all eager to learn, and are obedient and well-behaved. The raising of their own food is a part of the curriculum, and today the boys are preparing a piece of land to plant sweet potatoes, while the girls have taken up land for the purpose of horticulture, and are cleaning it ready for seed which we hope to receive soon.

I am glad to say that I am making as good progress with the language as I can expect. I take charge of classes in arithmetic, writing and scripture regularly. Last Sunday I spoke in French to the church we visited, without much difficulty, and was able to make myself understood.

This is a "field white unto harvest." Doors are opening everywhere. Pray that the Lord of the harvest will thrust forth laborers of his own choosing.

Jacmel, Haiti,
Oct. 30, 1923.

First impressions are not always reliable because of the moods to which men are subject. But Mr. Wood was evidently perfectly normal when he registered his first impressions of Haiti. It is well to see places we cannot visit through the eyes of a real seer. The writer of this article sees things as Nehemiah saw them with hope and determination to build out of the rubbish a new Jerusalem.

A Survey of Baptist Work for 1923

The outstanding achievements for the past year, the hopes for the future and a recounting of the chief needs is briefly given by those nearest to the heart of the work.

General Organizations of the Denomination

General Board of Promotion

DURING the year just closed the giving of Northern Baptists for the support of their world task has continued on a high level. Reports for the fiscal year ending April 30, 1923, show that there was received from all sources for our missionary, educational and other benevolent work $8,266,018.28. In all our denominational history, this record has been exceeded only twice. This was during the two years immediately preceding.

During the autumn months Bible and missionary conferences have been held in thirty-five of the larger centers of population throughout the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. Large registrations and enthusiastic audiences greeted the able leaders who had the programs in charge. These conferences brought to our constituency in an unusual way the interests of the kingdom of Christ as represented in the work of our denomination. The delegates from the churches received the messages eagerly, and with earnest purpose and determination planned to carry them to every local church.

With the first of May we began the fifth and final year of the New World Movement period, upon which the denomination entered so hopefully at Denver in 1919. The convention at Atlantic City adopted as our goal for the present fiscal year, the raising of the funds required to meet both the current operating expenses and accumulated debts of all participating organizations to April 30, 1924, viz., $12,161,521.67.

As we enter upon the closing weeks of the New World Movement period, we bespeak the hearty cooperation of every church and every member in the paramount task of completing our program with honor. The combined efforts of all will be required to do this. We, as a people, are prosperous. We are abundantly able to take care of all our financial obligations. We ought to do it in order to be ready as a denomination to enter whole-heartedly upon the work of the coming year.

New York City.

J. Y. Aitchison.

The Board of Education

THERE have been no events within my knowledge in the educational world that will give any significance to the year 1923. Our schools and colleges are crowded with young people seeking an education. Only a few years ago many of our schools had to maintain men in the field "drumming" up new students. There are few of them that have to do that now. Most of them have more students than they can really care for.

The thing that most concerns us now is not what happened, but what is about to happen. Five years ago at Denver the denomination adopted a new policy with regard to its schools—it determined to assume responsibility for their support and make them an integral part of the denominational life. For four years now the schools have been sharing in the benevolence of the denomination and have received the funds which have enabled them to "carry on."

After April 30 next, all this is to be revised again. By its adoption of the report of the committee on future program at Atlantic City last May, the denomination has again renounced its responsibility for its schools; has thrown them back upon their own resources and told them to sink or swim for themselves. The only exception is that the convention has consented to raise a small limited sum to help keep alive some schools that are still on the ragged edge of life.

To many, this seems nothing less than a tragedy—not so much a tragedy for the schools as for the denomination. A denomination that is not manifesting its devotion to education is not likely for long to maintain its interest in education. How some of our schools are going to continue, I do not know; quite likely some of them may not. We are to be thrown back into the old competitive process again. The schools must build up again their machinery for appeals, which has grown rusty during these four years, and must once more present their claims to the churches. Once again then we have this deadly competition between missions and education which has been so unfortunate in our history.

But the die is cast and the schools will take up this burden once more hoping to discover an increasing number of Baptist people who believe that next to the task of reaching our own young people with the claims of the gospel we have no other task so important as training these children whom God has given us to be worthy citizens of the nation and of the kingdom.

As we face these facts it is not strange that the year 1924 does not seem so promising to those whom the denomination has charged with the stupendous task of the education of its youth.

The Publication Society

THE best way to realize the magnitude and diversity of work of the American Baptist Publication Society is by comparison. One hundred years ago, when the society was organized, it had absolutely nothing to depend on except faith in the generosity of our Baptist people. The income for the first year was less than $375. Year after year it has withstood the test and accepted extra obligations for the denomination from time to time, and now, at the end of a century, it stands as the largest Baptist publishing house and one of the largest denominational houses in the world. Statistics in this case spell progress.

What of 1924?

What? Why our anniversary, of course. Our society is 100 years old on Feb. 25, 1924. On this account the society is being favored by a great deal of publicity. This ought to create more hearty interest than ever in our work, and should lead to a better understanding of its magnitude and scope. Our past year was the best yet, and we are expecting that the current fiscal year will be even better than the best. The prosperity of the society is limited only by the interest of our denomination. Our chief needs for 1924 will be a great strengthening of the work of religious education.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

THE year 1923 in the work of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has been characterized by an unusually large number of significant events. These may be summarized as follows:

1. The year has been remarkable for the record of evangelistic achievements. The annual report shows that for the preceding statistical year a total of 18,415 converts have been added to the membership of the churches by baptism. This is the largest total ever reported in a single year in the history of the society, covering 110 years.

2. Another significant event was the reduction in the accumulated deficit, which during the preceding year stood at $914,262.50 and which on April 30, 1923, by reason of unexpected larger income from various sources and through a substantial reduction in expenditures, was reduced to $661,540.10.

3. In view of the abundant blessing given by God upon the evangelistic preaching tour in Czecho-Slovakia during the preceding summer, the board sent to the Baltic States one of its members, Dr. S. W. Cummings, for a similar preaching tour during the summer of 1923. He had some of the most memorable experiences of his life on this tour, addressed thousands of people who attended the many meetings arranged for him, and through his work hundreds were brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

4. During the winter of 1923 the board carried through another significant effort in relief work, through forwarding on the second "Ship of Fellowship" a total of nearly 1200 bales of clothing for distribution in the famine-stricken areas of Russia. These gifts were distributed by the board's own representative, Dr. W. O. Lewis, and brought relief to thousands of suffering people.

5. The third meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, while a general denominational event, has nevertheless been of outstanding significance in the work of the Foreign Mission Society in view of the large inspiration and encouragement brought to the peoples of Europe with whom the society has for many years been maintaining a cooperative relationship. All fields in which the society has been aiding the work financially were represented by large delegations who brought back to their constituencies the vision and an inspiration of this epoch-making denominational congress. In connection with that meeting was the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary in the work of the Swedish Baptists. This in itself may be recognized as a significant achievement in the work of the year.

6. The year 1923 must also record an unparalleled disaster in foreign missionary effort occasioned by the terrible Japan earthquake, which damaged and destroyed property consisting of the Tokyo Tabernacle, Mabie Memorial School, four Baptist churches, five missionary residences and several other buildings, involving a total loss of approximately $500,000. Never in its 110 years of history has the society been called upon to face such a staggering blow to its work.

A Baptist World Consciousness

IN formulating and realizing the still larger task today we are passing through a crisis. Heretofore, as Mr. J. H. Shakespeare well said in 1905, "our thought at home has been too insular." But in trying to broaden our horizon the same objections are raised as in the first half of the nineteenth century. The objections to the New World Movement and the Seventy-five Million Campaign and the objections to participation in the World Congress at Stockholm are based upon the same grounds as those offered against the movement led by Messrs. Rice and Judson from 1814 onward. These objections are theological and ecclesiastical. You even hear the charge of misappropriation of funds made so often against Mr. Rice in the years 1814 to 1840. And they are groundless today as we know they were groundless one hundred years ago.—W. W. Barnes in the Review and Expositor.

The outlook for the new year 1924 is difficult to forecast. The financial situation, while substantially better than a year ago, still presents serious problems. The deficit must be liquidated as soon as possible, and a larger degree of support from the constituency through the payment of the New World Movement pledges and through enthusiastic cooperation in the new denominational program, is imperative if the society is to advance its work in a measure comparable to the opening doors and enlarging opportunities. On all fields new buildings, such as chapels, hospitals, schools and homes are needed, and plans must be carried through during the new year for the reconstruction of the shattered work in Japan. To take the place of missionaries who have been called home because of age or illness, or who have been called to a higher service, and to man new stations and take care of new work, a large number of missionaries must be appointed. The encouraging development of self-support on the foreign field in that now 61 per cent of the churches are entirely self-supporting, gives promise of still further development under proper missionary leadership. Futhermore, the thousands of new converts must be wisely shepherded, and this emphasizes the imperative necessity of furnishing adequate facilities for the training of leaders from among them, so that in the days to come the new churches may grow rapidly to self-support and become centers for yet broader extension of the faith. Thus evangelistic successes, while gratifying, present also grave responsibilities. New doors, such as Russia and other fields, must be entered. Above all, the entire enterprise, from headquarters at home to the most remote outstation in the jungles of Africa, or the villages of India and China, must constantly be spiritually vitalized so that the same loyalty to Christ and his gospel which characterized the pioneer missionaries one hundred years ago may lead succeeding generations of Christian emissaries in foreign lands to even larger success in the establishment of Christ's kingdom. The society is planning to carry forward its program for the new year in reliance upon God and his people.

New York City P. H. J. LERRIGO.

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society

IN counting our blessings for the past year, the following achievements should be noted; a greater determination on the part of the missionary staff to "carry on" in spite of "cuts;" a larger number of Christians in our schools; and an increased interest and support among the Christians in our fields. The budget could provide for no new buildings but a few have been in process of erection, provided for by the "blessed" Jubilee Fund and a few special gifts.

Above all else, it would seem necessary to secure immediately sufficient money each year to provide for the running expenses of the work of the society. It is not wise to erect new buildings, to open new stations or to extend our work in any way until the regular activities are secure. Missionary salaries are not romantic but should come first, followed by a second need, no less important, the funds with which they may carry on their work. As soon as the "operating budget" is assured, the debt must receive serious attention and both of these must be provided before we dare to enlarge or extend the work of the kingdom.

But salaries and running expenses are not all that need to concern us at present. A cut of 25 per cent for the last two years has not only allowed no enlargement, but has not permitted very necessary repairs to buildings and compounds. Another very serious matter is the breaks in the missionary staff by illness, probably due to carrying too heavy burdens when requests for new workers could not be filled. This must not continue even though the whole budget is provided.

Our budget is "a plan on faith" and as we look out into a new year our hopes and aspirations rest entirely on the loyalty and true-heartedness of Baptists who are loving their Master enough to see that his gospel reaches these in the "uttermost parts."

New York City MABELLE RAE MCVEIGH.

American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE year has witnessed widespread revivals in our mission fields. The revival in Cuba was extensive and Mr. and Mrs. Peters have returned to the island for a second series of services.

The work in Haiti and Jamaica gives large promise of spiritual fruitage. The labors of our devoted missionaries in Porto Rico, Mexico, El Salvador and Nicaragua gladden our hearts. The negro students in our fifteen mission schools gave last year for tuition, board, books, room rent, incidental expenses, and they and the graduates, for equipment and general expenses, more than $525,000.

Gifts from the Indians in Oklahoma have made possible the erection without debt of five fireproof buildings costing $375,000 at Bacone College and the Morrow Indian Orphanage. The Indian mission work has gone forward with rich harvest of souls among many Indian tribes.

The work among the Japanese, Chinese, Hindus and Mexicans in the West has been strongly entrenched and the mission work among fifteen other foreign-speaking groups in many parts of the country has yielded gracious harvests.

Our church edifice grants have been numerous and in the aggregate large, and our architectural department has without extra cost to churches rendered invaluable service.

The International Seminary at East Orange and its Mexican branch in Los Angeles, and the Colgate Italian Institution in East Orange have had a great influence over the young men of seven nationalities.

The frontier mission work in the mountain states has been extended and the colporter-missionaries, chapel car and chapel auto car leaders jointly supported by the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society have had rich spiritual results.

New York City CHARLES L. WHITE.

The Woman's Home Mission Society

THE Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society rejoices in many tokens of the blessing of God upon its work during the past year and offers this "condensed survey" with heartfelt gratitude. We look forward to 1924 with confidence, with hope and with faith.

The outstanding achievements of 1923 are, first of all, a marked increase in the conversions on many of our fields. The dedication of the new Christian center at Rankin, Pa. The completion of the first unit of the Christian center at Phoenix, Ariz. The completion through personal gifts of the payment for the property occupied by our school in Puebla, Mex. Our Christian Americanization department has added a large number of volunteers and this advance has been made in spite of a decrease in the number of workers in that department.

Our outlook for 1924 would be filled with promise and with the assurance of large results if we had the means to enlarge the work. Opportunities are unlimited and calls for an increase in the number of our workers on many fields are most insistent. Barriers are being broken down in Central America and opposition to our work is decreasing. The doors are wide open.

The necessity of working under a diminished budget has made it impossible to replenish equipment on some fields or to meet adequately the need of new and up-to-date equipment on others. An increased equipment for established fields is an urgent need.

Our Christian centers greatly need more missionaries and specialists and our Latin American fields are pleading earnestly for more American teachers.

Beneath all these needs is the longing desire of our hearts for such an inflow of gifts in our treasury as will set us free from debt, and enable us to open every open door and respond to every call.

New York City ALICE B. COLEMAN.

A Baptist World Consciousness

THE great war made possible our present opportunity. The knowledge of other lands and their religious needs was brought home to our people in the personal letters which our sons and our brothers wrote from those lands. The emotions of our people were stirred to the depths by the sufferings, the dangers and the losses. The war has done for the Baptists of the twentieth century world what the conversion of Messrs. Rice and Judson did for the Baptists of the nineteenth century America. It has broadened our knowledge and stirred our emotions. The denominational program of missions and education, projected by Mr. Rice a century ago when American Baptist life approached the fluid state, eliminating the paralyzing element of the Hardshellism and the vicious element of Campbellism and called the evangelical element onward to a greater effort for the good of men and the glory of God. Today, when the life of the world has been stirred to the depths as never before, the denominational program of wider scope and larger effort is enabling us to throw off the paralyzing and the vicious elements that have heretofore hindered progress. And so with widened knowledge and deepened emotions and hindrances being eliminated we gird ourselves for the new opportunities.

—W. W. Barnes in the Review and Expositor.

Baptist Young People's Union

ACHIEVEMENTS of a spiritual organization like the B. Y. P. U. of America whose effort is essentially inspirational and educational, are not easily inventoried. They belong more to the realm of the temporarily intangible, becoming measurably visible only in after years. The many state, associational, provincial and larger-city organizations are the working units. Their specific accomplishments, if collected, would be incompressible into the limited space allowed for this resume. The present generally more youthful status of our church boards is at least partially attributable to the past twenty-five years' work of the "young people's society."

The general and world-wide renaissance of youth reflects itself in the convictions of the leaders of this organization. They voice a belief in a larger place in the denomination and local church program of a work for young people by young people.

1923 records an advance the extent of which can only be intimated. During the year more than a thousand young people have enlisted in our Life Service League as an indication of their determination to make Christ master of their lives. Though the Northern Baptist Convention, through its stewardship department has undertaken a new effort with its young people, still the past year has seen our lists of tithers grow by the hundreds. The revised Christian Culture Course has proved popular with young people as evidenced by the increasing enlistment especially during the fall months.

1923 witnessed the holding of our annual convention east of New York state for the first time since 1902. Boston proved a cordial host to the more than three thousand registered delegates who flocked to this partiotic shrine. The year also marked the birth of the World B. Y. P. U. beside whose cradle stood James Asa White, former general secretary and Herbert W. Hines, present secretary of the executive committee, representing this organization.

1924 promises a greater cooperation on the part of state, national and international officers and workers and our denominational educational leaders in the promotion of a program that shall emphasize the indispensable place and function of the organized young people's society in every local church through whose self-directed expressional activities comes the greatest spiritual development of youth.

The great need is that the pastors and Christian educational leaders recognize the strategic importance of youth in the Christian program and their right to claim from church leaders a more sympathetic interest and a more earnest effort to provide them with practical aids in planning and promoting their organized activities.

The thirty-fourth year of this organization should see this need better realized and its past achievements excelled.

Chicago. EDWIN PHELPS.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board

THERE has been a steady increase in the interest, and the response to the statements and appeals of the board have been increasingly inspiring. The process of education has not yet ended because it is only eleven years since the work began. The purposes of the board, its methods and objectives at that time were not clearly understood. Today, however, the condition is vastly better and I am very glad to report this to you.

Our total assets have been increased by $1,009,551.83. Most of this amount was reported to the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City. The amount of $799,310.50 due this board, which had been withheld from the receipts of the General Board of Promotion in the plan of the so-called preferential treatment, has been incorporated by the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention in the budget of the current year. If this amount is received the income will add materially to the ability of the board.

Our beneficiaries have increased until now they number approximately 1600. The board has also assumed the care of all the retired missionaries of the women's boards and a share of those of the general foreign society. Our grants to ministers still slightly exceed those to ministers' widows, but the ratio is steadily changing and it will not be long before the widows will outnumber the men. This is similar to the experience of other denominations.

The year has seen the largest increase in the membership in the retiring pension plan since it was inaugurated. Here also a process of education has been necessary. Our great problem has been to interest the younger ministers. The men in middle life need no incentive, but the necessity of a retiring pension does not loom large on the horizon of the young minister when he enters upon his work, and yet that is the time of all times for him to begin his saving and his preparation for an event which is as certain as death and taxes. The largest number of applications in one month was 101 in November.

There is a steady increase in the number of churches that are now sharing in the work of making provision in their annual budgets for the retiring pensions of their pastors. There is still room for improvement. Ninety-eight per cent of the Episcopalian churches included in the annual budget of the church an item covering the payment of the annual dues of the rectors in order to provide for their retiring pension. The cost to the minister is heaviest in his first year of membership. In the second year of membership the board is providing 70 per cent of the cost so that for 30 per cent of the actual cost the minister is making a sure provision for the time when he can no longer work. During the year the plan has been pronounced by experts as the cheapest and best among the denominations.

The halo which crowns the outgoing missionary is sometimes sadly battered and broken when the same missionary returns after his long service. This board does not wish to detract in the slightest degree from the special interest in the young man preparing for the ministry. In justice to all, however, when these men have grown old in the service and broken by the life and their labors of love, it does not believe that the full duty of the denomination which sent them forth has been done until provision is made for the old men as well as for the young. Indeed, the supreme purpose of the board is to provide a means by which our churches may honor the men who already are ministers or missionaries and have given their lives to a service which cannot be measured by money. The board stands ready to help just as far as the churches help the board.

New York City. E. T. TOMLINSON.

The Southern Convention

Foreign Mission Board of Southern Baptist Convention

Outstanding Achievements 1923

Notwithstanding insufficient funds, we have been able to go forward. Fifty new missionaries were sent to the fields. Six of these entered practically new fields of labor.

Our Japanese churches have experienced a great revival through the preaching of the Japanese evangelist, Paul Kanamori. Some two thousand have already made professions of faith and applied for baptism. This number will more than double our present membership.

In Shanghai a new compound, which will compare favorably with any mission compound anywhere, has been developed and will greatly strengthen our work in that important center.

In Brazil, a normal school building has been erected in connection with Rio College, and the splendid girls' school building in Sao Paulo has been completed.

Outlook for 1924

Abroad we face opportunities far beyond our ability to meet. The popularity and prosperity of the churches are embarrassing. At home the outlook is brighter. The churches are making an earnest effort to pay their pledges before the 75 million campaign closes. Increased contributions are being received. There is also an increase of interest in mission study not only among the women, but also among the men.

Our Needs

Our most apparent, practical need is money. The board's deficit is still beyond a million dollars. Of course we need more workers. We could easily double our forces and still not enter all the open doors. Our greatest need is a missionary consciousness among the churches. If this last could be had all other needs would be solved.

Richmond, Va. J. MARCUS KESTER.

Southern Baptists in Education

SOUTHERN Baptists have 119 schools under denominational control and ownership. They represent a financial investment of $44,819,961 and have about 44,000 students. In academic grade they range from the high school to the university and theological seminary.

These schools participate in the receipts from the 75 million campaign. In addition to this stated income a number of the schools during the past year have received large gifts from their constituencies and other friends. Several of these gifts amounted to a hundred thousand dollars each. New buildings and increased endowments have resulted from these benefactions.

In common with all other schools of the South the Baptist institutions face the problem of standardization. This has to do with equipment, endowments and faculties. Regional standardization agencies set up requirements which classify schools and give a rating in the public opinion. Hence it is necessary that schools shall meet these requirements in order to stand well and perform their task in a worthy way. Several of our schools have recently attained these standards and have been received into the Southern association. Others are approximating the standards.

During the past year the Council of Church Schools of the South has been organized and the Baptists have been glad to be counted as cooperating in the council. The purpose of the council is to advance the cause of Christian education by giving a united appeal and influence for education under denominational control. There are many common tasks that may be advanced by all denominations working together but without organic union.

The next year promises to be better in financial support for the schools. Education has ranked with foreign missions in the allocation of funds from the campaign. This means that Southern Baptists are beginning to have a vitalizing conscience on Christian education. Our most commanding task is so to awaken our people to the educational needs that they will give adequate equipment and support to our schools. Education is fundamental to the entire program of efficient Christianity.

Birmingham, Ala. ALBERT R. BOND.

The Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention

1. During the year we have completed a notable building program. Our growing business and our enlarging organization made this imperative. We have just completed a seven-story reinforced concrete structure for storage, stock and shipping, and a great printing building. As a result we have remodeled our original building for our office purpose and it is completely filled. The program cost us over $500,000, but this is all provided for. Our assets are now about $1,500,000.

2. We have made a notable survey of our rural situation, and as a result have planned a campaign for the country church and B. Y. P. U. We are making rapid gains in country church development.

3. With the above has developed about our board a great movement for larger schools. Our Sunday schools of around 1000 or above number over 110, and everywhere the ambition for larger schools and for equipment to match is growing. Every great preacher in the South among Baptists is today building his work on a great Sunday school. Through a series of "clinic" organization schools we are seeking to give a practical three weeks training for paid workers.

4. We have revised our fine series of graded lessons for twelve grades.

5. In cooperation with the stewardship campaign we offered free to pastors textbooks for stewardship classes and gave away 40,000 copies of Cook's "Stewardship and Missions" for use in 2000 classes.

6. Our B. Y. P. U. work will show about 13,000 unions, and over 550,000 enrolled.

Our outlook has never been brighter and in every line the prospect is fascinating.

Nashville, Tenn. I. J. VAN NESS.

Beyond the Seas

Esthonia

OUR outstanding achievements of the past year have been rather cheering, as in several churches we have had revivals and the result was that many souls have been brought to the saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sunday school and Y. M. C. A. conferences have been held. Special meetings have been held for students of our university. I have under my care the whole of our leper mission with over 200 lepers that all have to be looked after and many have been saved and baptized by me. In one asylum 25 per cent of them are our church members. Another outstanding work is among the prisoners. All the prison doors are open to me and I can enter at any time and preach the gospel to them and give away the scriptures with other religious books to them.

The great churches in the past purposely kept the people in great spiritual darkness; so in our country you will find districts where the people are not a bit better than heathen. As we have our six traveling missionaries they go from place to place bringing the gospel light to the ignorant people. The great war robbed many homes of fathers and husbands, destroying many happy families, so we Baptists have opened the first Baptist orphanage for twelve children. The results of the New World Movement are above every description: Through this our land and nation have been grafted in the big tree and through this we have, as other governments, our own rule, religious and other freedoms. Baptists are no more looked upon as heretics, but men and women who know what they want.

Our outlook for 1924 is bright. We want to enlarge our tents and stretch forth the curtains, lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes. In some places the Lutheran churches are shut up as the people are tired of their unbiblical teaching so the Baptists have to fill up the gap and take the lead.

We need in each large town a larger building for services as the present buildings were built with great poverty and for small meetings. All your brethren that have seen our work will give the same testimony. In the country several congregations have tried to build their churches but cannot finish, and the poverty is so great that they cannot bring them to completion. We need very much a printing press or some part in some of them so that we could print our own tracts and other good books. The greatest need is to have our own high school in connection with our seminary. The government has given us promise that as soon as we would do something they would help us and pay for the teachers. Our children have to learn in schools that are not only godless, but where the holiest is scorned and blasphemed before our children. There are many other things that we need as the wise Solomon says, "That which is crooked cannot be made straight: and that which is wanting cannot be numbered." So the Lord Jesus will have to step in and help us through the American, Canadian and English brethren.

Kegel. ADAM PODIN.

Denmark

DURING the past year a spirit of revival has been experienced in our churches, and many persons have been added by baptism. Never in our history have we had so many baptisms as during the past year. A movement has been started this year to push forward into the parts of our country where we have no Baptists nor any Baptist work. We call this our "mission in new fields."

The final plans for the erection of our new school building—which will cost 250,000 kroner—was adopted at our annual conference after much earnest prayer and the work will now be carried forward eagerly.

The meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm was an event which brought much inspiration to many of our people who attended this notable gathering and for many more, who could not attend, it was a delightful experience to see and hear leaders of our denomination from England, America, India, China and Japan who on their way to or from Stockholm did visit Copenhagen.

The period of the New World Movement has been a remarkable one in our churches. In the four years since 1919 a total sum of 1,200,000 kroner was raised. Compared with the preceding period of four years, where only 500,000 kroner was raised, it clearly shows how the spirit of giving has increased.

The outlook for the year 1924 is very promising. We expect a large ingathering of souls in all our churches. The brethren who proclaim the gospel are working with zeal and expectation.

A new impulse to give to foreign missions has come this year through the sending out of three young missionaries from our midst to work in Belgian Congo under the supervision of the Swedish Baptist Mission.

In spite of the liberality shown by our churches our treasury is in debt, but we will try to do our best in the coming year to clear our indebtedness. We still feel the lack of able and sufficient educated workers and do look forward to our new school with great expectation in that respect.

Copenhagen. PETER GRARUP.

Sweden

THE past year was the seventy-fifth year of Swedish Baptist history. Presented in a few summaries, the results of the endeavors of the Baptists of Sweden and the substantial support granted them by their stronger brothers in America through the agencies of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Baptist Publication Society, are 680 Baptist churches, 59,903 church members, 1337 preachers of the gospel, 444 of whom are ordained pastors of churches, 112 missionaries on the foreign fields, two theological seminaries with upwards of 100 students in attendance, 65,784 Sunday-school scholars, 30,321 members of young people's societies.

There has been marked progress along all lines of work during 1923; many of the churches have had a number of additions to their membership through baptisms. A number of new missionaries have been sent out to our foreign mission fields.

One outstanding event was the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the formation of the first Swedish Baptist church in 1848. This festive occasion followed immediately upon our annual Baptist convention. As the great assembly was reminded of the Lord's doings, the wonderful growth in numbers of baptized believers and churches organized, the steady progress and development of the work, the good and faithful leaders and the self-sacrificing witnesses in gospel service, through the instrumentality of whom God worked it all, there was overflowing rejoicing and praise to the Lord for his grace and blessing. An earnest effort had been in operation for four years to raise a fund for the pension of aged ministers. This fund which amounted to about $100,000 was presented as a thank-offering before the Lord. Words of congratulation and encouragement were spoken by representatives from the Swedish Baptist churches in the United States, from the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, from the American Baptist Publication Society, from the Northern Baptist Convention and the Southern Baptist Convention, from the Baptist Unions of neighboring countries in Europe and from the Free churches of Sweden.

The Baptist World Congress

The great event of the year was the Baptist World Congress held at Stockholm during the last week of June. That august assembly made a strong and far-reaching impression for good upon religious life in Sweden. It helped greatly to open the minds of many Swedes to a better understanding of the Baptists than they had before. Full reports have been given of the congress in THE BAPTIST and it is needless to repeat things already known. I can, however, tell of two interesting instances in connection with the congress which came to my notice a few days ago. There was a wife of a prominent man in one of the towns of Sweden who last year was baptized and joined the local Baptist church. Her husband was not a true Christian and he was greatly displeased with his wife for the step she had taken. When the time for the congress came, the wife went to Stockholm to attend the unique meeting. Her husband had some errand to the capital and came there too. Then he thought it would be interesting to see the Baptist assembly in session. So he followed his wife to the meeting. There he was overwhelmed by the impression that he was among God's people, but was not one of them himself. He felt the need of the grace of salvation, and came out fully on the Lord's side. Coming home he applied for baptism and joined the church of which his wife was a member. In a similar way another man attending the congress found the Saviour and is now a good Baptist.

In Sweden, too, the New World Movement period has tended to awaken a deeper sense of responsibility before the great mission problems of our age and of the obligations of living Christians to the rest of the world. This comes to evidence among other things, in growing readiness to contribute more liberally to missionary purposes. And yet we have not taken up the movement to put it into operation systematically.

The prospects as we look forward to the coming year are that we shall have sowing and reaping going on successfully upon the Lord's fields entrusted to us for cultivation. We believe in the saving power of the gospel of Christ which the messengers of the Swedish Baptists preach at home and abroad, and we shall not be put to shame.

What we need very much is more unity of spirit and more solidarity of purpose and effort in utilizing our resources. We also have pressing need of large sums of money to pay heavy debts in our mission treasuries and to cover the current expenses for the continuation of the work.

Baptist Work in France During 1923

THE Baptist churches of France and especially those of the North, are still suffering from the terrible shocks of the war.

The majority of the French-speaking Baptist churches are united in a solid organization which is known as "The Federation of Baptist Evangelical Churches of France." In this organization are grouped churches in Belgium, northern France, Brittany, Paris, Alsace-Lorraine, and southern France.

In Paris, the building at 48, Rue de Lille, is being repaired and remodelled to serve three purposes. (1) There is here a central office for the Baptist work of northern Europe in charge of Dr. W. O. Lewis. (2) The theological seminary of the Baptist Federation is housed here. (3) A Baptist church, recently organized also worships in this building. Rev. Maurice Malzac is at present pastor of this church.

Thanks to the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, which has so kindly assisted us, all our work in the devastated regions has been maintained and reestablished.

At La Fere, the first Baptist church to be destroyed by the war has been rebuilt and was dedicated last May.

At Roubaix, a new church has been built and was dedicated in July.

We still have two other churches to rebuild, one at Chauny and one at Lens. Unfortunately we lack the funds to start the work. It is urgent that we commence soon, and especially at Lens as the opportunities there are very encouraging.

The business of the federation is looked after by a committee of seven members. We are very grateful for the sympathy shown us by Dr. J. H. Franklin, secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, which has been for us a great encouragement. There are twenty-eight churches in the federation with about 1400 members, nineteen pastors and ten evangelists and colporters.

We request for our French-speaking churches the prayers of our brethren all over the world.

PAUL PELCE,
President Federation of Baptist Churches of France.

Czecho-Slovakia

THERE were many outstanding facts in the past year. The central was the congress in Stockholm. Seventeen delegates went to Stockholm, eager to grasp at least something of its spiritual richness. They came home to witness the great and blessed unity in evangelizing and helping the lost. The meaning of the congress for Czecho-Slovak Baptists was strengthened by many visits of honorable visitors especially from America..

In July Rev. A. Knobloch opened a tent mission at Brno. More than 100 people decided to follow Christ within four weeks of this activity. It was glorious though won at the cost of Mr. Knobloch's health.

Our young Baptists organized themselves in a Baptist Young People's Union, and they have developed a new activity. Their main task is to win as many young people for Christ as possible, to serve the church and to teach children in Sunday schools. As yet there are only 700 members, but they have strong faith that they will grow.

Baptist women's work has concentrated its attention upon the Peabody-Montgomery children's home, which was opened in 1921 by the generous help of the W. A. B. F. M. S. There are now nineteen orphans. This home, in Mrs. Montgomery's words "is the last word in making orphanages." All the children try to serve Him, some of them were baptized. Besides this work the Baptist women support a missionary in the north of Bohemia. But they would like very much to have another children's or family home for there are many parentless children in the country.

Our seminary for training ministers has passed the second year of its existence. The work goes on successfully and we are looking round to see whether it will be possible for at least some of our students to spend a year in some American or English Baptist College.

A Mighty Faith

Our faith and God is mightier than the most disagreeable and desperate situation. Are we not in his field? Will he not send his help in time? Has he not enough faithful servants who would plead for his cause in Czecho-Slovakia, the heart of Central Europe? Through this faith we face the coming year 1924. There are great possibilities of work. It is possible that in the east of Czecho-Slovakia or somewhere else, spiritual awakening will break out. We do not know how we would manage it, for there is only one preacher in the east. But we believe strongly that God will care. We feel we are but weak and very imperfect instruments in his holy hand. Let him use us according to his will. We shall do our best for his sake and for the Baptist cause. May he help us graciously. May he be helper of those who can help.

The Burma Mission—Rangoon

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year in education were:

1. The opening of the Agricultural school at Pyinmana the only school of its kind in Burma, with an enrolment of forty boys, all of whom are Christians. The Karen Christians, who number 57,000, have for a long time felt the need of such an institution. The majority of the students, who are Karens, will go back to their villages equipped with information about the growing of crops, the raising of chickens, pigs and cattle, which will enable them to do much to improve the economic condition of the people.

2. The advances made at Judson College. (a) We had a 40 per cent increase in 1922. It seemed as though we would do well to hold our own this year but instead there was an even larger number of new students than last year and our enrolment reached 262. (b) The largest graduating class in the history of the college. A class of twenty-six passed the Bachelor of Arts examination. This includes seventeen men and nine women, one of the latter standing highest of all women candidates. (c) The purchase of Benton House. This new women's hostel was filled to capacity immediately upon its having opened. Our gratitude is due to Mrs. M. Grant Edmands whose gift made its purchase possible and in honor of whose mother it is named. (d) Limitation of admissions. We reached this year in our first and second year classes the maximum enrolment which our present equipment will permit. Further expansion of this equipment has become an extremely urgent matter.

Evangelism

Outstanding achievements of the past year in evangelism:

1. There has been in certain sections, intensified effort on the part of Home Rule societies to prevent the preaching of the gospel. Christianity is a foreign religion they say. This opposition on the part of some has made others more eager to hear. In the Bassein field where these societies are strong, there have been fifty baptisms within the last four months.

Word has just come from Mr. Young telling of an outbreak of persecution of Christians in the "Wa" country, just across the Burmese border in China. Three groups of Christians had sought refuge with the missionary to escape persecution and threatened death. "On Sept. 16 while the people were at worship in the largest Christian village, the local official with a strong armed force came, beat the preacher very severely, pounded the Bible and hymn book to pieces and beat men, women and children. One man was beaten till his skull was broken and he will probably die. Five chapels, all that we had in that section, were destroyed."

The Burmese Christians have formed the Burman Baptist Evangelistic Society and employed a full time secretary, the object being to assume a larger share of responsibility for the evangelization of Burma.

The Young People's Christian Association, of which one of the Burmese teachers of Judson College is president, has on its own initiative, done a noteworthy piece of work in aiding the flood suffers in Bassein district. They raised Rs.2500/—and six or eight members at their own expense went to the stricken area to help in relief work. This desire to serve is a step forward.

2. During the past four years our membership has increased from 69,459 to 80,000. Baptisms have increased from 4276 per year to 7159 per year, with a total of 22,098. Contributions of native churches have increased from 289,890 per year to Rs.514,355, with a total of Rs.1,712,095. Sunday-school enrolment during the four years has averaged 26,691. Day and boarding school pupils have averaged 29,602, total school fees received being Rs.994,450/—.

The Outlook for 1924

In some respects the outlook is not bright. The heavy debts on the two societies call for a reduction of expenses and a consequent cramping of the work. This may, however, lead to increased giving on the part of the indigenous community, and if so, will be a blessing in disguise.

Our most pressing need is a man for Haka. There is but one man where we formerly had three and his furlough is overdue and no one to relieve him. A doctor is also urgently needed for Kengtung to relieve Dr. Henderson whose furlough is due in the spring of 1925.

Our Work in Burma

ON the whole the reports for the Burma missions during the past year seem very encouraging. The work is so vast and so varied that we can only give glimpses here and there.

At the Kenzada Burmese Association, with the Karen band, a Burmese choir and good preaching for each evening, there was an attendance of 800 to 1,000, who gave very respectful attention. On Sunday afternoon the association paraded the town in procession, headed by the band, the missionaries and the workers, and followed by the Christians in line and many children. They stopped and preached at the principal street corners. The town was much stirred. There will be follow-up work.

The Moulmein Karen Association this year was one of much interest. It was the fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the woman's society and the first of complete self-support in the mission. The Home Mission Society supported twenty-two workers and closed the year with a balance of Rs. 466. In the reports concerning the workers there were several interesting items. One worker had his salary cut because he did not give full time. One was discharged because he did not work where he was sent. One was advised to do more fishing for souls and less other fishing One old preacher was pensioned and told to preach where he chose—they knew he would preach somewhere.

Of the Shan Association in Ioringgyi it is reported: "Good attendance, lively interest, encouraging reports." This station is very fortunate in some of the native helpers. Particular mention is made of a Chinese-Burmese doctor and a Karen lawyer who left much more lucrative employments to become evangelists.

Kengtung is one of the most important stations in the Shan field. The work there has spread among the Lahns and the Was and other tribes and across the border into China. The missionary stationed there now says: "One is constantly called on to settle differences between Shans and Was, Shans and Lahns, and Lahns and Lahns."

In Kengtung the Shans are very ready to respond to interest and sympathy. The workers for Shans are greatly encouraged. The bazaar meetings grow in interest, and it is inspiring to the speaker to see those audiences listening intently to the preaching. It is hoped that the time is near when there will be reaping from seed long sown.

Our newest work is in China, headquarters at Bana village. On Jan. 2 the missionary and his son started on what was hoped would be a two months' trip, and found much encouragement, but because authorities refused permission to proceed farther were obliged to return. A compound was secured in Bana and the time since has been much occupied in building.

A Great Day for Christians

July 1, 1923, was a great day for the Christians, for on that day the new chapel was dedicated. Christians came in from about twenty villages. There were 500 present. They were full of enthusiasm when they saw the new chapel and a school of 200.

Notwithstanding the time given to building and the way touring has been prevented in the last eighteen months, 3,563 have been baptized and it is believed a larger number are awaiting baptism. Within about a year twenty-five new chapels have been built by the Christians, some of them larger than any previously built. Twenty are in villages that never had a chapel before.

A telegram received from Bana reports that on Sept. 16 five chapels were destroyed. Many Christians were brutally beaten.

In the Chin Irrawaddy Association the baptisms for 1922 were fifty-two.

It is said that last year was the best in the Chin mission in Haka. Baptisms over 200.

During the last few years there has been a marked increase in our work, especially for Burmans and Karens. Among the Karen churches for the four years beginning 1919 the average number of baptisms yearly was 3,254, for the ten previous years 2,533. For the Bur-

Cuba

THE Baptists of eastern Cuba have been an example to all other missions in their development of self-support. One new church in 1923 took the step of becoming financially independent of the board. The Cuban Home Mission Society in April entered upon its fourth year of existence by adopting a budget of $5000,—a notable increase from the first year's budget of $1000. Besides continuing to support the work in the Baracoa district, this society has assumed new obligations in other parts of eastern Cuba. It is interesting to note that Santiago, a city of nearly 100,000 population, now has three Baptist churches—one which is self-supporting, one supported by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and one supported by the Cuban Baptist Home Mission Society; each one in helpful relations with the others.

Under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Peters our Baptist churches have been revived and the revival is still spreading. The prospects are that several new building operations will be begun in 1924—some of them, where the requirements are not so expensive, being largely financed by the churches themselves.

Our greatest need is for new buildings to provide for our strong college at Cristo which long ago outgrew its equipment. Besides this, three towns are in urgent need of new church buildings.

Porto Rico

The Porto Rico mission reported last May a net gain in the average Sunday-school attendance of 1000, during the year. This increase has been sustained. Our churches are ministering to larger numbers each year, through preaching services, Sunday schools, daily vacation Bible schools, kindergartens and some primary day schools. Additions to the church buildings to furnish new classrooms have been provided in Rio Piedras and Caguas. Other churches are clamoring for the same enlargement of their equipment. The outlook is promising for the evangelical churches to exercise a still larger influence in the life of Porto Rico, and consequently to have larger opportunities of evangelizing the people.

The greatest need of the Baptist mission is for a high school, located in the country and affording its pupils opportunities for self-support through labor. Our best material for Christian leadership comes from the country districts, where educational facilities are lacking. In the critical period of adolescence it is necessary to have our young people under religious influence, in their school life, if they are to be held firm in their purpose to enter Christian service. The increasing numbers that throng our churches call for more strenuous efforts in preparing sufficient pastors and church workers to shepherd them.

Haiti

The first missionary of the Home Mission Society began work in this republic in October. A school has been started on a small farm near the city of Jacmel. Other missionaries are urgently needed to evangelize this neglected island so near our doors which has a population of two and one-half millions, 97 per cent of whom are illiterate, and many of these African fetich or voodoo worshippers.

Mexico

The outstanding achievement of the past year was the development of the boys' preparatory school in Saltillo, with an enrolment of more than 200 pupils. One church alone, the Baptist in Tampico, sent twenty-seven boys to this school. A farm near the city has been purchased and the erection of the first buildings will be begun early in 1924.

In spite of revolutionary disturbances, there will be no going backward in Mexico in the matter of religious liberty and social reform. The prospects are bright for greater opportunities of reaching the people with the gospel.

Our greatest need is for new buildings to provide for our growing churches in Monterey, Tampico, Victoria, San Luis Potosi and Puebla. In and about Tampico are 25,000 Americans, and little or nothing is being done for them religiously. An American minister is needed to minister to our fellow-countrymen in the oil-fields and to build up an English-speaking church in the city.

Central America

A Baptist monthly paper, the first gospel publication to be founded in Nicaragua, is no small achievement in that priest-ridden republic. Mr. Wilson, the founder, passed away last February, but the paper has been maintained by the faithful disciples whom he left behind. In Salvador a new church was organized in Jucuapa and notable advances made in evangelizing other places in the eastern end of the republic.

Both Salvador and Nicaragua require new missionaries to oversee the work that is rapidly springing up on all sides. The greatest need is for a training-school to prepare leaders for the native churches.

New York City. C. S. DETWEILER.

Central America

AS 1923 draws to a close and we look back we are thankful for all that has been accomplished. We hardly like to speak of "outstanding achievements" with reference to the substantial progress in the evangelization of the republic. The Baptist social status is improving considerably, which signifies almost as much in a Roman Catholic country as it does in India with its strong caste system, though much advance in this way awaits a more educated ministry. There has been much spiritual movement and interest, and in at least one extensive district there has been a considerable ingathering. A notable feature has been the raising up of strong men in several outlying and, up to the present, unreached districts, through our periodical El Heraldo, augmented by correspondence; in at least two cases congregations are growing up around these men converted "by post." I was recently able to go to see one of these men—a twelve-hour train ride—and found him the center of a group of evidently converted persons. One of our problems is how to care for and develop these outposts so clearly the work of the Spirit of God. Two new churches have been organized: one worker ordained to the ministry. Our equipment has been considerably improved. We are now able to work more rapidly in our press, as we have been able to purchase a considerable quantity of new type. El Heraldo is taking its position as one of the recognized publications of the country. We have systematized our tract distribution, and as each edition of tracts issues from the press, it immediately goes to many different points by post for individual distribution. We have received the organ for the San Salvador church mentioned among our needs last year. The Publication Society has provided a good portable stereopticon for its colporters, and has improved their equipment by the provision of a pack mule which, with a pack saddle and especially designed box to facilitate sales, ough to add greatly to their efficiency. The two men are now to work together, a important matter in a country like Cen tral America. The sale of evangelica literature and publications of the Bibl Society has been pushed vigorously and good results obtained. The genera standard of our hired preaching place has been raised considerably, and alto gether we feel better equipped for th work we have to do, although muc room for improvement yet remains.

The Forward Look

We look forward to 1924 with conf dence, trusting that the steady advanc and improvement will continue. Th opening of the school in San Salvado under the auspices of the woman board, which was postponed at the b ginning of this year because of the lac of teachers in the College in Santa An is one of the outstanding achievement that we are looking forward to in 192 We have the teacher, the building, th furniture and there is not the slighte doubt about the children in El Salvado so things ought to go right.

The pressing need is the man—if n men. We have waited and prayed fo almost two years for the man who a pears on our budget, but does not a pear in El Salvador. To us it appea as though the home church is willin to give us anything but iself. We ne the man of high ability, gifted, cons crated, ready to "lose his life" in th obscurity of a Central American repu lic for Christ's sake. What a saving time and missionary funds it would me if from among the Baptist millions

North America just two men, two of our very best would consecrate themselves, one each to the two Central American republics, El Salvador and Nicaragua, for which the Northern Baptists are responsible before the other denominations. God is willing—the money waits—where is the man?

Our needs are first the founding of the Baptist seminary of Central America for which we already possess a splendid piece of land on the outskirts of the city; although the seminary need not await the building. A school for the eastern section of the republic. Lesser but important needs are a paper cutter, and a staple binder for the press.

San Salvador,
El Salvador. —Percy T. Chapman.

Central America

As to outstanding achievements, my own attention has been directed to efforts to prepare native workers, of which several men in my district give promise.

With reference to needs, I will say that a good deal of money could be saved the society by purchase of property and erection of residence for missionary family in this district; and buildings are much needed here and in Atiquizaya, for church and Sunday-school purposes. The total cost of buildings here mentioned would be $40,000. Three native workers should be employed in this district, and a woman church visitor in Santa Ana, at a total cost of $1750 annually.

El Salvador John G. Todd.

The Home Mission Society

Work in Cuba

The year now drawing to a close has been one of the very best in the history of our mission. The revival campaign that was just beginning one year ago spread throughout the whole field, many churches that it was not possible for the evangelists, Mr. and Mrs. Peters, to visit, sharing in the general blessing. In all some 1500 professed faith in Christ as a result of the labors of these two devoted servants of the Lord in conjunction with the equally faithful labors of the native pastors. Many of these latter have had an enlarged vision of the work to which God has called them. In our central school at Cristo the great majority of our 300 students professed conversion. Many of our smaller schools had a similar experience. The Cuban Home Mission Society has made a splendid record and is looking forward to larger undertakings in the future. During the present year, they will begin work in at least two new fields.

In June, just after the close of the school year in Cristo, the present writer in company with the treasurer of our Cuban Convention visited a number of our churches in the Baracoa mountains. These churches are for the most part far apart and there is little opportunity for intercourse with one another or with the outside world, and yet I have nowhere else seen such simple, trustful faith in the Saviour and such genuine apostolic fervor. Christ and his gospel are very real to these splendid simple-hearted people. But I left Baracoa with a sad heart in spite of all the wonderful spiritual uplift, for I had visited valley after valley, community after community, each with from 200 to 300 children of school age and no schools. Can you wonder that I came away with the firm resolution that, God helping us, we must do something more for these people than we have done up to this present moment? We must find scholarships for a few of their choicest boys and girls, bring them to our "colegio" at Cristo, prepare them thoroughly for the work and send them back to educate their people. We must establish and equip schools for them, and at the beginning help them also with the teachers' salaries. We must do all this and more before we can say that we have preached the gospel of the love of God to them. The gospel must better the intellectual and material condition of any people it touches, else were it not the gospel.

The new school year has opened with a largely increased attendance. The services in almost all of our churches are better attended than ever before. There has also been a large increase in our Sunday schools. The Peters are back with us for another six months' evangelistic campaign. We expect to hold services in every church that was not visited in last year's campaign and in several of the important churches last year's campaign will be repeated. There is plenty of work in eastern Cuba for all, even though you should find it possible to double the number of men and women that are laboring in the gospel for you in this part of his vineyard.

Our work in the Cristo schools is better organized than ever before to help in the future of the kingdom in Cuba. Valuable reinforcements have come to us during the past year. Dr. T. C. Holland, a graduate of Wake Forest and Louisville, is now at the head of our theological work. Miss Alma Belle Stone, a recent graduate of Kansas State Normal, is in charge of our normal department. Miss Margaret Renshaw, the representative of the woman's board on our staff, and for years one of our most devoted Christian workers, is now giving her whole time to the teaching of the Bible, which is a text book for every student in our school.

In our school work the most pressing need is buildings for our upper school work at Cristo. We cannot make a beginning at this short of $250,000. We should also spend within the next year or so about $25,000 in each of six of our main centers of Christian work. The old frame buildings have long since been outgrown. Practically every field on the mission is calling for increased accommodation. On a recent visit to one of our churches I found the pastor and his assistants trying to hold a Sunday school that numbered over 500 in our little chapel built to hold 150. Needless to say, the majority had to be cared for in an adjoining yard. The town is rapidly becoming one of the best of the medium-sized towns of eastern Cuba. The buildings that surround our church are fine cement block structures. Something must be done and that right early for a number of these places.

Cristo. Robert Routledge.

Porto Rico

1. We have reached the largest average attendance in our Bible schools in the history of the work.

2. Our church membership has reached the highest figures since the work began. The attendance at our services is better than at any time since the earliest days of the work, when the attendance was, at least in large measure, through curiosity. Professed conversions are frequent in almost all our churches, and the ingathering promises to be even greater than last year.

3. For the first time in the history of our work we have a pastor holding the B. A. degree. This is a young man who has been in training for the work since he was a boy.

4. We have for the first time in the history of our work a volunteer for the work in some more needy Latin field.

5. We have completed successfully the first year of work in a training school for women workers for Latin America.

There was considerable enthusiasm in the beginning of the New World Movement campaign, but we have been unable to maintain the same level of enthusiasm. Many who subscribed to this movement enthusiastically have since failed to pay their quota. However, in this field the economic conditions have grown worse since the war, so our progress has really been notable. More than $200 was paid into the New World Movement last year, besides more than $1500 for other missionary and educational objects.

Present indications are that our growth and development along all lines will continue steadily through 1924. Since the present prosperity of the work is not due to any sudden spurt or special enthusiasm, but rather a steady growth, we look forward with assurance for the year 1924.

We need first, last, and always, the sympathetic cooperation of our home churches, through their constant prayers in our behalf. But God has been answering our prayers so marvelously that prayer must be liberally mixed with good works if our needs are to be supplied for the next year. There is scarcely a church, especially in the towns and cities, that does not need larger accommodations for the increased attendance. In one of the sections of San Juan, where our work was begun almost twenty years ago, and has had all these years only a box of a chapel, we are in most urgent need of a large place capable of caring for the constantly increasing numbers who come to

Sunday School Notes for January 27

ISRAEL SAVED AT THE RED SEA
Lesson Text: Ex. 12:37-18:27
Golden Text: Exodus 15:2

By John Earl

Moses having obeyed the divine call went back to Egypt and led his people out after the tragic plagues had reached their climax in the death of the first-born in all the homes of the Egyptians. Following a southeasterly course they came in a few days to the north arm of the Red Sea which halted their further progress in that direction. Retreat also was impossible for the army of Pharaoh was behind them. They were boxed in beyond help unless it came from above. Salvation did come from above, and that is the theme of this lesson.

The Strength of Salvation

"The Lord is my strength," was a major note in the song which signalized the deliverance from Pharaoh and his hosts. There was no disposition to take any of the credit to themselves because their rescue was miraculous. The Lord had interposed for them in their extremity until their extremity had become his opportunity. His strength had become their salvation. And yet his strength had been used in harmony with his natural and moral laws. The strength of the Lord is never used capriciously, arbitrarily or extravagantly. The natural agencies of wind, cloud, lightning and water became for the time supernatural forces, because they converged in a providential deliverance. Nature is regular in its habits until it is seen to join with people fighting for liberty and then it becomes charged with the very spirit and power of God. Therefore the stars in their courses fight against Sisera, and the winds in their circuit fight against Pharaoh. Clouds and lightning protected the Israelites from Pharaoh in their flight out of Egypt, and wind and storm enabled them to cross the Red Sea in safety. The individual and the group who struggle for justice and liberty may rest assured that the strength of the Lord expressed in every natural, moral and spiritual force is with them.

The Song of Salvation

Salvation must express itself in singing. Therefore the religion of the Bible is a singing religion. The soul of music is the music of the soul, and the soul is never so inspired to sing as when some signal deliverance strikes the note of praise to God. The song of Moses which is the song of salvation from Pharaoh has all four parts. It has the bass of vengeance meted out in terrible justice to the powers of oppression; it has the tenor of worship of the God who is glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders; it has the soprano of mercy and redemption; and it has the alto of hope as it sings of the promised land. It takes all four parts to make the harmony in the song of salvation whether the salvation be from Egyptian bondage or from the bondage of iniquity. The song of salvation is simply a medium of expression for the emotions awakened in the soul when the body is delivered from disease, or the mind freed from falsehood, or the soul saved from sin. The song always reflects the salvation. If it is a jazz song it simply echoes a jazz salvation. Judging salvation by many of its modern songs we cannot say much for it. The song of Moses is not a Christian hymn, and yet it is a noble and dignified utterance compared with many of the jazz songs of salvation which have been commercialized for the financial enrichment of men who make gain of godliness.

The Significance of Salvation

To Moses the passage of the Red Sea was significant. If one studies the song of Moses in Exodus 15 he will discover that Moses saw in that crossing the promise and pledge of another crossing when they would cross the borders of the promised land. Salvation after all is a progressive movement. All three tenses can be used of salvation. We have been saved, we are being saved, we shall be saved. This is the real significance of salvation. If men speak of salvation in the past tense without regard to its present and future value they have missed the full significance of salvation; and if men go off on a tangent of future salvation as some do in the slogan, "Millions now living will never die," they also have lost the full significance of salvation; and if men confine their views of salvation to the present only, they too have failed to grasp the full significance of salvation. Salvation is big with significance. It is cosmic. It is eternal. Israel saved at the Red Sea was only one striking incident in a salvation which embraces the limitless universe and the eternal, redemptive purpose of God which reached its historical efflorescence in the life, the death and the resurrection of Christ.

man churches, for the last four years, 582; for the previous ten years, 330. The Kachin Christians now number about 7,000, an increase of 2,000 during the last three years.

Our greatest need is for more prayer, on the field and at home. We greatly need more workers, missionary and native. We need more consecration of ourselves and all that we have.

From Assam

FROM all the stations in the hills of Assam and from those plains stations which have reported, there has come the most inspiring word as to progress in evangelism during the past year. In the Garo Hills not only has the number of new Christians been very large, but there has been a revival among those who had fallen away. An effective opening for Christianity has been made in the center of the hills. All the Garo churches except three now have pastors, a condition never known before. Their spirit is shown by the way they have helped their poorer neighbors from their own scanty stores of rice and have made plans to meet with money and other means the famine conditions which are expected this year. Another cause for rejoicing is the completion of the Old Testament in Garo.

At Kohima, among the Angami Nagas, there has been the largest number of baptisms in the history of the station. In the mission school the percentage of Christian pupils has increased during recent months from six to more than thirty-three, and it is expected that by the end of the year more than half will have become Christians.

In Manipur state there has been a revival in all areas of the work, resulting in a large number of baptisms and many converts from some new villages not yet open to the missionary and his helpers, as well as in a weeding out of false Christians. This was in spite of intense opposition from chiefs in all areas.

Among the Ao Nagas, also, the spirit was never better, and the Lhota and Sema Naga tribes have been reached more effectively than heretofore. Many Lhotas have been baptized, and Semas are asking for baptism. The return of Mr. and Mrs. Longwell, who are to give themselves to the Lhotas, means a new era for this work.

On the plains in North Kamrup, the first permanent Christian community has been won, and in Mongoldai souls have been won from peoples heretofore unreached there, the Rabbas, Assamese and tea-garden immigrants. Several Kachari villages were won in more remote parts of this district, making the beginning of four new churches.

There have been over 150 baptisms in North Lakhimpur and Darrang, including a splendid ingathering from the plains Miris. The Bible class for workers was attended by forty-seven men, and was an occasion of revival and much spiritual help. Undoubtedly the other plains stations could have made similar encouraging reports.

EDUCATION IN THE CHRISTIAN PROGRAM
2 Tim. 2:15
(BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S DAY)

By Herbert W. Hines

What is the Christian program? Jesus said: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost:" "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister": "The field is the world." The Christian program is saving, serving and reclaiming lost men and a lost world. He left this task with a clear and incisive—"Go ye." It is for us to so toil at this task that we shall not be ashamed of our work, and that God will approve. What place, then, has education in such a program?

If taken seriously by the church, especially its young people, there must be leaders—equipped, trained and ready. There can be no effective army without an officers' training corps. The Christian army will be an ineffective mob without leaders of vision, knowledge and ability. Positions of influence and power go to the educated. To prepare leaders —that is the place of education in the Christian program. 2 Timothy 2:15, which our B. Y. P. U. of A. has always exalted, tells us the story. A workman unashamed and God-approved. To be such— study.

High school students tempted to go to work and earn money, forsake that notion, in the name of Christ! To drop school now suggests a contentment with a mediocre place in life. You dwarf your possibilities. To Opportunity you say quite gruffly "So long!" She may come your way again, but you take an awful chance. Study!

To withdraw from school for failure to study as one ought, should never be requested of a Christian. To let laziness and desire for good times make school ineffective is a personal disgrace, a shame to your parents, an insult to the teachers, and a tragic curtailing of the good name of "Christian." Study!

If forced from school by grim necessity or elements beyond control, you can still study. Make time to read good books. Take some study course. In some way fit yourself for a better position in life and in the service of the kingdom of God. A teacher training course or B. Y. P. U. Christian culture course studied in time, carved out of wasted hours, helps to get a general education and is well worth the time. A good education is obtainable by reading and studying the Bible. Do not say "I can't get time." Most people work eight hours a day and sleep eight; what of the other eight? Keep a record for a week of what you do with every fifteen minutes of your leisure time. You will soon see that you can save fifteen to thirty minutes every day for reading and studying. Prepare for leadership in your local church. Study!

If you have the opportunity to go to college, blessed are you. It is a great thing. Do it for the sake of the Christian program. In all positions of influence, honor and trust, we need leaders with the Christian vision and a purpose to influence the world for Jesus. But how much more we need leaders for fields that are distinctively Christian—minister and missionary. A Christian education and educated Christians are the great outstanding needs in the world. To respond to the urge toward college for Christ's sake, and for the sake of his kingdom, is a great forward step. Sound the call for educated Christian leadership in every young people's society. Let our young people hear the call and respond in the spirit of martyrs and crusaders. "Study to show thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Wanted: A Fan!

A Japanese girl, a great favorite at one of our large colleges, was vacationing with one of her classmates. Her friend's young brother spoke of having gone somewhere with a baseball fan.

"Oh, I did not know that fans were popular in America, too!" she said. "In Japan we have a folded fan and an open fan with a handle; but I have no idea what a baseball fan may look like."

Everybody in the room began offering explanations: "A fan is a person utterly devoted to some pursuit, such as baseball or football or movies." "A fan knows all that there is to be known about the players and their various records." "Neither rain nor shine makes a particle of difference to fans."

"In other words, a fan is an enthusiast," her room-mate said.

"Enthusiast," the Japanese girl repeated softly, as she turned to the dictionary and read: "Enthusiast—derived from two Greek words, en and theos, meaning God-in-you."

"Isn't it a perfectly beautiful word?" she cried. "Oh, how I wish there could be a special Japanese fan like that! Some one utterly devoted to learning about my country; some one who would cheer over all the wonderful things we have done; some one who would not believe a single word of criticism; some one who would keep posted on all the latest news about us and try to interest everybody else; some one who, rain or shine, would never tire of saying, 'Let me help put God-in-you.'"—Adapted from "An Honorable Japanese Fan."

Little Acorns and Big People

Think of the greatest and grandest oak tree you ever saw. Recall that massive, sturdy trunk, those outspreading branches, and the mingling mass of leaves that made its shade such a restful retreat on a hot summer day. It was once a little acorn.

Think of the greatest person it has been your privilege to know intimately. Recall the righteous principles for which he stood, the out-reaching life interests to which he gave thought, and the multitudinous services he rendered to mankind which made being in his presence like basking in the first warm sun of early spring. He was once a little babe.

As cultivation of the soil, warmed and watered by God, brings a giant oak from a little acorn, just so the training of the God-created mind and heart, nurtured by God and man, brings a great personality from a little babe.

Your young people's meeting on Jan. 27 is a time to give thought to what training has done for mankind. This is Baptist Young People's Day. The topic is "Education in the Christian Program." What could be more helpful than to consider the value of the fullest possible education for Christian young people? A college education for those for whom it is still possible; special study in night schools, by correspondence, and through reading, for others.

The address of Frank W. Padelford on "Education in the Christian Program" given at the Boston B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention last July furnishes excellent material for this topic. It appeared in The Baptist for July 21, 1923, and will appear in "Young People's Service," first quarter issue for 1924.

"Why Go To College" and "Plain Talks on Going to College" are two pamphlets obtainable from the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention (276 Fifth Ave., New York City), that could be helpfully used in preparing for this meeting.

Mark F. Sanborn, the genial president of our organization, is in demand these days so much that it is necessary to book him well in advance. Toronto young people will hear him Feb. 4 and the Ontario and Quebec Interprovincial B. Y. P. U. Convention will entertain him at Ottawa, May 24. The Indianapolis young people are to have Mr. Sanborn for their annual city banquet June 5. Mr. Sanborn directs the activities of a large church in Detroit, but he finds time to slip away for an address to young people. He brings an enthusiastic message when he comes.

Sunday-Go-To-Meeting Thoughts

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

THIS is really just some more of what I told you last week, because I didn't tell you about one of the very nicest "blocks" Our Mother gives to Danny and me—Sunday-Go-To-Meeting Thoughts! Our Mother says she hopes we will never be Wrigglers nor Yawners nor Sleepers in the house of the Lord; and I guess we never will be, now that she has given us so much to think about. You see, the children who haven't Our Mother don't know what to do with themselves: their legs aren't long enough to reach the floor, so their toes go to sleep and prickle. Then they begin to wriggle, then to yawn, then they go all soft and flappy—sound asleep.

Our Mother says it is such an awful waste of time to sleep in church! I think so too. So does Danny. There's so much to do that we wish our minister preached longer, for we do all our really interesting things while he does sermons for the Grown-Ups. Not that I don't love singing, for I do! It's such fun to let my voice way, way out on all the big deep splurgy notes, and then quickly gather it in for all the dear little quiet coo-notes, as if I were trying to hush my little guardian angel to sleep. The only trouble with singing in our family is that Danny doesn't know one tune from another, he sings every single tune alike, and he lets his voice out when everybody else is cooing to the little angels, and he does his cooing when the rest of us are trying to reach the roof. Sometimes people smile at Danny; they turn in their pews and smile at him. He looks so sweet standing there with his nice little yellow head thrown back and the music just pouring out of his dear pink throat. Sometimes a lady will wipe her eyes when she looks at Danny singing; and sometimes old Judge Benton will clear away the frog in his throat about twenty times. (He certainly does have the worst time with that frog. Once Danny asked him if he could please see it! You see, Danny thought how nice it would be to play with that frog during sermon time. But Judge Benton's frog is not the hopping kind. Neither does it ever have tadpoles, because I asked him once. He was very red in the face over the question. It is so hard to know what to say to Judges, isn't it?)

Prayers are the hardest part of church. Some children peek. And so do some of the grown-ups. But Our Mother says peeking is not reverent. She says it is too bad if people cannot talk to God for ten minutes without getting tired. So this is what Our Mother taught us to do: We named our fingers—the five on the right hand we named "L-O-V-E-D," with a letter for every finger; and the five on the left hand we named "W-O-R-L-D," with a letter for every finger. And we say to ourselves: "God so loved the world that he gave—" as we bring our right hand fingers up against our left hand fingers, so that we can love the world too. Our Mother says that hands folded like that in prayer give us plenty to pray for during ten minutes, and it is true—for I keep naming my "world" fingers for all the places I can think of—Africa, Burma, China, Japan, India. Then I name my "loved" fingers for all the things I can do this week to help Africa and Burma and China—such things as praying for the missionaries, learning about the children who live over there, earning some money to buy Bibles, pasting post-cards on which a Bible verse can be written. Oh, I think, think, think during prayer-time, and God shows me lots of new ways almost every Sunday when it is prayer-time.

Danny doesn't like prayer-time quite as well, because he isn't old enough to think hard about the things especially dear to God. But Danny does love the offering-time! Our Mother has told us all about the offering. It's very interesting.

Some of it stays home. Right in our church, to buy the coal to heat the church, and pay our minister's salary so that he can have bread and shoes and a house. Some of the money goes to the old Ladies' Home,—we love to pretend that all the shiny pretty new coins go there, for the littlest old ladies are as fond of shiny money as Danny and I. Then the green bills we pretend are all sent to the cities where the dear surprised families from other lands are working in factories to make us our dresses and coats and hats. They never see grass or flowers, so that is why we like to have the crinkly green bills go to them to pay the missionaries' salaries and build them Christian centers, where something lovely happens every day behind every window. Then the money in envelopes seems all ready to be sent across the ocean to the world God loves so much. We really have lots of fun pretending just where all the money is going; and when the minister prays over it, I guess nobody prays harder than Danny and I. You see, we care so much! It's all going to do such real and lovely things somewhere.

Then when the sermon-time comes I copy hymns in a special little book Our Mother gave me. Only you never saw hymns like them in all your life, for Our Mother has showed me that certain words in hymns are pictures, and when ever I come to a word which is a picture I draw it as best I can instead of copying the word. This is the most interesting thing to do! My favorite hymn is "The Son of God Goes Forth to War"—when I copy it I draw pictures of the "kingly crown," "the blood-red banner streams afar," and then I draw pictures of all the people mentioned who "follow in his train—" "the martyr first" (Stephen, you know), "the gory lion," "the matron," "the maid," and all the others.

I guess you can see what a very real hymn that becomes to me when I sing it afterwards; all the pictures are right before my eye! All the loveliest hymns are picture-hymns: "Lead Kindly Light," "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," "O Little Town of Bethlehem." Maybe sometimes you will try drawing a hymn yourself, then you will see why sermon-time is really hardly ever long enough for all the things there are to do.

When we get home from church Our Mother often "plays church" with us: we tell her what we thought of during the prayer, the offering and the sermon, and then she tells us what she thought of. It is very interesting! Danny and I feel so sorry for all the other children whose mothers let them grow up into Wrigglers, Yawners and Sleepers. For Danny and I are just like the verse in the Bible that says:

"I was glad when they said unto me: Let us go into the house of the Lord."

The Tongue-Cut Sparrow

(A Japanese fairy story for you to tell in your Japanese meeting!)

ONCE upon a time a cross old woman laid some starch in a basin and was about to put it into her wash-tub when her neighbor's pet sparrow ate it up! The cross old woman was crosser than ever, and, catching the tame sparrow, she cut its tongue, crying: "You hateful thing!"

When the neighbor heard of this cruel act, she and her husband set forth over mountains and plains calling everywhere: "Where does my dear little tongue-cut sparrow stay?"

At last they found its home, and the sparrow was so overjoyed to see its dear master and mistress that it invited them indoors, prepared a wonderful meal of rice and cakes, and made all the little sparrows as well as Mrs. Sparrow wait on the table.

After the wonderful feast was over it was time for the old people to go home, so the sparrow brought out two wicker baskets, saying: "Will you take the heavy one, or the light one?"

"We are so old that perhaps the lighter one would be easier to carry," they answered. So the sparrow gave them the light basket and they started home. But you can imagine their surprise when they opened the basket to discover gold and silver and precious jewels as well as rolls of silk, surely there never was a basket like it, for the more they took out the more there was left, and the supply never gave out! Never! Their house became famous for its wealth and its beautiful possessions.

When the cross old woman who had cut the sparrow's tongue saw all this miraculous prosperity she became the very picture of envy, and asked her neighbor how to reach the house of the tongue-cut sparrow, because she longed to visit him too.

The old couple very generously told her exactly how to get there, and she set forth. Again the sparrow brought out two wicker baskets and gave her her choice of the heavy or the light basket.

She supposed that the treasure inside would be in proportion to the weight, so she chose the heavy basket. She could hardly stagger along with it on her back, and you could hardly blame Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Sparrow for being very much amused. For the basket weighed nearly a ton, and it was all she could do to reach home.

Then when she took off the lid and looked in, out came a whole troop of frightful little demons, bouncing on each other's heels and worrying the old woman until she actually died of anxiety and disappointment. For of course you know that envy is a very hollow empty sin; while contentment is an inexhaustible gold-mine of peace and joy. And often the biggest pleasures come wrapped up in the smallest packages, too!

Our Own League of Nations

(The correct answers of these words ending in "—nation" will be given next week.)

1. The Nation in which plants grow?
2. The Nation where teachers make things clear?
3. The Nation for actors?
4. The Nation where pupils always obey?
5. The Nation for theological students?
6. The Nation for a presidential candidate?
7. The Nation in which a person gives up a job?
8. The Nation where pests are done away with?
9. The Nation where Baptists live beside Methodists, Presbyterians, etc.?
10. The Nation where everything gets together?

New Year's Day is everybody's birthday in Japan. When babies are born they are said to be a year old; so a child born on December 31 is a year old, but the following day, January 1, he is two years old! Not everybody can skip over an entire year's time in one night's sleep.

The Japanese call on one another all day long, to leave their good wishes. It makes us wonder how thousands upon thousands of them are going to be able to celebrate this year, with the dreadful earthquake leaving them homeless and often friendless, too; although surely you have read in THE BAPTIST how our missionaries are opening wide their homes and schools to the people who have no other refuge.

The Confiding Peasant and The Maladroit Bear

BY GUY WETMORE CARRYL

A PEASANT had a docile bear,
A bear of manners pleasant,
And all the love she had to spare
She lavished on the peasant;
She proved her deep affection plainly;
(The method was a bit ungainly.)

The peasant had to dig and delve,
And as his class are apt to,
When all the whistles blew at twelve
He ate his lunch, and napped, too,
The bear a careful outlook keeping
The while her master lay a-sleeping.

As thus the peasant slept one day,
The weather being torrid,
A gnat beheld him where he lay
And lit upon his forehead,
And thence, like all such winged creatures
Proceeded over all his features.

The watchful bear, perceiving that
The gnat lit on her master,
Resolved to light upon the gnat
And plunge him in disaster;
She saw no sense in being lenient
When stones lay round her, most convenient.

And so a weighty rock she aimed
With much enthusiasm:
"Oh, lor'!" the startled gnat exclaimed,
And promptly had a spasm:
A natural proceeding this was,
Considering how close the miss was.

Now by his dumb companion's pluck,
Which caused the gnat to squall so,
The sleeping man was greatly struck
(And by the bowlder, also).
In fact, his friends who idolized him
Remarked they hardly recognized him.

Of course the bear was greatly grieved,
But, being just a dumb thing,
She only thought: "I was deceived,
But still, I did hit something!"
Which showed this masculine achievement
Had somewhat soothed her deep bereavement.

Home for widows and orphans has been opened at Satri Bari, Gauhati, and it is filled. Two of the widows are showing much promise as future workers. The new hospital and dispensary buildings for the hospital for women and children, at Gauhati, are practically completed, but the various smaller buildings as well as the residence for the doctor and nurses must be built and the doctor found before the plant will be ready for operation.

There are a number of outstandingly encouraging things in the educational work. In one section of the Garo Hills seven villages are asking for schools. At one place the number of pupils has increased from four to seventy-seven. The Garos have increased their contributions toward education 37 per cent. The Tura Girls' School is larger than ever before. Five students in the Bible school are within one term of graduation, and of the twenty-seven in attendance this year five passed with a standing of over 85 per cent.

There is a fine lot of school boys from Kamrup and Mongoldai studying in Gauhati, and most of the fields are well represented at Jorhat, where solid progress is being made in equipment, staff and methods. There are now four Indian Bachelors of Arts on the faculty, which represents a great step forward.

Among the Ao Nagas also, the schools were never so full and never was there so much insistence upon good teaching. The first Ao Naga college student has entered Cotton College, Gauhata, during the year, and is doing very good work.

A girl at the Satri Bari School stood highest in the valley, and is now in high school in Calcutta, preparing to return and teach. Three girls from the Nowgong girls' School are studying medicine, one is reading in college, another in high school and another is taking nurse's training, while still others only await the funds to send them.

Although the home-going of a number of the more experienced missionaries will have its effect, the prospects for 1924 are bright. We rejoice in the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Danielson, to join the staff at Jorhat, and of Mr. and Mrs. Olney to Gauhati, where Mr. Olney will assist in the administrative work of the mission. It is expected that in the Garo Hills the number of Christians will pass the 10,000 mark, that the Bible school will have graduated its first class and that the Garos will have started their own high school, supported entirely by themselves.

In Mongoldai three much-needed new leaders will be ready for their work. There is a hopeful atmosphere everywhere and a fine opportunity for advance, but lack of men and funds puts a very definite limit on what can be done. We need missionaries and funds all along

A New Plan of Cooperation

By M. G. Perry

A dedication so extraordinary that it will win the notice in all parts of the country took place at North Haven, Maine, Sept. 2, 1923, when Baptists and Episcopalians united in dedicating the island's new church. This epoch-making union with the followers of two widely different creeds is a milestone in the world movement lately apparent in the combining of the evangelical faiths, for it is the first time the Anglican church has combined with any other and the experiment will be watched with profound interest.

The Baptist church of North Haven, Maine, has had a continuous existence since 1804, and for the last thirty years has been a rapidly growing summer colony. The Episcopalians have been holding services in library hall for the last thirty years during the summer season. The old Baptist church building is situated at Pulpit Harbor, two miles from the village where the population has centered with the advent of the summer folk, and Library Hall at the village was far from satisfactory. Both groups had been hoping for better quarters.

In July, 1920, Rev. Milton G. Perry came to the island and sensed at once that the very life of the church depended upon getting a good church plant at the village. The idea was not wholly new. When the work began only a few had any faith or took any active part. The winter's work helped to crystallize the opinion of the parish and in March, 1921, a fine lot was purchased. In May of the same year a campaign among the island folk raised the astounding sum of $8000 and a building committee consisting of C. S. Staples, Frank Beverage, J. O. Brown, Hiram Stone, Fred Carver and C. E. Mills was appointed.

Meantime the cooperation idea had been growing and when the summer folk arrived that summer and saw what had been done they organized under the leadership of Dr. Endicott Peabody of Groton, Mass., combined with the natives in a committee and during the winter months plans matured rapidly. Mr. Perry made three trips to Boston during the winter to meet with the summer committee for conferences and for securing plans for the work.

The North Haven Baptist Church was incorporated during the winter months of this same year and the plans for the new church building were submitted by the architect, H. Deland Chandler of Boston, and were accepted. The United Baptist Convention of Maine contributed tne sum of $1000 towards this new work. Articles of agreement between the summer and native congregations were drawn up. This was a difficult piece of work. Each congregation found that the other had their religious narrowness and selfishness to a marked degree. Both sides must give in and through it all a beautiful spirit of Christian unity was maintained. These two peoples differed in their religion, forms, social and financial status, ideas and customs. They had nothing in common except their joint New England ancestry.

This agreement in its final form was drawn up by A. S. Littlefield of Rockland and stipulates in part that in consideration of $17,000 and such other sums as may be contributed by the summer congregation, the North Haven Baptist Church will hold and control the building and will maintain same along the broadest possible lines conformable with the Baptist denomination in order that any person may feel free to worship there. It further agrees to permit the summer congregation to use the building on Sunday mornings from the last Sunday in June to the first Sunday in September, inclusive, at the usual hour of morning worship and that during these hours shall have full control of the services and building.

The church is located on a hill directly on a line with Haven's inn and dominates the entire village. It stands out in bold relief as the steamers come in from the east and west and has easy access to the main town road by a newly constructed stone highway. The exterior is in stucco and the windows so deeply recessed that a convincing impression of stone construction is imparted. The architecture is Norman Gothic, closely akin structurally to hundreds of churches on the dark-browed, rocky coast of Normandy, a land of fisher folk. The tower supports a bell of peculiarly sweet tone and at the top a weather vane, model of St. Paul's famous ship. The interior is of rough, unfinished, extra-hard plaster. The high vaulted roof is supported by massive octagonal piers, bearing out in a striking way the motif of heavy stone. The windows, deeply recessed inside, carry out the same idea. Above the pulpit is a high arch bearing twenty-two concealed lights, and back of this is a sanctuary for the Episcopalian service. Over the sanctuary is another arch , somewhat smaller than the one just mentioned, bearing ten concealed lights. To the right of the pulpit platform is the baptistry with a graceful arch opening it to the view of the congregation. Behind the baptistry is a small room which will be used for class room or for dressing purposes. On the left of the pulpit platform, balancing the baptistry, is an organ loft which is vacant, waiting to be occupied. Here, too, are the choir seats and a passageway leading out into a hall back of which are two rooms—pastor's study and one other room for classes and general community activity.

Willard Fox Dowd

By Frank B. Bachelor

Willard F. Dowd, minister, missionary and educator, one of the finest Christian spirits it is the privilege of any one to know, has gone home. Mr. Dowd left his field in Impur, Assam, Oct. 5, 1920, on account of ill health. For more than three years he bore with great fortitude extreme suffering, until the morning of Dec. 11, 1923, his spirit was set free. The funeral service was held in Kalamazoo and interment made in the family lot there, Dec. 13. Dr. Frank B. Bachelor, of Kalamazoo College, officiated. Mr. Kenneth Dean sang one of Whittier's songs of trust. College mates, members of Kalamazoo College faculty and other intimate friends acted as pallbearers. The large gathering of friends from the First Baptist Church, representation from the college and the town and the beautiful floral display attested the high honor in which Mr. Dowd was held.

Mr. Dowd was born near Hartford, Mich., Aug. 12, 1870. He graduated from Kalamazoo College in 1897 with a B. A. degree and from Colgate Theological Seminary in 1900 with the B. D. degree.

On June 27, 1900, he was married to Muriel A. Massey who had been his classmate in college. On Oct. 10, 1900, they sailed for Impur, Naga Hills, Assam.

Mr. Dowd learned the Ao Naga language quickly and well, and won the love of the Naga people. He did some evangelistic and medical work though the major portion of his energy was spent in teaching and supervising in the Impur Training School.

In 1908 he returned on furlough and having seen the pressing need for medical service in his field determined to take a full medical course of training. He entered the University of Michigan and completed the first year. Then on account of the illness of Mrs. Dowd he had to give up that line of preparation, and they were not able to again take up their work in Assam until the fall of 1914. During this second term, in addition to his educational work in the Impur Training School, he toured, examined schools, preached, baptized and gave medical assistance. His fine poise and wise judgment was such that the mission, especially during his second term, relied greatly upon his help on important committees, including the executive committee on which he was serving during his last year in Assam. Along with his other work he translated into the Ao Naga language parts of the New Testament, some of the psalms, many of the Old Testament stories, prepared a vocabulary and enough stories for a school reader.

He made an unusually brave fight for health but in spite of all that could be done, he continually failed. He hoped almost to the end that he would get well that he might go back to his labors among the people where he had wrought so effectively.

His faith in God's goodness and care held like an anchor. A verse from Whittier's "The Eternal Goodness" was a motto of his, "I know not where his islands lift their fronded palms in air, I only know I cannot drift beyond his love and care."

In addition to Mrs. Dowd he leaves four children, Leslie, Dorothea, Bennard and Gaylord.

On Dec. 2, Rev. A. T. June began his fifth year as pastor of the United Baptist Church of Somersworth. On Dec. 4 he was called to hold evangelistic meetings in Wolfeboro Falls. During his absence the pulpit of the home church was filled by Mrs. June. Mrs. John Hallam, a member of the Somersworth Church, entered into her eternal rest at Thanksgiving time. The White Christmas was observed on Dec. 23. All classes presented gifts to the King for some form of missionary activity. This voluntary offering amounted to over $100. A chorus rendered the cantata, "The World's Redeemer." On Christmas night there was a tree for the children. At this time a purse of gold was presented to Mr. and Mrs. June.

Rev. H. G. Brown, who has served the South Lyndeboro and Wilton churches for a period of two years, has resigned and removed to New York.

Rev. H. Y. Vinal has entered upon the pastorate of the Hopkinton Church. Mr. Vinal previously served churches in New Hampshire and now comes to the state from Massachusetts.

Mr. C. E. Usher of Waltham, Mass., becomes a stated supply of the church at South Hampton. Mr. Usher holds a license to preach from the New Baltimore, N. Y., church where his father is pastor. Mr. Usher has been engaged in evangelistic and other religious work in the states of Washington, Idaho and Oregon. He contemplates ordination to the Christian ministry sometime in the future.

NEW YORK

Rev. H. C. Walker comes from Pennsylvania to take the pastorate of the Park Avenue Church of Binghamton.

The fine new church of Johnson City is nearing completion. The services are still held in the new Sunday-school and social building which has been completed for about a year. This church will have one of the finest and most complete buildings in central New York. The pastor, T. Francis Smith, is doing aggressive work in that thriving city.

The church at Three Mile Bay is glad in the acceptance of its call to Rev. Gordan L. Nichols, who comes there from Westal Center.

Rev. E. A. Snyder, for sixteen years pastor of the Painted Post Church, has this church thoroughly organized for personal evangelistic work. He reports that with a membership of 350 he has a band of fifty tithers. These fifty give one-half of the funds for current expenses and one-half of the beneficences of the church.

The Cassada Church has called and has the acceptance of Rev. S. Atwood Allen to become pastor.

It is with regret to all the pastors of the First Church of LeRoy that Rev. Isaac C. Taylor has resigned the pastorate of that church, where he has had so long and successful a pastorate. He is a genial brother beloved by all.

Already the church at Morton, Rev. George H. Hobart, pastor, has made its canvass for next year and included in the budget for beneficences an amount equal to that which it has been paying to the New World Movement. This is a fine beginning for New York state churches. An example for all to follow or excel.

The Rev. Merle Isenberg goes from the Worcester church to the thriving community of Sidney.

Rev. Ray Vernon goes from Odessa to the pastorate of the important work of the Horseheads Church.

The Valois Church has called the Rev. Homer F. Yale who accepted and became pastor Jan. 1.

Rev. Walter C. Mason is doing a double service for the denomination, as pastor of the Montour Falls Church and instructor of Bible and student pastor in Cook Academy. In the latter capacity he meets daily the seventy-five boys of the academy in the formative period of life, stimulating and directing them in their plans for future service.

After a long and successful pastorate in the McDonough Church, Rev. M. H. Stoddard has accepted the call to the pastorate of the church at Reading Center.

The educational board of the public schools of the state, meeting in Syracuse, invited Dr. A. W. Beaven of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, to give the evening address. Doctor Beaven gave a characteristically strong address in defense of the boy and girl of school age in the present day and made a strong appeal to the school authorities to know the teachings and work of the church in the education of youth and to cooperate the two forces in education.

Rev. G. W. Driscoll has taken up the work of the Georgetown Church. The church is looking forward to real progress under his leadership.

The church at Rose has been without a pastor for a long time, but now has a leader under the pastorate of Rev. D. M. Sutton. The Rose church is a strong and efficient country organization.

NEW JERSEY

Five persons were baptized at the First Church, Metuchen, on Sunday, Dec. 23. Special meetings were held the last of November. Pastor Calvin A. Hare was assisted by several neighboring pastors, by his brother, Chaplain J. M. Hare of Scotch Plains, and by Mrs. Fredericka Erikson of Brooklyn, N. Y.

There were eleven Baptisms at the Christmas service of the Emmanuel Church, Ridgewood, Rev. Thomas H. Sprague, pastor. A Watch Night service was held, during which a symposium was given by members of the church on "Great Events of 1923" in business, politics, industrial life, education, missions and religious life. There were forty-four additions to the membership during 1923; over $10,000 was raised for expenses, and $10,000 for benevolences.

WEST VIRGINIA

The Baptist Temple, Charleston, completed the first year under the pastorate of Rev. Clarence W. Kemper, Dec. 30. Through quiet routine work 167 new members have been won, bringing the present membership above 1400. The church school has maintained an average attendance above 600 for the year. The church auditorium is practically filled at all the Sunday morning and evening hours of worship. The church has demonstrated a fine piece of team-work. The total offerings of the church for the year 1923 have exceeded $100,000.

The Calvary Church, Charleston has experienced an awakening under the leadership of Rev. Sam Raborn, who was with it for two weeks and as a result thirty-five new members have come into its fellowship.

The Emmanuel Church, Charleston, continues to prosper under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. Jas. F. Frame. It has a large school and accessions to the membership are frequent.

The South Charleston Church, has scored a victory under the leadership of Doctor Divine, who helped it secure its new building fund subscriptions exceeding $61,000. Rev. Earl Grose is the pastor. When the new building is provided it will be the fourth Baptist church within the capitol city to be adequately housed in a modern building within the last few years.

Pastors Kemper and Ostergren have been rendering some service as supply preachers for Calvary Church while it is without a pastor. Here is a great church and school and the right man will have a splendid opportunity.

The Saint Albans Church in the suburb of Charleston is rejoicing over the coming of Rev. John E. Myers from Barberton, Ohio, to its pastorate. This parish of 1000 members, and school almost as large, furnishes a good opportunity for service to Mr. Myers.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Notwithstanding extensive improvements in the church building and parsonage, the church at Point Pleasant is in best financial condition it has been in for years. Congregations have also increased. At the Christmas celebration, Mr. and Mrs. Earle were presented with a generous purse. The Point Pleasant Community Protective Association was recently organized in the church with $1000 in the treasury.

The First Church of Mansfield, is closing another successful year under the leadership of Rev. D. V. Griffiths. All bills have been promptly met, some increase made in missionary giving and minor improvements made on the church property. A long-standing indebtedness on the parsonage is being gradually reduced. The men and the women of the State Normal School receive special attention in classes taught by Dr. and Mrs. A. T. Belknap. The pastor preaches interesting, helpful sermons and there is response to his leadership. One Sunday-school class has installed new lights in the auditorium and another has become responsible for new hymnals for the Sunday school. Mr. Griffiths also serves as pastor of the State Road Baptist Church, of which Rev. James James is a member. Mr. James was a well-known pastor in Pennsylvania and Ohio, but became incapacitated through total blindness.

At the December meeting of the board of trustees, Dr. John Howard Harris, who is president emeritus after an active service of thirty years as president, and who is teaching philosophy at the university, announced that he would withdraw after the current year, having completed thirty-five years as professior. It was unanimously voted to continue Doctor Harris' salary as long as he lives, that a committee be appointed to make suitable recognition of Doctor Harris' long and loyal service, and that Dr. J. R. Wood be authorized to secure from the friends and alumni of the university a fund of not less than $100,000 to establish a foundation in Doctor Harris' name. It is hoped that this fund may reach even $500,000 and be used to endow a whole department of the university. Doctor Harris was not only a great teacher and administrator, but through his influence much money has been given to build up and carry on the work of the university. This movement of the university received the hearty endorsement of the Pennsylvania Board of Promotion and of the State Convention. After the conclusion of the New World Movement in May an appeal will be made to the Baptists of Pennsylvania to share generously in this great task, for Bucknell is a Baptist university, founded by the Baptist fathers, controlled by a board of trustees four-fifths of whom must be members of Baptist churches, and furnishing to the Baptist churches of this vicinity and elsewhere a large portion of their ministry.

ILLINOIS

Rev. T. Elmer Jones of the Immanuel Church, Quincy, held some helpful meetings at Mt. Sterling during the Christmas holidays.

The Clayton Church has suffered the loss of a number of its most substantial members during the last year, yet the brethren are taking heart and facing their problems. The second installment on the new parsonage was recently paid, and the church is ready for a wide-awake pastor.

First Church, Belvidere, is planning a series of union meetings with the Protestant churches of the town, to begin Dec. 30 and continue for six weeks. The annual meeting of First Church was held Dec. 5. Plans were made for a bigger year, with addition to the budget and an increase in the minister's salary.

The Bradford Church is progressing. Pastor Butler has been able to have a large number of the men who have been attending the Bible class, participate in a morning service. The women of the church recently organized a missionary society. New improvements to the extent of $250 have been made upon the property.

Pastor E. H. Turner closed his work at Littleton a few weeks ago. He is living at Bardolph and will give some of his time supplying the Pleasant Grove Church in the Peoria Association.

Irving Fox, Decatur, assisted Pastor Riley in a series of evangelistic meetings with the Petersburg Church. The membership of the church was revived by the Bible messages. Twelve persons united with the church by baptism, four others by experience.

Dr. B. E. Allen, well known as the pastor of the Osceola Church, has decided to make a change. He has accepted a call to the First Church of Rockford, and will close his present pastorate the first of March. He has been with this church for seventeen years and has seen its growth and development along all lines. Doctor Allen has been an active member of the missionary committee of the Peoria Association, and has also filled a large place in state convention activities. The Osceola Church is now engaged in an evangelistic meeting with Evangelist Dunk as leader.

The Raritan Church celebrated its sixty-fifth anniversary on Dec. 30. Two of the former pastors were on the program. This is another rural church that is seriously facing the problems of its community. Pastor Riddington has a vision of the community's needs. These anniversary meetings will be followed by special revival efforts. Brother Weddington of Atlanta will assist in these meetings.

Rev. W. E. Pool of Madison has decided to accept the work at Kinderhook and Plainville. These two churches are five miles apart and they have decided to work together. Mr. Pool will have a profitable ministry.

The Rozetta Church will have a series of evangelistic meetings during the first part of January. Pastor Martin will be assisted by the district superintendent.

Mr. W. A. Phipps has taken the pastorate of the Mt. Zion and Hopewell churches in the Central Association. Brother Phipps came to Illinois from Kentucky. He will live at Kilbourne and will give his undivided attention to the work of these fields.

Rev. Ray Starr of Toulon is having unusually large congregations at all the services. A monthly paper is being issued and is proving profitable.

The Plymouth Church is being cared for by Mr. O. H. Gerstenkorn, who is also pastor of St. Mary's Church four miles away.

Pastor Lower of Kewanee is having a fine response from his people. Additional rooms in the basement of the church have been prepared for the growing Sunday school. A corps of new officers, who are young, are being prepared and trained for the future leaders of the church.

The annual meeting of the First Church of Champaign was held Wednesday evening, Dec. 12. Every department of the church gave encouraging reports of the work accomplished during the year. The "unified service," which was inaugurated Feb. 11, 1923, has been proved a success, commencing at 10:30, with an hour for the regular church service and a half hour for Bible school class work, closing promptly at twelve o'clock. The Bible school contribution to missions has been gratifying and has touched different parts of the world. A native worker has been supported in Africa, $60; for destitute Baptists in Europe, $5; Bibles for Russia, $25; to the denominational work for children in India through Sunday-school education and evangelization, $25; for state missions, $25; to the Publication Society, $25; for Japanese relief, $25; to the Maywood Home, $25, and $52 to the Hudelson Home for children at Irvington, besides a balance on hand to pay in advance the African worker's salary for 1924. This is in addition to the regular contributions to the New World Movement. The amount given to missions by this church has exceeded any previous year in its history. There have been sixty-five additions to the membership during the year, with only twelve losses, one being the death of Dr. W. H. Stedman, a former pastor who was well known throughout the state and elsewhere. The Ladies' Aid Society presented Brother and Mrs. Morris with a telephone desk and chair in behalf of the church. This church has one member who graduated from the Baptist Missionary Training School last June, Miss Cevilla Carothers, who is now stationed at the Chinese mission field at Locke, California, as a kindergartner. Rev. W. B. Morris and Mrs. Morris have been with this church over three years and have been inspiring and helpful leaders.

NEBRASKA

On Christmas Sunday twelve persons united with the First Church, Tecumseh, making a total of thirty-two additions during the year without any special evangelistic effort having been made. Rev. Herbert P. Cox is pastor and is making a place for himself in the life of the community.

MINNESOTA

The open winter up to date has been a great help to evangelism and the churches have taken advantage of the favorable conditions. Many successful meetings are reported from town and country.

Many churches observed special Christmas candle services, signifying the recognition of Christ as the light of the world.

The University Church, Minneapolis, broadcasted its musical Christmas program from a powerful radio station. Dr. H. O. Rowlands is supplying the pulpit until a pastor is secured.

Prof. Geo. D. Shepardson, head of the department of electrical engineering of the University of Minnesota, and a deacon of the University Church, recently addressed the Twin City Ministers' Conference on the scientific corroboration of our faith in God and prayer.

Quite a number of ministers attended the ministers' convention at Carleton College, Jan. 1-4.

Pastor A. H. Nelson expects to receive twenty-five new members as a result of recent evangelistic meetings conducted by J. E. Naylor.

Rev. W. H. Perham baptized three persons at Minneota.

First Swedish Church, St. Paul is rejoicing because Rev. F. Hamlin of Chicago is to become pastor there beginning Apr. 1.

Norwegian ministers of the state recently held a successful Bible conference at Fosston. This convention mission field is prospering under the leadership of Pastor H. G. Jorgensen.

The brethren at Hastings expect to dedicate the new building May 1. The Lake Harriet Church, Minneapolis, expects to begin using the first story of its new building Feb. 1.

SIX PERSONS WERE recently received into the church at Luverne. The work is prospering at Blue Earth. Pastor Batchelor and eight auto loads of his people recently visited the little church at Delavan.

THE CHURCH AT ELLENDALE has deeded its property to the state convention.

A FAREWELL RECEPTION to Rev. W. E. Woodbury and family was given by the Trinity Church, Minneapolis, on Dec. 28. Pastor Knickerbocker, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rev. J. H. McLean, president of the Minneapolis Baptist Union, Rev. E. H. Rasmussen, secretary of the Minnesota Baptist Convention, and several members of the Trinity Church, spoke briefly expressing the appreciation of the splendid, far-reaching service rendered by Pastor Woodbury during his years of ministry in Minnesota.

SIX MINNESOTA MINISTERS submitted essays in the national stewardship essay contest.

REV. ROLLAND BUTLER, pastor at Anoka, suffered a serious breakdown and is now recuperating at Mounds Park Sanitarium, St. Paul.

MICHIGAN

THE CHURCH AT DECKERVILLE recently tendered Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Bailey a reception. Rev. D. Martin of Bad Axe, Mr. Carpenter of the Presbyterian Church and Mr. Davis of the M. E. Church, were guests at the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were presented with $26 besides some furniture. Mr. Bailey has been pastor for four years.

KANSAS

Ottawa University

The formal opening of the new home of the school of music, Tauy Jones Hall, occurred on Dec. 7. The building is the oldest on the campus, but has been so thoroughly remodeled that it is now the best equipped building.

The religious life of the school is well cared for through the student organizations of the Christian Associations for men and for women, and the close contact maintained between the college and the churches. Bible classes are organized in the Sunday schools of the churches. The First Church maintains six Bible classes for college and academy students. The ministerial alliance, the student volunteer and life service league afford outlet work. Six of the students are regularly supplying churches in the pastoral relationship, and several others are pulpit supplies as calls may come in. The ministerial alliance has fourteen members. There are fourteen student volunteers, and eighteen other members of the life service league. These latter expressed their intentions of going into some form of Christian service, presumably in the home field. There is an appreciable and satisfactory growth in the numbers of the life service league. These organizations function constructively in the religious life of the school, and are actively encouraged and assisted by the members of the faculty.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF PASADENA, JOHN MARVIN DEAN, PASTOR, is loyally and heartily behind the attempt of the New World Movement to complete with credit its five-year program. It believes that the $12,000,000 should be raised and more besides. It is at present on the right side of the ledger, having paid in full its obligations to the New World Movement, amounting to $200,000, and having given in addition nearly $50,000. A large proportion of these gifts has come from the "Lord's poor." There are a number of unpaid pledges still to be redeemed and the church is planning to get this money in and get every member contributing to the missionary cause. In addition it is pointing things toward a great special thank offering for missions on Easter Day. The denomination may count on the First Church of Pasadena to do its share and more. It is trying to make its motto, "What would Christ have us do?" The missionary cabinet, Clyde Colby, chairman, has been instructed by the board of deacons to handle the details of the missionary campaign. Mission study classes will begin Sunday night, Jan. 27.

NOV. 4 REV. RICHARD E. DAY, who has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Riverside since May 1, 1919, resigned to go to the First Baptist Church of Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. and Mrs. Day will leave for their new home early in January. December 2 the Riverside church unanimously called as pastor Rev. W. W. Catherwood, who has been pastor of the First Church of Santa Barbara for the past seven years. Feb. 1 will find Mr. and Mrs. Catherwood and their family in Riverside.

Belgian Congo

THE earlier months of 1923 were full of uncertainties. When two out of the three missionaries at one station were forced to leave the country, and when a family going on furlough had to place their station in the care of another society, the question came: If one or two more breaks in the ranks occur what shall we do? With such a puny force of missionaries it looked as if disaster were impending. But "all's well; God is in his heaven." Missionaries began to return from furlough, and new recruits to come, so that the solitary and fearful ones have taken on a new look of hopefulness.

It has not been all uncertainty. We have had some certainties that have cheered our hearts. The revival interest, though not as great as in 1921 and 1922, is still very evident. On one of our fields twelve three-day gatherings of native Christians were held, attended by from 400 to 1500 people. Of those who had been under instruction for previous months, 1050 were baptized and 6500 francs raised in the special offerings. This was in addition to the regular church offerings which amounted in the first eight months of the year to more than 13,500 francs. That is the Christians gave in all during that period over 20,000 francs, or within 50 francs of what it cost to support the seven district superintendents, sixteen pastors and 200 village teachers of that field. Other stations have done proportionately as well, if not better than this one, so that it ought to be manifest that our Congo missionaries have stressed the grace of giving.

The coming of our first agriculturist and an additional one added to the few who have had special industrial training, ought to mean much for the development of the right kind of Christian education for the Congo natives.

This year our mission united with the Swedish mission and the Christian and Missionary Alliance in revising the Kikongo New Testament translated by the Swedish mission a few years ago. By the use of words most widely known we are hoping that the revised edition can be used by the people all the way from the coast to our station at Vanga, and that the New Testament will find its rightful place in moulding the lives of these thousands of new converts.

As to the New World Movement, or any other program our Northern Baptists adopt, we may not be able to judge clearly the merits at this distance, but that there should be divisions in the ranks at home at a time of such unparalleled opportunities, and of such an outpouring of God's spirit seems almost incredible. He who hinders rather than helps in a day like this will not find it an easy matter to meet his judge.

Needs? We thank God that he has heard our oft-repeated petitions in finding some new recruits for Congo. We thank you folk at home for a generosity that has made it possible for these to come. We still have urgent needs to fill: Two doctors; three nurses; three families for evangelistic and educational work.

The harvest is great; the laborers are few; pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth laborers into the harvest. There is a partnership in the praying, in the sending and in the harvest. It means life, money and effort laid on God's altar. During 1924 may the sacrificial offerings of Northern Baptists become as the sweet incense going up to the God we serve.

P. A. MACDIARMID.

Sona Bata, Congo Belge.

The Telugu Mission

IN the South India fields of the Telugu mission steady work has gone on throughout the year; and although statistics are not yet available, it will doubtless be found that 1923 has kept well up to the standard of fruitfulness of other times, and on some fields has exceeded it, as for instance in Kanigiri, where for only a part of the year 570 baptisms are reported; and in Bapatla 400; and in Narasaravupett more than 400; with good reports from such fields as Cumbum, Kurnool, Markapur, Nellore, Allur and elsewhere. All the educational institutions of the mission are working at full capacity, that is they are carrying every ounce of work which can be staffed and financed; and the demand for education, especially among Christians, is constantly increasing. More than twice as many students applied to be sent to college and professional courses as could be accepted. The mission has never before had so many young men and women in college. The hospitals and dispensaries too are carrying on a growing work with an ever widening and deepening influence. A Hindu gentleman recently described to me very feelingly his estimate of hospital work and concluded by saying, "This is your most Christlike gift to India." And then there are the "helps," which in scripture come after "healings," and which in this mission take in the trades that are being taught, as weaving, smithing, woodworking, gardening, poultry-raising, lacemaking, motor-driving, farming, nursing and the thousand and one ministries which call for no classification.

Among the equipment acquired may be mentioned the fine new home for the Bible Training School, Nellore, and the King Hostel for students, Madras, the latter being quickly filled with a choice group of college and professional students, many of them our own Baptist young men. Two fine gifts for other buildings, by Dr. J. A. Coles of New Jersey, have been announced—each a memorial to his sister lately deceased one building to be in Nellore and the other in Kurnool, and both for work among girls and young women.

Mention must not be omitted of the fine progress being made on Kanduku field, where work is being conducted by the Telugu Baptist Convention's Home Mission Society; nor of the stimulating services of Rev. Wheeler Boggess a evangelist and missionary at large; nor of the growth of the churches in self extension and self-support.

In common with hosts of people within the bounds of our Northern Baptist Convention, it has to be acknowledged that results of the New World Movement period have not been what we anticipated might be realized when the movement was launched. The failure of the movement by a full 50 per cent among the churches in America has had its corresponding effect upon the mission fields. Our equipment is still inadequate, our mission force is still depleted, our growing work is still needy; but neither is God dead nor are his people. His work will survive these disappointments and shocks and temporary set-backs; but this does not absolve us from any responsibility which we may have had for failing to come up to the full measure of a great program.

As for the outlook for 1924, orientally it is fairly good, for the people are here in millions to be evangelized, the doors are still open, the masses are awakening to new life, the churches are increasing in numbers, ability and influence, though they are still poor; but occidentally things are not specially cheering, for there is the heavy debt on the Foreign Mission Society and the notice that, though we have been under a heavy reduction in income now for the past two years, retrenchment will have to be practiced for another four years till the debt is paid off in annual instalments. That means no increase in the sinews of war, at least from America. I wonder if the churches will command us and allow us to mark time so long?

Needs, did you say? What are our most pressing needs? More of everything good! More faith, more hope, more love both to God and man; more strong workers, more work accomplished, more money to use for Christ's kingdom; more evangelizing, more in-gathering, more up-building of those gathered; more of the Holy Spirit's gifts, more burning zeal, and more real power.

West China

THE outstanding achievements in the West China Baptist Mission for 1923 are: Increase in giving by the churches; increase in additions by baptism to the churches; increase in number of students enrolled in all our schools; starting of two middle schools—girls', Suifu; boys', Yachow; ordination of our first seminary trained pastor, Rev. D. Fay; organization of the first Baptist Home Mission Society; establishment of a union executive committee—a step toward devolution; well planned special evangelistic campaigns held at each of our central stations with good results. All this has been accomplished in the face of continuous disorder throughout the province during the year, and notwithstanding the "cut" in appropriations.

The political outlook in China and Szechuen, humanely speaking, seems well nigh hopeless, but we consider the prospect for all lines of mission work bright for 1924. Man's extremity may bring us an unparalleled opportunity.

Our needs, like the poor, are always with us. I name a few and in order of urgency: A well qualified doctor for work on the medical faculty of the West China Union University; women evangelistic workers; $10,000 gold to help put Kiating on the map; larger work appropriations; more well-trained Chinese leaders.

Chengtu. H. J. Openshaw.

us for the Bread of Life. About two years ago we purchased an old house adjoining the chapel and have been using that, to help take care of the work, but it is already far from adequate to meet even our present need. A number of others are only a little less needy. We are also in great need of more chairs for our chapels, for we have been unable to secure the necessary chairs for the past two years.

However the greater need for this field, if we are to continue distinctively Baptist work, is a school for the training of our Baptist young people. If denominational schools are important in the states, they are a thousand times more important in this Catholic country.

We have a very good public school system on the island, but it is entirely inadequate. Even if it were adequate, there is no religious and almost no moral

KEEPING FAITH

With the Living and the Dead

TWENTY-EIGHT BAPTISTS sat around a table on various occasions last year and out of moneys administered by them in trust, authorized the expenditure of $2,104,622.99.

The actual paying out of this money was under the direction of 602 men and women on the other side of the world. They also acted in a trust capacity. Abiding trust is the keynote of all transactions between these two groups of Baptists, and that is one reason why they unite in trusting you.

The twenty-eight men were members of the Foreign Mission Board, prayerfully and earnestly administering the missionary work of the denomination. The men and women on the other side of the world—602 of them—were our foreign missionaries, giving their lives for the evangelization of the world and the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ.

Of the total sum spent, $429,424.21 was income from permanent investments; $194,699.23 came as gifts from the dead, from those who had remembered the work of the Lord in their wills or in gifts on the annuity plan; the balance came from the living membership of the Northern Baptist Convention. The future of the work and the hopes of our unselfish mission workers depend on the living—on you.

No heart can be cold enough to disregard those devoted men and women who live and labor, and some of whom have died, in jungle and desert, content, nevertheless, so long as they know the work will not be suffered to languish. No conscience can be callous enough to evade the obligation imposed by the trusting dead who, dying, gave because they relied on the living to give more.

There is need, immediate and urgent, of money for our foreign missions. Lack of it will hamper the Gospel's spread and may jeopardize the health and lives of missionaries. You will not fail them, for you are their "home folks."

training; and here we have so very little of the Christian background in the home. Even in our theological seminary, which is as near ideal as a seminary cooperating with other denominations could be, there is lamentably little training in Baptist principles. We must give our youth Baptist background in their primary training if we hope for Baptist leaders in the future. We must have an educated leadership, and if it is Baptist leadership there must be Baptist training. A school combining primary and secondary work is our greatest need.

Porto Rico

THE outstanding achievements of the past year are the growth in the Sunday schools—this has been quite general; an increasing spirit of hard work and a determination to progress; the beginning of an appreciation of the possibilities in the wider and more active employment of our lay members; an awakening to the needs and opportunities of our country districts. On account of the scarcity of pastors our country churches present serious problems which are hard to meet, but with the present zeal of the men and new plans we are making real progress. The population of Porto Rico is largely rural and I consider the present movement as very significant.

We have scraped up money from various sources and built a country chapel at Barinas, a barrio of Yauco, without calling on the society.

There has been a steady gain in membership, though it is not large.

The only effect I can see of the New World Movement is possibly an increase in salaries to meet the increased cost of living. We seemed to feel the collapse of the movement more than anything else. Those who got in early benefitted by the movement, those who did not felt the economies that followed. We received none of the things we wanted in the Ponce District.

After the rapid growth at first in Porto Rico there was a long period of reaction; we are coming out of that now, the work appears more solid and the gains more permanent. The outlook for 1924 is for a gain in membership on a firmer basis than formerly. There is nothing at present to indicate that this gain will be more than normal.

Our needs are: Playa Ponce—addition to chapel—$500; Ponce—addition to church to include residence of lady missionaries—$20,000; Yauco—house next to chapel—$5000.

These are all necessary from overflow conditions in the Sunday schools. In Yauco there is a large house next to the church owned by a widow who would sell, we think, for $5000. This more recent item Mr. Detweiler has not been able to include in his list for the next two years, yet it is very important as it would take care of our Sunday school for some years yet and so postpone building a new church and would also secure us a valuable lot.

Our Northern Neighbor

Maritime Provinces of Canada

THE principal events connected with the Baptists hereabout during the year gone have had to do with the work of Christian education. In February occurred the inauguration of Dr. F. W. Patterson as Doctor Cutten's successor in the presidency of Acadia. In April a special convention met at Moncton, N. B., to deal with the important question of college amalgamation, it being proposed by the Carnegie corporation, with offer of large financial assistance, that denominational and other schools should unite in one central university at Halifax. At this convention the Baptist people decided with heartiness to continue their educational work by themselves in Wolfville, N. S., the place where it has been carried on for nearly a century. This action of course brought upon us a much heavier responsibility than we have borne hitherto and summoned us to more heroic endeavor. At present a new and larger administration building on the site of the old college is in the early stages of erection. It is expected that Acadia's friends everywhere will rally to their obligations and privileges. Our college and our churches are so intimately related and intertwined, so devoted to the one task of promoting the kingdom of God among men, that any program made by either greatly affects the other. If we prove equal to immediate demands, then 1924 will turn out to be a notable year for us.

J. R. Vaughan, who for five years served Des Moines University as its business manager and treasurer, recently resigned and returned to Waterloo, Iowa, his former home, where he has resumed his business relations. He went to Des Moines College at a critical juncture in its development, and by wise leadership, splendid executive ability and unwearied industry he was able to organize the business affairs of the institution in such a way as to establish its credit with the banks, pay all its salaries and bills when due, expend thousands of dollars for the improvement of the buildings and grounds, reduce the indebtedness annually, add to the endowment a substantial amount, and at the same time aid worthy students with temporary loans and steady employment in order that they might not be compelled by financial limitations to leave the school. All this he did cheerfully, although it involved a great personal loss by the sacrifice of his own business in Waterloo, which he left at the call of the denomination to render this yeoman service in the cause of Christian education. He has been welcomed back to his home town and to the First Church, where he formerly was a tower of strength and where he has again assumed his responsibility at a time when the church will dedicate its fine new building, costing $150,000.

Dr. J. W. Weddell has become the acting pastor of the church at Philippi, W. Va. Doctor Weddell's daughter Margaret is the wife of Professor Brandon, a member of the faculty of Broaddus College there. Rev. H. C. Leland will for the present continue the work at DeWitt, Iowa, which Doctor Weddell lays down in order to accept the invitation of the West Virginia church.

Sunday morning, Dec. 30, was a time of heart-felt sorrow in the Delaware Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y., when Rev. A. B. Sears presented his resignation. Doctor Sears has been a most devoted worker, loyal to the truth, fearless in declaring it, wise in administration and loving in pastoral work. For more than a year physicians have urged him to take this step on account of the strain upon his physical strength. Doctor Sears' plans for the future have not been determined.

Dr. A. Sims, a great missionary doctor, died last fall in Birmingham, England, having served in Congoland from 1882 to 1922, a period of service far greater than that of any other medical man in all the Congo. He was a very modest man and not until after his death did the Foreign Society learn all the facts concerning the honors which had been bestowed upon this man. In a very real sense Doctor Sims was a pioneer in Congoland. As a representative of the Livingstone Inland Mission—whose field was transferred to the Foreign Mission Society in 1884—Doctor Sims first set sail for the Belgian Congo in 1882. At that time it was practically an unexplored country and with difficulty Doctor Sims penetrated over 200 miles to Stanley Pool, where it is said he met the well-known African explorer, H. M. Stanley. The medical training of Doctor Sims was of the highest order. From the University of Aberdeen in Scotland he won his B. M., C. M. and M. D. degrees, and from the University of Birmingham his D. P. H. (doctor of public health). He also held the certificate of the London School of Tropical Medicine and during one of his few furloughs spent three months in medical study in Vienna. As a medical man Doctor Sims was famous throughout the region and his skill was signally recognized. In 1920 he was decorated by the Belgian king because of his conspicuous service in the colony. He also received from the French government the cross of the Legion of Honor in recognition of the medical service he had rendered the French. One writer said that probably no other one person had saved so many lives in the Congo as did Doctor Sims. For several years he was the only doctor in the whole region. The length of his service—from 1882 to 1922—far exceeded that of any other medical man in all the Congo. For more than twenty years he served as mission treasurer at Matadi.

The church at Coudersport, Pa., suffered a great loss in the burning of its building and a new pipe organ ready for installation. The loss will reach $100,000. How about the insurance on your church property?

Mrs. Mary Couts Burnett of Fort Worth, Tex., has conveyed all of her property to a trust estate, the income to be used for the benefit of Texas Christian University. The estate is valued at $4,000,000. This is said to be the largest single gift ever made to a school of the Disciples of Christ.

After a long and efficient service in the New York State Convention, the Rev. E. B. Richmond has relinquished the work and will be retired from regular active duties Jan. 1. The convention in grateful appreciation of his faithfulness and continued service has voted him a salary for the rest of his life. Mr. Richmond will reside in his Rockville Center, L. I., home and will be an acceptable supply in the church of the Long Island Association.

As Pastor Bleakney of the Tabernacle Church, Utica, N. Y., was reading the church announcements on a recent Sunday the chairman of the board of trustees rose and announced that Mr. O. S. Foster, for many years an active member of Tabernacle, now living in Santa Barbara, Calif., had generously presented the church with a Christmas gift of $15,000 for the purpose of purchasing a parsonage. The announcement came as a complete surprise both to the pastor and to the members and was received with general rejoicing. The ordinance of baptism was administered on the last Sunday of the old year, making 183 additions to the church since the coming of Mr. Bleakney on March 1, 1922. In these days of high rents a parsonage sometimes spells the difference between success and failure in securing the man the church wants.

Dr. J. E. Conant and his associate, Sidney E. Cox, are doing a fine bit of apostolic evangelistic work which needs to be emphasized and imitated. Recently they closed a meeting in Waco, Tex., with splendid constructive results. Their plan is to make a careful survey of the field before the meetings are opened. This work is done by Mr. Cox, who is an adept at it. Teams are organized with ten persons in a team to make a systematic census of the community. The results of the census are tabulated on cards. In Waco the census revealed 4,000 names either as members of or with a preference for Tabernacle Church, where the meetings were to be held. These names were classified and the preferences given to selected workers to enlist in the Sunday school and in the church services. On Thanksgiving day the members of Tabernacle Church went out in teams of two or more to bring the gospel to the people who needed it and met with fine results. When the meetings began the revival was on. One hundred and fifty people accepted Christ, but the best part of it is that the church was thoroughly won to the New Testament plan of evangelism. Doctor Conant and Mr. Cox are now in Michigan in meetings.

The Calvary Church, Daytona Beach, Fla., has called Rev. E. D. Webber of Haverhill, Mass. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur was for several years the winter pastor of this church.

The "Baptist Times and Freeman" records the names of fifteen Baptist members in the new British parliament. One of the number, a Miss Jewson, is the only Baptist woman to fill that position. David Lloyd George was returned.

The administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion at its recent meeting took action expressing for the board its appreciation of the labors of hundreds of our people who made possible the thirty-five Bible and missionary conferences which were held throughout the convention.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones of the First Church, Philadelphia, has resigned in order to accept the call of the Second Church, Atlanta, Ga. He became pastor of the First Church in 1918. Dr. Henry Alfred Porter of the Third Church, St. Louis, was until recently the pastor of the Second Church.

The Woman's Foreign Society has yielded to the urgent request of the field activities committee of the General Board of Promotion for the return of Miss Elsie Kappen to its field force. Miss Kappen was one of the first women appointed by the board and rendered signal service in the Columbia River and Northwestern districts. Last February she was released to serve as acting administrative secretary of the woman's society. She was a member of the loyalty luncheon team which visited the cities of several states.

From Nebraska comes the stimulating news that the laymen of that state are developing a laymen's consciousness and a desire to make themselves felt in the affairs of the kingdom. At the state convention the laymen assembled for a banquet with an attendance of between 250 and 275. The theme was "The Present Day Challenge to the Christian Layman." Following this meeting a series of six regional gatherings of men have been arranged with the expectation of bringing together several hundred men. The first meeting was scheduled for Freemont, Jan. 8; one at Grand Island, Feb. 22; Norfolk, Feb. 5; Hastings, Feb. 19; Fairbury, Feb. 19, and Lincoln, March 25. These activities are bearing fruit in the form of greater interest and activity among men in the state convention program, as well as in the national program. It is designed not only to arouse the interest of men in their own churches, but to lead them to acquaint themselves with the enterprises which Baptists are carrying forward as a denomination. In Nebraska as in some other states there are churches without pastors. Laymen are being asked to fill these pulpits on occasions. A layman in the pulpit bringing a message of goodwill and fellowship is sure to carry a blessing to a pastorless group as well as himself growing in spiritual stature.

Dr. Joe P. Jacobs is already on the job as the new secretary of the Wyoming Baptist Convention. For the past four years he has been the secretary and treasurer of William Jewell College. Rev. J. F. Blodgett, who for ten years has done heroic work in the great pioneer state of Wyoming, will become one of the workers of the General Board of Promotion.

A Glance Back

THE hundreds of Baptists who gathered at Denver in 1910, as representatives of local churches in the Northern Baptist Convention, listened to the report of their committee on survey and many of them for the first time saw the world as their whole field of action. They caught their first view of the needs of the world as interrelated needs, none of which would be completely met until all were met. They recognized that the Christian education of the boys and girls of Idaho might be a factor in the evangelization of the natives of far-away Africa; that provision for the old age or ill-health of our missionaries and ministers was not only simple justice in itself but would justify us in continuing to call into these lines of service many of our finest young men and women.

In the conviction that the forms of activity and types of work suggested, the aims and ideals recommended, would hasten the time when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ," the representatives present voted to enter upon the tasks proposed. In taking this action, they endorsed no visionary plan for the general uplift and betterment of the world, but they undertook a campaign for the accomplishment of definite objectives presented in printed form and adopted.

The undertaking thus entered upon, which was later named The New World Movement, was not primarily a financial campaign. The consideration of money entered into it no more than into the planning of a child to make a gift to his father.....Uppermost in the minds of Northern Baptists was their gratitude to God, together with their new conception of the world's great need. They recognized their ability, under God's guidance, to meet a part of that need, and assuming the responsibility which that ability entailed, they set themselves the goal of one hundred million dollars as "commensurate with our resources."—"On the March."

A member of the congregation of the First Church, Seattle, whose name is withheld, presented the pastor, Rev. Ambrose M. Bailey and wife with a 1924 model, five-passenger, six-cylinder Buick sedan Christmas eve.

The auditorium of the First Church, Minneapolis, was dedicated Jan. 6. This was followed by a week of dedicatory services. Among the speakers were Dr. T. T. Shields of Toronto, Canada, president of the Baptist Bible Union of America; Dr. John Roach Straton of Calvary Church, New York City; Rev. W. L. Pettingill, dean of the Philadelphia School of the Bible; Rev. R. E. Neighbor of Rochester, N. Y.; Dr. J. Frank Norris of Fort Worth, Tex.; Dr. W. W. Bustard of Cleveland, Ohio, and others. Organization of the Baptist Bible Union of Minnesota took place at the meeting.

Taylorville and Mattoon are among the Illinois churches which will build in the near future. Mattoon has already begun the building of a $50,000 house of worship and Taylorville has appointed a building committee and instructed it to proceed to secure funds and plans for a new building to cost at least $40,000. Rev. James M. Lively is in his eighth year as pastor of the Mattoon church. Pastor Colby closed his work at Taylorville in December. The church at Normal was compelled to purchase a parsonage in order to have a resident minister. Pekin will remodel its building at a cost of $30,000. The church records show that Abraham Lincoln made a contribution for the present building.

The Church Peace Union announces that its trustees at their tenth annual meeting, Dec. 11, adopted and sent to President Coolidge a resolution favoring America's participation in the world court. The statement follows: "The trustees of the Church Peace Union, believing that the permanent court of international justice is an essential step toward the peace and security of the world and a practical and immediate means for the attainment of these ends, and that the participation of the United States in the court is urgently needed and essential to its greatest usefulness, and is in complete accord with the traditional policy of the United States, we wish to express our gratitude to the president for his recommendation that our nation become a party to the court, and pledge ourselves to use every influence to aid him in his high endeavors." Those who attended the meeting of trustees and voted unanimously in favor of the resolution were: Dr. Peter Ainslie, Dr. Arthur J. Brown, President W. H. P. Faunce, Dr. Frank O. Hall, Dr. Hamilton Holt, Prof. William I. Hull, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, Dr. Frederick Lynch, Mr. Marcus M. Marks, Dean Shailer Mathews, Dr. William P. Merrill, Dr. John R. Mott, Mr. George A. Plimpton, Dr. Junius B. Remensnyder, Judge Henry Wade Rogers, Mr. Fred B. Smith, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. James J. Walsh, Bishop Luther B. Wilson and Dr. Henry A. Atkinson.

Material Prosperity

WE cannot too strongly emphasize the fact that material prosperity in its best sense rests upon a spiritual foundation. What is this spiritual foundation? Jesus answers: "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness." Paul attempts a description of the kingdom in the words, "The kingdom of God is right conduct, peace and joy, through the holy Spirit and whoever in this way devotedly serves Christ, God takes pleasure in him and men highly commend him" (Weymouth's Translation). Right conduct is conduct controlled by love, peace is poise produced by trust, joy is optimism inspired by hope. All this in ordinary terms simply means that any man who starts out to live each day according to the law of love and kindness, permitting nothing hateful or resentful to mar his spirit, steadily maintaining the calmness which comes only from sincere trust in the Father's love, and carefully cultivating cheerfulness in an atmosphere of good-will, is in the way of real prosperity.

Fresh from the Field

Mr. Fred A. Grow of the Englewood Church, Chicago, is a member of the board of trustees of the Y. M. C. A. and chairman of the foreign work committee.

Our good friend, Dr. James P. Cad-man, writes that the First Church, San Diego, Cal., has received over 150 new members during the year which just closed. More than 2000 attended the Christmas exercises. Rev. F. O. Belden is pastor.

Mrs. J. N. Garst has been giving a se-ries of readings in the First Church, Spokane, of which Mr. Garst is pastor. At one of the recent programs the offering was $140. On a recent Sunday evening she gave "The Mansion," by Henry van Dyke, as a musical reading to the accompaniment of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sontata," Sinding's "Rustle of Spring" and Chopin's "Prelude."

At Bacone College there has been a revival, the special meetings closing just before the new year. Rev. C. B. Miller, the pastor of the First Church, Springfield, Mo., was the preacher. President Weeks reports that he baptized thirty-two of these Indian students on a recent Sunday. Only two members of the student body are not professed Christians. Fifty-six high-school students volunteered for Christian service, six of the number declaring their purpose to enter the ministry. Who said that it does not pay to educate and evangelize the Indians?

Dr. Charles W. Gilkey of the Hyde Park Church, Chicago, has been appointed by the University of Chicago to deliver the Barrows lectures in India for the year 1924-25, and has been given a leave of absence on salary by his church for six months for the purpose. The purpose of the Barrows lectureship, founded thirty years ago by Mrs. Caroline E. Haskell in honor of Dr. John Henry Barrows, has been to present in a friendly, temperate and conciliatory way the truths of Christianity to the scholarly and thoughtful people of India. The lectures are to be given in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and other important cities. Other lecturers upon the Barrows foundation have been Dr. John Henry Barrows; Principal A. M. Fairbairn of Mansfield College, Oxford; President Charles Cuthbert Hall, Union Theological Seminary, New York City; and Professor Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, who went to India in 1912. Since the outbreak of the great war no Barrows lecturer has been sent to India. Mr. Gilkey is a graduate of Harvard University and of Union Theological Seminary. He is a preacher of unusual power, especially with student audiences, having served as university preacher at Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Toronto, Leland Stanford and many other universities. Mr. Gilkey is to reach India in October, after lecturing in China and Japan.

Rev. H. R. Griffin assumed the work as pastor of the Rogers Park Church, Chicago, on Jan. 6.

At the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, the pastor, Rev. E. L. Dakin, is being assisted in special meetings by Rev. W. W. Bustard of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland.

Rev. W. D. Whan of Billings, Mont., began his work as pastor of the church at Waukegan, Ill., on Jan. 1. Mr. Whan was at one time pastor at Aurora and before going into war work was pastor at Greeley, Col.

Rev. George Waid has accepted the call of the church at Marshall, Mich. Mr. Waid has been counted among the most faithful pastors in that state. He was formerly editor of the Michigan Christian Herald. The Marshall Church became pastorless when Rev. J. B. Bouwman resigned to become pastor at Barrington, Ill., in connection with his work at the University of Chicago.

Dr. Truman W. Brophy of Chicago has made a gift of $50,000 to the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association. The money has been used to purchase land in the medical center of the city near the county hospital and other large institutions of the kind. On this land the Y. M. C. A. will erect at least a twelve-story building for a students' hotel. It is hoped that the new building will be named in honor of the recently deceased general secretary, L. Wilbur Messer, who served the association for thirty-five years.

The "Friend" (London) reports that five Friends go to parliament as the result of the recent elections. It also comments favorably on the increased number of women in that body, an increase from three to eight. Two of the men who were elected were themselves disfranchised for five years from the close of the war because of their imprisonment for opposing conscription. Their election, though not entitled to be on the voter's register themselves, is declared to be an evidence of recovery from the "war fever" of 1918. The Friend declares that the majority of those elected to the new parliament are committed to a broad outlook on international affairs.

From press reports it would appear that the Presbyterians propose to talk through their theological differences. A pamphlet has been sent out to 10,000 ministers in which a plea is made for liberty of thought in the Presbyterian Church. It is signed by 150 ministers representing both liberal and conservative leaders. The pamphlet says: "There is no assertion in the scriptures that their writers were kept from error," and "that the general assembly spoke without warrant of the scriptures or of the confession of faith when it said, 'The body spirit did so inspire, guide, and move the writers of the holy scripture as to keep them from error.'" Among the widely known signers are Henry van Dyke, W. P. Merrill, Henry S. Coffin, John Grier Hibben, and Ira Landrith.

Rev. A. Harold Carr has been called to the pastorate of the First Church, Bridgeport, Pa., to succeed Rev. Charles Nylund. He began his duties Jan. 1. Mr. Nylund has accepted the call of the church at Bridgeton, N. J. Robert Crouch, a senior student at Crozer has accepted the call of the church at Point Pleasant, N. J.

In order to provide for a growing work the First Church, Seattle, found it necessary to increase its budget by more than $5000. The brotherhood of the church will conduct the canvass to provide for the additional funds. One of the new items is for the salary of an assistant pastor. The current expense budget is $25,000.

"What is Immanuel Church of Chi-cago doing?" There are twenty-two religious services held every week. There is a regular employment department where we are constantly and intensely seeking to meet the needs of the unemployed. There are not less than 100 at the present time receiving free meals every day. Our supplies of clothing are rapidly exhausted and are being given out whenever we are able to meet a need. There is a constant demand of every variety on our benevolences. Some of our workers are giving hours of every day to help people in a material way. We have educational classes, moving picture entertainments, happy hours for the children, a daily Comfort Club which finds our building a place to secure a good lunch surrounded by wholesome, helpful influences. We are conducting our stores, employing four clerks and with a varied and valuable stock of goods. The entire profit goes into the helpful ministries of the church. We still hold to our motto, we meet every human need without delay.

Foreign Secretary James H. Franklin passed through Chicago last Friday on his way to mission fields in the Far East. He was urged as early as September by missionaries in Japan and representatives of the Japan Baptist churches to visit that country for conference and counsel regarding the reconstruction of their work, in view of the fearful destruction wrought by the earthquake, but it has been impossible until now for Secretary Franklin to respond to their request. While in the Orient Secretary Franklin will also include brief visits to the Philippine Mission, which he has not visited since 1913, and to the South China Mission which he visited last in 1915, but the chief purpose of the visit is to study conditions in Japan. He will serve with President Corwin S. Shank of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mrs. H. E. Goodman and Miss Nellie G. Prescott on a special commission representing the boards of the two foreign mission societies. All members of the special commission are planning to return to America in time to attend the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Milwaukee.

That's It

"It is the journalist who must be the interpreter of the secret language with which members of the guilds talk with each other," said Dr. Edwin E. Slosson, director of science service at Washington, D. C. Dr. Slosson was speaking before the students of the Medill School of Journalism as a journalist and as a scientist. The point which interested us, however, was the fact that THE BAPTIST is rendering just such service as an interpreter. Our "guilds" and societies have their own language. The folks don't know what they are talking about. Sometimes even editors can't find out. "Underdrawings," "over and above," "pro rata" divisions, "equalized" budgets and a lot of our talk about "millions" furnishes us with a real mission.

With Apologies to Briggs

When with a survey of the world's educational and missionary needs before you and under the spell of a war-drive psychology you made a pledge to give away beyond the average of your former giving and then extended that pledge over a five-year period; and then you met with reverses and sickness until you felt sure that you could never fulfil your obligations and then at last you draw the final check in full—"O, boy ain't it a grand and glorious feeling?" We can ly think of one thing which can add to your sense of satisfaction—have your subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions paid well in advance.

Watch Minnesota

We believe in demonstration centers. Minnesota is a demonstration center in the matter of increasing the circulation of THE BAPTIST and Missions. We cannot say much just now, for those in charge of the business are laymen who do not want publicity for themselves but they do want results for the kingdom. A little later we shall announce results and if possible get a write-up telling how they did it. Minnesota will more than double its list to these journals. Watch Minnesota!

What Does Your Heart Say?

"I have already outlived my allotted time by ten years. I cannot think that I have lived altogether in vain. I preached regularly for over forty-five years. I baptized more than 2100 persons, organized seven churches, built four new church buildings, married over 400 couples and buried over 1400 persons. It does not seem that I have accomplished much, but I have tried to be faithful. I have taken THE BAPTIST and its predecessors for years. I cannot pay for it any longer. Please discontinue." Friends, the editor has known this man for over thirty years. Since he was unable to preach he has supplemented the $30 per month from the M. and M. by repairing furniture and picture framing. In November his little shop burned and he lost all his tools and materials. Should he have THE BAPTIST and Missions for the rest of his days? You say. There are more than 100 similar cases in our files. These men ought to be privileged to keep in touch with the work of their brethren. Send your checks for our special fund.

The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society has appointed Mrs. Mary Kinney as district supervisor of Christian Americanization work in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming. Mrs. Kinney is the daughter of Rev. J. M. P. Martin of Grand Junction, Col., and the daughter-in-law of Dr. Bruce Kinney.

"Why do so many people go to these prayer meetings?" is a question which a staff writer of the Press-Herald of Portland, Me., answers by quoting the pastor of the Immanuel Church, Rev. W. H. Jones. "Prayer should be the basis of every church activity and without it nothing lasting in church work can be done." The prayer-meeting attendance is more than 100 on the average.

The new pastor of the Englewood Baptist Church, Rev. Charles A. Brooks, was tendered a public reception and recognition service on Thursday evening, Jan. 10. Mr. R. P. Fales, of the above church, presided. Rev. C. Claud Travis, pastor of the Englewood Methodist Church, conveyed the welcome of the neighboring pastors, and Mr. William F. Friedeman spoke on behalf of the community. The welcome of the South Side Baptist churches was conveyed by Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, while the general Baptist interests of Chicago were represented by Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Chicago Baptist Executive Council. Following these greetings, Doctor Brooks responded in appropriate words. The new pastor and his family were received into the membership of the church at the morning service of Sunday, Jan. 6, at which time several others also were given the hand of fellowship.

W. R. Millam, in Montana, rejoices because he has seen the work at Belgrade revived and put on a more permanent footing. Harvey R. Nelson, coming in from a visit to the mining camps near Trinidad Colo., speaks of three new places which have opened for him —Valdez, Segundo and Primero; and J. L. Whirry, in distant Oregon, declares that Vernonia, in that great state, is a field that should be occupied at once. J. D. Chapelle, recently appointed chapel car missionary assigned to Oregon, is happy because Baptist families are being discovered and that in good proportion they are joining the tithers' league. From Wyoming F. I. Blanchard reports that a church with thirty-four members has now sixteen additions and that one-third of the entire membership has signed the quiet hour pledge. W. C. Driver, with "Glad Tidings" in Arizona, sends good news from a community where the car was stationed: "Fifty-two conversions; twenty-eight baptisms; twenty-two joined the church by letter." And this from E. E. Cox, Idaho: "An awakening at Crystal; six conversions." These radiograms from our missionary representatives on the frontier show that the gospel is still the power of God unto salvation.

Dr. W. B. Hartang of Mason is being prominently mentioned for a seat in the Michigan state legislature, as successor to Warren D. Byrum who is to permanently remove from the second Ingham district. While the church will regret his leaving, his many friends wish him success. Such men are needed in our state and national legislative halls.

The report of the death of Col. Edward H. Haskell reached us as we were going to press. He died of pneumonia Jan. 8 in Pasadena. His condition was not considered serious until near the time of his death. He was born at Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 5, 1845. He has been prominent in business, political and denominational life. A full statement will appear in a later issue.

The Freemont Church brothers of the Freemont Church at Seattle are giving evidence of their real interest in doing the things that men can do. The Freemont brothers, with a Sunday noon Bible class as the rallying point, are extending their activities in several directions. The brothers are seeing to the publication of special church announcements in all the newspapers. They have put up markers on sidewalks directing people to their church. They have printed and distributed invitation cards listing a series of sermons. Recently they held a "pep" banquet attended by 100 men. To promote a spirit of fellowship with other men's organizations they visited a neighboring men's organization with the inevitable result that there came a realization of the power of united effort, as well as the joys of fellowship under most auspicious circumstances. The brothers have listed "prospects" for their organization and are laying careful plans for visiting and soliciting their attendance and interest. They financed the sending of a young lady to the Students' Volunteer Convention and are participating actively and aggressively in an every member visitation campaign.

Dan B. Brummitt, editor of the "Epworth Herald," has written a pamphlet on "Winning Financial Freedom for Pastors and Churches." The Laymen Company, 35 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, will send each pastor enough copies free for each member of his official boards.

Deacon Frank C. Dinsmore of the Broadway Church, Denver, died recently as the result of an operation. At one time he was treasurer of the Wisconsin Baptist Convention and has been keenly interested in the general work of the denomination.

Rev. Rolla E. Hunt, pastor of the Richmond Hill Church, New York City was presented with a check for $1000 as a Christmas present by his church. Deacon E. T. On Jan. 1, Pastor Hunt began the eighth year of his pastorate with the church.

We are all the time crying for condensed news. Here is a verbatim sample from Rev. M. E. Bollen of Fullerton, Cal.: "Would be pleased to send you some condensed news of our church—for publication—but that is not possible. Fullerton Church is prosperous—like all churches in S. Cal.; S. S. is growing nicely—like all Sunday schools in S. Cal.; giving more to missions this year than last—like all churches in S. Cal.; membership increasing at a good rate—like all churches in S. Cal.; recently closed a school of mission—like most churches in S. Cal; expect a substantial ingathering on confession of faith between this date and Easter—like all churches in S. Cal.; this pastor is well content and exceeding happy with his church and in his work—like all pastors in S. Cal. And now this talk must cease lest ye dear editors may think that this pastor is advertising, in a subtle sort of way—like all S. Cal. But this paragraph is just a bit of inside information for ye dear editors."

"Some one has got to rise up and give us a satisfactory explanation of the weakness of Protestantism in American cities," says the Central Christian Advocate in a striking editorial. The editor says that the Protestant churches have made a competitive scamper to see who could get first and farthest from the people downtown. These folks are not riding in limousines and alighting at churches built with the money secured by selling out downtown. There were as far back as 1910 13,345,545 foreign born and 18,897,837 of foreign stock living for the most part in the downtown sections of our great cities. What a challenge! "It is next to insane," says the editor, "to have a program which seeks to convert foreigners only through the board of foreign missions—by exportation, as it were, a program that when foreigners move in a community the churches move out—that seeks the boulevards and there spreads her awnings to God." Since the Centenary the Methodist church has the beginnings of a program for the cities.

Building the Bridge

THE Northern Baptist Convention is fast approaching the day when the bridge between the area covered by the New World Movement and the ground to be occupied by the new Board of Missionary Cooperation must be built. It is well understood by our leaders that the new movement cannot be started after the close of the old without disaster to our entire missionary enterprise at home and abroad. There is a space where the two movements must overlap if the connection is to be made and if the work is to be carried on without break. It is this space that must be bridged by engineering skill and workmanship worthy of Baptists who have no official bishops to build the bridge for them.

The precedents for building the bridge are found in every well-regulated local Baptist church. Each year the board of trustees makes provision for the taking of annual pledges for the new year for current expenses before the old pledges have expired. The situation is carefully studied before the canvass is made and a budget is drawn up setting forth the needs of the church for the ensuing year. Then the available resources are examined in detail by looking into the pledges formerly made with a view to having them repeated or increased, and by studying the possibilities in other directions. When all this work has been carefully done by the board of trustees, the budget is then presented to the church for approval and adoption. If adopted, the board of trustees then proceeds to carry out the plans for getting the means to meet the budget. The plans usually consist of some method of informing the members of the church with regard to the items in the budget and the necessity of providing for the same. In addition to the information disseminated, the board may arrange for a supper to which all members are invited in order that the information may be touched with enthusiasm and that pledges may be taken when the gastric nerve not only aids digestion, but also inspires generosity. This public appeal is followed up by a canvass individually of the members who failed to respond.

The bridge which the average local church builds each year is a kind of pontoon bridge which keeps the church afloat for twelve months. In all of its features it is not ideal, but in its general principles it is built according to engineering law. It is these general principles that furnish the precedents for building the bridge from the General Board of Promotion to the Board of Missionary Cooperation. Let us see what the general principles are.

First, there is the principle of continuity. One year is kept closely articulated with another without break so that the support of the local church never suffers from failure to make provision for the new year before the old year expires. This is a cardinal principle of all successful business. The manufacturer anticipates, the merchant forecasts, the builder foresees, and they usually succeed or fail in proportion to their powers of prevision. It is this principle of continuity that suffers most in a free democracy especially when certain things are kept in politics. In a free democracy, like the Baptist denomination, there is always danger of breaking the continuity, and that is a part of the price we pay for our independence. The local church, however, is close enough to the members to prevent any serious break in the continuity of its support; but the benevolences often suffer because the same local pressure is not felt. And then at a time when the convention is closing the five-year period the tendency to break the continuity of support for our organized missionary, educational and philanthropic work is strong, because there is a natural break between the close of one period and the opening of another. But it is this break which must be bridged in such a way that even the mental suggestion of a break will not appear.

THE second engineering principle involved in building the bridge is the principle of survey. It is needless to point out the fact that every efficient local church works upon a budget built upon an intelligent survey of its needs and of the ability and willingness of the members to meet the demands of the budget. The average local church budget is not built like a castle in the air but like a bungalow on the ground after the resources with which to build have been estimated in view of all the circumstances. It is at this point that the practical business man differs with the idealistic pastor, because the pastor insists on seeing the members at their best, while the layman is compelled to see them at their worst, especially if he is the treasurer of the church. The last survey, which was also the first, presented at Denver, saw things at their best under the influence of idealism awakened by the sacrificial giving of a people inspired by the spirit of patriotism. The top too high for the height of the average members of Baptist churches prevented the denomination from going over the top. The survey of the field was correct but the estimate of the force to cover the field was in error, not from the point of view of wealth, but from the point of view of willingness. This personal equation must be reckoned with in building the new bridge. The General Board of Promotion must proceed soon to find out not what the denomination can do, but what it will do. The survey of the field is an easy matter compared with the survey of the forces, but if the bridge is to be built which will provide for the continuity of adequate support for our missions, the survey must be made. With five years of experience said to be worth fifty million dollars it should not be difficult for the present board of promotion to give a correct estimate in general of what the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention may be expected to give next year to the support of any cooperative budget of benevolences.

The third principle involved in building the bridge is to secure the materials with which to build. The local church has established that precedent in its annual every-member canvass for subscriptions. By the same method, in largely the same way, the churches must be solicited for pledges to cover the budget of general benevolences of the denomination for the year beginning May 1, 1924. These pledges should be secured as early as possible after the churches have been thoroughly informed with regard to the items in the cooperative budget and the reasonableness and imperativeness of the needs to be supplied by the budget and have voted their approval. The pledges should be taken in an atmosphere of enthusiasm. If the pledges for benevolences can be unified with the pledges for current expenses and the canvass made for both at the same time in local churches, so much the better. But if the local church has made its canvass for current expenses just before the close of the calendar year, as many of them do, then the canvass for benevolences should be put on by itself immediately on the date set by the denomination. Good material left over from the old pledges to the New World Movement should be built into the new bridge.

We have sketched the general principles which must govern us in attempting at this time to make the transfer from one period to another but we have not dealt with all the details. It is our experience that if great principles are followed closely the details are never neglected. There are details of organization and education and personnel involved in the building of the bridge which will largely determine its structure and permanence, but for the present the need is some method of approach to the fiscal year beginning May 1 which will enable the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention to function happily in the adequate support of the cooperative program upon which rest the welfare and progress of our great missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises.

An Investment in Good-Will

GOOD-WILL is but another term for the theological word "grace." It is used as the synonym for brotherliness, and because the fine spiritual thing called love has been prostituted to base uses, good-will has taken the place of love. Good-will is an attitude of mind which must be assiduously cultivated, because it does not grow without care and industry.

God is the source of good-will. Jesus the incarnate revelation of God was the embodiment of good-will. He steadily and consistently refused to be stampeded into any expression of ill-will no matter what the provocation might be. "When he suffered he threatened not, when reviled he reviled not again." On the contrary, he prayed for his enemies and blessed them that cursed him. All his acts were acts of good-will, all his words were words of good-will, all his thought was concentrated on establishing good-will among men.

The religion of Jesus is therefore the religion of good-will. Any other gospel, however richly clad in the sacred garments of ecclesiastical authority and creed and ritual, is not the gospel of Christ. It is passing strange how this central thing in the religion of Jesus has so long been neglected. Church history for centuries testifies to the fact that good-will was not regarded as an asset. Therefore it finds no place in the great statements of doctrine that were formulated from time to time. On the contrary, ill-will issuing in organized persecutions in which the church engaged with a zeal worthy of a better cause, demonstrates how far the church had drifted from the spirit of Christ.

Because of the failure to invest in good-will the church has aided the nations of the world in their interminable strife. After generations of failure the church is only now beginning to awake to the value of good-will as a spiritual and also an economic asset. Some men of vision and high courage are cultivating good-will despite all the forces that unite to blight it. This is hopeful. But there are still continents of room for larger investment of spiritual capital in the fine thing we call brotherliness. According to the economics of Jesus, such an investment in the kingdom of God will assure not only large returns in spiritual blessing, but also in material prosperity. One cannot lose who invests in good-will and uses common sense in the utilization of his investment. It is the eternal law of life. Men were made for it just as fish were made for water, and they will never obey the law of their being until they live constantly in the atmosphere of brotherliness.

Where Are the Greater Works?

IF one compares the feeble efforts today of the church as a whole with Christ's influence on the common people of his day, does not the church suffer tremendously by the comparison? Can the most cheerful optimist assert that the common people hear the message of the church today gladly? And yet Jesus in speaking of his own great work before he left his disciples, said, "And greater works than these shall ye do because I go unto the Father."

But where are the greater works of the modern church?

The needs of the human heart are the same today as when Jesus taught in Galilee and great crowds hung upon his words. The needs are exactly the same. Surely something has happened, but has it happened to the message or to the messenger?

May it not be, that the church of today has grown a little too respectable, and because of this has grown lukewarm like the church of the Laodiceans? Is it possible that the church is neither cold nor hot, and knows not its own wretched need of raiment to hide its shame, and eye-salve to anoint its eyes that it may see? It is all too easy for a man living under sheltered conditions, snug and contented, to persuade himself that this is a beautiful world. "Look," he says, "at all that beauty in nature. God speaks to me in every flower. I read his message in the stars."

But what is the foolish one doing? He is judging a world from a landscape from which he has excluded the real reason for the death of Christ. Outside of that landscape, little children are being denied their birthright, youths and maidens are strolling serenely along the edge of moral precipices, "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn," the poor are robbed, the river of life is overflowing with sorrow, and the world with its burdens and its heavy chains enslaves mankind.

James Russell Lowell told in verse a parable of our Lord's visit to the earth.

Said Christ, our Lord, I will go and see
How the men, my brethren, believe in me.

When He arrived on the earth He was met by the chief priests and rulers and kings, who said:

"Go to, let us welcome with pomp and state
Him, who alone is mighty and great."

And so they housed him in palaces grand but

"Wheresoever his steps they led,
The Lord in sorrow bent down his head."

At length, Christ turned to his entertainers, and said:

"With gates of silver and bars of gold
Ye have fenced my sheep from their Father's fold.
I have heard the dropping of their tears
In heaven these eighteen hundred years."

To this the priests and rulers replied:

"O Lord and master, not ours the guilt,
We build but as our father's built;
Behold thine images how they stand,
Sovereign and sole through all the land."

To this Christ makes no verbal reply.

"Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man,
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

"These set He in the midst of them
And as they drew back their garment hem
For fear of defilement, 'Lo, here; said He,
'The images ye have made of me.'"

"The common people heard Him gladly" and they will hear the church gladly when the church can offer the same message of deliverance as did Jesus. But in order to put forth that message the church must need stand where Jesus stood and view the world in all its aching misery and need, as Jesus did with tear-drenched eyes. Then will the heart of the church ache and never cease from aching to seek and to save that which was lost through a gospel of deliverance. —Boston Evening Transcript.

Things Begin to Be Different

THE king of the bootleggers, as the newspapers call him—Emanuel H. Kessler—would probably agree in the judgment that the heavy sentence of imprisonment and fine imposed on him and his nine convicted accomplices in the United States Court in New York City marks a change in the tide of prohibition enforcement in this country.

To be sure, Judge Winslow was already the terror of the bootleggers in and around the metropolis. He staggered a bunch of millionaire wine merchants a year ago with sharp jail sentences—and made them do their time too. But this new conviction and new punishment mean even more than that—it is penitentiary instead of jail this time, and the court's sentence gets now an obvious backing of public opinion which it did not receive before. Big New York dailies, which have had the hardest kind of work to miss encouraging outright defiance of the Volstead act, are saying that Kessler got just what was good for him. Kessler, too, seems to think so, announcing that he does not propose to appeal but will serve out his sentence and then engage in some business which he trusts will induce people to forget that he "erred in the past."

Even the New York Times agrees that "where there's a will there's a way" to make prohibition effective, and it acknowledges that the will is increasing. Quite evidently the damp depths of the valley of illicit liquor-selling the country has now passed, and the grade up the hill of law-enforcement the people will soon be taking with a run. The citizenship conferences in Washington, the governors' conference in Indiana, their luncheon at the White House, the President's frank, blunt utterance in his message, the revival of interest in the subject among the churches and a general reaction of disgust among the people, have combined to put an end to the late era of laxity. Not only the king of the bootleggers goes to prison but the kingdom of the bootleggers totters to its fall.

A Statement by the Board of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

To the Northern Baptists—
Dear Brothers and Sisters:

As your board desires to take you into its confidence with reference to everything which becomes a matter of denominational interest, it seems wise to us to state our view of certain allegations recently made in the Fundamentalist edited by Dr. John Roach Straton, and repeated by him in part in the Watchman-Examiner of Nov. 15, 1923.

1. With regard to the demand of Doctor Straton and certain other brethren that they be given access to our confidential files.

Many on hearing of this naturally inquire, "Why not yield to the demand if you have nothing to conceal?" We will tell you why.

First, this correspondence with the missionaries, with the exception of that intended for publication, has for many years been regarded as confidential both by the missionaries and by the board. We have felt that we were morally bound as a matter of honor, sacredly to keep faith with our missionaries with reference to these letters. It may be added that, so far as we have heard from them, our missionaries with a single exception take our view of the confidential nature of this correspondence.

Confidential Correspondence

Second, neither we nor any other set of men can conduct the affairs of our society except on the basis of confidential correspondence. Many of our stations and some of our fields are unvisited by our secretaries or agents for years at a time on account of the prohibitive expense. We cannot know what is going on in West China, the Upper Congo or remote Assam or in any other field except by the freest, most personal and most intimate correspondence. We must know more than the events which occur and the statistics of the mission; we must know the thoughts, the feelings of the missionaries, their hopes and fears, their difficulties and perplexities, their relations to the government, to other boards and to each other, if we are to have any real understanding of situations. But we cannot have such information if the correspondence may be inspected at any time by any self-constituted committee and published to the world, as it was in this case, without our consent and that of the missionaries involved, in fact without even asking that consent. When the missionaries understand that what they write is for the public eye and may be broadcasted through the country, their letters will become formal, impersonal and restrained. They may still tell us the good news, but not the bad news, which it is equally important that the secretaries and the board should know. It is hard enough now to administer a great work thousands of miles away. Without confidential correspondence it would be impossible.

We recognized, of course, that if we refused the demand to inspect our files we would lay your board open to the suspicion that we refused because we had something to conceal, and we saw clearly that that suspicion would do a good deal of harm in certain quarters to your work for Christ and the salvation of men in foreign lands. What were we to do? We had to choose, and we chose to follow the course dictated by honor and faithfulness to the highest efficiency. We chose in these difficult circumstances to do what seemed to us the will of God, and to endure the suspicion which we knew would arise in many minds and would be diligently fostered by a few. In taking this course, we like all those who choose to do right in spite of dangers, felt that we could trust God, whose cause it is, and our brethren. It was they who had entrusted us with this great responsibility and we believed that this incident, when fully understood, would not impair the confidence in us which they had manifested when they chose us to administer their great foreign work.

Of course these files do not belong to your board, nor do they belong to any self-constituted committee, nor to any individual Baptist. They do belong to the denomination, functioning through the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and it can make any proper disposition of them it pleases. Between the sessions of the society at the Northern Baptist Convention, your board has been appointed custodian of the files, which for years have been regarded as confidential. We have no mandate from the denomination to change this custom and so we have no right to do it. Indeed, we see compelling reasons why this custom should not be changed.

A Committee Appointed

Nevertheless we looked about for some way in which we could satisfy all reasonable doubts in the minds of any of our friends. It was finally suggested that a small committee of the board should read all the pertinent matter in our files and should read to the board that part of it which they considered of any importance. The suggestion was adopted, the committee appointed and the work has been done, and done as thoroughly and faithfully as it could be done. The committee consisted of Mr. Henry Bond, Mr. William T. Sheppard, Dr. M. J. Twomey, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor. Dr. Joshua Gravett, a vice-president of the society, was requested to act with them. Two members of this committee have been presidents of the Northern Baptist Convention, two served on the committee appointed in Buffalo in 1920 to investigate our Baptist schools, and three were on the program of the fundamentalist pre-convention conference in Atlantic City as speakers. If the denomination cannot trust such a committee, no committee can be appointed whom they will trust.

This committee reported to the board Dec. 18 that they had spent days and nights on their task, that they had read all the available letters in our files relevant to the inquiry, including all the letters references to which were in the hands of the executive committee of the Fundamentalist League of Greater New York and Vicinity, whose chairman is Dr. John Roach Straton, and all other letters put into their hands from other sources; and besides this they reported that they had searched the files independently of any suggestion. They brought all correspondence to the board and actually put it on the table. Then at the request of the board they read to us all the letters which they considered of any interest or importance in the matter. The reading, interspersed with the freest questioning and discussion, consumed one whole session and part of another.

Conclusion of Committee

After the reading was concluded it was the unanimous decision of the special committee above enumerated and of the board that the correspondence, when read in its context and with a knowledge of the attendant circumstances, did not justify such attacks upon our missionaries and secretaries. It is true that in the letters of a few missionaries there are a few phrases and sentences that we felt we could not approve, but nothing was disclosed that in our opinion could not be met by correspondence and counsel. Apart from such sentences the reading of these confidential letters disclosed an evangelical spirit, a devotion to the service of the kingdom and a faith in Jesus Christ as the divine Lord and Saviour, that confirmed the confidence which the board had in its missionaries and secretaries. In conclusion, the board once again declared its purpose to send out only such missionaries as are entirely evangelical in their faith and spirit.

2. We shall now take up the most important of the statements made in the Fundamentalist against our missionaries and our secretaries. We have not space for them all. It takes only a sentence to create a suspicion. The answer in the nature of the case can rarely be so easy or so brief.

Shanghai Baptist College and Seminary has been the chief object of criticism, although the references in the Fundamentalist to the one institution are so scattered and so phrased that it would appear that there were at least four colleges involved. The first reference is to Shanghai College by name. Later it is "one of our large Baptist colleges in the Orient." In still another column it is "one of our large colleges in China." To one not acquainted with the facts it might appear that we have a number of colleges in the Orient, and that the Fundamentalist is crticizing several of our institutions, whereas there is unfortunately only one Baptist school of college grade in all China. Though probably unintentionally, an entirely false impression was thus produced.

The criticism of Shanghai Baptist College (not several different schools) is based first on the ground that "a missionary of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society from China" had said three years ago that certain doctrines were not being taught at Shanghai. The young man to whom reference is made was never a regular missionary of the society, and was merely employed to teach English for a short term in one of our schools in a section remote from Shanghai. He is not now connected in any way with the society and was not at the time of the conversation cited. He had no connection whatever with Shanghai College at any time and he has never had any first-hand knowledge of what was being taught there. Upon being questioned, he frankly admitted that he was expressing merely his opinion. The Fundamentalist itself refers to the official statement made by the president of Shanghai Baptist College to the trustees more than two years ago that these very doctrines were being taught in the institution; still it prefers to accept and publish as "evidence" the opinion of a young man who had no personal knowledge of what is taught at the college, rather than the official deliverance made by the president himself to the trustees of the school, composed of members of the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention and the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

Shanghai College

The whole denomination is aware of the extraordinary evangelistic spirit which prevails at Shanghai College and of the large number of conversions year by year. Although barely more than one-fifth of the students entering the preparatory department in 1922 were Christians, the percentage of Christians, class by class, steadily increased, until in the large senior group (thirty-one) every member had accepted Christ as his Lord and Saviour. Some of the most trusted religious leaders in America after visiting Shanghai College, have testified to the character and spirit of the institution. Rev. W. O. Carver, D.D., professor of missions in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, visited the college in the spring of 1923, when he wrote as follows in Home and Foreign Fields, the official missionary organ of the Southern Baptist Convention.

"It is developing splendidly. It is not without its problems. What growing institution could lack them? But God is so manifestly in the enterprise; its spirit is so loyal, its evangelistic tone so true. its contribution to China so important and its value to the whole cause of kingdom growth in China so great that President White and his large faculty can confidently lay all their problems before the Lord and the brotherhood. Wisdom and support will be given. Already the school is equal to the test and is prepared to grow to meet advancing need and opportunity. It is no easier in China than in America to command respect and honor for scholarship and sound learning, and at the same time to deserve all confidence as an exponent of his gospel. Nor are suspicious censors any more lacking or any less useful in one land that in the other. But God works while knowledge grows from more to more."

Thy Strength and My Day

GIVE me Thy strength for my day,
That wheresoe'er I go,
There shall no danger daunt me
And I shall fear no foe;
So shall no task o'ercome me,
So shall no trial fret,
So shall I walk unwearied
The path where my feet are set;
So shall I find no burden
Greater than I can bear,
So shall I have a courage
Equal to all my care;
So shall no grief o'erwhelm me,
So shall no wave o'erflow—
Give me Thy strength for my day, Lord,
Cover my weakness so.

—ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT.

The article in the Fundamentalist makes much of a letter written to the board three years ago by a missionary in West China, who voluntarily expressed his desire to tender his resignation upon returning for his furlough, due the following summer. This missionary gave four reasons for his decision, but attention is called to the fourth only, which he stated as follows:

"I feel that I must be free to express convictions as to theological reconstruction and social reform which would be sure to give offense to many mission supporters and workers. I believe that so long as a man draws his salary from an orthodox mission society he is morally bound to conform in his teaching to the general point of view represented by the society. Such conformity means constant restraint for me and I cannot continue it for the rest of my life."

In the Fundamentalist it is stated that his letter "was treated with indifference and there was a feeling on the part of representatives of the board that this man should remain in the work, it being the right of every Baptist to interpret truths for himself." One of the secretaries did express the opinion that it would be impossible for any one to draft a theological statement which would be acceptable to every one, and expressed the wish that it were possible to have a heart-to-heart talk before the missionary finally made up his mind that he must sever connection with our society, but the secretary also wrote: "Of course the Foreign Mission Society expects all who are connected with it to give Jesus Christ his rightful place and to proclaim an evangelical Christian message." One would think from reading the Fundamentalist that the matter "was treated with indifference" and that nothing was done about it. The fact is that a member of the board, visiting the missionary in West China just previous to his departure for home, after a heart-to-heart talk with him agreed that with such views the board would consider that he should not continue in the service of the society. This was the position taken by the board and the staff and his resignation was therefore accepted on his return.

The East China Missions

The Fundamentalist states that in 1922 there were sixty missionaries in our East China Missions, only six of whom were set apart for evangelistic work. This statement is altogether misleading. In the total which is given (sixty) both men and women are included, but the criticism omits the wives when it tells of the number engaged in evangelistic work. There is an evangelistic missionary family in every one of our stations in East China, with the exception of Kinhwa, which is being turned over as rapidly as possible to the Chinese; there are two evangelistic families at one station; more than in any other section of China the responsibility for the oversight of the evangelistic work is being turned over to graduates of Shanghai Baptist College and Seminary in harmony with our policy of increased emphasis on native leadership; in this mission where larger emphasis has been placed on educational work than on any of our other fields in China, the evangelistic results in our schools and hospitals have been most striking. There is an evangelistic spirit in every phase of the work in the East China Mission and teachers and medical missionaries regard themselves as evangelistic as truly as if they were classified as such. And so they are, as results show.

A most surprising reference is made to a letter which had come from a missionary in China stating that the ordinance of the Lord's Supper had not been observed in any of the churches on his field for a long time; that few of the churches had a mid-week prayer meeting; that the preachers were doing no pastoral work, etc. It is not stated that the man, who was so distressed at conditions which he had discovered on his field to which he had just been transferred, was one of the very men against whom suspicions were raised by Mr. and Mrs. Laraway, backed by the Fundamentalist. The sad state of affairs on this field was not due in the least to modernistic views on the part of his predecessor, for he was and still is regarded as a very conservative man, who would resent the implications of the statement published in the Fundamentalist. Nor was it due to his conservative views, but entirely to other conditions having nothing to do with theology. By no stretch of the imagination could one attribute it to modernistic teachings. Obviously the letter was misused.

The readers of the Fundamentalist are told of a committee meeting a few months ago at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Society, when a story was told of a conservative brother from America visiting Baptist work in one of the countries of Europe, who put his arm around one of the Baptist leaders in that country and said: "You are one of us; you are of like precious faith." It is declared that one of the members of the committee exclaimed when he heard this, "Like precious faith, indeed! If he knew the real conditions, he would fall dead."

This was not a meeting of any committee of the Foreign Mission Society; it was a committee composed of representatives of various organizations to promote attendance at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, and the remark quoted was made by a member of the committee who had no connection whatever with our society. The main point, however, is that theological views were not under discussion at all. It was the question of the relation of a group of beloved Baptists in Europe to other evangelical bodies.

An Inspiring Document

There was read in our presence the doctrinal statement of one of our missionaries which the Fundamentalist said would not be acceptable to "some of our fundamentalist leaders." That statement is a noble and inspiring document which indicates among other things the missionary's belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, "miraculously born of a virgin," and "miraculously risen from the dead." It indicates his belief in the future life and his acceptance of the Bible as authority on Christ's deity. Probably the unacceptable part of it was the man's frank avowal of his belief in evolution as a process employed by God in creation, a view held by some of the most highly honored Baptists in America, North and South.

The word "stultifying" is found in a letter from one of the missionaries, but a reading of the whole letter would convince any one that it does not involve the missionary's personal belief. He was writing regarding a proposed change in the by-laws of an institution which would have specified the doctrines which men must hold in order to serve in that school. What this missionary as a personal opinion considered "stultifying" was not the fundamental doctrines of Christianity but the incorporation of what was practically a creedal test in the by-laws of an institution. He gladly states that such doctrines are held and taught in the school with which he is connected. Indeed, immediately after using the word "stultifying" the missionary adds in the same paragraph, "Of course I am not myself in favor of having regular professors or members of the administrative staff who are not members of Baptist churches." He recognizes however that it might some time be impossible to secure in China a member of a Baptist church thoroughly qualified to teach a special subject (for instance, a branch of the Chinese classics) as is sometimes true in our denominational schools in America.

Baptist Work in France

3. In the October-November number of the Fundamentalist Doctor Straton says with reference to Baptist work in France:

"Our faithful French Baptists have been betrayed by the responsible leaders of our Foreign Mission Society, and that in the interest of modernism and the destructive tendencies that are seeking to undermine the very foundations of our glorious faith".....They even go to the extent of penalizing faithful Baptists who still believe in the integrity and authority of the Bible and the divine Christ which it enshrines."

The representatives of the Foreign Mission Society have done no such thing as is stated by Doctor Straton. Fortunately, there are at least five American Baptists who were present at the conference in Paris in July, 1920, at which there was a fresh outbreak of the old personal feud which has long existed among the Baptists of France. Their testimony does not support Doctor Straton in his contention.

During the World War the two French Baptist groups, which had so long opposed each other, seemed to be drawn closer together, and soon after the armistice was signed, Rev. A. Blocher, whose letter is published in the Fundamentalist in support of Doctor Straton's position, took the leading part in bringing all French-speaking Baptists in France, Belgium and Switzerland, into what is known as the French-speaking Baptist Union. All the churches which entered the union had the same confession of faith, and it was believed that personal differences had been so largely overcome that a federation of forces would prove possible.

In July, 1920, four representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, (Pres. Emory W. Hunt, Dr. Charles A. Brooks, Rev. Oliva Brouillette aud Secy. J. H. Franklin, Dr. Jacob Heinrichs also being present), met with the union and presented plans which were left for the consideration of French-speaking Baptists meeting alone. When they met by themselves, the old spirit of dissension reappeared. At a later session of the same meeting of the union the representatives of the society were present, and were told that sharp words had passed between some of the delegates. The divisive question seemed to be whether in the proposed theological school the Book of Jonah should be considered allegory or history. There was also a difference of opinion regarding the future life. Representatives of the society begged the French brethren not to separate over questions on which many Baptists disagree. Pastor Blocher thereupon severed his connection with the union, for whose organization he more than any one else was responsible, and into which he had welcomed the two men whose views were well known to him and who have since been pointed out as the outstanding "modernists" or "liberals."

This in brief, is the story of the meeting in 1920, when Doctor Straton says that it was insisted that "modernism" and "the new theology" should be admitted into the proposed school. One of the two men, who for years have been pointed out by Pastor Blocher and Pastor Dubarry as the outstanding "modernists" or "liberals" was the pastor of an entirely self-supporting church which never has had an appropriation from our society, and who, in 1920, declared his belief as follows:

"About Jesus Christ, I teach that he is God manifest in the flesh, that in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. I believe in his virgin birth, his atonement for our sins, his bodily resurrection, his ascension."

Now the Foreign Mission Society is charged with supporting "modernism," when neither of the two men who were pointed out as the chief offenders among the Baptists of France has for many years received a dollar of support from our society, and both of them believe that our course in France has been unfair to them.

Withdrawal of "Faithful" Baptists

The Foreign Mission Society is criticized further by Doctor Straton for penalizing faithful Baptists in France and with summarily cutting off support from them "because of the stand which they took for conscience' sake." The fact is, these "faithful Baptists" withdrew from us. The Foreign Mission Society did not cut them off. Indeed, most of the churches which withdrew from the union are able with effort to meet their own expenses, and several of them are located in strong Protestant communities. We made every reasonable effort to persuade these few churches to remain in cooperation with the Foreign Mission Society, going so far as to offer to recognize the autonomy of the association with which the "dissenters" were connected, and requesting them to send representatives to confer with the executive committee of the French-speaking Baptist Union to determine what proportion of funds given by us for use in France should be designated to them. This they flatly refused to do early in November, 1922, and notified us that the only question to be settled was as to the amount of money which we would grant them for what they called "liquidation." Meanwhile these "faithful Baptists" were seeking support from other sources, but we continued appropriations to them until the end of the year 1922. Had Doctor Straton told all the facts he would have reported that the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is still making appropriations to Baptist ministers in France who have no connection with the union, and neither he nor any one else can produce a scintilla of evidence to substantiate the criticism that the Foreign Mission Society has cut off support from men in France or elsewhere because of their conservative theological views.

In recent years the Foreign Mission Society has encountered more difficulties in the administration of the work in France than in all other European fields combined. Now a painstaking committee has been created by the French-speaking Baptist Union which is taking its task seriously and is attempting to meet the desire of our society that its appropriation to France be lessened by 10 per cent every year. The union is entitled to our support, and the Foreign Mission Society believes its constituency should discourage all efforts to destroy the union which French Baptists formed for themselves.

We have wearied your patience by our attempts to answer charges based on half or quarter truths and some on mere mistaken surmises. We have omitted only those which after investigation did not seem to us to justify a detailed discussion in such a statement as this. From these examples you may judge all that is being said against our missionaries and our staff.

We cannot close without again pointing out the injustice and cruelty of the method of anonymous general and vague denunciation and the refusal of any of those who make the allegations to put them in writing over their own names with the specific evidence and transmit them to our board. They seem to prefer trial by newspaper. They seem entirely reckless of the consequences to the life work of hundreds of consecrated missionaries.

We have done what seemed right and wise to us under difficult circumstances, and now can only leave the results in the hands of God and the brethren. We do so with confidence.

By order of the Board of Managers,
Frederick L. Anderson, Chairman
William B. Lipphard, Recording Secretary.

Seen Through the Eyes of a Student Volunteer

By L. H. Mayes

OVER 6000 students and denominational board representatives gathered for five days, Dec. 28-Jan. 1, in Indianapolis in what may prove to be the most significant of the many groups which have convened there in past years. One thousand colleges and universities from every state in the union, and also from many foreign lands were represented by delegates to the great gathering.

One of the most significant and hopeful signs of the whole convention was the very real seeking on the part of the student for what they called Jesus' way of life. As one of the Indianapolis dailies put it—"With fine idealism but with troubled minds the discussions were carried on." Really we could look for no more hopeful sign than that. To be sure, each individual probably had his or her own conception of just what Jesus' way meant. Some might have even read into Jesus' way some of their own conceptions. But we have the assurance that "If any man will do his will, he shall know." The students were really eager to know and we must believe that this spirit did guide them into the truth. It was no surprise to those who are watching the movement of these days toward a return to the Christ himself that the students of America and the world should themselves find that this likewise is their hope.

Herbert Gray's criticism that American students do not think enough, which he made after a recent visit with us, is no longer fully justified. The students at Indianapolis did think, and one of the best things about the whole convention is that we have every reason to believe they are returning to their campuses to think a good deal more and to read much more deeply than has been their habit.

American students are no longer children; they are mature men and women for the most part. This feeling grew upon us as the convention progressed. At first the program was a bit prone to be stereotyped and more or less canned and prepared for the delegates. But as the students began to express themselves one could feel the spirit of the convention swinging into the form which came from the thinking that was being done by the students.

American students are not radical. Many went to the great gathering with a bit of fear in their hearts that a panic of untimely extreme pacifism would sweep the delegates off their feet and they would pass resolutions which were beyond their thinking and for which they were not prepared. But the thoughtful, judicial temperament expressed by all but a very few students would be a commendation to a much more mature gathering.

War and the race questions were the two main topics of discussion. They were fully discussed, too, for there were two periods on the convention program for that purpose. One period was placed early in the program and the other period late in the program to enable the delegates to get a start at their problems and then to come to some sort of conclusion in their second discussion period. Practically every point of view was brought out during these four hours when heated debate, personal opinion and youthful enthusiasm had its sway. Some views were a bit radical, it might be claimed. But the final result and the expression by the whole body of students was the significant part of all.

The last day of the convention was given over in part to the summarizing of the thought and opinion of the students on the questions of race and war, which had occupied the principal part in their discussion. The practical idealism of our students today was assured when the question of war was put to the whole convention for the expression of their opinion. A student speaker was chosen to represent each of four opinions on war, namely: first, the League of Nations and the World Court the best possible means of abolishing war and bringing about world brotherhood; second, war should be avoided through education against it; third, non-resistance the best way to abolish war; fourth, preparedness the best means to prevent war.

No official vote, i. e., no counted vote, was taken, but the estimates by the various dailies give us an adequate idea of the trend of thought by the students. The League of Nations and World Court advocates won by a vast majority, being accredited anywhere from 4000 to 5000 votes. The education advocates came next with anywhere from 1500 to 3000 votes. Pacifists and non-resistants came third with about 500 votes, and those advocating preparedness footed the list with about 200 or 300 votes.

The result of this careful thinking and such a sane expression of American students is most significant. They were not radical, but on the whole very thoughtful and far seeing, yes, even quite progressive. It is for the reader to decide if this expression is not about what we hope would come from a poll of the vote of the best of even more mature citizens of our land.

Our own denomination should be proud of the leadership and other contributions which it was able to make to this great student enterprise. With our own Dr. Joseph C. Robbins presiding during the whole convention, and also serving as chairman of the executive committee, and Dr. K. S. Latourette as vice-chairman of that body, not to name others of our Baptist leaders and students who are serving this movement, we should be humbly proud that our denominational vision puts us in a position to render this service.

The great gathering of Baptists on Sunday afternoon at the First Baptist Church for our denominational meeting is an event we shall long remember. For two hours we asked questions of our missionaries who so kindly waited on the platform to tell us of our own work which they are carrying on for us. Three minutes was allotted to each missionary and the audience did not allow one minute to go to waste, but kept a steady stream of questions going. From the type of questions asked it would be hard for one to say that our Baptists are without knowledge of their missionary work.

The interest shown by the younger people was very significant, for it simply denotes how many of our best young men and women are looking for an opportunity to serve under our foreign board.

The farther we get from the Indianapolis convention the more we feel that the effects will be permanent and lasting. To be really true, it looks as if the power of the whole thing will grow the farther we get away from it. Many look for the delegates to go back to their schools and carry out a very permanent work as the result of the inspiration and incentive which those few days together gave. The day after the return of one delegation a criticism was made by one not in attendance that there had not been enough life-work decisions. It was his idea that those already planning on definite Christian tasks had been greatly strengthened in their resolves and could "give a reason for the faith that was in them." After all, is not that a very healthy sign? For the real work cannot be carried on during any five days, but must be worked out with patient and faithful toil during the ordinary days of our life. The writer feels that there were many who did consecrate their lives to definite Christian tasks, while many others pledged themselves to do all they could to bring in new recruits when they returned to their constituency.

During the closing hours of the convention when the delegates were preparing to return to their homes it was another very significant thing that they were searching for some way to work out their decisions when they got back to the routine of campus life. War and methods to prevent it had led all thought. How, then, were they to do something tangible to express their ideals in a real and practical way?

For the past three years especially, the students of America have been cooperating with the students of the world in the European student relief which has made it possible for the starving students in Central Europe to carry on their education. During the session at Indianapolis news came that four universities in Germany are on the verge of being closed—may even be closed by this time. Among these is one that has contributed to the education of some famous Americans. Thousands of students who have waded to their shoe-tops in mines all summer to save a few thousand marks for the winter find their money is worthless now. Other thousands of refugee students, especially from Russia, are at the mercy of their benefactors. About one-fifth of them are slowly dying from tuberculosis. In some refugee centers one out of ten died last year, while nine out of ten were ill.

With such conditions existing many delegations decided that they could do nothing less than return to their schools and do their best to carry this message to their friends and continue to raise funds for the student friendship fund for the relief of their unfortunate brothers. They felt that this was as effective a way as they could use to manifest their spirit of world brotherhood which is so lacking today.

The Indianapolis Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement is now history, but who is bold enough to deny that its spirit and power is growing and will manifest itself in numberless ways during the coming four years?

Influence of Highway Transport on Religious Life of My Community

By Dorothy L. Roberts

WE gladly reprint this essay from the "Marietta Times," Ohio, written by a sixteen-year-old girl, the daughter of a Methodist preacher. It took the prize of a four-year college course, covering all tuition and living expenses, amounting to at least $4,000, offered by the United States Highway Education Board, Washington, D. C., and named after Harvey S. Firestone, the founder of the prize. The contest is open to all states in the union.

THE Appian Way, most famous of Roman highways, was called by Horace Bushnell "the queen of roads." In establishing Christianity Paul and other early Christians made great use of the twenty-nine famous military roads radiating from Rome. "And so we came to Rome. And . . . the brethren . . . came to meet us as far as the market of Appius." And it came to pass that Rome, having the greatest road, built later the greatest church, St. Peter's, the greatest church of Christianity built at the end of the greatest highway. Strange coincidence! Here is food for thought. From the very first the mightiest of all religions went forward upon the great highways of travel.

The writer lives in the mountains of southeastern Kentucky, where the religious life is backward, and the roads almost impassable. The purpose of this paper is to show how these two facts affect each other. One dislikes to write anything uncomplimentary of one's own community, but one should study conditions before suggesting remedies.

A survey of Harlan county shows forty-seven churches with thirty-six ordained and licensed preachers. These men, most of whom could not pass the entrance examinations of a first-class high school, work at the mines or elsewhere throughout the week, having little leisure for study or preparation. Such leadership develops only religion of the emotional, irresponsible type.

Statistics from our criminal courts indicate that these outlying churches fail to meet the situation. Recently, within four days in this locality, twelve persons met violent deaths. Shooting, drinking and gambling prevail even in the sections where churches exist.

Whisky distilling, feudism and general lawlessness are not in reality the cause of crime. They are only outward symptoms. They all suggest ignorance; the people do not know. With sapped vitality and weak morals go sluggish minds. Close intermarriage has reduced the original vitality. Large families live in poor, small houses; the death rate is high. In one school a hook-worm clinic showed 99 per cent of the pupils afflicted. Religion should not be blind to physical facts. Disease, crime, irreligion, these exist where people do not know what is good in character or right in conduct.

If it be true that ignorance explains the backwardness of this territory, then both the church and school are needed to counteract it. Religious and educational work here rise and fall together. Good churches foster good schools. Vigorous churches and centralized schools are impossible in rural sections without good roads. Our isolation is the cause of our ignorance. We would have somewhere to go and something to get, if we had some way of going. Three dollars to ride five miles in a Harlan jitney! The average car is a hopeless wreck after one year of steady bumping over ridges and washouts. Some ship their cars by freight to Richmond when driving out of Kentucky. My kingdom for a highway!

Among our agricultural folk old farming methods prevail. The mountaineer wrests a few hundred dollars where he should get a thousand. The jitney, auto truck and family car will be chariots from heaven, solving our isolation. Good roads will encourage the auto truck, diversity of crops, improved farming methods, cooperative selling, contentment and an increase of the economic surplus. This surplus we will invest in churches and schools. Good roads will mean less churches, but better ones, larger ones; fewer ministers, but better ones, educated community leaders.

So Harlan county must build its Appian ways, that modern apostles may have highways for the new program of evangelism and education. "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; . . . it shall be for the redeemed." Out of such material things as stone and cement must we build through our mountains the highway leading to the goal of our spiritual desire—religious education for all.

The budget of the First Church, Topeka, Kan., is well balanced. It calls for $11,050 for current expenses and $10,500 for missions and benevolences. Rev. Charles F. Mathews is pastor.

A Survey of Baptist Work for 1923

The outstanding achievements for the past year, the hopes for the future and a recounting of the chief needs is briefly given by those nearest to the heart of the work.

The State Conventions

Maine

UNDER "achievements" might be given the union of the Free Street Baptist and the Congress Street Free Baptist churches in the city of Portland, and the sale of one of the properties as preliminary to the erection of a great church edifice with adequate equipment for every department of church life and work, and with this goes the fact that Dr. W. H. Jones, recently of Chicago, becomes the able, wise and sympathetic pastor. The gathering of the largest number of young men and women in Colby, Bates, Coburn, Hebron, Maine Central Institute, Ricker, Higgins, and Parsonsfield, that ever have been registered in our colleges and schools and the fact that they will find broader courses, better equipment, instruction of the highest order, and religious influence that is guiding many of our best students into ministerial and missionary service. The development of the Glenwood Square enterprise at Portland, with the full payment for church building. The opening of work and securing a pastor for Russians and Poles in Waterville-Winslow.

In actual Christian service to meet the needs of the state, the nation and the world, better than ever before.

The carrying forward of every department of our denominational work which will come through more complete loyalty to Christ, and the use of all resource as stewards of His grace and will.

E. C. WHITTEMORE.

Waterville.

Rhode Island

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year are: Closer coordination of all Baptist work; stimulation of missionary atmosphere, and maintenance of high rating in New World Movement, through state conferences; progress toward new edifices for Italian Baptist churches and Russian mission in Providence; definite activity by Laymen's Council; employment of full-time director of religious education and a state evangelist; and by no means the least, intrenchment of Rev. William Reid, general secretary, in the confidence and affections of all state Baptists, by his excellent work.

The outlook for 1924 is excellent in every way. Tasks begun will be completed; important new plans will be launched. The state is closely knit geographically, permitting Baptist fellowship. Harmony prevails. Fundamentalism is not an issue here.

The chief needs of state Baptists are enlarged budget; extension of rural work; increased subscriptions to denominational papers; improvement of French and Portuguese missions; reduction of non-resident membership.

CLARENCE M. GALLUP.

Providence.

New Hampshire

THE year's work: Forty churches aided by the convention toward pastor's salary. Probably but few of these churches could have been kept open without this aid. Many churchless communities furnished with occasional preaching. Larger number of neglected communities reached by summer preaching than during any previous year. Payments on pledges to the New World Movement have been well sustained. Interest in evangelism has been on the increase and the number of baptisms ranks well with those of recent years.

Outlook for 1924: Continuance of the same kind of work with as much increase as funds will allow. The problem in this state will continue to be as at present, chiefly the needs of the rural communities.

Chief needs: A larger number of efficient pastors for rural work, and a larger interest taken by the laymen of the churches in the state work.

D. S. JENKS.

Manchester.

Massachusetts

IT has been a fruitful year. New associational consciousness has been developed with intra-associational activities that foster the social, devotional, evangelistic and missionary life of the churches. Two new churches were organized, making a total of 350, with over 93,300 members. Many of the churches have largely improved their plants.

The annual meeting of the convention was one of the best ever held, with a splendid spirit. The attendance broke all records. A growing spirit of prayer, evangelism and kingdom vision characterize our people. The outlook for 1924 is bright.

Our chief needs are: To lead all our churches to be truly active for the Master "from Jerusalem to the ends of the earth." A denominational consciousness that shall make us all thank God for the past, and joyfully meet the Master's kingdom challenge of today, heartily, intelligently and unitedly, for his glory, not for ours.

HUGH A. HEATH.

Boston.

Vermont

THE most outstanding event in Vermont during the past year has been the securing of $75,000 with which to erect a new dormitory for girls at Vermont Academy to take the place of Farnswo.th Hall which was burned about fifteen years ago. The school under Principal John B. Cook is absolutely driven for more room, having 176 students. This new building will accommodate eighty-four girls besides rooms for teachers and social rooms and a modern domestic science department. The contractors are already at work on the new building. During the year a new church has been organized at Springfield, a live, growing village of about 7000 inhabitants. We have already purchased a splendid location for a church edifice, on which are two houses —one large, which is now being used for the services, and the other a small one which will be used for a parsonage. The new church has at the present time eighty members. The congregation and the Sunday school each number about 100.

The outlook for 1924 is encouraging. Hon. Henry Bond was elected chairman of the laymen's evangelistic committee for the state and given one strong layman in each of the seven associations. Mr. Bond and his associational chairmen have arranged for conferences in each association to which the pastor and one layman in each church were invited, expenses paid. At these conferences Doctor Davison, state secretary, spoke and Mr. Bond outlined the plan for both personal and pastoral evangelism. The interest shown by the laymen in these conferences is very unusual and promises much for the future both along evangelistic and missionary lines.

The chief need in Vermont is for money with which to secure district missionaries who will take charge of large sections back in the rural communities where so many people are now without preaching by any denomination.

W. A. DAVISON.

Burlington.

Connecticut

THE outstanding achievement in Connecticut during the past year were:

1. The woman's continuation campaign went "Over the Top."
2. The celebration of the completion of 100 years of Baptist work in the state.
3. The Bible and missionary conference with registration over 1300.
4. One new church formed.

The outlook for 1924 in the main is hopeful, but somewhat problematical in view of the completion of the New World Movement and the inauguration of a new program.

Our needs are: Very much more money for an operating budget; six new church buildings and two settlement houses.

New York State

THE year has been marked by a definite advance in all lines of the state program. The work of reorganization has been carried on with most gratifying results. We are able to report that definite progress has been made in the matter of districting the state and in every place where the general director has presented the plan, there has been a most gratifying response on the part of pastors, churches and missionary committees. There is a marked willingness on the part of associations to share in the financial responsibility in order that the vitally needed supervision may be given to the specific area.

There has been a most delightful cooperation in the working of the district plan as it relates to the city executive secretaries. The standard "A" societies under the efficient leadership of Rev. E. Herbert Dutton, Buffalo; Rev. Alfred E. Isaac, Rochester, and Rev. C. H. Sears, New York, have rendered most vital assistance in correlating the city and rural work. It is our hope that by the next annual convention we may see the complete districting accomplished and a District Director in every area.

The departmental program for the entire state has been developed in a most strategic way by the Directors of Departments.

Rev. H. Wyse Jones, director of the department of evangelism, reports that the new spirit of cooperation awakened in large measure by the centralization of all directors in one office, and the cooperative plans going out from that office have greatly encouraged evangelism in the state. This has made possible conferences of all leaders viewing the work of the convention as one task. This has stirred evangelists, pastors and churches with a new devotion and hopefulness.

The department of religious education reports that New York enrolled the largest number of Sunday schools in the Baptist cooperative plan for "bigger and better schools" of any of the states, though the total was only 179 of our 828 reported schools. The year has been an exceptionally successful one in the realization of the conduct of assemblies, conferences and similar gatherings. Associations are more and more realizing the benefit of a director for the children's work in the Sunday schools. Last year fifteen were reported. This year we have twenty-five, with one other appointment to be reported. There has also been a large increase in the number of key-women. Three hundred and fifty churches report such helpers now.

The department of town and country church work, Rev. Frederick W. Tomlinson, director, reports that there has been an attempt made to help pastorless churches secure suitable leadership and to aid pastors in locating. District directors have been earnest and successful in this line. In the effort to improve pastoral and lay leadership, many pastors and other members have availed themselves of denominational and interdenominational conferences. The Baptist summer school for pastors, held for three years at Cook Academy, had an attendance more or less regularly of forty-five, nearly all of whom were from rural churches. A still greater attendance of rural pastors and their families at the Keuka Park five-day conferences, shows a growth in the study of the Bible and the educational and missionary work of our denomination.

The promotion board (metropolitan and state) reports that there has been a clearly defined program during the entire year, carefully planned and interpreted to the church and cooperating organizations of the church. Already twenty-three churches have paid their quotas in full. There are also seventy-three churches that have paid their pledges in full; but some of these did not pledge their full quotas, and are now pressing to meet their quotas. The largest amount paid by any church is $145,000. The little Red House Indian church pledged $3 over its quota, and has paid $12 beyond its pledge.

The general outlook for 1924 in all departments is most encouraging.

The text of our convention, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me," was selected in the historic and dynamic atmosphere of the martyrs past and present where the united fellowship was surcharged with the spirit of sacrifice.

The challenge comes to us in the new year—To every Baptist in the great Empire State, and in all states, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me."

Syracuse. H. CLARKE COLEBROOK.

Metropolitan Area, New York City

Just to "carry on" is a serious task in this area, particularly in down-town fields, where the currents of population and trade are all against the progress of the Protestant church. During the past year, however, we have "carried on" through four Christian centers, six down-town churches (practically Christian centers), twenty-seven foreign-speaking churches or missions, in thirteen languages. In all of these centers a three-fold evangelistic ministry—Christian teaching, direct evangelistic approach and social evangelism—has been conducted. The agencies are the regular church appointments (preaching services, prayer meetings, Bible schools), church vacation Bible schools, industrial Bible schools, mothers' meetings, and a multitude of clubs and classes in each center. These old churches are maintained, while new churches are being helped toward self-support.

Some items of progress are: Erection of one portable building in a growing section; through aid of our Metropolitan agencies a model church plant erected in Jamaica; a Christian center remodeled, and a new field opened in a growing section of Westchester County. Little money has been available for advanced work under the denominational restrictions of the year.

Items greatly needed in the Metropolitan area are: A building in the Chinese section which will adequately represent Christianity to the Chinese, and also provide much needed educational and social facilities; a new building for the Strong Place Christian center; permanent structure for church extension work in Queens and Westchester County. Financial support for workers in a new negro center in Harlem—the most congested home of negroes in America—is urgently needed. Now we are considering an aggressive work for Jews. If Jews are to own Manhattan and down-town Brooklyn, it is important that we win some of them to Jesus Christ and infuse Christian ideals into a greater number of the Jewish population.

CHARLES HATCH SEARS.

New York City.

New Jersey

WE started the year, as you know, with the great loss of our honored president, Francis Wayland Ayer, who had in a most distinctive way served our Baptist interests for over twenty-five years. It was a difficult task to find a successor, but we believe that in Judge Horace Roberson we have chosen a president who will wisely carry on the work that Mr. Ayer so successfully administered for many years.

The last year has been one of definite achievement in New Jersey. In addition to our churches, the results have been better than for many years; in the last eighteen months there have been more than 5000 added to our church rolls. These results were largely accomplished through the exchange of pastors and meeting conducted by the pastors themselves rather than by the employment of outside evangelistic assistance.

We are $20,000 ahead in our gifts for the New World Movement for the same date of a year ago. Last year our churches gave for missions more than three times as much as they had in any year before the New World Movement was started.

A very successful summer assembly of our young people was held at Peddie School, Hightstown, N. J., with 328 in attendance, and with a thorough course of study under competent instructors. An assembly was also held for negro Baptist young people, at Rahway. The foreign-speaking pastors gathered in June for a week of study and inspirational addresses, at the International Baptist Seminary, East Orange. Mrs. W. H. Farmer, new president of the New Jersey Women's Baptist Mission Society, directed a school of fifty chosen women during a week of missionary study at the International Seminary early in the fall.

Rev. Rufus M. Traver's coming as field secretary has brought with it a renewal of spiritual vigor.

After twenty years' work among the Italians in Newark we have at last been able to erect a community house and church costing over $70,000.

The outlook for 1924 is promising as the Baptists of the state are free from bitter doctrinal controversy, and almost every church is supporting the New World Movement. The pastors over the state are holding frequent retreats for prayer and the resultant spirit of fervor and devotion is noticeable.

Our chief need is always a greater consecration to Christ on the part of our pastors and people. We need churches established in several promising points that are not over-churched, especially in the towns suburban to New York City. We need to do a more extensive work among our foreign-speaking people who are more numerous than our English-speaking people in several factory towns. We need to reach the same groups who are the regular attendants at our church and Sunday school. We need to get more laymen vitally and personally interested in the general work of the denomination as well as in the local church.

CHARLES E. GOODALL.

Newark.

Pennsylvania

THE outstanding achievements of the past year in Pennsylvania have been:

(1) The dedication of Rankin Christian center in Pittsburgh—a center that will serve a community of 10,000 people.
(2) Two summer assemblies with a total enrolment of over 400.
(3) The acceptance of responsibility for the promotion of religious education by our board of education in cooperation with the Publication Society.
(4) The erection of a $60,000 church in Bethlehem, made possible through the aid of the state mission board.
(5) 799 baptisms in our mission churches; an average of twelve to each missionary pastor.
(6) A series of sixteen Bible and missionary conferences, in which were representatives from every association in the state.
(7) The hearty and unanimous endorsment by the state convention of the denominational program for 1924-25.

Judging from the unanimity which characterized our state convention, the outlook is full of assurance for the hearty cooperation of our entire constituency in the promotion of our denominational task next year.

The needs for the coming year are:

(1) An increasing interest in the promotion of religious and missionary education.
(2) An enlarging number who will recognize and practice the principle of Christian stewardship.
(3) The development of church evangelism.
(4) Raising of an additional $1,000,000 endowment for Bucknell University, and
(5) The completion of Pennsylvania's share in the New World Movement Fund by May 1, 1924.

WILLIAM G. RUSSELL.

Philadelphia.

District of Columbia

THE greatest achievement of the past year in our Baptist life in the District of Columbia is the raising of our total budget for benevolences. Our offerings are divided between the Northern and Southern Conventions and each body has received the full amount pledged for the current associational year. Another notable feature of the past year is a movement toward the establishment of a home for aged men, and the enlargement and consolidation of all our benevolent institutions. It is altogether likely that great advance will be made in this direction in the next few years.

The Baptist outlook in the District of Columbia was never so bright as now. Several new churches are being organized in rapidly developing communities.

Our outstanding needs as we face the future are clearer and larger vision, deeper consecration and more generous giving.

HENRY W. O. MILLINGTON.

Washington.

Delaware

DELAWARE has maintained the new standard of missionary giving and ranks well up in the list proportionately. There have been no unusual happenings but steady and persistent work in every church in the state.

Wilmington. GEORGE D. ALLISON.

Ohio

THE first Ohio conference on evangelism was a decided success. It was held in Trinity Church, Marion, of which the late President Harding was a member, Dec. 10-12, and was conducted under the joint auspices of the Home Mission Society and the Ohio Convention. It was indeed a great gathering. The sessions were refreshing and heartening. Ninety-three ministers and about half as many laymen, exclusive of Marion visitors, registered. Much of the success of the undertaking should be attributed to the thorough preparation made by Rev. C. H. Stull, superintendent of evangelism of the Ohio Convention, combined with the inspiring leadership of Rev. H. F. Stilwell, superintendent of evangelism of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Our Ohio pastors proved once again that they are always eager for unselfish service.

No other year in the memory of our oldest inhabitant brought to Ohio so many Baptist ministers from other commonwealths as did the year 1923. Dayton First, Springfield First, Hamilton, Madisonville, Wyoming, Marietta, Martins Ferry, Zanesville Market Street, Newark Second, Columbus Tenth Avenue, Columbus South High Street, Mt. Vernon, Akron First, Warren First, Niles, Lorain First, Jefferson and Ashtabula are among the parishes that have welcomed pastors from beyond our borders. We are under debt to Michigan, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and other of our sister states. For these splendid accessions to our ministerial force we are profoundly grateful, while we also rejoice that Youngstown Himrod Avenue, Fredericktown and Tiffin have recalled prodigals from far countries.

With joy we report that the collections from Ohio churches for the first six months of this present fiscal year register an increase of 20 per cent above the returns for the same period of the preceding year. We thank God and take courage, hoping to conclude the New World Movement period with honor and success.

Granville. T. F. CHAMBERS.

Indiana

THERE are two things which stand out as distinguishing the year 1923 from other years in our Baptist work in Indiana. The first thing is the large amount of money raised for new church buildings. In the campaigns conducted by Rev. S. G. Huntington, our extension secretary, there was raised more than $340,000. One million dollars has been raised for new buildings during the past four years.

The next item of unusual interest was the large gifts made to the state convention. More than $100 worth of property was given to us by our friends.

The future looks good from almost every angle. Our churches are applying themselves to their task more earnestly and soberly than ever before. The spirit of unity prevails throughout our state.

What do we need? Well, we would like to have a lot of things. We all need more of the spirit of our Master in facing our task and our dealings with one another and with the world. But if you ask about material things we should like to have money for badly needed equipment for Franklin College and more investment funds for the work of our state convention. We need larger equipment for our two Christian centers in the Calumet district in the way of two chapels, two gymnasiums and some other equipment.

CARLOS M. DINSMORE.

Indianapolis.

Illinois

THE past year closed with the Baptist work in Illinois in a very satisfactory condition. The year has been marked with a spirit of cooperation and good will. The recent annual meeting held at Oak Park exceeded all similar gatherings in attendance and was certainly never surpassed from any other point of view.

The outstanding feature of the year is the large sums of money expended for home purposes, reaching nearly two million dollars, as compared with less than one million in pre-New World Movement days. For benevolences the sum of $524,971.76 was reported, or a grand total for all purposes of $2,475,894.14 as the year's contribution of the English-speaking Baptists affiliated with the state convention. The large increase in gifts for home purposes is accounted for by the fact that several large building enterprises have been put over. About thirty new edifices or remodeled buildings have been erected during the last two years. The principal projects are in and around Chicago, for this city has experienced a remarkable building boom along all lines.

We regret that the number of baptisms has decreased during the year, the number reported being about 25 per cent less than last year. However, judging from the number of special meetings now under way or planned for the immediate future, the coming year will doubtless show an improvement in this direction.

Chicago. A. E. PETERSON.

Michigan

OUTSTANDING achievements for the year are the large number of baptisms reported and the number of new church buildings erected. Following are some of the buildings: Redford, $70,000; Northwestern Church, Detroit, $85,000; Hurlburt Ave., $35,000; South Park, Port Huron, $15,000; Hartford Ave., Detroit, $25,000; new building purchased at Delray, community building, Tekonsha, $6000; temporary chapel at Nine Mile Road, Detroit, new chapel for Drexel mission, Jackson, $4500. Another achievement is student work under a secretary at State Normal at Ypsilanti, first attempt to do work of this kind in normal schools. Work among the negroes is taking on better form. The Christian center, Detroit, is greatly strengthened.

Work in our major cities outside of Detroit must be promoted because of rapidly increasing populations. The indications are that Michigan will have an increase of 150,000 people in 1924. It is a serious task to minister properly to this great company of newcomers and strengthen the work along lines already begun. The foreign groups in Detroit and elsewhere present a great challenge to Baptists.

One of our needs is funds to furnish equipment adequate to our great opportunities in growing centers of population. If we had the money we could place buildings in many new and strategic locations where no other denominations are working. Above all we need the spirit of prayer and consecration to help us to measure up to our opportunity and the venture of faith to undertake great things for God.

JOHN E. SMITH.

Wisconsin

Outstanding Achievements of the Past Year

1. New associational lines, resulting in the new alignment of churches of all nationalities in associational work.
2. Hearty response to the adoption of the future program of the Northern Baptist Convention. When this matter was referred to the churches only one church voted negatively in regard to the new program.
3. The organization of a new Baptist church in Milwaukee—the first new organization for many years.
4. Renewed spiritual interest partly accounted for as the result of the Bible and missionary conference.

Outlook for 1924

1. More genuine cooperation between the various national groups.
2. An enlarged evangelistic program under the direction of a state evangelist.
3. Greatly advanced work in the Christian center in Milwaukee—a new worker soon to be employed for this type of work.
4. Hearty cooperation in preparation for the coming of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The Most Pressing Needs

1. Pastors for smaller churches and rural fields.
2. A realization that all need the gospel and that all nationalities can be reached by the gospel. There is too often an idea that Wisconsin is so greatly made up of a foreign population that consequently the increase of the Baptist church must be slow.
3. More laymen who seriously get into the job of kingdom business.

A. LE GRAND.

Milwaukee.

Minnesota

THE most significant event of the year was the law recently enacted by the legislature of Minnesota permitting the public school authorities to dismiss the pupils to receive religious instruction in the churches for a period not to exceed three hours a week.

Other visible activities: Jackson Hall and the re-building of First Baptist Church, Minneapolis; new or enlarged houses of worship at Littlefork, Laporte, Eveleth, Truman and Bethel Church, Minneapolis; land and considerable money secured for the Northwestern Baptist Hospital to be erected in the Twin Cities; new churches organized at Nary, Isanti, Minneapolis; several dead fields revived; increased number of baptisms; enlarged offerings; more young people in educational institutions; hundreds of University of Minnesota students influenced through University Church, Minneapolis; student chaplain appointed at Carleton College; thousands comforted at Rochester through the ministry of the hospital worker; many "bigger and better Sunday schools"; an unusually fine state convention meeting; growing city union work in St. Paul and Minneapolis; young people's work and women's work advancing.

Full participation in an effort to close the New World Movement period with honor, and to cooperate whole-heartedly in the future denominational program; to complete the state mission projects already begun; to prevent retrenchment in the regular missionary work of the convention; to strengthen and encourage weak churches in town and country; to augment our City Union efforts; to begin new work on needy fields; and to secure more readers for our denominational papers—these are some of our aims for the new year.

Our chief needs: Vision to see "Acres of Diamonds" in Minnesota, as a missionary field, Baptist esprit de corps that shall bring forth a new passion for souls, greater consecration, larger giving, more determined effort, and greater unity in our state-wide missionary endeavor. More spiritual craftsmen—workers for God, lay members, pastors and convention workers who know how to win new disciples, strengthen discouraged churches and, if need be, willing to suffer with Christ for the cause in Minnesota.

E. H. RASMUSSEN.

Minneapolis.

North Dakota

DURING the past year four building projects have been brought to completion. Three of these are church buildings and the fourth is a new parsonage. One long-standing church mortgage has been paid off during the year. In spite of the financial stringency our churches have been able to maintain their regular services and to meet all their obligations. Our state convention was of unusual interest this year, being the fortieth anniversary. An oil portrait of Elijah Terry, the first Baptist and the first Protestant missionary in Dakota territory, has been secured by our convention to be presented to the Roger William's National Memorial Church at Washington, D. C.

Political conditions in North Dakota are steadily improving. There is a spirit of optimism among our citizens. Our Baptist churches are looking forward to a year of evangelism. With but slight exceptions we expect to weather the present depression. We find today a better spirit of cooperation in the work of our denominations than has existed since the beginning of the New World Movement.

We are in great need of more and better church buildings and parsonages. We need several well trained and consecrated young men for our scattered churches. We are searching for the right man to lead our Russian Baptist churches. We are also greatly in need of a state director for our Sunday schools and our young people's work.

FRED E. STOCKTON.

Grand Forks.

South Dakota

THE outstanding achievements for the past year are that there have been a number of new churches organized and the completing of the new gymnasium and heating plant of the Sioux Falls College.

The outlook for the coming year is exceedingly hopeful. We are in the midst of a splendid evangelistic campaign.

Our chief needs are: More pastors of the right type who can be had for the salary that it is possible to pay in many of our fields, and of course there is the eternal problem—the need of more money for the work.

S. P. Shaw.

Sioux Falls.

Iowa

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year are:

1. From a material standpoint, the completion of some splendid new church edifices and the remodeling of others.

2. The fine attendance and increasing interest in Des Moines University.

3. The excellent unity within the state

4. One of the best state conventions in our history.

5. The greatest Bible and missionary conference ever held within the state.

What is the outlook for 1924? One might answer as "Bright as the promises of God," as one of old put it. However, the spirit at our state convention when, by unanimous vote, the future denominational program was adopted, gives a bright outlook for 1924.

What are our chief needs? 1. More devotion. 2. More hard work. 3. More money.

G. P. Mitchell.

Des Moines.

Kansas

SEVEN achievements of the year: 1. The largest number of baptisms reported in any year of our history. 2. Additions to churches through missionary labors 9 per cent greater than in any preceding year. 3. The best assembly we have yet had. 4. Start on new buildings of the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary. 5. Record-breaking attendance at Ottawa University. 6. Ratification of future denominational program with appointment of commission on state budget. 7. Twenty-eight helpful Bible and missionary conferences.

The outlook for 1924 is encouraging. It ought to be a year of further progress. Doubtless our greatest needs are along the lines of consecration, stewardship and the spiritual life. We need wisdom in shaping our program for the future and increased cooperation in carrying it into effect.

J. T. Crawford.

Topeka.

Nebraska

OUTSTANDING achievements of Nebraska Baptists during 1923 are the election of state secretary F. W. Ainslie, and the inauguration of a balanced program which bids fair to be continuous and permanent.

Some of the elements of this balanced program are a renewed emphasis on evangelism, resulting in a large number of baptisms; a systematic development of stewardship among the churches. Another element is the continued cooperation with the program of Christian education represented by the increased enrolment and splendid morale of Grand Island College.

Perhaps the most outstanding achievement of all is the provision made to give more attention to the needs of pastorless churches and churches calling for missionary aid, especially in our rural fields. This has been made possible by securing another "convention pastor" to work more usually in the eastern part of the state while the other convention pastor does his work in the western part. To this must be added the willingness of our pastors, laymen and college teachers to give their service under the direction of these convention pastors and the state secretary.

Religious education through our young people's societies, our churches and Sunday schools has made steady progress. The outstanding items in this field are our successful and enthusiastic summer assembly held at Grand Island College and the larger number of successful vacation Bible schools held last summer.

In the field of promotion the women must be accorded praise for the best work—viz., the enthusiastic and spiritual Loyalty luncheons with their series of "echoes," which have not yet ceased their wholesome influence.

The laymen are showing more signs of vitality in a projected series of regional banquets bringing "the challenge of the present hour" to Nebraska Baptist laymen.

In local church work the most striking results are the completion or near completion of a large number of church building projects in Omaha. Among these should be mentioned Calvary with its new $130,000 plant; Immanuel with its soon to be dedicated spacious and convenient working plant; Olivet with its splendid first unit of an absolutely necessary new building; Benson with the miracle accomplished of a dignified and suitable house of worship in fulfillment of the deferred dream of seventy years; while First projects a new $100,000 Sunday-school equipment and the Mission Church at Park Side break ground for

Home Mission Activities

Department of Education of the Home Mission Society

DURING the year 1923 the outstanding achievements of this department were the following: The most important of all was the success in maintaining the standards and the development of our schools in the face of reduction of budget appropriations, required of us as well as of all our national societies. Significant also is the recognition of Shaw University as an A class college, by the department of education of North Carolina. Other colleges made real progress toward that rating. Morehouse College had already received it. A great step in advance is initiated at both Shaw University and Benedict College by the appropriation of $90,000 to each school for a science and recitation hall, and a gift of $7500 for a practice school at Benedict. Important is the beginning of work in Haiti, our dark neighboring republic, allocated to the Baptists several years ago, but neglected till now when a designated gift of $5000 and another gift of $1000 has enabled us to send there a general missionary, Rev. A. Groves Wood, and to assist in starting a small school for the training of Christian workers. A revival in Bacone —our Indian school—and in Cristo—our Cuban school—led to a profession of faith on the part of practically every student in attendance. The outlook for 1924 promises an overcrowded attendance in all our school, better instruction and higher standards. The chief and imperative needs are:

1. A dormitory for our International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J., in order to accommodate our growing attendance of Russians, Hungarians, Poles, Slovaks, and Roumanians, and the needed new Jugo Slavonian department.

2. Homes for teachers in our southern schools, in order to secure and hold the best teachers.

3. Equipment in several schools, to enable them to meet the standards of a first class college.

4. A dormitory at Cristo, Cuba, to give decent living rooms to the students flocking in increasing numbers to the school.

5. Two educated, consecrated young men to take charge of new training schools in Nicaragua and Salvador, Central America.

New York City George Rice Hovey.

The Department of Evangelism

THE department of evangelism persists in the conviction that the local church is the normal and therefore should be the most efficient agency in the work of soul winning. As directly stimulating this phase of evangelism, thirty-five conferences of a practical and inspirational character have been held in twenty states, attended by upwards of 1700 pastors. In addition, the department has participated in holding five interdenominational conferences reaching some 1200 pastors. Series of lectures and inspirational addresses have been delivered to groups of students in five colleges and theological seminaries, and courses of study have been conducted in five summer assemblies. Emphasis during the year has been laid upon city-wide and county-wide simultaneous evangelism, state-wide inter-pastoral cooperative evangelism, and lay evangelism in the local church. Twenty evangelists are at work in twenty-four states, striving to realize our aim that there shall be no church within the bounds of the state which does not attempt some specific program of soul winning.

Cleveland H. F. Stilwell.

The Department of Architecture

THE department of architecture is assisting many churches in the solving of their building problems. It advises committees how to plan for worship, for evangelism, for religious education and for social work. It furnishes information as to what is being done and advocated in these matters by ministers and religious educators.

The department is not only skilled in church architecture, but as a part of the church itself, studies each problem from the viewpoint of the church. Stock plans are not furnished. The department studies with the church building committees their situation and needs and prepares sketch plans at one-sixteenth inch scale.

These problems which arise at the very beginning are of prime importance. An initial mistake may bring a train of errors, which are impossible to overcome subsequently.

A charge of 1 per cent of the proposed cost of the project has been established for the special study plans, but this need involve no extra cost because the church can arrange with the operating architect, when being chosen, to deduct this 1 per cent from his usual fee, as the architect is saved the expense of making this study.

Conferences at the department's office are without charge. For conferences held at a distance, there is a charge of $25 plus trip expenses. Where several churches are visited on one trip, the expenses are prorated. When the department is engaged to study the project the $25 paid for the conference is credited as a part payment on the 1 per cent charge.

The department operates without financial profit to itself. All connected with the department are on salary and receive no other remuneration resulting from the work done. The department is not supported by money from the home mission funds raised by the churches.

New York City.

GEORGE E. MERRILL.

Work Among the Chinese in America

WORK among the Chinese has at all points continued to progress and give much cause for encouragement and thankfulness.

I consider the outstanding achievements to be as follows:

1. The appointment of Mr. C. Y. Hui, a well-trained and well-equipped young Chinese, to take charge of the work along the Sacramento Valley, and to assist the writer in other ways deemed advisable.

2. The opening of the Chung Mei Home for Chinese boys in Berkeley, Calif. By no means the smallest part of this achievement was the securing of $3000 from the Chinese themselves for the equipment of the home.

3. The completion and the publishing of the book "The Ways of Ah Sin." This has been perhaps the most spectacular of the accomplishments owing to the very violent reaction which it created among the Chinese of the underworld. The book is an expose of the nefarious practices of criminal organizations existing among the Chinese in America. Its publication roused the forces of the Chinese underworld to white heat. Divers threats to destroy life and property and an attempt to boycott the Baptist schools and churches followed, but the work still goes on; and the fight goes on; and will continue until Ah Sin is routed or some of us pass on.

CHARLES R. SHEPHERD.

Baptist Mexican Missions in the Southwest

IN 1923 the outstanding achievements in Baptist work among the Mexicans of the Southwest have been:

1. New buildings at Phoenix, Ariz., San Diego, Lorena Heights, Los Angeles, enlargement at Maravilla Park in Los Angeles, purchase and renovation of building at Pueblo, Colo., initiation of new building projects at Glendale, Ariz., and Kansas City, Kan.

2. Organization of Mexican Baptist church at Fresno. Increase of over 100 per cent in amount contributed by Mexicans for self support. Ordination of three pastors. Formation of Mexican Baptist Association of Southern California, and of a Mexican Baptist Young People's Union of Southern California.

3. Increase in number of students at the Spanish-American Seminary in Los Angeles and strengthening of the faculty.

4. Extension of Mexican missions eastwards as far as Indiana Harbor, and south into Lower California.

The outlook for 1924 is exceedingly promising if the work can be adequately financed, for the Mexicans in the United States are more ready than ever before to listen to and accept the gospel of Christ in its purity. Our Mexican Baptists are coming into a self-consciousness and expressing a missionary urge that augur splendid things for the future.

The chief needs are:

1. Better equipment for about half the fields, including a Christian center building for Tucson and Fords for five Mexican pastors.

2. A Spanish-speaking evangelist to give full time to special evangelistic meetings with our Mexican churches and missions.

3. Funds for new work in open Mexican colonies such as Topeka, Kans., Nogales, Ariz., Visalia, Calif.

Pacific Coast East Indians

THE work of the Home Mission Society among the East Indians on the Pacific Coast, though in its infancy, has the potentiality of mighty growth and significance. It is a unique work, an important work, a difficult work and a work of far-reaching influence and outlook. It is a bridgework between California and Calcutta. Thus far the estimate of our work is to be determined not in figures but in feelings and not in dollars but in deeds.

The first achievement regarding our work this year is accomplishing the coast-wide confidence and friendship of almost the entire Hindu population, thus securing a foothold for a constructive work. The second achievement may be stated as a coast-wide Christian interest, sympathy and responsibility aroused for this long needed and neglected work among the Hindus.

The outlook for our work for next year is promising and hopeful, and we may achieve some tangible results if the Christian people will do their part in supporting the work as they have of recent times.

Our chief needs are not material but spiritual. Above all we need earnest Christian prayers, support and continued cooperation of Christian California for our work. The acid test for the Christian religion is on. Either live up or give up.

Indian Work of the N. B. C.

THE achievements of the year are: Maintaining a steady growth in numbers, increase in Christian life and spiritual power, development of workers and the rebuilding of the burned community house at the First Hopi Mesa. This is once more in full operation.

During the year Rev. L. I. Thayer, long among the Navajos, has been transferred to Monos, taking the place of Rev. J. G. Brendel who has retired (only temporarily, we trust) because of ill health.

Mr. B. S. Stokely, has taken the Navajo work. Rev. C. A. Bentley reinforced our staff at Crow Agency, Montana. On the whole we never had a stronger force of men and women than now.

The outlook was never better than now.

Our needs are God-called men and women and the money to support and equip them for their work. In some places we have been doing only enough to prevent some one else, perhaps, from doing more. This simply because we have lacked equipment to make their work count for the most. There are right now eight new places demanding Baptist missionaries. We cannot enter these fields at present because of a lack of suitable workers and sufficient money. These are all fields which are providentially laid at our doors.

Lesson Notes for February 3

WHAT ISRAEL LEARNED AT SINAI

Exodus 19:1-24, 8; Lev. 19; Deut. 4:32-40
Golden Text: Deut. 6:5

By John A. Earl

All life is a schooling, but there are certain times when the pupils take a special course and get the benefit of an intensified process of education. Israel at Sinai took what is called in university language "a seminar." What did they learn? They learned that God is the speaking God, the selecting God, the sole God.

The Speaking God

"Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?" This recalls the circumstances of the giving of the law at Sinai. One must read Exodus 19:1-24, 8 to get the atmosphere of it. The outstanding fact is that the God of the Hebrews is a speaking God. All nature is vocal with his utterances and all history is but the echo of his voice. But in a very special sense God spoke to the fathers through the prophets in divers portions and in divers manners and at sundry times. The Bible is the record of the voice of God which when placed upon a sensitized heart in tune with his loving purpose will be reproduced as clearly as the voice of a singer over the radio. Without the sensitized heart moving in obedience to the will of the Father the Bible is as unresponsive and silent as a record apart from the talking machine. One therefore does not have to depend upon logic to prove that God has spoken in the past to Abraham, Moses and the prophets. A man may believe all that and yet never hear or know the voice of God for himself. If God has not spoken to us through the scriptures and providence and experience and especially through his Son, Jesus Christ, then so far as we are concerned he has not spoken at all. The tragedy, however, is that God speaks but man is deaf to his voice. The glory of the Hebrew religion registered in the Old Testament is that it incarnated the speaking God in erring human beings. The glory of the Christian religion is that it incarnates the speaking God in Jesus Christ who is the perfect and incomparable Son of God and Son of man.

The Selecting God

"Hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation?" etc. No philosophy of history is complete which ignores the specific place of the Jew in the midst of the nations that have passed away. No nation in all the world has so profoundly influenced the trend of history as did Israel. Some one has called the Jew "the miracle of history." Stamped with a physiognomy which identifies him in Siberia as well as in Spain, and marked with a genius for trade which makes him the envy of Gentiles and gifted with high spiritual faculties which are too often prostituted to the love of money, the Jew is unique among the races. The Hebrews are an outstanding illustration of lost opportunity. They were chosen by the selecting God for a high and holy destiny. They were the original pilgrim fathers of the world selected to produce the Messiah who would found a spiritual kingdom which was to sanctify all races with the glory of God and the goodwill of men. But they did not recognize their Messiah when he appeared and they put him to death. "They did not know the day of their visitation," and shortly after murdering their Messiah Jerusalem was destroyed, national integrity broken up, and the people scattered to the four winds of heaven. We can appreciate in some degree what has happened by their fall as Paul endeavors to set forth in Rom. 11; but who can have any adequate picture of what would have happened had they crowned Jesus of Nazareth their spiritual king?

The Sole God

"Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God, there is none else beside him." It is difficult for us to sense the necessity for such emphasis. Polytheism is so far from our thoughts that some of us have to stop and look for the word in the dictionary to see what it means. But the Hebrews, just out of a land of many gods and saturated with the fog of idolatry, had to have one of their initial lessons in the primer of revealed truth. And that lessons was fundamental, viz., "The Lord he is God in heaven above and upon the earth beneath: there is none else." But it took nearly a thousand years to teach them that lesson, and only after they had passed through the fire was the folly and wickedness of paganism burned out of them. Space will not permit expansion of the thought of the sole God as the God of love and the God of law. "There's a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea; there's a kindness in his justice which is more than liberty."

Three Roads That Need Paving

By Eugene L. Exman

In the main there are three organizations through which the church may minister to the child, the week-day church school, the daily vacation school, and the Sunday school or church school.

One of the most encouraging developments has been the rise in so many quarters of the week-day church school. The fact that we have for so long heralded the belief in the separation of the church and the state, coupled with that of just what religious truths should be taught in public schools, with children from so many divergent faiths in attendance, has made the introduction of religious training into the schools an exceedingly difficult one. The solution generally worked out allows the child to go to the church of his choice for two or three class periods a week and receive religious instruction from trained teachers whose salary and program has been worked out by the churches. It will certainly be a matter of only a few years until the majority of American school children will be receiving training in Christian citizenship on an equal basis with their other school work.

The daily vacation Bible school is also receiving widespread acceptance. Last summer there were, according to conservative estimates, 7000 such vacation schools conducted throughout the United States. With its emphasis on the spiritual, mental, physical and social development, by its program of worship, Bible stories and verse memorization, and expressional activities of craft work and dramatization, the D. V. B. S. has proved its worth and has come to stay.

The oldest form of religious education for children, the church school, is in many ways the least promising of any of the three forms, because many of its desirable features cannot be developed as a result of the whole Sunday church organization. Unfortunately many of our church buildings have been erected with little thought as to the religious education of the children and young people. Furthermore, the church worship period has been worked out for the adult and few are the children who can find anything of value in it. Many churches are obviating this difficulty by conducting the first part of the worship period with the thought of ministering to the child; others are conducting a junior church altogether separate from the adult church. A good plan for a children's church school of an hour and a half has been worked out to consist of three periods: the first half hour to be given over to a supervised study of a lesson, with assigned work, etc., the second half hour to be held in the church auditorium with a worship period participated in by the children, and the third half hour to be turned over to a recitation of the lesson studied in the first half hour, with some dramatization or other forms of expressional activity.

We are in a period of reshaping of our thought and program in regard to training the child for the Christian life; we will no doubt develop along a few unnecessary tangents, but with a consecrated and educated leadership and a normal teaching period, and a program

When Caste Flew Out of the Doorway

By Margaret T. Applegarth

YOU would not have supposed that caste could ever fly out of that proud doorway, for the Haughty Brahman Father rarely even let his disdainful eyes rest on a man of another caste, and the equally haughty sons stalked through the streets sublimely conscious that they, and they alone, were well beloved of heaven. Did not the holy writing say this, "When the great god Brahma created all that was created, from his head sprang forth the caste of Brahmans? It is they alone who are great and worthy therefore to be worshiped by the lesser castes of men, who sprang only from the feet and hands of Brahma," and so forth and so on. I may not have quoted it exactly, but the facts are all verbatim!

The Brahman wore a sacred cord around his body, the poita; no outcaste man dared walk on Brahman streets; no Brahman ever went into the outcaste palem. Between the two there was a great gulf fixed. And Fingiah was an outcaste!

He had the unspeakable task of carting away the carcasses of dead animals who had died of disease. No caste man would touch them—his religion forbade him. But it was Fingiah's task to touch them, carting them away, stripping off the hide, and eventually he even ate the awful flesh. Indeed, I really do not know how he and other outcastes could have lived without carcasses to provide a week of meals, but of course on diet like this there was a day when illness came to the family of Fingiah—and where yesterday fifteen had picked those awful bones, today only one was living. So sudden and swift are India's epidemics.

It was then that one of those perpetually hurried men whom we have sent to India stepped into this tale and doctored Fingiah, saving his life, so that when he was well he cleansed his vile hut and whitewashed it indoors and out. Fingiah also cleansed his soul before God, and in doing so lost his livelihood. For can a Christian feed on carrion?—on animals that have died of disease? The Hurried Man said "No!" Fingiah sighed; the ways of religion were difficult for an ignorant outcaste to follow, so the Hurried Man sent him to school. And in that school Fingiah found his talent—he could sing. So they trained him in all the wisdom of an evangelist and sent him out to sing the Gospels by heart. It was very lovely to hear him; all of Luke's story of Bethlehem, for instance, intoned as only Fingiah could do it—shepherds and manger and wise men and all. You listened entranced.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of The Baptist.

So Fingiah grew to have a mighty reputation in the outcaste palem, and every year there came to be new whitewashed huts about his hut and out of dull, sodden, listless eyes came shining a new character in Christ.

But of all this the Haughty Brahman knew nothing and cared less. Secure in his Brahman street he lived his narrow Brahman life. Within his gloomy zenana lived his little Brahman wife, as forlorn and as pretty a creature as you could find in all India, festooned with pearls as Christmas trees are looped with strings of popcorn, and scented with all the odors of Araby. But freedom to walk on the street and mingle with human beings is a jewel and a fragrance more enticing, and the little wife was too high caste to put even her little nose outdoors from one year's end to another. So she, too, knew nothing of Fingiah. If she ever thought of outcastes at all it was with supreme loathing—horrible creatures that must feed on decayed meat! Ugh! "Untouchables" whom the gods detested.

Now as a matter-of-fact, the Haughty Brahman really should have known about Fingiah and his neighbors, for the British government had appointed him as head offical of that town. It was really a responsible position and among other things meant that if epidemics ever raged, he should stop their raging to the best of his official ability. Yet an epidemic had raged, Fingiah's entire family and scores of his neighbors had been wiped out in a week, but the Haughty Brahman never knew it. How should he, when it would have risked his position in the eyes of his gods to have taken one step inside an outcaste palem? The opinion of any Hurried Man on this frightful official superiority would hardly bear printing!

Men cringed when the Brahman stalked by, and he liked their cringing. But babies are democratic little souls, even Brahman babies; and one horrible day the Pride of that Brahman's zenana found life indoors rather stupid and toddled serenely away! Woe to the ayah supposed to be nursing him! Woe to the gateman asleep at the gate! For the first thing any one knew the baby had discovered the Brahman well—a deep, dark, mysterious hole to two-year-old eyes—so the baby proceeded to investigate wells from the bottom. It was not quite what he fancied to topple off into space, so there was an agonized yell which awoke the guardian of the gate and brought the old brown ayah pattering to the well curb.

"Alas! alas! how shall we get him out?" she wailed.

How indeed! For the gateman was stupid from sleep, the ayah was feeble from age, and the household all lost their heads from sheer fright at what the master would say. So there they stood, wringing their foolish hands and screaming at the top of their foolish voices.

The Brahman's house stood at the end of the Brahman street; and Fingiah passed by. Never in all his life had he set foot on an inch of Brahman soil, but there was such terror in those screams that he forgot his surroundings and jumped to the rescue.

"Let down a rope to me!" he called from the bottom of the well. Oh yes, a rope. A rope. Nobody had thought of such a sensible thing—they rushed off in a dozen directions to find one—and Fingiah held a Brahman baby in his arms, and waited. Then came the rope. Then safety.

But much as you may be admiring him, Fingiah had done the wrong thing! How dared he step on Brahman soil? How dared he let even his shadow fall on Brahman drinking water? How dared he plunge bodily into that water, and touch—yes, touch—a precious Brahman baby, he, a vile "untouchable?" The well, of course, was considered polluted forever; no Brahman could ever drink from it again and hope to gain Nirvana. But how to purify the baby from such a contaminating touch? Well, it was a terrible problem.

The father declared by all the gods of India that he would vastly rather have his son dead at the bottom of the well than sullied by this loathesome man Fingiah; in his capacity as head Brahman official he ordered Fingiah to be flogged—flogged for saving a baby! But fortunately Fingiah was off on a singing evangelistic tour, miles distant, and did not dream of the punishment in store for him, which only green scum and white pills prevented from occuring later.

For the green scum had been floating on the Brahman's well water until the baby, in yelling, had swallowed several pints of it. Even Brahman scum is dangerous! And the baby fell ill. Not all the prayers to wooden idols, not all the handsome gifts laid on their wooden knees could cure a baby sick with vile green scum; so, as a last resort, the Brahman called the missionary doctor. And even at that late date he saved the baby's life; then, like an inoculation to prick the foolish adult haughtiness, the doctor kept saying solemnly—"How fortunate Fingiah was at hand! For here is your baby as good as new, all due to Fingiah! Had the Brahman official ever noticed Fingiah's patch of the outcaste palem?"

"Naturally not," said that individual indifferently.

So the Hurried Man talked for an hour of Fingiah—how wonderfully he sang the Gospels; what a power he was becoming in the district; how beloved of heaven he was. And the inoculation worked eventually, for the order for the flogging was withdrawn and one morning the official actually cast an interested eye on Fingiah's corner of the outcaste palem. Its cleanliness and order were surprising.

Then one year passed. Then two—three—five—six—eight. And while Fingiah still was singing the Lord's life, the Brahman baby grew into a Brahman school boy, studying in a mission school, if you please (because, just then, the mission was the best in town). And every day when they sent him home he had a new inoculation of Christianity to offset the old prejudices. He told these new ideas to his mother, still cooped in her zenana, more secluded and weary than ever. "I should like to have one of those Bible women come here," she said. So one came. The little lady listened. The servants listened. It was all very new and very interesting. The Bible woman was made welcome whenever she could come. The wife of the missionary also came.

But it was slow! You remember how Kipling once wrote:

"An epitaph drear
'A fool lies here
Who tried to hustle the East.'"

Another year passed, then another. But one morning the Brahman offcial fingered the cord of his sacred poita thoughtfully and sent for Fingiah. Fingiah walked calmly down Brahman streets, he entered Brahman doorways and sat in Brahman rooms. He talked. He answered all the questions, and before he left he prayed for the soul of a Brahman official, while the official said: "Oh God, forgive me."

So caste flew out of the doorway. The Brahman neighbors in scandalized righteousness refused to speak or talk to the new Christian. "We have seen this coming on for ten slow years," they said, and in utter rage they threw stones at the Christian as he walked down the street, they put poison in his well, and broken glass in his courtyard. No man would sell him food to eat, and he would have been in a sorry state if it had not been for the Hurried Man who found him a house in the Christian palem, where caste never darkened the doorways and all men were struggling toward a common goal, a goal about which Fingiah preached on Sundays in the little whitewashed chapel. For over in India, converts such as he are daily proving to the world the matchless truth of the quaint Bible verdict:

"For ye see your calling, brethren, how not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called;

But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty;

And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are!

That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

It is only for this that a Brahman dares let caste fly out of his doorway!

A New Game of "Authors"

By Peggy

THE other evening when Uncletim was here for supper we said it was our turn to have him all to ourselves afterwards, for he is very popular and either mother or father take him away from us while they talk endlessly about all sorts of grown-up things. Mother said that it really was our turn, and she would give him up to us. But she said it with such a sigh that Timothy begged to let her sit near by and just look at Uncletim all she wanted to! That seemed agreeable to all of us, for Bill thinks the sun rises and sets in mother, and so do I! But no sooner had we let mother in, than poor father got out his handkerchief looking like the most doleful little boy you ever saw. It melted dear Timothy to tears to see him: "We must have papa!" he cried, "We must have our poor dear papa!"

"All right," said Bill; "but the talking 's to belong to us."

"That's fair enough," said Uncletim with a beautiful twinkle in his blue eye, "but what are you going to talk to me about?"

Bill hemmed and hawed.

I hemmed and hawed.

Timothy made little clucking sounds in his throat.

For none of us could think of topics of conversation; yet there sat dear mother and father with sealed lips, but their eyes brimful of fun.

Finally Uncletim said that this suspense was getting on his nerves, and would we please do something quick?

Bill groaned: "There's too much audience to feel at home with you, that's what the matter. Let's play something. Let's play authors."

But we hunted high and low for our pack without finding them; so then Uncletim came to the rescue.

"I know a new game of Authors," he announced. "I think it would be very merciful of you to let our dear quiet 'audience' play, too."

"All right," Bill agreed.

Father gave a regular war-whoop: "Three cheers for my elder son! You're a fine laddie."

So then all was merry in the Hathaway family for over two hours; even Timothy tried to play, with mother's help, and we certainly laughed a lot.

This is the way we played it, for maybe you would like to try, too, some day. We had three bowls. We each had three slips of paper and a pencil. On our first slip of paper we were each to write the name of an author—Shakespeare, Dickens, Milton, Bunyan, Louise Alcott—any author we wanted to put down. These authors' names were then placed in the first bowl. Next, we wrote the title of a book on our second slip of paper—"Macbeth," "Vanity Fair," "Freckles," "Penrod." These slips were put in the second bowl. On our third slip of paper we wrote a famous character from some favorite story of ours, such as "The Hatter," "The Wizard" (of Oz), "Hans" (from Hans Brinker)," "Oliver" (from Oliver Twist). These were all put in the third bowl.

The game now was to draw one slip of paper from each bowl, and then write out a little story about the character from the book by the author whom we had drawn. How we all did laugh! For every one of us had drawn impossible combinations, such as mother's, for instance—she had "Sara Crewe" by Shakespeare, the leading character of which is Ivanhoe! But she made up a comical little plot, which was the cleverest thing you ever heard. I am so sorry she tore hers up for I would like to copy it here for you to read. I saved mine; it wasn't very good, but it will show you what fun it is to play this game.

My book was "The Dictionary," my author was Kipling, my chief character was the Mad March Hare. Did you ever see a sillier combination? This is what I wrote about it:

"One of the most interesting books ever written by Kipling is called 'The Dictionary,' a favorite with young and old alike because they are sure to find in it whatever they are looking for. The hero of the book is the Mad March Hare, a sad little fellow who became mad because he found that the Dictionary did not stick to the facts about him: one minute it said that March was a month in the early spring, named from the Roman's god of war, Mars; and the next minute it said that march was the act of walking in step with others, such as soldiers, pilgrims, etc. 'Which kind of a march am I?' cried our poor young hero, who became further maddened when he found two ways of spelling his name. One way he meant a variety of rabbit, and another way he meant the soft growth on the heads of human beings and animals. 'I am not a soft growth!' squealed the hero, mad through and through. 'No,' said Mr. Kipling severely, 'you are a hard subject for an author like me to use. I shall take you out of the dictionary and put you in my 'Jungle Book.' And they all lived happily ever after."

Topics for February 3

IN HIS STEPS: 2. HOW AND WHAT JESUS TAUGHT

Matthew 5:1-12; 11:3; 13:3.

By G. A. Sheets

I. How Jesus Taught

1. "He spoke many things unto them in parables." Matt. 13:3.

It has been said that he is the best teacher who can turn an ear into an eye. The ability to do this was singularly true of Jesus. Whether he spoke to individuals or to multitudes, so vivid was his presentation of the truth, that he readily secured their attention and absorbing interest. He made men feel the truth by making them see it. One-third of all his preserved sayings are in parables. The word "parable" means a putting of one thing beside another. Thus Jesus put the unknown thing, that he wanted men to understand, beside a similar thing they already knew. He made the seed and the sparrow, the cloud and the candle, the lamb and the lily, the broom and the bridegroom—all common things and events of humble daily life—preach his gospel and explain the deep things of God. He sometimes put an entire drama into a few sentences. With a few words he could leave on people's minds abiding pictures.

2. Jesus' use of miracle in teaching. Matt. 11:3 (See vs. 4 and 5)

Jesus' reply to the question in verse 3, also has a bearing on his method of teaching. John the Baptist, perplexed in his gloomy dungeon, sent messengers to ask Jesus frankly whether he was the expected Messiah. Jesus understood John's difficulties. He permitted the messengers to watch him in a day of teaching and miraculous works of beneficence. Then he bade them go back and describe to John in the language of the prophet what they had seen and heard. The reply ought to have proved satisfactory. It virtually declared that Jesus was doing precisely what the prophets had said that the Messiah would do. Jesus knew that eyes were better than argument. Many of Jesus' miracles were acted parables. According to John 6, Jesus associated his miraculous feeding of the multitude with his declaration "I am the bread of life." In John 8 and 9 we read how one day in the temple Jesus said, "I am the light of the world." The Jews denied this and when they sought to kill him by casting stones, Jesus, passing out through the gates demonstrated the validity of his claim by restoring the sight of a man born blind.

II. What Jesus Taught. Matt. 5:1-12

The spoken words of Jesus preserved for us, even when counting the repetitions in the four Gospels, amount to less than fifty times the number of words in this article. Yet what Jesus taught in those few words has swayed the world, and has exercised more influence for good than all the other things ever taught put together. Our Bible reference contains but a small fraction of what Jesus taught. But those beautitudes strike the keynote. They are a sort of prelude preparing men's minds to receive and understand the balance. In them Jesus sets forth the doctrine of true happiness. With them he startled his audience by advancing ideas that were wholly opposed to those held by the people of his day. The multitudes thought that happiness meant good times, plenty to eat, healed diseases, fine dwellings, low taxes. Jesus taught that true happiness is something not to be found in, nor dependent upon, the outward state. But true happiness is something within the soul, and is within the reach of all. There is physical happiness in having good food, fine clothes, beautiful dwellings. There is intellectual happiness in the discovery of some great truth or of some wonderful invention. But Jesus reminds us that men also have a spiritual nature and that spiritual happiness is the highest we can have. He calls it blessedness. Jesus taught that what men need to be truly and everlastingly happy is to be right at the core. Blessedness is a spirit, a temper, a life—love for God; for all that is good, noble, unselfish and pure. How can such a new affection be born in the soul? For the answer see John 3:3, 9, 14-17.

Unscrambled

A new stunt always encounters difficulties. So it was with "Meeting Helps" announced in the Jan. 5 Baptist. The "Helps" as they appear in the first two issues of Young People's got scrambled.

The material under "Feb. 3" (in the Jan. 5 issue) is in reality the material for Feb. 10, and the material under "Feb. 10" (Jan. 12 issue) is in reality the material for Feb. 3. In other words you will find the advance material for "Feb. 3" in the Jan. 12 issue of Young People's and the advance material for "Feb. 10" in the Jan. 5 issue.

Also, in the Jan. 12 issue, the last three paragraphs under "Jan. 13" are the balance of the "Feb. 10" material.

You don't know what we are talking about? Ask your Bible school secretary for a copy of the senior department paper (published by the Publication Society) and look for "Meeting Helps" on the seventh page.

Nineteen-Twenty-four Dates

Keep your young people from forgetting these "dates" by supplying each with a desk calendar (5¾ by 3⅜) like the accompanying reproduction. They sit well on desk or dresser.

B. Y. P. U. of A. funds for advertising the convention permit an expense for these calendars which, on account of the extent of our territory, enables us to send only two or three to a society. Additional copies, at practically cost price plus postage, may be obtained by any local society, 25 for 60 cents, 50 for $1.05, 100 for $2.00. Address B. Y. P. U. of A. headquarters.

Who's Who in Hoosier Land

By U. M. McGuire

Tidings are beginning to come in from the churches of the first wash of the season's tide of evangelism. S. A. Hayworth's report of more than thirty conversions at Mt. Olive branch in Friendship association started the movement. Right on his heels come Ray Banks and W. E. Houghton from Good Hope in Curry's Prairie association with eighteen; J. L. Sherrill, Unionville, two; George King, Wirt, four; W. H. Harris, Garden, Indianapolis, three; J. R. Quick, River Avenue, Indianapolis, thirty-seven; George King again, Dupont, three; W. H. Harris again, Sandborn, seventeen; J. B. Bair, Second Eel River, one; Clarence Wilhelm, Calvary, Indianapolis, six. At Gas City, Mrs. N. B. Leslie, having held the field for years against both the devil and neuritis (which latter enemy has sometimes had her down but never out), refuses utterly to be left out of consideration when the business of saving souls is on hand, and reports three adults baptized in the ordinary run. But the sensation of the season thus far comes from Madison, where the pastor, Barney E. Antrobus, assisted by Harry Yelton, singer, reports 157 additions to the church actually registered, besides an indefinite number that escaped from the Baptist corral without branding. White Lick association's peculiar campaign has opened in full force. Conversions with J. G. Butler at Plainfield already number more than for the whole association last year. J. M. Cauldwell opened up at New Winchester, Jan. 13; Greencastle, with B. E. Antrobus assisting the pastor, Jan. 13; Bethel, S. A. Hayworth will begin Jan. 27; Coatesville, E. J. Allen of Paoli, Jan. 27; Amo, C. P. Greenfield of Indianapolis, Feb. 17. Definite dates have not been announced for the other churches in the association. Several churches that held series of meetings in the early autumn without visible results are not satisfied, and they are planning to try again.

Dedications have been celebrated by two of our best churches: Newcastle, where J. P. Kinnett rejoices in a beautiful temple, and Emerson Avenue, Indianapolis, where Paul Judson Morris and his educational corps are now housed in the completed Sunday-school unit of their projected building.

General Director John Y. Aitchison met the members of the executive committee of the Indiana Baptist Convention, also a number of other pastors and workers at the Baptist state offices, Wednesday, Jan. 2, for a conference about ways and means for winding up the New World Movement. The spirit of the conference was optimistic and flawless. Indiana proposes to back Doctor Aitchison and the movement to the end, and to collect its full subscription pledged, and prays that God will so "dispose."

In connection with the Student Volunteers' Convention in Indianapolis, the state office force held a reception for the Baptists in attendance. Liberal arrangements were made for a possible attendance of fifty persons, which is about the number the state offices have a comfortable capacity for. When the hour came, came also Baptist Student Volunteers, fifty, seventy-five, a hundred, two, three hundred. They packed the offices, they filled every corner. They piled over one another—American, Chinese, Japanese, African, Indian, helter skelter, like bees in a hive in May. Feed them? Seat them? Entertain them? Well, hardly. Best let them gang their own gait, mix as they would, and get acquainted, which they did galore and nappily.

New York City Letter

By Henry G. Weston Smith

Dr. Charles H. Sears is back again at the helm of the New York Baptist City Mission Society. He "rested" while in Europe and England by spending the greater part of his six months' leave of absence studying the native home life of the various racial groups to which the City Mission Society is ministering. It was characteristic of him that he should arrive in the city early in the morning and spend the entire first day on shore at work with the administrative and field activities committees of the General Board.

Doctor Sears had seen the organization of the London City Mission Society while abroad and his conclusion was that our whole organization does not suffer in comparison. This was rewarding. But he continued, after a slight pause, by saying: "There are a number of matters, however, that I wish to suggest at our next meeting, in which I think we can learn to do our work somewhat better." This capacity for learning "to do our work somewhat better" has always hovered about the desk at which the executive secretary has labored.

The Central Baptist Church is deeply concerned by the resignation of Dr. Frank M. Goodchild, after a pastorate in this important church extending over twenty-eight years. The resignation was presented by letter to the corporate meeting held in the church Dec. 17 and was to take effect Dec. 31. Although his physical condition, after a six months' leave of absence spent largely in the quiet of southern France, is somewhat hopeful, his physicians state that it would be unwise for him to resume the strenuous duties of his city pastorate. Under the circumstances the church accepted with regret Doctor Goodchild's resignation and at the same meeting voted a gift of $7500. The intention of the church in making this gift was that it should be interpreted as a continuance of his salary for the period of a year and a half. It was his hope until the recent break in his health to have completed a thirty-year pastorate with the church. He lacks eighteen months of this at the time that his resignation is effective.

Wednesday, Jan. 2, Doctor and Mrs Goodchild arrived in New York from France, and on Sunday morning, Jan. 6, he preached his farewell sermon. For one who has led a people so long and effectively to take leave under such circumstances could not help arousing many rather tender sentiments; yet there was much thanksgiving that health is to an extent spared and that long years of effective service may still reach out ahead of this able and beloved pastor. Mrs. Goodchild was to undergo an operation soon after their return to New York, although her condition was not believed to be serious.

Rev. John H. Strong, son of the well known Dr Augustus H. Strong and an instructor in the Biblical Seminary of this city, is supplying the pulpit of Central Baptist Church for the present.

At the Park Avenue Baptist Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 8, an important all-day conference with the pastors and local church leaders was held under the auspices of the Metropolitan Board of Promotion. Dr. F. A. Agar, Dr. Charles H. Sears and others furnished the personal leadership. The aim of the conference was to study the problems involved in the work of completing the New World Movement and to discover what, from the angle of the pastors and local church leaders, will be the best methods of advancing the new plans for 1924-1925. This was the first of a series of similar conferences to be held in the area. The attendance of the pastors and workers was excellent and the interest vital. The angle of approach seemed really to appeal to those present and there is accordingly a promise of a better understanding of the work to be done. The confcrence for the churches of the Long Island Association was held in the Baptist Temple in Brooklyn on Jan. 11.

The Metropolitan Board of Promotion is conducting an interesting and helpful piece of work in the one-day rallies or local church conferences following up the Bible and missionary conferences. At the First Church of Tarrytown, on Sunday, Jan. 6, the ninth of these one-day rallies was held. The plan in each case has been to bring in a team of three or four missionaries or workers, straight from the field if possible, and use them in every available meeting during the day. It is a conviction of Dr. Edward C. Kunkle, the director of promotion for the metropolitan board, that one of the greatest needs in the present situation is simply an increase of information regarding the work and personal devotion of our missionaries. The team of workers for the Tarrytown rally was made up of Rev. Douglas G. Haring of Japan, Miss Ina Burton, organization secretary of the W. A. B. H. M. S., and Dr. Kunkle himself. Meetings have already been held in the Porchester First Baptist, Elmhurst First Baptist, Nepperhan Avenue of Yonkers, Creston Avenue (with the Tremont Avenue, the Alexander Avenue and the Ascension cooperating), the Lefferts Park of Brooklyn, the First New Brighton of Staten Island and the Alexander Avenue in the Bronx. Others are scheduled and being held each week.

Christmas at the Baptist Home for the Aged is always a pretty occasion. There are seventy-six in the family this year. Under each plate at the Christmas dinner was to be found a small gift in money from the home churches. Mrs. Theodore C. Wood is the president of the Baptist Home Society and is really leading on in the work in an altogether pleasing way. It is no small work to make such a home all that it should be. The means provided are never too plentiful; and many of those who are spending their latter years here together are very choice and worthy spirits. The fair which is to come in April will offer an excellent opportunity for New York Baptists who have not visited the home to do so.

Probably it is no longer news, but attention should be called to the fact that an excellent article on "New York City as a Mission Field" is to be found in the January Missions. It is written by Rev. Stanley B. Hazzard.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

Perhaps the fame of Milwaukee as a convention city is not so well known as that of some other cities. The following from one of Milwaukee's leading papers indicates something of what it has done this year in entertaining conventions, and of what it expects to do for 1924: "Milwaukee broke all records as a convention city during 1923 when it entertained 410,000 convention guests, in 202 major meetings and 160 minor assemblies.

"The total of registered guests to the city was 260,000, and guests who did not register raised this total 150,000.

"The largest convention was the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, with a registered attendance of 43,000.

"The total amount of money expended by these guests is estimated at $10,000,000.

"Advance information on convention plans indicate that 1924 will pass the mark of 1923 by about fifty conventions."

Thus the Northern Baptist Convention will be but one of the 400 conventions to meet in Milwaukee this year.

The Home Mission Council

The second session of the Wisconsin Home Missions Council was held in Milwaukee, Dec. 27. About twenty-five persons were present, representing different field interests of the various denominations working in the state. The major part of the program was a conference on the matter of the denominational organizations in which each speaker showed something of the way in which his denomination carried on its work. An interesting paper was presented by one of the workers of the Congregationalists on the question of "What Are Competing Churches and Over-Churched Communities?" It is hoped that much will come from this organization, which is purely advisory, in the way of promoting a better cooperation among the various denominations in this state in the mission work.

The Sunday Evening Problem

In Wisconsin, as almost everywhere else, the Sunday night service is a serious problem. The average preacher, with the chills racing up and down his spine and with growing impatience with people who vote for a service but who will not attend it, gets through his Sunday night service somehow. Some churches do not have any Sunday night problem, for they do not have any evening service. Some of our Baptist preachers have tried moving pictures, and some have tried other things.

Ingram E. Bill of Beloit is solving it in a down-down church in a small city by a program for the whole season which includes one musical program, one pageant, one motion picture program, and one service of the ordinary type. He reports a crowded house each Sunday night. This is interesting, and perhaps others can profit by it. There are many preachers who believe that they could solve this distressing proposition if they could have an item of money from their churches to help them provide these very things, but so many church boards feel that the church cannot afford these things. It would be interesting if they could learn that if you want money for your church, as in every thing else, you must spend money.

Other Notes

Recently the choir and young people of the Beloit Baptist Church, with I. E. Bill, the pastor, went to Janesville and presented "Elijah, the Uncompromising."

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the state convention, Rev. C. C. Browne, of Dunkerton, Iowa, was elected as the director of religious education and young people's work, to succeed Rev. C. A. Boyd, now of Detroit. He will begin his work about March 1.

The department of evangelism of the state convention has been enlisting the pastors in the matter of evangelism for the coming spring months. Many have agreed to spend a week-end or give two weeks time to neighboring pastors in evangelism. One of the things needed by Wisconsin Baptists is a new emphasis on evangelism. Many of the pastors are willing, but the local churches are indifferent to this great need of the times.

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

"Panting for the Field"

That expression was used long ago to describe the ardor that carries students prematurely into the ministry, and to excuse their abbreviated scholastic preparation. Usually the passion was lopsided—compounded of a modicum of crude religious zeal and a clamorous hunger for matrimony.

But "panting for the field" was not as common then as now. Comparing the age of students entering the ministry with their age fifty years ago is interesting. Bible institutes and correspondence schools holding out the bait of a short course and an early arrival, are lowering the average age of young men seeking ordination. Brevity of pastorates also impresses us. Does the one fact explain the other? Glance down the columns in your last state "annual" that give the "dates of settlement," and note how few of them go back of 1920. Young ministers, especially among the smaller churches, often are men "of family" at the age of college graduates of fifty years ago.

"Panting for the field" is most common among Baptist students. In some cases the reason is emotional. In other cases it is because the Baptist ministry is the easiest to enter when a student is in a hurry. In still others there enters impatience of anything that hinders the passion for immediate ministerial sacrifice. The youth with a yearning that would not brook delay, wishes to take a horizontal position upon the altar of sacrifice. That is the easier position to take. But it is the least impressive or valuable just now, when men of strength and conviction are contending over the faith.

A Good Word from Doctor Mullins

It was said at Toronto at the installation of the new chancellor of MacMaster University. He was describing this last brand of "panting" which he sometimes had to hear. "I reply," he said, "That is a very beautiful devotion to desire to be laid upon the altar, but consider for a moment, brother, whether there will be much on the altar when you are laid on it. . . Your priestly passion is a beautiful thing, but you need the kingly power of education to make it effective."

"Principles and Policy"

Will you let me say that in the editorial statement of the "Principles and Policy" of The Baptist in your issue of Dec. 29, you express the attitude of 80 or 90 per cent of the Northern Baptists? The large body of our people who are neither shrieking nor fighting, who do not know what the shrieking is about, nor who the fighters are, and who care not, ought to have just such service as The Baptist purposes to render. Neither our people nor our ministers have been sufficiently considered. Our ministers everywhere are preaching the gospel of Christ, and when the people hear them, they wonder what all the clatter of the extremists is about, and what is the necessity for it. "To present the facts, and declare the principles, clearly, fraternally, constructively, continuously, without heated controversy, unjust criticism, or ugly recrimination," would be a good rule for the practice of a few extremists who are blatant altogether beyond either their competency or their authority. The bulk of our people feel that they have been without trusted and authoritative voices through this painful controversy. Men from whom they expected to hear wise and helpful words that ought to have been said, have been conspicuously silent. The modern science of "pussyfooting" has made less noise than the theory of evolution, but has been as much in evidence.

Willard E. Waterbury

Doctor Waterbury, our strong, brotherly, and devoted state secretary, has finished his course. For twenty years, during which he has virtually covered all the departments of our state convention work by passing from one to another, he has been truly a wise and consecrated bishop—"feeding the flock of God, taking the oversight thereof not by constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God." None knew to what theological camp he belonged, but Baptists all through the state were sure that he was a Christian, serving the Lord day and night. May that tribe increase!

Doctor Waterbury was a graduate of Rochester University, and his training there was the groundwork of unusual cultivation and breadth of intellectual interest. It was not more delightful to converse with him on the churches, the care of which he carried upon his heart, than upon art, science or literary treasure. The old phrase, "a gentleman and a scholar" fitted him perfectly. He was only sixty-six, but was broken at last by hard work and personal sorrow. During the interregnum between the captaincy of Doctor White and Doctor Heath, he acted as chief, with full efficiency. His last suffering became a spiritual opportunity; and he used it most as the weight of the body grew the heavier just before his triumphant spirit found its release. Between the severe spasms of coughing, he was praying by name for all the churches that he had visited and endeavored to bless. Verily that phrase of Paul's—"the care of all the churches," has taken on meaning in our afflictive loss of such a wise and consecrated servant.

A Brace of Strong Meetings

The first one was the Monday meeting of the ministers. Dr. C. N. Arbuckle of Newton Center was the attraction, on "The Minister as an Interpreter." Doctor Arbuckle's peculiar quality of pungency that goes with his clarity, conviction and intelligence, set all of our mental microbes agog. Inevitably there came the old apostolical result—"some said one thing, some another." Not an altogether undesirable situation among free Baptists. Far better than the uniformity of indifference. When the speaker claimed that the truest interpreter found it more important to answer the question "What does it mean?" than "How did it happen?" And that the interpreter was more concerned with the value of the discovery, than with the correct delineation of it, he surely started the ball of discussion, and it rolled long after the time limit. It brought to memory the old days—the days of the giants —when Alvah Hovey, Jesse B. Thomas, Herman Lincoln, A. J. Gordon, Cephas B. Crane, Franklin Johnson and Ezra P. Gould, were wont both to differ and to believe in one another. The denominational thug had not yet arrived. Yet occasionaly we agreed with a man in whom we did not altogether believe. We had that Baptistic liberty also.

The Other Meeting

It was "father and son's night" at the Social Union. Perhaps it is the more refreshing because it comes only once a year. One banquet out of nine sounds almost like a raw deal, but the boys were so wholly absorbed by the supper, the singers and the speaker, that there seemed little thought of anything but felicity. Having the sons in mind, President Rood had the right singers, and an ideal speaker, both for fathers and sons. The music was by the famous Lotus Male Quartette, and the speaker was Dr. Alfred E. Stearns, principal for twenty years of Phillips-Andover Academy. In discussing the "Youth of Today," Doctor Stearns planted himself squarely in the point of view both of the sons and their dads. There was a strong pull for both in the address. Fathers felt youth made real again, and sons felt the pull of such a manhood as appealed to the best in them. Fathers must sense the new temptations involved in the present struggle of their boys, and face the duty to provide them with liveable conditions. The sons are inherently religious—they have a moral as well as another passion, and a deep eagerness not only to play hard, but to play fair, in the face of terrific influences. They are dyed-in-the-wool reformers, fighting against the odds inflicted upon them by older generations. All they ask now is a fair chance—are you fathers giving it?

It was a great night for nearly 500 fathers and their sons.

Pittsburgh Association

By R. G. Pierson

The regular ministers' meetings were held during the holiday season with good attendance and helpful discussion. On Dec. 23, Rev. B. F. Patt spoke on church posters. Samples of excellent posters were presented. On Dec. 30, Rev. T. W. Evans read a paper on the Sabbath and civil law which caused a lively discussion. Rev. W. H. Houghton, formerly pastor of the First Church of Morristown, Pa., now in the evangelistic work, spoke to the ministers on the future of evangelism. At the annual meeting of the conference Rev. N. J. Mecklem of Swissvale was elected president, Rev. L. B. Ford, vice-president and Rev. L. J. Ramsey, secretary-treasurer.

The sudden death of Rev. D. M. Lenox on Jan. 5 brought sorrow to many hearts. Mr. Lenox was stricken suddenly with acute indigestion on Friday evening while preparing a sermon and died early Saturday morning. Mr. Lenox was a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. He was born in Harpers Ferry, W. Va., sixty-five years ago. The larger part of his ministry has been in Western Pennsylvania. In the Pittsburgh Association he has served the churches at Elizabeth, Coraopolis and Oakmont. He began his work in Oakmont in November and we were receiving fine reports of his work in this field. His long and faithful ministry has been a blessing to many lives. The work that he loved will be carried on in the days to come by his children, especially by the three sons who are preparing for the ministry and missionary service at Bucknell University and Westminster College. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Chas. Embrey of the Mt. Washington church, a classmate of Mr. Lenox at Crozier Seminary. Rev. J. S. Stone and Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker assisted in the service.

The Bucknell University Glee Club visited Pittsburgh and vicinity during the holidays, giving concerts at the First Church, First Church of Connelsville and Mt. Washington Church. They also sang at the chamber of commerce where they were being entertained by the Pittsburgh Alumni Club. The writer of these notes is an alumnus of Bucknell and was greatly interested in the personnel of the club. He discovered familiar names such as Dutton and Lauderbaugh, Heysham, and Decker. Some of these young men are the sons of men who attended Bucknell twenty-five years ago and reminded the writer that he would soon be sending sons to the old college.

Notes from the Churches

New members are being received by many of the churches. First, Homestead, ten; Ambridge, four; Park, McKeesport, one; Mt. Lebanon, eight; Turtle Creek, three; Oakmont, seven.

Rev. W. G. Russell, Director of the Board of Promotion of Pennsylvania has been spending a few weeks in the Pittsburgh district bringing information and inspiration to the churches. He spoke at the ministers' meeting on Jan. 6.

Rev. Ira Freeman, pastor at East Brady, has recently accepted the call of the Carnegie Church.

Mr. Walter Robson is supplying the pulpit at Canonsburg.

Rev. R. M. Campbell has resigned as pastor of the Johnston Ave. Church to become associate pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Johnstown, Pa.

Rev. R. H. Austin, pastor of the Mt. Moriah Church in the Monongahela Association, has accepted a call to become pastor of the Appolo Church.

Rev. A. L. Wyke, who has been acting as stated supply of the East Street Church, is now serving a congregation known as the Brentwood Protestant Church. This is a growing work in a new section. Ambridge, Cobden Street and Bethel Church of Carrick have recently remodeled their buildings.

Bethel has bought a new lot and has plans for a new building. The church at Ford City has purchased a parsonage at a cost of $7,200. This church has recently called Rev. C. R. Hammel of Johnstown. He will begin his work Feb. 1.

Rev. J. S. Stone of Sewickley was presented with a watch and chain by his parishioners at the Christmas season. Rev. W. R. Hill of McKeesport received a well-filled purse.

The Banksville Church, Rev. W. H. Hughes, pastor, has taken on new life. The Sunday school is increasing rapidly.

Rev. G. L. Gibbs, a student in the Western Theological Seminary, is serving the church at Braddock.

Mr. Clarence Leety, a trained worker among boys, has been appointed full-time worker men and boys' work at Rankin Center.

Rev. R. N. Jessup, Shady Avenue Church, exchanges pulpits once a month with one of the pastors of the association. By this plan the churches and pastors become acquainted. On Jan. 6, Rev. R. I. Wilson of Rochester, preached for Mr. Hessup.

The Mt. Lebanon Church held its first father and son banquet. Over 150 men and boys attended. The pastor brought the message on the subject "You and Your Boy."

Rev. A. M. Petty, father of Rev. C. Wallace Petty of the First Church, preached in his son's pulpit recently. The First Church is recruiting for Christ in Sunday evening services during January. The evening audiences are large and made up of people outside the membership.

GARDNER FREE BAPTIST: Every department of the work of the church is flourishing under the enthusiastic leadership of Pastor H. A. Clark. For some weeks he was compelled to be absent from his pulpit because of trouble with his eyes, but they are improving. The preacher of last Sunday found the house actually filled with an eager congregation. Pastor Clark gave the hand of fellowship to seven new members, and with it a clear and suggestive statement of the meaning of church membership. The Sunday school fills every nook and cranny of the church building. The "Flying Squadron," an evangelistic band under the direction of Deacon R. A. L. Colby, has held meetings in many unchurched districts during the fall with excellent results.

ROCKPORT: The annual meeting of the church at Rockport had as a prelude a bountiful supper, enjoyed by the church and its many friends of the community. Pastor Young is an able, thoughtful preacher, highly esteemed by his church in this fourth year of his ministry. The reports for the year indicated excellent work done. The speaker of the evening was Doctor Whittemore of the promotion board.

WATERVILLE: The annual meeting of Waterville First Church occurred Jan. 3. There was a very large gathering at a "lunch" that deserved a better name. The work of this great church is of necessity in many departments and each reported a successful year. Thirty-three have been baptized into the membership which now numbers 949. The week-day school of last summer was very successful and the community school of religious education is just beginning its lectures in Coburn Institute. This church pledged over $50,000 to the New World Movement. Some $33,000 have been paid in and vigorous effort will be made to secure the balance. Pastor Quarrington, by unanimous vote, was made the delegate of the church, with expenses paid, to the great temperance convention in Washington.

CAMBRIDGE: Cambridge, small in size, but great in service, had a Christmas festival, which in matter of attendance easily leads the state and the United States. Not, forsooth, in the number of people in attendance, but in the fact that every family but two in the entire town was represented. Pastor C. S. Roddy, in addition to a vigorous work in his parish, is winning honors in his course in Colby College. Mrs. Roddy has made the missionary outreach of the church especially effective.

REV. GEORGE BARRETT SOUTHWICK, supply pastor at Sabattus and South Monmouth, died suddenly in Lewiston, Dec. 29. Born in Humphrey, N. Y., Nov. 22, 1863, and graduating from Cobb Divinity School in 1890, he held four pastorates in New York; three in New Hampshire, and four in Maine. In all of these he rendered faithful Christian service, winning the esteem and affection of his people, and leading them to richer knowledge of the gospel in its comfort and in its power. The prayerful sympathy of many will be with Mrs. Southwick and her three daughters in this sudden and great sorrow. The youngest of the daughters is a student in Bates College.

CONNECTICUT

THE EVERYMAN'S BIBLE CLASS of the First Baptist Church of Bridgeport registered an attendance of 309 at its session last Sunday morning. This was the closing day of a contest with the men's class of the First Church, Waterbury. The local class won with a margin of 13 points. The Everyman's Class has been in existence for one year. It began with thirty-four men on the roll; the enrolment is now 338. Charles A. Decker, the pastor, is the teacher.

CONSIDERABLE INTEREST IS BEING manifested in the men's Bible classes throughout the state. Classes have been building up in First, Bridgeport; Central, Norwich; First, New London, and First, Waterbury. Last year Central, Norwich, and First, New London, conducted a contest, Central winning. First, Bridgeport, and First, Waterbury, conducted a contest on Dec. 30. The attendance in Bridgeport was 309. In Waterbury it approached 250. While the Bridgeport men won out on a percentage basis, the achievement of the Waterbury church was most remarkable. The Bridgeport men are to be entertained by the men of Waterbury some time in February. The Waterbury men know how to entertain.

WORK IN THE FIRST CHURCH, Shelton, Rev. N. B. Prindle, pastor, is moving steadily forward. Mr. Prindle recently baptized three candidates and expects additional baptisms in the near future. The church has installed a new heating plant. On Christmas Sunday $200 was raised for the building fund and $90 for Near East. The pastor begins cottage prayer meetings soon. At this season of the year Mr. Prindle takes his mid-week meeting to his people with remarkable results.

THE CHRISTMAS SEASON at the Central Church in Norwich was crowded full of good things. On the Sunday evening before Christmas for the third time Doctor Arbuckle's pageant on "The Birth of Christ" was presented to a large congregation. The silver offering of $107 was devoted to the cause represented by the Near East. The school made its offering in the morning for the same object, and that amounted to $215. On New Year's day the church held a reception from four to six o'clock. A musical program was given from four to five o'clock, followed by a social hour, when Mrs. C. W. Gale, who presented the church with a new organ, was the guest of honor. The church's every-member canvass for current expenses is not yet complete, but already it totals over $13,000. This is considerably larger than anything pledged by the church for local work heretofore. The annual meeting occurred on January 17.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE WOMAN'S HOME AND FOREIGN Mission Societies will hold a united convention for the New England District in the Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple, Jan. 24. It is the mid-winter rally and a strong program is announced with speakers from both societies.

NEW YORK

EMMANUEL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, under the leadership of Dr. A. A. Shaw, has launched a series of impressive meetings in the earnest hope of awakening not only in Emmanuel Church, but also in the whole community, a spiritual revival that will upbuild the churches, deepen religious feeling and give an impetus to religious life and work in Brooklyn. The meetings began Jan. 13, to conclude Jan. 27. Herbert S. Johnson, formerly pastor of the Warren Avenue Church, Boston, assisted by Ernest W. Naftzger as leader of singing, is conducting them. Doctor Johnson gives his time to modern and forceful evangelism, serving without remuneration. Mr. Naftzger was associated with J. Wilbur Chapman for eight years, making two trips with him round the world.

NEW JERSEY

FAIRVIEW COMMUNITY CHURCH, Camden, Thomas N. Martin, pastor. This church had great rejoicing as 1923 passed into history because the trustees reported that the floating indebtedness of the church had been paid. These obligations of $2722 were made necessary at the time of completing the church building fifteen months ago. The people are also much encouraged because there are accessions to the membership at each communion.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF the North Church, Camden, James Dalton Morrison, minister, shows splendid progress despite the changing conditions of the community incident to the building of the Philadelphia-Camden bridge, the approaches to which require the demolition of hundreds of homes in the North Church district. Over $11,000 was raised for local work and $13,000 for benevolences. The entire floating debt of the church was wiped out by a memorial gift of $20,000 from the family of the late F. Wayland Ayer. The North Church school, which has been known for many years as an outstanding afternoon Sunday school, changed three months ago to the morning and united with the church in a unified service of study and worship commencing at ten o'clock and closing at twelve. The change has been attended with conspicuous success, both church and school having increased greatly. Mr. Wilfred W. Fry, head of Ayer & Son, Advertising, has been elected superintendent of the school to succeed Mr. F. W. Ayer, who occupied the office for over fifty years.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. E. D. LEWIS began his work at the First Church of Malvern, Jan. 1. He was formerly with the East Side Church of Sharon.

Bucknell

Since the coming of President Emory W. Hunt, to the university five years ago the increase in attendance has doubled. Including the attendance at the summer school and the extension work there are now 1364 students. There has been added to the equipment a new engineering building with full modern equipment, 158 acres of ground, a new addition to the chemical laboratory, a new athletic field which will give opportunity for all the students to have proper exercise, and a fund of almost $500,000 raised for a new stadium and gymnasium.

The endowment fund has been increased but very little. Two years ago the general education board, of New York City, offered a gift of $200,000 to the university if the trustees would raise $450,000 more and be out of debt by Dec. 31, 1925. To raise this amount of money for the endowment fund the trustees appointed a committee of one hundred. Several generous gifts have been made. Mr. James S. Swartz, chairman of the board, and a trustee for forty years, gave 844 acres of land which may be turned into cash. Mr. Swartz is a lifelong member of the Falls of Schuylkill Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Another member of the board has promised to give sufficient money to endow the president's office, but it will only be partly available for this endowment drive; the exact amount of this gift is not yet determined, but it will exceed $100,000. Special gifts are being solicited from various individuals.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

PATTON: E. G. Zwayer, after a pastorate of thirteen years on this mission field, during which time a mission was also established in a French and Belgian community near by, closed his work last month to accept a call to the Calvary Church of Franklin, Pa. The Patton Church and mission looks to the state mission society for a successor, and it is useless for men to write directly to the church. Doctor Soars knows the field and recommendations must be made directly through him.

DURING THE months that Calvary Church of Franklin was without a pastor, Rev. Margaret M. Joshua of Union City filled the pulpit a number of times. Having been without a pastor since June 30, and feeling the need for a revival of interest in the things for which the church stands, it was decided to have Mrs. Joshua conduct a week of special services previous to the calling of a regular pastor. Mrs. Joshua consented to come to Franklin for a week during the latter part of November. The results of this week of services have been far reaching in that the members of the church have become a unit for the work of the Master and the church. There were a number of conversions, and these converts, with a number of others, were baptized by Mr. Davis, former pastor, and taken into the church during December. Fifteen persons were welcomed by Mr. Zwayer at the communion service Jan. 6, nearly all of whom were received by baptism. There is every indication of a continuous ingathering.

THE REPORTS PRESENTED at the annual meeting of the First Church of Meadville, showed a year of progress, harmony and hopefulness. Thirty-four had been baptized, some $17,000 contributed and the church property considerably improved; it is a beautiful edifice, inside and out. Missionary interest had been increased by the presence of the church's foreign pastor, Rev. J. E. Geil, and Mrs. Geil, Banza Manteke, Congo. The annual meeting heartily voted a substantial increase in the salary of the resident pastor, Rev. G. Morton Walker.

MICHIGAN

THE DEDICATION OF THE NEW Drexel Community and Sunday-school building erected by the Ganson Street Church, Jackson, was a joyous occasion for the closing of the year 1923. General Director Smith preached the dedicatory sermon. The work in the Drexel district was started in 1915 and its success is largely due to the untiring efforts of a few members from Ganson Street Church who had a vision of a large work for the Master. Special mention was made of the labor of Miss Hazel Davis, superintendent of the Sunday school for the past six years. Miss Genevieve Wright who first conceived the idea of the mission and Miss Robertine Troop one of the teachers, now a nurse-in-training at the W. A. Foote Hospital.

MORGAN L. WILLIAMS, director of religious education for Michigan, has held conferences with many Sunday schools and young people's societies throughout the state and reports a deep interest. Bad Axe has started the graded lessons and also a teacher-training class. Bethany School of Pontiac, headed by Pastor Kenagy is developing a "live wire" church. Jackson Association, with Vern H. Coe superintendent, is bound to put his twenty-two schools in line for the bigger and better schools. Bay City schools are planning for a training institute to be held early in February.

MELVIN CHURCH on Dec. 17, called in council the churches of Huron association for the purpose of ordaining to the gospel ministry their pastor, James W. Greene. The council organized in the afternoon with George Waid of Capac, chairman, and A. R. Ferguson, clerk. After a thorough examination of the candidate, the council unanimously recommended his ordination, and these services followed in the evening. Rev. Fay Cilley of Brown City was chairman for the evening. Sermon was preached by Rev. George Waid; charge to the candidate given by A. R. Ferguson and to the church by Gilbert Miles. Rev. H. N. Brown extended the hand of fellowship. The church is enthusiastic for the future.

THE PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE CHURCH (Northfield) is receiving new courage from the special meetings conducted during this month by State Evangelist Frank L. Currey. Rev. E. E. Burdick is supply pastor on this field, which is a branch from the First Church.

REV. W. T. ROBERTS has organized a brotherhood of the younger men in his church at Alma, the main purpose of which is to provide a means of social contact for the young men and the community. The church school is enrolled in the bigger and better Bible school movement and is making splendid advances. Also the underwriting period in the New World Movement is being observed in an effort to meet in full the pledge of the church. Special evangelistic services will be conducted soon under the leadership of Littrell and Moody.

FLINT BAPTISTS ARE WORKING out a plan for the organization of a Baptist City Union. Dr. H. C. Gleiss of the city missions committee of the state convention with General Director J. E. Smith have held one conference with the churches, and a constitution has been submitted to the various churches for their approval. Rev. A. A. Trembert of Third Avenue church is temporary chairman.

G. W. LAWRENCE, director of rural church work has held several rural church institutes which have proved successful, notably those held at Aurelius and Colon, where representatives from M. A. C. assisted. Several others are planned for the immediate future.

PASTOR WILLIAM P. PEARCE, of the First Church, Mich., has always an intensive program. He expects to lecture in one of the colleges for a week in February, conduct a Prayer Institute for a week during March, in Missouri, and has been asked to conduct again a party over Europe in July and Aug. Mr. Pearce has traveled extensively and delights in teaching those who accompany him on these trips. He is encouraged with the outlook of First Church. Problems are not absent. Emphasis is laid on the spiritual, expressions of soul-need are confidentially being expressed, the prayer meetings are largely attended, the 1924 objective is far-reaching.

KANSAS

MR. AND MRS. A. T. ROBINSON, tithing evangelists were with the First Church of Eldorado one week, beginning Dec. 16.

There was a crowded house nearly every service, in spite of Christmas business. Seventy lined up to tithe, and organized into a tithers' league.

ILLINOIS

Rev. J. R. Mitchell, Dietrich, has been called as pastor at Sadorus and will be moving on the field some time this month. Professor Gere has been acceptably supplying this church for the past year.

Rev. E. L. James from Iowa, but an old Illinois boy from White Hall and Shurtleff, has been settled as pastor at Chrisman. Pastor James has taken unto himself a most estimable and talented young lady as a wife. Congratulations to him and Chrisman.

Pontiac has just called a pastor and he is now on the field. His name is Haywood and he is one of the choice students soon to graduate from the Northern Seminary.

Thirteen young people of the Jerseyville Church volunteered for life service at the invitation of the pastor A. B. Favoright at a recent Sunday evening. At a morning service Mr. Favoright built a monument on the blackboard out of blocks (pledges ranging from $500 down to $25), thus raising $4000 to clear the final deficit in the building fund.

NORTH DAKOTA

A special meeting of the board of managers of the state convention is called at Grand Forks for Feb. 1. Special attention will be given to the completion of the New World Movement period and the launching of the missionary work under the supervision of the board of missionary cooperation. Dr. Peter C. Wright of New York City will be the special representative of the national boards. Rev. George B. Newcomb of Bismarck, the newly elected president of the convention, will preside at this meeting. Mr. Newcomb succeeds R. B. Griffith of Grand Forks, who has served as convention president for thirteen years, ten of which were consecutive. Mr. Newcomb has been the superintendent of the North Dakota Humane and Society for the Friendless for the past thirteen years. Thursday, Jan. 31, the board of the North Dakota Woman's Missionary Society will meet in Grand Forks. Mrs. C. E. Webster of Fargo is President. Mrs. G. E. Young of Minneapolis will represent the Woman's National Societies.

Chaplain E. W. White, D. D., of Omaha, Neb., has just closed a short evangelistic campaign in North Dakota. Four series of meetings were held: Fargo Immanuel, Rev. C. W. Finwall, pastor; Kenmare, Rev. L. M. Stolberg, pastor; Powers Lake, Rev. E. Monnes, pastor; Page, Rev. L. McKinnon, pastor. At Kenmare Pastor Stolberg has already baptized twenty-seven, five have been received by letter and three by restoration. Eighty-one persons at Powers Lake accepted Christ as their personal Saviour. Twelve made the good confession at Page.

Rev. F. E. Dark, of Portland, Ore., is to spend ten days in North Dakota, visiting churches in the interest of Christian stewardship. Rev. J. M. Hupp of Jamestown writes that brother Dark is a dear personal friend—"a strong man, a prince of a brother. I am glad you have him in North Dakota. He will do our churches good wherever he goes."

Jamestown Church closed the old year with a special cross and candle service and a tableau, directed by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Hupp. Fifteen girls lighted their candles at the lighted cross. They passed out through the audience and lit the candle held by each one present. During this candle-light service the pastor made a call for those who would follow the Christ of Calvary beginning with the year 1924. Twenty-two persons responded, ranging in ago from nine to over sixty years.

IOWA

Iowa has registered 146 out of 289 Baptist Sunday schools in the state. Rev. Witter deserves much credit for the interest shown in this work, and it now looks as though Iowa might retain the banner for class II another year.

Rev. J. O. White of Indianola, president of the Iowa B. Y. P. U., was at a conference at headquarters recently. Plans were made for the campaign for attendance of Iowa young people at the Denver Convention, July 9-13. J. Orrin Gould of the University Church, Des Moines, has been chosen transportation manager for this convention.

Rev. A. T. Swanson of Chariton, closed a two weeks' meeting at Creston Dec. 24. Fifty conversions are reported at the meeting.

Rev. Wilson Mills, general evangelist of the Home Mission Society, closed a successful meeting recently at Webb. Thirty-eight conversions are reported. Rev. L. L. Smith is the pastor.

The Sidney church has called Rev. L. W. Ross of Corning He moved to the new field the first of the year.

Rev. Richmond Smith is doing a splendid work at Red Oak, where they are planning to remodel the church building.

Rev. R. Courts has accepted a call to the churches at Cambria and Unity, coming to the field recently.

The Creston Association is planning a simultaneous campaign for evangelism in eighteen churches. Rev. A. G. Lagerquist is the field worker for this district.

The Humboldt Church has called Rev. C. H. Eyman of Chicago. Mr. Eyman has served the churches at Baker, Oregon, and Plattsville, Mo. He is a graduate of William Jewell College and Rochester Seminary.

The Hulme Evangelistic Party is holding meetings at Bradgate. Rev. C. E. Bryden is the pastor.

The new church edifice at Storm Lake is going to be one of which Baptists may well be proud. Pastor J. A. Hurley is having large congregations, the services being held in the high school until the new building is completed.

The Morningside Memorial Chapel was dedicated Dec. 16. Rev. Jacobsen of the Sioux City Church. and Rev. Pickett, are to be congratulated on this mission property.

Forest City has called as pastor L. T. Hall of Mason City. For some time he has been serving churches in South Dakota and Minnesota. Rev. A. W. Caul is field worker for the northwest district and gives very encouraging reports of the work generally in his district.

Des Moines

Four students of Des Moines University attended the Student Volunteer Convention at Indianapolis.

The University Church held its "home coming" Dec. 27. The largest gathering in the short history of the church sat down to dinner together at 6:30 o'clock. Every department showed progress during the past year. The B. Y. P. U. enjoyed a letter from their first missionaries on the foreign field, Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Armstrong, of Congo Belge, Africa. They are enjoying the new life and experiences of their work.

President John W. Million is beginning a campaign for funds for Des Moines University. At least half a million dollars must be secured for an endowment fund during the coming year. New buildings are much needed.

Forest Avenue Church held its annual meeting New Year's day. A large congregation was present at the dinner and the business meeting. Rev. Allan N. Nettleman is getting things well in hand as pastor, and the outlook is encouraging in every department of the church.

Calvary Church has been conducting an aeroplane campaign in the Sunday school since October. A marked increase in attendance and collections has been noted. Rev. H. O. Meyer is the pastor.

The Michigan Baptist Convention has added to its force Rev. J. C. Austin of Portland, Ore. He will act as advisor with churches along financial lines, assisting in every-member canvasses and counselling with churches as to better methods of work. Mr. Austin has had a wide experience having served in a similar capacity in the West and until recently as financial agent of Linfield College.

Home Mission Activities

tary of the Northern Baptist Convention, called a conference of representatives of Indiana, Michigan and Ohio, then the storm centers of the migration, by which conference a program was worked out through an advisory commission of fifteen representative pastors and laymen. This program of cooperation was not to do something for but with and through our own leadership and organizations. As a direct outcome of this program, negro Baptists in Detroit own and control over $200,000 worth of property. The Ohio Baptist Association, with a state executive secretary in the person of Rev. C. T. Isom, and with a paid staff of workers, presents the best in the way of organization and achievements, led and directed the negro Baptists in this country, working under the budget system of finance. They closed their convention year Sept. 30 by raising in actual cash $32,000, which has more than justified the work of this department. Bible institutes for Christian workers are conducted throughout the convention, which has made the net results most hopefully possible. The work in Missouri, which centers around the Western College, located at Kansas City, has taken on new life under the budget system, by which it raised over $26,000.

The leadership among the negro Baptist men trained in our home mission schools is the best evidence that they were worthy recipients as seen in their efforts to train their people to do for themselves. The two outstanding achievements in this respect are seen in the erection of the Abyssinia Baptist Church in New York City under the leadership of A. C. Powell and the Clark Memorial Baptist Church in Homestead, Pa., by M. A. Tally.

Another notable achievement for 1923 was the action on the part of the National Baptist Convention under the leadership of L. K. Williams at the last annual session voted to enter into cooperation with the home mission board.

The outlook is full of hope and promise for an aggressive get-somewhere program. It has now fully dawned upon the church leadership of the North that the coming of so many people from the Southland presents one of the greatest challenges that the church in the home field has been called to deal with. To meet this challenge negro Baptists must be united on a program of a constructive character; they must be willing to side step all differences where no great principle is involved in order that they may cooperate and do real team work for the Master in the redemption of the race. The big job confronting us today is the work of the church, through the church the great work of reconstruction and readjustment must be worked out.

Our chief needs are men of vision, training, character, consecration, personality, men willing to spend and be spent for the Master's cause. Our next greatest need is church buildings situated in the poorer quarters of our cities surrounded by masses of toiling men and women. These buildings should be large and attractive, suitable not only for services on Sunday and week days, but so planned that they can be made the home of other kinds of helpful activities of constructive character. A department with its clubs and classes for boys and girls, young men and women, older men and women must also be provided for. Another need is a summer school in each state or rather a Chautauqua such as is being operated in Kansas and this year in New Jersey where preachers, church, religious and social workers can gather for mental and spiritual refreshment under the instruction of leaders and expert workers of both races as to the best methods in doing kingdom work. Another need for this section that comes as a part of the challenge is education. Negro Baptists are trying to meet this need in training as expressed through the Clayton-Williams School located in Baltimore, the Northern University in New Jersey and a school property recently acquired by a group of Baptists in Indianapolis. While the Western College located in Kansas City, Missouri and the Theological School at Topeka is the evidence of the awakening of negro Baptists concerning the need of this great agency in preparing men and women for service, but further evidence is seen in an organization known as the Educational Society of the North of which Dr. Bradby, Detroit, is the president. This society will meet in Washington, D. C., next May for the purpose of co-ordinating all of the various agencies doing educational work into one united effort for schools to meet this situation in the North as an auxiliary to the National Baptist Convention.

and equipment to express adequately the two, we can hope for a better working out of that biggest job God has given man to do, the realization of each individual's full self.

Dean H. G. Gale describes the size of atoms by saying that if all the water of the earth could be massed into one great ocean, a glassful of water removed and all the atoms of it colored by some method—then the glassful of water be poured back into the great ocean, and all the atoms be allowed to mix thoroughly and evenly through all the water and another glassful taken out at any place—in this second glass of water would be found 200 of the original colored atoms.

We have known hundreds of children who have had the proper religious training come to a place in life where their influence and thought was spread as widely as the atoms in Dean Gale's illustration. It is the supremely worthwhile task of the church to develop its program of religious education so that the potentialities of every child's life may be colored aright and allowed to reach their greatest possible positions of influence.

the first unit of a commodious and dignified structure to minister to a populous and growing suburban section. To these local achievements should be added the dedication of one of the finest houses of worship and work in the state at Fremont and the securing by the Grand Island church of the site for its long projected new building.

To this year also belongs the establishment on a firmer basis of the Christian center "fellowship house" in a foreign district of Omaha.

THE NEW WORLD MOVEMENT COMPLETION CAMPAIGN.

Our greatest need in the whole program of Nebraska Baptists is the strengthening of our rural mission churches. Many of them seem to be engaged in an unequal struggle against overwhelming odds. They need a new breath of the quickening spirit of God, a new vision and an enlarged program worthy of the time and place in which they live, greatly increased financial support, and a fresh accession of worthy leadership both pastoral and lay. For this type of church Nebraska presents an unusually responsive field and many, many more fields waiting to be occupied than Baptists at present have the forces to man.

Because of this very weakness we would say that Nebraska's second greatest need is for an increased emphasis in our churches on Christian education in our own Christian college to the end that we may produce a greater supply of trained leadership.

Our third need is for continuity and persistence both in pastoral relationships and in our state programs and policies. We need pastorates that endure through the years and we need state plans that have time to bring forth "first the blade, then the fruit, then the full corn in the ear."

A fourth need, no doubt, is the courage, faith, devotion and liberality to give on a larger scale at the conclusion of the New World Movement than during the four-year period.

Grand Island. A. C. HULL.

Arizona

OUTSTANDING achievements in Arizona for the year past have been: The completion of the building of the First Baptist Church, Winslow, at a cost of about $10,000 and of the Mexican Christian center in Phoenix at about $13,000 (the Home Mission Society has cooperated in the construction of both buildings.) And the great Bible and Missionary conference which reached directly over a thousand of our people.

The financial situation is better in the state today than it was this time a year ago. Each of the three industries—copper, cattle and agriculture—are on the up-grade and are now upon a conservative basis. The spirit of cooperation is strong in our pastors and churches within the state. A number of our mission churches are striving for self-support and will come to this point during the year approaching.

The needs in Arizona are for pastors in our churches who will stay long enough to get acquainted with the congregation and really do a constructive piece of work in their churches. As a rule, our pastorates are too short. We need to construct at least five Baptist church houses in the state during the next year. With a Mexican population equaling 45 per cent of the total for the state, we need to establish at least two or three new missions during the coming year, and also to establish as many new missions among the Americans during the same period.

Phoenix. H. Q. MORTON.

Nevada-Sierra Convention

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year: (a) Organization of the church at Las Vegas. (b) All fields, with the exception of one, manned by capable workers. (c) Erection of parsonage at Sparks, Nev. (d) Enlarged interest in B. Y. P. U. organizations, forty-two young people in attendance at Asilomar.

Outlook for 1924: (a) Very promising, especially along lines of religious education and young people's work. (b) Home Mission Society projecting greatly enlarged program.

Chief needs: (a) Three new church buildings. (b) Three new parsonages. (c) Two additional colporter-missionaries. (d) Funds to enable us to open up new work in six new communities. (e) Two women workers.

BRUCE E. JACKSON.

Salt Lake City.

Colorado

THE outstanding achievements the past year in Colorado have been a decided increase in payments on New World Movement pledges over preceding years; a very material increase in the number of students attending Colorado Woman's College; more than 1600 baptisms reported; a state convention with the largest attendance and sustained interest until the closing hour of the annual meeting.

The outlook for 1924 is decidedly encouraging from every standpoint. We confidently expect to make the best financial showing of recent years. Our people are united and are determined heroically to press forward, solidly back of all denominational enterprises.

Our chief needs are church buildings on mission fields recently organized. A guild house on the state university campus at Boulder.

Denver. F. B. PALMER.

Utah

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year are: (a) Erection of the first units of the Burlington Church, Salt Lake City, and First Church, Ogden. (b) Purchase of a forty-acre tract on the Upper Ogden Canyon, for summer assembly. (c) The registration of 35 per cent of all Utah Baptists for the Salt Lake City Bible and missionary conference. (d) Large increase in attendance of Baptist Sunday schools and the holding of two very successful church vacation schools. (e) All fields, with the exception of two, manned by capable workers.

Outlook for 1924 is (a) Very promising with large increase in missionary giving. (b) Home Mission Society projecting greatly enlarged program.

Chief needs are (a) Several new houses of worship. (b) Seven new parsonages. (c) Two new colporter-missionaries. (d) Director of Religious Education. (e) One chapel auto for work in Mormon communities. (f) Six Ford cars for missionaries. (g) Two additional women workers.

BRUCE E. JACKSON.

Salt Lake City.

Montana

ACHIEVEMENTS of 1923 are acquisition of permanent assembly site near Yellowstone National Park; sixty life service volunteers registered and organized; successful and self-sustaining summer assembly; 277 baptisms reported; no new debts; almost no pastorless fields of any sort; and more Baptist students in Baptist colleges than ever before.

1924 outlook normal; full corps of excellent pastors and missionaries; determination to share worthily in New World Movement goals; determination to rise above adverse financial conditions. "Our trust is in God."

The outstanding needs of our convention are some organization and method of getting Baptist young people to Baptist colleges; $5000 for equipment of assembly site; special funds to aid in building at least ten parsonages and enlarging or building at least ten church edifices; two pastors-at-large for special church programs; funds to adequately care for the areas allocated to the religious care of Baptists; and increased educational and inspirational activities looking toward fuller cooperation in the missionary ideals of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Lewistown. G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

Idaho

SOME of the achievements of the past year are significant. Nearly all of our churches are now supplied with pastors. Our fourth summer assembly was the biggest and best we have yet had. Registrations passed the 400 mark. There was a substantial increase in the number of vacation schools held. Successful revival meetings have been held in many of our churches. The Bible and missionary conference was attended by delegates from almost every church in the state. It was a source of inspiration to our whole constituency.

The outlook for 1924 is very encouraging. Every church in the state is now cooperating heartily in the missionary program of the denomination.

The outstanding need at the beginning of 1924 is more adequate church buildings on many of our fields. Unless financial assistance can be secured for some of these churches great opportunities will be lost.

W. A. SHANKS.

East Washington and North Idaho Convention

WHAT are the outstanding achievements of the year?—The East Washington and North Idaho Convention is still making progress in the payment of building debts. Our goal is to clear all debts to the Home Mission Society off the slate by April 30, 1924, and there seems a fair prospect of reaching this goal. These debts, some of them older than the convention itself, most of them older than the people now composing the church membership, were the millstones around the necks of our people; they were like the old-fashioned train brakeman, setting the brakes on the wheels of every car in the train; they were the hold-up villians who persistently stood in the way of church progress, hindering church building, payment of pastors' salaries, and worth-while participation in denominational missionary enterprises. Our one most noteworthy achievement is the continued progress in the elimination of these debts.

What is the outlook for 1924? How we wish we knew. We may be preachers but we are dismal failures as prophets. The best we can say is, we have the same Christ, a land bursting with opportunity and religious need, and we have an ambition to do our reasonable share of the denominational task.

Our chief needs are money and then more money for the Lord's work.

A. H. BAILEY.

Spokane, Wash.

Western Washington

ONE outstanding result of the New World Movement in Western Washington is an enlarged denominational consciousness and increased denominational loyalty. Faith, hope, unity and progress are the chief characteristics of our Baptist fellowship.

The paramount need in this field is for better church buildings and equipment. It is gratifying to report that present indications are that the year 1924 will witness the erection of an unusually large number of new buildings. Already plans are under way for buildings to be erected within the next twelve months costing a total of not less than one half million dollars.

Many acres of logged-off land are being put into cultivation for poultry raising, dairying and small farms. This creates a new rural problem, as many of these districts are destitute of religious privileges. The outstanding missionary need in Western Washington is for funds to supply capable workers and ample equipment in order to give these country districts, during the formative period, wholesome Christian leadership and church privileges.

Seattle. J. F. WATSON.

Oregon

THE outstanding achievements among our Baptists of Oregon during the past year have been in the building of churches and parsonages, there being approximately twenty such enterprises, costing approximately $400,000; the second largest number of baptisms in the convention history, there being only a few less than 1400, and a gain in membership of a few less than 2000; the contributions for missions, while not large as in previous years, was about three times as large as any year previous to the New World Movement.

The outlook for 1924 is most encouraging, judging from the large ingathering already realized in this splendid year, and further judged by the continuance of the building program of our churches, and the more than 30 per cent increase in contributions to world missions over a similar period of the previous year, the organization of several new churches and Sunday schools indicate the vigorous constituency.

Our chief needs are more and better buildings, district missionaries, and state evangelists, and a great awakening of individual responsibilities for evangelism and in stewardship of property.

Portland. O. C. WRIGHT.

Northern California

OUTSTANDING achievements: Seven church edifices completed or under construction costing $250,000. Far-reaching results of Bible and missionary conferences; approximately 30 per cent of membership in attendance, some coming 300 miles.

Outlook encouraging, churches more sympathetic, opposition to denominational program waning. Forward steps along all lines planned.

Needs: Twenty automobiles, property twelve Mexican missions, 100 per cent more funds.

San Francisco. C. W. BRINSTEAD.

Southern California

SOUTHERN California has continued a denominational unity and harmonious. Pastors' annual prayer conference was a great spiritual success with 85 per cent of the pastors present. There is special evangelistic activity and interest and many baptisms through regular services. All records broken in attendance at the annual convention. Schools of missions are increasing in numbers and attendance. Bible and missionary conference registered 2100. Receipts for New World Movement $550,000, over $18 per member. Many churches in building Greatest need is modern church buildings nearly all present church buildings totally inadequate. Forty new and churchless communities should be supplied with church buildings this year.

Professor Dickson's contribution was on "The Arithmetics of Higher Number Systems," Professor Eliakim Hastings Moore, head of the department of mathematics at the university, says of this work that "it opens a large and very important new field in the theory of numbers."

Dr. J. S. Kirtley is the acting pastor of the Church of the Master, Cleveland. In the church calendar for the first Sunday of the new year we find a message to the non-resident members which for its kindliness and suggestion commends itself: "We feel sure you have not forgotten us. We remember you and are always glad to hear from you or about you, especially when we learn that you are prospering and in health and that your soul is also in health. Neither you nor we should feel discouraged, for life's duties and emergencies scatter us everywhere. The only thing we need fear is that you or we may not live up to the high ideals our Master, Jesus, has for us. No doubt you often inquire about the old home church and are always glad to know it is prosperous. We wish you could be back with us in our good services which seem to be having the favor of God. But as you cannot be here, we want you to be useful where you are. Our best wish for you is that you keep useful. If there is a Baptis church near you be sure to help them all you can. If you are to be there permanently and are ready to unite with them, we shall dismiss you to them with our loving prayers. If there is no Baptist church near you, help some other body of Christians till you return to us or move near some Baptist church. That is our first wish for you. Our second is that you help us here. You may do that in three ways. Though you will help the cause where you are in a material way, you will want to have at least some part in the support of the home church as long as you are a member. You may also help in keeping us daily in your prayers. But we ask you to write us about twice a year so that we can read your letter in the prayer meeting as your testimony. Write to Mr. E. A Williams, care of the church. He is our committee to keep us in touch with the non-resident members. We love you."

The opening of the new auditorium of the First Church, Minneapolis, to which attention has been called in an earlier issue, makes necessary the services of thirty-seven ushers. The choir is made up of 140 persons. Since Doctor Riley became pastor in 1897, 4,692 members have been added to the church. The Trinity and Windom Park churches have been formed by members from the First Church and 1800 letters have been granted to other churches. The present membership is 2700 and the Sunday school has an enrolment of 3000.

On Sunday, Jan. 5, the fine new building of the First Church, Waterloo, Iowa, was dedicated after provision had been made for the more than $60,000 still unprovided for on the morning of dedication. The financial campaign was in the hands of Dr. Frank H. Divine, who also presided at the dedicatory exercises. Cold as the weather was it was no reflection of the spirit of those who made this glorious consummation possible. Later we hope to print a cut of the church with details of the building. The pastor is R. E. Williamson.

WHAT WAS DONE WITH THE MONEY?

This is what was done with the $2,104,622.99 appropriated by twenty-eight Baptists who met in New York and expended for missionary work in India, China, Japan, Africa, Philippine Islands and Europe.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT. The largest single item $579,782.54 was required to pay salaries of missionaries. This amount provided the support of 587 foreign missionaries some of whom have been in active service more than forty years. In addition $32,687.53 was spent for newly appointed missionaries, $23,710.57 for missionary homes and $36,889.00 for retired missionaries and widows.

WORK OF MISSIONARIES AND NATIVE AGENCIES. A total of $338,516.41 was paid for the actual work of missionaries and their native associates, including evangelistic touring, maintenance of hospitals, support of schools, and aid to 748 native churches. Note this: 1188 churches or 61% of the total of 1936 are self-supporting.

PROPERTY. For construction of new churches, schools, hospitals and missionary residences and for repairs, $367,701.35 was expended of which more than $242,000.00 came in gifts designated by the donors. On its ten mission fields the Foreign Mission Society has invested large sums in lands and buildings. It has many fine structures, but it also has many old and inadequate ones, which ought to be replaced.

OTHER FOREIGN ITEMS. For other important activities not readily brought under one heading, such as missions in Europe, special provision for students, transportation of missionaries to and from their fields, $176,835.14 was spent, while $97,222.02 was spent for miscellaneous items, of which the largest single amount went for the relief of war stricken peoples. Then $285,278.16 was applied to reduce the deficit of former years.

ADMINISTRATION. This item, popularly known as "Home Expenses," consumed less than 8% of the total—an extremely low percentage and one quite at variance with the more or less prevalent notion. The world-wide and complex work of our foreign missions was supervised and administered at an expense of $166,000.27.

INTEREST. Mark this: Administration expense includes $19,298.20 paid for interest on borrowed money. This equals the salaries of eight missionaries and with the deficit entirely liquidated, could be saved each year if the churches would forward contributions monthly or quarterly instead of at the end of the year.

Send checks to your state office or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

If Winter Comes

IF winter comes, and winds blow wild and chill,
If queenly roses perish with the cold,
Be well assured that from the ashen mould
Shall bourgeon lovely gardens that shall fill
The earth with beauty. For the wood and hill,
By north wind shorn, bright robes of living green
Shall soon be wrought, unheard, unseen,
By Him who turns destruction to His will.
If winter comes—alas, and it shall come!—
Men's hearts will ache, by lonely brooding pent;
In that bleak hour shall every choir be dumb
That fills our hearts today with sweet content:
Yet Life still reigns, and soon the year will bring Maytime and joy, with all things blossoming.

—Thomas Curtis Clark in "Lincoln and Others"

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Forrest Maddox has accepted the call of the First Church, Stockton, Cal. He has been a successful pastor in the South.

Four years ago the citizens of Stering, Ill., voted a closed Sunday. Recently a petition was filed asking the council to grant permits for Sunday moving pictures. The churches again united and the petition was not granted.

The Van Nuys Church recently dedicated the first unit of its new building which was erected at a cost of $20,000. This amount is fully covered by cash and pledges. This accomplishment speaks well for the church and Rev. F. W. Baker, pastor since 1915.

The Englewood Church, Chicago, recently celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of the election of Mr. W. G. Brimson as superintendent of the Sunday school. Englewood has a great school and is planning for its new building for the erection of which the church has a considerable sum in Liberty bonds.

Among the numerous pastoral changes of late in Southern California it may be noted that on account of his health Rev. Ernest A. Main leaves Burbank where in a year's time he had wonderfully developed the newly established church. Rev. S. W. Gage has left Garden Grove, and is at present at work with Doctor Farr at Calvary. Rev. Milton E. Fish has resigned at Huntington Park, and Rev. Sam P. Gott has closed a brief pastorate at Anaheim. Rev. W. W. Catherwood is Rev. Richard E. Day's successor at the Logan Heights Church at San Diego.

The new church and church house of the Fountain Street Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., will be dedicated Feb. 1-3. The speakers will be Dr. Theodore G. Soares, Dean Shailer Mathews, University of Chicago, Allen Hoben, president Kalamazoo College. Chandler Goldthwaite, the celebrated New York organist, has been engaged temporarily as the organist of the new church. The Rev. A. R. Blackstone of Great Falls, Mont., and an alumnus of Rochester Theological Seminary, has been engaged as associate pastor and director of religious education. Dr. Alfred W. Wishart has been the pastor for a number of years. We hope to give a more extended description later.

Mr. W. H. Conlin of Sacramento, Cal., writes: "In your issue of Dec. 22 George W. Coleman says: 'I wish THE BAPTIST would give its readers a series of pen sketches portraying the commercial life of some of these modern business prophets.' Can't you do it? What could possibly be more informing, more elevating, more soothing to the spirit of unrest that animates a large part of our wage workers than a series of 'pen sketches' suggested by Mr. Coleman." Of course we can do it and we will do it, too.

Charles R. Holden, one of our Chicago laymen, has served during the past year as president of the Chicago Crime Commission. This body has been very active and effective in curbing crime. At the fifth annual meeting of the body he was reelected.

We have not secured all the good we sought in planning for the New World Movement. We wonder, however, if we really count our blessings. There has been a constantly rising tide of evangelism at home and abroad. Baptisms on the home field have increased from 40,000 in 1918 to 74,000 in 1922, and from 7000 on the foreign field in 1918 to 18,415 in 1922.

The calendar of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, states that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's report shows that the death rate from alcoholism from 1907 to 1922 was cut in half, yet the anti-prohibitionists would try to make out that there is more drinking, particularly more deaths from alcoholism today than ever before.

The continuation campaign of the women's societies is stressing victory. A day of prayer and fasting with a view to victory in reaching denominational goals will be held Feb. 15. Each church is free to hold the day of prayer in its own way, but it is suggested that thanksgiving be offered for the great revival going on in Africa and Cuba, for the fine spirit of giving shown by the American Indians, and for the loyal self-sacrifice of all our missionaries; that supplication be given for a great ingathering of souls, for the payment of all debts now overwhelming the societies, for needed equipment on mission fields, and for the quickening of spiritual life in our churches.

The enlarging body of facts on which modern missionary policy is based is illustrated by the recent meeting in New York of the International Association of Agricultural Missions, which represents twenty American mission boards, home and foreign. A Philippine ear of corn which accompanied the greetings of Bishop C. H. Brent, formerly of the Philippine Islands, symbolized the association's aim. This ear was plucked from a stock of continuously producing corn developed from a native variety by the United States experiment station; the yield of the improved corn being several hundred per cent greater than that of its humble forebear. What has been done for this inferior corn is just what the association is ambitious to do for the crops of all the people of mission lands, whose fields produce so little that they live in poverty such as an American can scarcely conceive. Many leaders in missions believe that in the next decade agricultural missions are destined to increase rapidly in volume and effectiveness; and that, because agriculture is the occupation of three-fourths of the people of mission lands, the success of all missionary endeavor will be immeasurably furthered by a strong program of agricultural missions adapted to the rural life of the majority.

Rev. R. N. Hillyer, after a pastorate of more than four years, has resigned at Hamlin, Kan., and accepted a call to the church at Horton. Mr. Hillyer says: "I am leaving one of the finest country churches in northeast Kansas. The membership is 150 and the salary $1200 and parsonage." The church is looking for a real leader.

Dr. Leighton Parks, an Episcopal rector, recently invited his bishop to try him for heresy. The bishop has not as yet accepted the invitation. Now Doctor Parks says "The present modernist view is not the fruit of the profound researches of theological scholars made in the last fifty years. It is a disease." If the doctor is right we wonder if he will not tell us how he was exposed to the "disease."

The new Dwight L. Moody Memorial Church and Sunday-school building will rise on the site of the present tabernacle of the Moody Church, Chicago, according to plans now well under way. The building will cost $800,000 and the land is valued at $200,000. Doctor Divine, formerly of the Home Mission Society, is leading in the financial campaign. The Moody Church has been entirely separated from the Moody Bible Institute for a number of years. The institute purchased the old Moody Church building and it is now used as an assembly hall.

In October Rev. Oliver U. Chapman, formerly associate pastor at the First Church, Los Angeles, began his work as pastor of the Bruce Avenue Church, Windsor, Ont. The church has felt a special call to serve the young people of the border city just across the river from Detroit. It has secured the Allen theater in which it holds its Sunday evening service. More than 1200 packed the building on a recent evening. Large use is made of illustrated hymns and musical numbers including an organ recital. Mr. Chapman says that from a personal experience he knows what it means to live in a hall bedroom where he found it necessary to go outside to change his mind.

"The Baptist" is in receipt of a copy of an interesting letter sent by the Baptists of Sweden through their executive committee to the Mariner's Temple in New York. The Temple recently celebrated its eightieth anniversary. "We have heard that your church is going to celebrate her age of eighty years. We wish to congratulate you to all these years of blessed work for Christ Jesus. In your fellowship was Captain G. W. Schroeder spiritually educated. His influence upon young Baptist work in Sweden is kept in thankful remembrance. It is said, that a memorial stone will be erected on his grave. In a few days we are going to send you $100 for that purpose. We have mentioned this to the Swedish Baptists of the United States and hope that they will also partake in the expenses for the memorial stone." The communication is signed Rev. J. Bystrom, chairman, and Rev. K. A. Modin, secretary.

News versus Literature

THE BAPTIST is to be from this time forward a NEWSPAPER. George C. Bastian of the Chicago Tribune and a teacher in the Medill School of Journalism in his recent book "An Arithmetic of News" illustrates what is and is not news thus:

1 ordinary man + 1 ordinary life = 0
1 ordinary man + 1 extraordinary adventure = News
1 ordinary husband + 1 ordinary wife = 0
1 husband + 3 wives = News
1 bank cashier + 1 wife + 7 children = 0
1 bank cashier—$10,000 = News
1 chorus girl + 1 bank president — $100,000 = News
1 man + 1 wife + 1 row + 1 lawsuit = News
1 man + 1 achievement = News
1 woman + 1 adventure = News
1 ordinary man + 1 ordinary life of 79 years = 0
1 ordinary man + 1 ordinary life of 100 years = News.

Dr. Ray Palmer preached over the radio of the Kansas City Star on Jan. 24. His subject was "What Think Ye of Christ? He is anxious to hear from those who were helped by the message. Address him at general delivery, Kansas City, Mo.

The Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference is devoting its meetings to matters which are problems in the local churches. The money problem was discussed by Dr. F. A. Agar, the ministerial problem by Dr. Benjamin Otto. Church clinics have been held on the south, north and west sides of the city with Doctor Agar in charge.

Beginning Jan. 14, Mr. P. A. Leonhart, senior physical director of the Central Department of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, began broadcasting over KYW setting up exercises at 7:00 a. m. each morning. To those requesting it, a chart will be sent which will provide an opportunity for each participant to keep a record of his physical development. Questions regarding health and exercise for physical efficiency may be sent in by any one and will be answered by radio. These setting up exercises will require some getting up exercises as well.

Dr. Bruce Kinney sends us the following story which needs no comment: "One of our Baptist Indians was making a long cross-country drive in his automobile with his family. It was a tedious journey because of the mud. One night the rain was hard and the roads especially heavy. They turned into one of the many public camping grounds to spend the night. White campers were ahead of them but there were accommodations for all and our Indians were given a hearty welcome. Subsequent actions of some of these white campers indicated that they had partaken of stimulants prohibited by law. Under the shelter made necessary by the storm many of the whites were soon dancing and singing songs none too refined. Our Indians were repeatedly urged to join in the merrymaking, but they declined until their little girl of ten years was asked to sing. With her mother's permission and advice she sang "Precious Bible, Book Divine." Soon an almost oppressive hush came over the whole crowd. The older Indians were then asked to sing and with their daughter sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee." There was scarcely a dry eye in the room. This resulted in the whole gathering singing fine old gospel songs under the leadership of our Indians. The whole tone of the evening was changed. When the time came to separate for the night, a woman who had been noticeably reticent during the previous boisterous fun making said to our Indian woman, "You must be a Christian. What church do you belong to?" At her reply the white woman said, "I, too, am a Baptist," and with tears in her eyes continued, "I am so thankful you were here tonight."

Rev. A. D. McGlashan, until recently pastor of the First Church, Elgin, Ill., according to the daily press left Castle Craig, near Shasta Springs, Cal., Dec. 28, on a trip over the southern route east through New Orleans and Miami. The plan is to travel north from Florida to Rochester, N. Y., where it is rumored Mr. McGlashan may accept a pastorate. Mrs. McGlashan is much improved in health.

Rev. Willard R. Jewell has been appointed director of religious education of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago and assistant superintendent. He is a graduate of Des Moines College and Rochester Theological Seminary. He was for three years the head of the department of sacred literature of Linfield College and for the past year and a half has been doing graduate work in religious education at the University of Chicago. He began his work Jan. 15.

WILLARD R. JEWELL.

British papers report a service of unusual power at the Guildhouse when Miss Maude Royden presented a thank offering because of sustained health which made it possible for her to keep all of her speaking engagements in eighty cities during her tour of America. Her subject was "The Meaning of the Cross in the Twentieth Century." She said: "You who have the mind of Christ need never know hunger or failure or disease. If you do, it is because you choose it." Miss Royden, who is not rugged, is doing a work which would tax the most robust. At this service an offering of 200 pounds or approximately $1000 was taken for the starving German children.

Jack Dempsey, according to press reports, has purchased for $500,000 a hotel in Los Angeles. Where did he get the money? From the American public. What did he give in return for the vast sums received? He gave a South American a pummeling. How many ministers of the gospel have been able to purchase a modest cottage much less a great hotel? Not one in a thousand. What do they give in return for their small salaries? It is a shame to mention their unselfish service in the same paragraph with the name of a prize fighter. The difference in compensation is but one of many illustrations of our failure to recognize true values.

There are now outside of Utah about 1200 organizations of those of Mormon persuasion. The membership has tripled in thirty years. These groups are recruited for the most part from our churches. There is a wide-spread ignorance of the real nature of Mormonism on the part of many of our members.

Dr. L. R. Scarborough has been called to lead the Baptists of the South in their effort to complete their 75 million campaign. He will go to Nashville Feb. 1. Of the total amount $48,000,000 has been secured up to Dec. 1, leaving $27,000,000 needed to complete the original task. Dr. O. E. Bryan and Mr Frank Burkhalter will cooperate with Doctor Scarborough. Having had millions in experience they propose to avail themselves of that part gained by the early leaders of the movement.

Missionary Lewis B. Rogers writes: "We are sailing from New York on the S. S. Ausonia by way of Liverpool to Rangoon and will then return to our field at Toungoo, where we first took up work in 1907. The party will consist of Dr. C. A. Nichols, who returns to his field at Bassein, Burma; Miss Shank, who goes to be with Miss Jones in the English school in Moulmein, and my wife and myself, taking with us our four-year-old son. We are leaving behind four of our children, who are in the Fannie Doane Home in Granville, Ohio This is one of the establishments which makes it possible for the missionary to carry on in the foreign field with a heart relieved of anxiety for his children."

The Broadway Church Indianapolis had failed to meet certain conditions and the results justified closing the church and dissolving the membership It was accomplished in good spirit. The building was dismantled and moved to a field with unlimited possibilities and already the wisdom of the changed location justifies the change. The grounds including the parsonage, were sold for $11,000 which together with accumulated funds made the Broadway fund about $11,500. A new church on the North Side was promised the people affected by the change. The First Church was asked to assume the responsibility for this North Side work which involved large expenditures and program. They have gladly accepted it and recently located acceptable land for the new church The cost involved is about $42,000. A church involving perhaps as much as $200,000 will be placed on this wonderful site at the entrance to the new Butler University campus. The First Church has been the godmother of many of the Indianapolis churches and at times a great sacrifice has made it possible for the work of the kingdom to expand. A smaller church making new progress is the little Crooked Creek church. Meetings held by the Rev. C. G. Mears resulted in thirteen conversions. Since the meetings ten others have decided to unite with the church. Here is a field waiting for an aggressive pastor. The salary will be about $2000. The opportunity is unlimited.

Closing Volume IV of "THE BAPTIST"

THIS number of THE BAPTIST closes Volume IV. A casual examination of the files for the period reveals the changes that have taken place in the paper. The changes are suggestive of the moods of the denomination since 1919. The first volume of THE BAPTIST with its superfine paper, illustrated cover, magazine contents and large editorial staff is an index of the high hopes and glowing enthusiasm with which the New World Movement started. Volume II is Exhibit A in the grim evidence of retrenchment, economy and adjustment to circumstances. The paper stock upon which THE BAPTIST was printed was cheapened according to a reduced budget, the fine covers discarded; and the editorial staff attenuated. Evidently the denomination was in a negative mood, according to the testimony of Volume II. The next fifty-two weeks are marked by an attempt on the part of a committee to edit the editors. That of course was symptomatic of the mood of the denomination at the time, for everybody was trying to edit everybody else into his way of thinking and writing and speaking. When Volume IV was started on Feb. 1, 1923, THE BAPTIST, becoming the pathfinder for the whole denomination in point of self-support, again reflected the self-respecting mood of the denomination in refusing to pile up deficits upon budgets which could not be raised. This volume closes with the modest satisfaction that THE BAPTIST has run for nearly two whole years upon its own resources without drawing a penny from the appropriation set aside for it in the general budget of benevolences.

In all these moods of the denomination as reflected in the files of THE BAPTIST we notice a development in the right direction—a development from extravagance to economy, from an inter-church world movement to a local church community movement, from the mechanics of the kingdom to the dynamics, from the spirit of overbearing lordship to the spirit of burden-bearing brotherhood, from the weakness of paternalism to the strength of self-support. It has been a difficult road to travel but the experience in its disciplinary value is inestimable. Both THE BAPTIST and the denomination which it mirrors are stronger and better today than they were four years ago because the four years have taught us the real meaning of that promise in Isaiah which seems to violate the law of rhetorical climax, "They shall mount up on wings of eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint." From flying to walking is God's order. THE BAPTIST closes Volume IV going at a safe gait on its own feet.

Common Ground

IF Baptists are to do their best work in the mission which God has raised them up to prosecute, they must find common ground upon which to stand. This common ground must be spacious enough to accommodate every Baptist who is in good standing in his local church and yet sufficiently limited by certain landmarks to keep it from becoming a public commons. We believe such common ground is to be found in the message of the Baptist World Alliance to the Baptist brotherhood, to other Christian brethren, and to the world. This message was prepared by a committee of representative Baptists and presented to the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, on Thursday, July 26, 1923. On resolution the third Baptist World Congress voted to receive the message, thanked the committee for its labors, and authorized the printing, publication and distribution of the message. This resolution itself is the only common ground upon which all Baptists can stand when a statement of principles and purposes is involved in the deliberations of any Baptist gathering outside the local church, because no Baptist World Congress nor any lesser body of Baptists can legislate for the local church without in so doing destroying one of the fundamental principles of Baptist independence and democracy.

The message is a model of clearness with brevity and of catholicity with conviction. It begins with a definite statement of the Baptist fundamental faith in the Lordship of Jesus Christ which is revealed in the divinely inspired and authoritative scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. The message then passes to the nature of Baptist unity which is based upon loyalty to Jesus as Lord and freedom of spiritual experience and interpretation without the impositions of ecclesiastical authority. Christian unity is then defined as the expression of spiritual fellowship among all who have communion with God in the Lord Jesus Christ independent of external forms. With all who recognize Christian unity in this sense without necessity of a centralized ecclesiastical organization wielding authority over the individual conscience and apart from sacerdotal conceptions of the ministry which involves the priesthood of a class with special powers of transmitting grace, Baptists can join in promoting Christian unity.

The message then proceeds to define the Baptist faith and mission in terms that are general yet definite, laying the foundations of it in the deity of Christ, in his sinless life, atoning death, resurrection from the dead, and promised coming in the kingdom of God. The faith of the Baptists is therefore evangelical holding that God calls all men to salvation through personal faith in Christ and through the regenerating operation of the Holy Spirit. The church is a body of believers who constitute a spiritual democracy answerable to Christ alone. In harmony with this faith the mission of the Baptists in the world is moral and spiritual, making known the will of Christ and securing the voluntary submission of men to him. Evangelization and missions are prime factors in the program of Baptists.

The rest of the message is taken up with statements on religious liberty, religion and ethics, family life, Christianity and the social question, Christian stewardship, the Sabbath, temperance, patriotism and international relations. It closes with these significant words: "We believe the world has come to the parting of the ways. It is another coming of the Son of Man. It is another Day of the Lord. The question is whether the world will pass along the way of order and peace and goodness and faith, or whether it will go down into scepticism and materialism. We believe that the simple message of the Baptists, with its union of gospel and ethics, of faith and practice, with its note of freedom, democracy, spirituality, will find an answering chord in this new world."

We have found nothing in the message that would prevent any Baptist state convention or even the Northern Baptist Convention from receiving, printing, publishing and distributing it as an expression of the things which Baptists hold in common. The message is a dynamic rather than a diagnosis of faith. It stresses the application of the gospel to current problems and yet does not slight the academic explanation of the gospel as a philosophy. Its definitions are comprehensive enough to cover all the fundamentals of the faith without restricting the Christian liberty of personal interpretation. It is an excellent statement of the principles that govern Baptists in their relation to God and to society. Methods and processes in the application of the principles are wisely omitted from the message because Baptists must always be free to adopt such methods and to follow such processes as are best adapted to clothe the living principles with power and efficiency. Therefore we have called this message presented to the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm "Common Ground." It offers at least a suggestion to the various parties in the denomination which stand for a definite expression of faith. Baptists are too numerous and too independent to permit any section of the brotherhood to write their "credo," but could not any Baptist body accept as representative this message which was received and ordered published and distributed by representative Baptists from all over the world?

Explanation Minus Application

THE cook-book is an explanation, but the household would starve with access to a library of the best cook-books ever compiled. The test of the cook-book is its application in the hands of a competent cook, and the final evidence of its value is a satisfied and happy family who eat the things prepared from its recipes. Much preaching loses its force and value not because it is not good explanation but because it is never applied. We used to hear a good deal about applied Christianity, but for some reason that practical description of Christianity has been dropped. The ultimate test of Christianity is its application, not its explanation. The application of it has not kept pace with the explanation of it, because it is easier to explain than to apply, and because early in the history of Christianity the true order was reversed by putting explanation first. Luke in the opening chapter of Acts tells his readers that he wrote his gospel in the right order "of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach." That is now a well-recognized scientific pedagogical principle. We teach the child by having the child do the thing we would have it learn. A recent book has for its title "Why Not Try Christianity?" This is a relief from the many books, journals and sermons that seem to be based upon the query "Why not teach Christianity?" We could well afford to stop for a while the academic teaching of religion until our practice of it catches up with the explanation of it. In fact much of the explanation would automatically stop if the thing explained were tried out because practical application always demonstrates the worthlessness of much that looks well in theory.

The lawyer asked Jesus an academic question—"Who is my neighbor?" The answer of Jesus was practical, for only in the practice of neighborliness could the lawyer learn the lesson involved in the question. "Go thou and do likewise," lifted the lawyer at once out of the atmosphere of the forum and placed him on the Jericho road in the presence of a man who needed a neighbor. This is the crying need today. The denominations are talking too much metaphysically, academically, argumentatively while the road to Jericho is infested with bandits whose victims suffer and die for lack of neighborly care. There are multitudes of sick in need of health, thousands of oppressed in need of deliverance, large groups of distracted people in need of guidance, unnumbered populations in need of salvation, the whole world in need of Christ; and yet we pass by on the other side in our eagerness to reach the place where we can comfortably discuss things that have only theoretical value and require no sacrifice of time, money or self.

We call for a return to applied Christianity. "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," is the recipe of Jesus which has never yet been fully applied. The sayings of Jesus need no explanation; they need only application. It is foolish even to suggest it, but would it not be a real relief if all the preachers would stop talking, and all the editors stop writing, and all the presses stop printing for just one week in every month until our practice could catch up with our philosophy and until our deeds could balance our words? The very best explanation of the Christian religion is to live it. "He that willeth to do the will of God shall know."

Labor and Socialism

PRINCIPAL L. P. JACKS asked a very pertinent question in a letter to the Manchester Guardian last week. Lord Haldane said some time ago that he had given in his adhesion to the labor party because it was a party with ideals, implying of course that the other two parties were not. Many other people take the same position. As Doctor Jacks says: "Certain ethical ideals characteristic of the labor party commend themselves very strongly to a large number of thoughtful people." What he wants to know is whether membership of the labor party, or voting for a labor candidate must be regarded as involving acceptance of socialism, including the capital levy, and nationalization. In other words, can a man be a member of the labor party if he is not a socialist? And he asks the leaders of the labor party to make an authoritative pronouncement on this point.

There is the same difficulty about membership of any political party. Can a man be a conservative if he rejects protection? A good many conservatives have had to ask themselves that question during the last few weeks. The true answer to Doctor Jacks' question would seem to be that there is no finality in politics. Every man must attach himself to the party with whose policy he finds himself most in agreement, though he cannot accept every item in its program.

Doctor Jacks tries to draw a parallel between membership of a political party and membership of a church. Many people, he says, cannot accept all the official creed of any church, yet they are in complete sympathy with the ethical ideals of Christianity. Are they, therefore, to be excluded from membership of the church? The parallel is not quite complete. Christianity is something more than a system of ethics. There is one final and decisive test of Christianity. A Christian is one who accepts Christ as his personal Saviour. If he does not do that, his acceptance of all the ethical ideals of Christianity does not make him a Christian or qualify him for membership of the Christian church.—Baptist Times and Freeman.

Government Indorses Tithing

THE help of the government in teaching tithing has perhaps never been expected by the advocates and promoters of systematic beneficence. But that is what they get in an official booklet recently issuing from Washington. The federal department of the treasury has put forth a pamphlet of good advice on "How Other People Get Ahead." One of the striking features of the good financial wisdom which crowd its pages is a table showing comparatively the percentages of outlay characteristic of the "tightwad," the spendthrift and the truly thrifty man. In the distribution of expenditures the two former classes, which are not recommended for imitation, are each shown spending 1 per cent for "giving." But the thrifty man, who is the model that the government sets up for everybody's pattern, is recorded as devoting 10 per cent to his gifts for benevolent objects. As Presbyterian Progress says: "When the government and the Bible agree in advising giving away 10 per cent of one's income, it is time we all took account of stock."—The Continent.

Preach the Gospel

A VERY intelligent and earnest layman said to us the other day that he wished the ministers would quit arguing in the pulpit about fundamentalism and modernism and would preach the old gospel of salvation for sinners and of comfort and peace for burdened and weary men. We sympathize with the sentiment of that layman. A study of the pulpit themes as published each week in the papers indicates that a good many preachers seem to think it is incumbent upon them to plunge into the doctrinal controversy and prove to their congregations that either the one side or the other is right, and incidentally, we suppose, prove their own orthodoxy or loyalty to the one side or the other.

This kind of doctrinal argumentation and hair-splitting discussion of differences between science and religion may be fairly interesting for a time, but it is not very nourishing. It does not strengthen the soul. It does not afford a new inspiration for men going out into the hot contest with temptation and moral evil as these are met in the office or the shop or on the street. The hearts of the people are hungry for the old message of hope based upon the redeeming sacrifice and conquering love of our Lord Jesus. They want to hear about forgiveness of sin, about the fruits of the Spirit in the life, about the joy of salvation, about the indwelling Saviour who makes us strong in the inner man, about the conquest of death and the hope of heaven.

So it is worth while for all of us who are ministers of the gospel to give thoughtful consideration to the character of the messages we are proclaiming lest, when the people ask for bread, we be offering them a stone.

These times of discussion about important matters of doctrine recur rather often in the progress of the church. We need not be alarmed. The truth of God has been subjected to more severe tests than the present one. And it will come through the present struggle unhurt. And the average minister with a community of human souls to look after, with the opportunity before him of helping these people spiritually, has no time to turn aside to doctrinal controversy. He is losing a great opportunity if he fails to ring out from his pulpit, with the urgent emphasis of a heart on fire with love to God and fellowmen, the old gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Gospel of Common Sense for Preachers

By Dean Charles R. Brown

THERE is more common sense packed into this characteristic bit of advice given to the Yale Divinity students by the dean than we have ever seen in print. We give it to our pastors and people with the assurance of a hearty "Amen" from all who are inspired by reading it.

THE modern minister is in danger of losing his sense of perspective. He sometimes sees things near as if they were remote, and that which is far off as if it were within arm's length. He sometimes turns his spyglass end for end, so that the small things appear great and the great things shrivel up until they all but disappear.

We suffer from the idolatry of mere size. If a man can build a tabernacle ten times as big as Noah's Ark and fill it by fair means or by foul with 15,000 gaping people, he is heralded abroad as a great apostle of the faith. If some man can make a showing in figures, which look like the statement of the value of $100 gold in German marks, touching his spiritual achievements, he is supposed in certain quarters to be the greatest spiritual leader since Paul, the apostle. We have attached to the Book of Numbers a significance which neither the higher critics nor the fundamentalists ever anticipated.

We suffer also from the idolatry of mere speed. We find silly people who have an idea that because we can travel sixty miles an hour on our railroads, or in our automobiles, we must be ten times as civilized as were those simple-hearted folk who traveled six miles an hour in an old-fashioned stagecoach, or with horse and buggy. If we can travel 250 miles an hour in an aeroplane, we shall be forty times as well off as they were. That is all they know. They have not sense enough to recognize the fact that the speed of the machine is altogether secondary. The main question is, "Where are we going? What shall we do when we get there? What will be the final effect of our mode of travel upon the spiritual values involved?" When we measure our present mode of life with that yardstick, we do not feel like throwing up our hats.

Growth Takes Time

There are certain values (and those the most important) which cannot be weighed on hay scales or measured off with a surveyor's chain. There are certain processes which refuse to be hurried. They take their time, as expressions of the general method of Him with whom a thousand years are as one day and one day as a thousand years. A century ago men went from New York to Chicago by stagecoach in ten days. Twenty-five years ago the express trains on the New York Central were doing it in twenty-four hours. The Twentieth Century Limited does it today in eighteen hours, and the aeroplane does it in six. Meanwhile the corn in the cornfields, through which the Twentieth Century Limited runs and over which the aeroplane soars, does not grow any faster than it did when Pharaoh saw the seven fat ears growing by the banks of the Nile. And the baby boy who is sometimes carried on the Twentieth Century Limited takes just as long to develop his first tooth as did that babe which slept in the ark of bulrushes. The things which are vital, the things which are not made wholesale by whirling machinery, grow—and growth takes time.

I speak of this because many a minister, when he enters a community, is not content to sow good seed in good soil well prepared, and then wake and sleep, night and day, allowing the seed to grow, he knows not how. He must achieve a large, glittering success right off by filling his church to the doors and by having everybody in town talking about it. He must do this that he may be written up in those foolish phrases which have invaded even the place of worship, as a "live wire," a "good mixer," a man who is "right there with the goods."

In the long run the minister who achieves the largest real success in any community will be the man who preaches the best gospel and lives the best life. But that takes time. It cannot be done over night, or by a week from next Sunday. And because strait is the gate, narrow is the way, and long is the road which leads to that sort of worthy achievement, there are thieves and robbers who undertake to climb up some other way.

These men know that those methods of instruction and persuasion, moral appeal and spiritual renewal described, honored, and blessed here on the pages of the New Testament are exceedingly slow in getting results. They want something brisker and more up-to-date. They know that a liberal supply of printers' ink splashed upon a community in startling, sensational advertising, and the putting on of a moving picture show for the Sunday evening service, where stirring scenes come hot from the reel, will fill the church at once. They choose, therefore, the way of least resistance. They do it, strangely enough, in the name of Him who said, "If any man would be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow." The Christian way, as it lies outlined here in the four Gospels, is anything but the way of least resistance.

I have heard ministers maintain with a measure of plausibility that there are moving picture shows in the churches on Sunday nights which are distinctly religious, which are clearly efficacious in the creation and culture of Christian impulse. I have never seen any such. I have heard about them, and I have been told repeatedly that there was one over in the next county seat. But when I reached that place and made inquiry, the people there told me that they had never seen such a service, but that they were informed that there was one some forty or fifty miles farther on. Of this one thing I am sure. When I ride through the streets of our cities and towns, or when I scan the amusement columns of the daily papers, this amusement-loving age of ours does not seem to be in such sore need of more moving picture shows that the Christian church should go into the moving picture business in order to meet such alleged need. Six days the movies labor and do their work; the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, our God. In it let them rest, if they will, that their man-servants and their maid-servants also may rest. And because the people get enough of the movies during the other six days, let us undertake to give them something better on Sunday.

The Effect of a Sermon

Several years ago here in Battell Chapel at Yale University Dr. Albert P. Fitch preached a stirring sermon on the folly of the man who wastes those opportunities which are his during the four precious years of college training. He referred to the fact that some college students of his own acquaintance were accustomed to go to the movies twice every day in order to be sure of seeing all the reels which were brought to town. He then characterized such a use of time by college students as he naturally would.

When the service was over, my good friend and neighbor, the late Williston Walker, happened to be walking out just behind two members of the junior class in Yale. One of them said to the other, "What did you think of what Dr. Fitch said about the movies?" "Aw," replied the other, "it was all rot! He is an old stiff!" "No," the first man said, "I did not feel just that way about it. I think twice a day is too much. After this I am only going once a day." And on that high level of moral determination he walked out, blessed and benefited by the hour of worship in Battell Chapel. In the face of that mood, which I fear is not altogether uncommon, the church of the living God has something better to do on Sunday night than to make its futile contribution to a further supply of moving picture shows.

Now if that swift, cheap and easy success, which is not worth the candle, does not satisfy the demands of our ministry, how shall some worthy form of success in ministering to the needs of a community be gained? There are many lines to be followed here, because there are diversities of operation by the same Spirit. I wish in this opening address of our divinity school year to name and to exalt just one. In my judgment the best thing that the minister of Jesus Christ can do in these hurried, troubled times is to be in the fullest sense of the word a shepherd.

When Charles E. Jefferson, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, gave his lectures on preaching at Bangor Theological Seminary, he began the first one with these words: "Of all the titles which have been minted for the envoys of the Son of God, that of 'the shepherd' is the most popular, the most beautiful, and the most ample. Bishop, presbyter, preacher, priest, clergyman, rector, parson, minister—all of these have been long in use, but not one of them is so satisfying or sufficient as 'shepherd'." They have certain limitations, and some of them have come to have unpleasant historical association; "but when we come to shepherd, we reach a title without spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

It was the figure used by the Master himself in one of the loveliest descriptions he gave of his own work and of ours. "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, is a thief and a robber. He that entereth by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. The sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his sheep by name and leadeth them out. He goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice. The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

If we could take those words and write them into the commission of every man here for all time, and cause them to be inscribed between the lines of his certificate of ordination, and photograph them upon the tables of his heart, where they would be known and read of all men, like Paul's Epistle of old, and have them embedded in the secret places of each man's soul, we would feel, as a faculty of Divinity appointed to train men for spiritual leadership, that we had done well.

Duties of the Good Shepherd

Now there are three things which the good shepherd must do for the sheep.

First, he must find them. In the vanity of their minds there are ministers who have had an idea that if notices are inserted in all the daily papers that sheep will be fed at 11 a. m. and at 7:30 in the evening in the church on the corner, all the hungry, needy sheep in town will be on hand to receive their fodder in due season. And the simplicity of their faith is such that it goes even farther. They believe that if there are inhabitants of that community whose general appearance and ordinary conduct would warrant the census taker in enrolling them as goats, they too will be present to be transformed by the renewing of their minds and by partaking freely of the heavenly manna in eloquent sermons, into well-behaved, promising members of the flock.

One would suppose that sufficient experiments had already been made along that line to convince even the wayfaring man and the fool that this expectation is unwarranted. "I am sent," Jesus said, (and you can hear the note of sympathy in his voice) "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." The lost sheep were not there when the food was spread out in goodly abundance before the faithful. They were "out on the mountains wild and bare, away from the tender shepherd's care." And so the good shepherd, who was not a hireling, went out where the sheep were.

My Comrade

WHEN startled awake in the darkness,
And gripped with haunting fear,
A Presence softly whispers:
"Fear not, for I am near."
And I lie so still on my pillow,
Calmed by that voice divine;
And trust responds to His speaking,
And the gift of sleep is mine.

In the crowded streets I walk,
And oh, such a lonely place:
In all that hurrying throng,
Not one familiar face.
And then a peace steals o'er me,
For thought has brought Him near.
He walks so close beside me,
My heart is filled with cheer.

I stand by an open grave,
And I shrink from its depths of gloom.
In sadness I think of the end:
Lifeless forms in the darkened tomb.
Then a voice from the darkness whispers:
"The end? Oh no, just the start—
The start on a shadowless pathway,
But the end of the aching heart."

—HELEN S. BROWN.

What a picture Jesus drew of that action! "What man of you having a hundred sheep, if he lose one, doth not leave the ninety and nine and go after that which is lost until he finds it? And when he finds it, he lays it on his shoulders and brings it home rejoicing, saying to his friends and neighbors, 'Rejoice with me, I have found my sheep that was lost'."

The good shepherd is not content merely to stand in his pulpit preaching to the converted. He leaves the ninety and nine good people who go to prayer-meeting and contribute regularly to foreign missions, who ask a blessing at the table and have family prayers every day, and goes out for that lost sheep "until he finds it" and brings it in on his own shoulders. How splendid it would be if every ordained clergyman on earth could be photographed more often in that particular action! We should see the kindom of God coming with power and great glory.

"Go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," the Master said when he commissioned the twelve. Go and say it to them with deeds! This is what the great Hindoo poet Tagore said not long ago in a letter to a young clergyman who had just arrived in India as a missionary. "Do not be forever just preaching your doctrine, but give yourself in kindly service. Your object is to win men to Christ. This is accomplished mainly by friendliness and self-sacrifice. Preaching is not sacrifice. It may easily be a form of indulgence more dangerous than any material luxury. You will be tempted to think that you have been doing your duty when you were merely talking about it. The best preaching of all is to be found in doing good." The good shepherd must find the lost sheep by friendly, personal interest and by his unselfish devotion to their needs.

In the second place, he must know the sheep. "He calleth his own sheep by name." He could not call them by name without knowing their names. In order to know their names and the particular set of interests, capacities, needs which go with each name, he must put himself in personal relations with every member of the flock.

Ringing Doorbells

I am well aware that some ministers, who have gone over bag and baggage to the wholesale, machinelike methods of doing the Lord's work, speak scornfully of the whole habit of pastoral calling. "The day for it has gone," they say. "Cut it out! The preacher who is up-to-date has no time to go about ringing people's doorbells. It is poor business to fasten a $5000 man to a 50 cent job and set him down to the menial task of listening to the petty troubles of the obscure."

But my mind goes back to that Other Minister who called himself "the good shepherd." He called his sheep by name, and led them out, and they followed him, for they knew his voice. How can the shepherd speak with that accent of sympathetic understanding which means so much, and call the people by name, unless he has sought them out one by one? That eloquent son of thunder will never learn people's names and their more intimate needs merely by pouring out upon 1500 of them at once the vials of his oratory. He cannot stand on a platform or in a high pulpit and, merely by blowing a bugle blast through his silver trumpet, learn the names, the doubts, the fears and the trials of these people to whom he is called to minister.

The slap-dash, hit-or-miss, helter-skelter, catch-as-catch-can method in which some misguided, lazy, selfish ministers are vainly trying to do their work as shepherds is not only a flat denial of their consecration; it is also hopelessly ineffective. Go to the doctor, thou slug-gard; consider his ways, and be wise! The physician knows the power of and the necessity for the personal touch. He does not deal with men in crowds. "One patient at a time is the rule in all hospitals," as one busy pastor in New York City has pointed out. "Each patient has his own chart at the head of his bed. His temperature, his pulse beats, his respiration, are all carefully noted hour by hour. He has his own diet, his special remedies, his particular kind of nursing prescribed for him as an individual. It is this sleepless vigilance, this minute observation, this delicate accuracy of treatment for the individual man which has filled the modern world with miracles and given the physicians of the body their unparalleled prestige." And does any man here in his conceit think that in his more difficult and august cure of souls he can succeed by offhand miscellaneous methods? He too will have to call his patients by name.

A Name in Worthy Books

It is a quiet, obscure type of effort. It does not get a man's name and picture and words on the front page of the newspapers as would some stirring deliverance on the political or industrial situation, framed up and uttered after the manner of Edmund Burke impeaching Warren Hastings, or Daniel Webster replying to Hayne. It is not as exciting as the discussion of Einstein's theory of relativity, or Dean Inge's interpretation of the doctrine of apostolic succession, in the presence of a wondering and awe-struck multitude. To sit down and persuade one bad boy to obey his conscience and his mother and his Lord seems indescribably petty to some Demosthenes who has been all but raising the roof with his eloquence. But when the books are opened, those accurate and trustworthy books which outrank all the newspapers on earth in presenting facts which count, the work of the shepherd will make much the better showing.

There are men suffering from moral astigmatism who maintain that all this may be well enough for some little rural parish at Podunk Center, but for the city preacher the very idea of calling upon people one by one in their homes and in their places of employ is preposterous. But the city people need it even more than people in the country. The young man or the young woman in the city is in peculiar danger of being lost in the crowd. Broadway and Fifth Avenue are lonesome places, more lonesome by far than North Dakota or Idaho, if you don't know anybody.

Here is Henry Sloane Coffin, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. He comes from a family of wealth and social standing. He is a graduate of Yale College and of Union Theological Seminary, and he studied at Edinburgh and at Marburg. He is a preacher of exceptional ability—strong, sensible, spiritually helpful—one of the very best preachers who comes to our Yale pulpit. His church is well organized, and he has a strong staff of paid assistants—three men who are ordained clergymen and ten women employed as parish visitors.

If any minister could afford to slight and disparage pastoral calling, Henry Sloane Coffin is such a minister. He told me himself, when he was a guest in my home recently, that a thousand calls a year was his minimum, and he often exceeded it. He goes to the homes of the rich, and he goes to the homes of the poor in the most crowded tenement house district in New York City, which is only three or four blocks from his church, calling his sheep by name. And that is one reason—it is not the only reason—why the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church is regarded by many competent judges as the most thoroughly alive Protestant church on the island of Manhattan.

People as Individuals

You cannot even preach to people with that measure of helpfulness which every honest minister craves unless you know them as individuals. If you will go to them and let them talk to you five afternoons in the week, you will know better how to talk to them when they come to church on Sunday. You cannot know them and know their needs. If a man does not love to speak with men whom he has seen, how can he speak on their behalf with God, whom he has not seen?

"Your visit has been such a comfort to me," a man said to me once as I got up to go after making a pastoral call. I had not said much of anything. You could have written it all out twice on a postal card. You could almost have written all I said on a postage stamp. But I sat their fifteen or twenty minutes, silent, sympathetic, prayerful, as he talked to me about his doubts and his fears, his needs and his hopes. And not out of my mouth, but out of a mouth unseen came those great words by which men live. They furnished bread enough and to spare. The shepherd must know the sheep. Give the people a chance to talk to you, if you would know how to talk to them when you preach, and what to say to God about them when you pray.

"He Shall Feed His Flock"

In the third place, the good shepherd must feed the sheep. The shepherd psalm has been for centuries and will forever remain the favorite psalm. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters; he prepareth a table before me." The loveliest solo in the Oratorio of the Messiah, perhaps in any oratorio, is the one which begins, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." And the most complete of all the New Testament benedictions is the one which says, "May the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, make you perfect in every good work to do his will."

When you undertake to feed the sheep, you will discover that much of that work will also have to be done by hand. Many of the sheep which are literally starving to death will not be there when you spread before a waiting congregation the undeniably good things which you have for them in your sermons. You will have to go where they are, and take with you that particular form of food which is best adapted to their disordered condition, the food which you, by virtue of the intimate, personal relations you have come to sustain to those needs, can best induce them to take.

You can feed many lives by your preaching, if you learn how to preach. The hungry sheep come to some churches and look up and are not fed because the man in the pulpit has never taken the trouble to learn how to preach. He may have a wrong idea as to what the sermon is. "The curse of the pulpit," some one has said, "is the superstition that a sermon is a work of art and not a piece of bread."

Know Your Bible

Know your Bibles, the Old Testament and the New, the content of them, the meaning of them, the sound interpretation and application of what is to be found there! Know your church history, that you may have some large and just understanding as to how the religious impulse has developed and found expression in worship, in organization, and in personal conviction. Learn your systematic theology, that you may know how the main claims of our Christian faith are grounded in reason and experience. Know the philosophy of religion and the psychology of religion, the best methods of Christian nurture and of personal evangelism, the spiritual content of the best to be found in literature! Learn all of these things that you may gain an abundant supply of the material to be utilized according to the finest technique you can acquire in your homiletic efforts. Then when you enter your pulpit there will be some hope that you will not be there as one who beateth the air and harasseth the patient people. You will be there as one who feeds his hearers with the meat which perisheth not, but endureth unto everlasting life.

You are undertaking the hardest task to which any human being can be called. I was a pastor for twenty-two years, and I have been a member of the faculty of this university for the last twelve. I know something about the way of the campus and about the ways of the parish. I have been in close touch with lawyers, doctors, engineers, merchants, manufacturers, bankers. The faithful minister works harder than any other man in the community. And the nature of his work is such that it takes it out of him not by inches but by cubic yards. In no poetic sense, but in downright, literal fashion the good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep. But if you will do your work well, the rewards which will come to you will be richer, sweeter, and more enduring than the rewards which attach to any other vocation known to the mind of man

Adventures in Broadcasting the Gospel

By Bernard C. Clausen

This story of adventures in broadcasting the gospel is from the graphic pen of one of our younger Baptist prophets who, awake to every modern facility for extending the good news, has succeeded in fulfilling the prediction of Jesus that what is spoken in the ear in the closet shall be heard on the housetops. Our many readers will welcome this article as a fair sample of what "The Baptist" is increasingly offering from week to week.

THERE were suspicious-looking wires looped up over the inner stairway as we entered the hall. It was my day for church calls, and this was a new home to me. The wires seemed to penetrate the hall ceiling and lead into upper chambers.

"Looks like a radio," said I, eager to open the conversation naturally.

"It is, indeed," said the mother of the household, as she greeted me and invited me in. "It is John's radio. John is twelve. His room is just above and the wires lead to his instrument up there."

"Does he get good results?" I asked, hoping that they had become somewhat acquainted with me through broadcast sermons.

The mother seemed to take delight in the obvious opening. "Yes," she said, "we hear you often on Sunday nights at 9:30. Last Sunday night I attended the evening service at your church. I hurried home after the benediction. When I came in sight of the house, I noticed that John's lights were shining through the windows of his room. I called to him as I entered the hall, but there was no response. I hurried upstairs and opened his door. He was fast asleep. The headphones of his radio set were firmly clasped about his ears. I shook his shoulder, and spoke rather loudly, 'John, what are you doing?' He stretched his arms above his head, blinked his sleep-filled eyes, yawned widely and then said, 'Why mother, I was listening to Doctor Clausen's radio sermon!'"

From which it may be inferred that wireless congregations add to the usual habits of church audiences the additional virtue of frankness.

The Firemen "Go to Church"

That same night while John was blissfully sleeping, a Baptist church in Bryant, Tex., was reproducing the Syracuse service by loud-speaking magnavox; a club room in San Francisco was filled with men who heard every word; our own chapel-room was crowded with members of our evening congregation who had stayed after the regular service in order to hear another sermon preached by radio from a nearby station where I broadcast; the firemen on lonely vigil in our city firehouses were putting by their playing cards and books, and revently taking off their caps were bowing as words of prayer came to them out of the cornucopia of their instruments, and some wan lonely invalids were clasping headphones to their ears with trembling fingers while Boy Scouts from our church troop were tuning in so that the shut-ins could hear their first sermon in years.

With a background of three years' experience in broadcasting the gospel, I confess that the thrill of it is still upon me. The wireless technique has lured me ever since the war. I was chaplain on the U.S.S. North Carolina, and was detailed to duty in the communication office on board. The ship was engaged in transport convoy errands on the North Atlantic. All the jumble of coded and ciphered messages which move their tangle of important intelligence over these peril-filled seas, was brought from the wireless shack far up on the upper deck down to the communication office for interpreting, and every message we sent to our sister-ships and to our shore stations was first turned into code or cipher to protect it from the enemy in transmission. So the magic of wireless seized my mind when it was "essential material of war," and our own lives depended on it.

Months after the armistice, when President Wilson was making his first hurried trip back from Versailles, the naval ship assigned to accompany him and to handle his wireless correspondence with the world during his sea-journey, broke down in mid ocean, and the North Carolina, steaming toward Europe and just then in the vicinity, was ordered to turn about and serve as the president's communication link until he reached an American port. For four days we steamed near his vessel, all of our ingenuity and radio equipment taxed with the unexpected task of coding and forwarding his lengthy but intensely interesting orders and communications. When our duty was done, we started out again upon our ordinary business, but not until Wilson had sent us a personal signal-message, congratulating our radio force on their accurate efficiency, and thanking us on behalf of our country. So the nearest approach I ever made to a naval decoration was a radio approach.

But broadcasting the gospel is quite another experience. When the field first began to open up, we were at work experimenting. A lad nearby, with a little sending set, offered to transmit ten-minutes of sermon every Sunday night just before regular church time. It reached out for a radius of twenty-five miles, and we were excited beyond words one night when the telephone jangled at the end of the sermon, and a long-distance call from Oswego brought the news that parts of sentences had been clearly heard over that chasm of thirty-six miles.

So inexperienced was I in those far-off days that a newspaper inveigled me into posing before a radio set as if in the act of broadcasting a sermon, and only after the photograph had found its way into widely distributed print was I told by a radio friend that the pictureman had posed me before a receiving set instead of a sending set, and that they hoped my radio congregation would not detect the deception! Needless to say, my radio congregation did, and I was promptly and persistently pestered with sarcastic letters from all over the East, containing inquiries from radio fans as to the details of construction used for my unusual photographed sending equipment.

But even then we were keeping two purposes clear. We were not striving for distance. Our real goal was a ministry of the word to those hundreds of earnest Christians right near our church doors whose spirits were drooping because they were debarred from active contact with any church service. Farmers out on the snow-clad hills, aged people hemmed in by helplessness, invalids facing a long siege—these were our special constituency. Early in the plans, letters from them brought us courage and gladness.

There was another determination which directed our policies. We were eager to avoid any suspicion of interference with other church programs. We wanted no preacher to feel that the novelty of this new machine was being used to tear down loyalty to his institution. At first we sent out broadcast sermons at 6:30 Sunday night, and hurried off from the wireless station to plunge into the intensity of the evening service.

Radio Thoughtfulness

After a month or two of this, it was a great temptation when some interested people in the city offered to install microphones in the church auditorium so that the actual syllables of the evening service could be collected and transmitted through a fine big set of their own, and sent out without the wear and tear of preaching another sermon in an already busy day.

But this would have trespassed on regular service time in a hundred other churches. The gain seemed easily counterbalanced by the possibility of influence in the wrong direction. Boys might stay home from church to tune in. Families might be tempted by experimentation to lose the habit of faithfulness. So the offer of the big station was accepted for use at 9:30 p. m., after the church services in the vicinity were all safely over and people had time to get home. Since that decision eighteen months ago, our regular Sunday program has included a radio sermon preached at 9:30 from station WFAB as the climax of the day.

It is not as strenuous as it seems. I have found it much easier to preach from manuscript in broadcasting, although I never use a note or a pulpit desk in the auditoriurm. So the radio task is not the nerve-wracking intensity of extemporaneous expression without the slightest audience-response. Instead it is the quieter discipline of a read sermon. And the ease and fluency of effective preaching seems impossible for me when I have to aim my sermon at a machine, without manuscript before me. There are musical selections in each program, and the order of service is simple and brief. An invocation, a solo, the sermon, a prayer, a hymn-solo and the benediction, comprise the usual outline.

Occasionally I have issued a direct call for decisions at the end of a wireless sermon. The first time we tried it was, so far as we know, the first time it had ever been tried in the history of broadcasting. Twenty-two letters came to me the next week from all over the East acknowledging the fact of conversion, and these letters were sent to churches near the homes of the writers, only a few of them being within the circle of our own church contact.

We have never solicited contributions. Despite that fact, scarcely a week goes by without some gift of appreciation, accompanied by a letter which wrings the heart. Only a few weeks ago, a young business man—a Catholic—summoned me to his office and there announced that he was ready to help in any way toward the extension of our radio plans. He had listened in every Sunday night for months, and was convinced that he could find no better use for his money. I suggested that my own pet idea was the purchase of some radio receiving sets which could be installed by our Boy Scouts from week to week in homes where there were invalids and aged people who had no chance at sets of their own. The young man called by telephone a local radio dealer, ordered three complete sets delivered to me at his expense, and we dedicated them at the evening service the next Sunday. A published sentence asking that people send us the names of homes where such wireless service would be appreciated brought over fifty suggestions the first week. Our Boy Scouts responded unanimously and tests had to be devised for dividing the real radio experts in the troop from eager amateurs. A corps of skilled wireless fans have been selected and organized into a radio unit to install and tune in and repair the machines. Last Sunday night the giver of the sets was invited to go with the scouts to one of the homes where he saw the tears gleam in the eyes of an old, old lady who had loved Jesus for nearly eighty years, but had starved for sermons during ten years of illness, and who was literally astounded at having this miracle invade her own little room. Next week, the Boy Scouts will take that set to a crippled veteran and the week after that to the Old Ladies Home. Winter is shutting them in now, and the radio will bless them with its ministry. The scoutmaster says that the radio machines are worth what they cost if only for what they do to the boys in charge. I think he must be right.

Meanwhile our chapel with its hundreds of seats is crowded Sunday night after Sunday night with throngs of people who will not leave the building after the benediction is said in the auditorium, but who sift through the lobbies and make their way as near as possible to a green horn which rears itself out of a mysterious box on our chapel platform. They wait in respectful silence while I hurry by automobile from the church to that hill-summit on the edge of the city where the sending set is installed. At 9:30 promptly, they hear the voice of an announcer say "This is WFAB, Syracuse, New York. We are about to broadcast the regular 9:30 radio sermon—etc." And when they have listened, they say that it has seemed almost real. They laugh and they cry while it is going on. They tell me they are strengthened. That is all I need to know.

Everywhere I go, I meet people who know me and accept me and welcome my message because they have met me by radio. And when strangers come within a hundred miles of Syracuse on their travels, they recall that they have listened to WFAB on Sunday nights back home, our church looms up on the horizons of their memories, and they hurry to see us in action.

The winged beauty of the old gospel has lured them to a shrine for their soul's good.

I think that if Jesus were here today he could not resist the opportunity of broadcasting the gospel. Not if he could see Mrs. Euwell, ninety-two years old, smile through her tears, as the headphones bring the message to her dull ninety-two-year-old ears, and to her bright, nineteen-year-old heart.

How to Solve Evangelistic Problems

BY ARTHUR B. STRICKLAND

AT this time of year when churches are stressing evangelism this article will be helpful. It is a serious problem just how to reach the people who need to be evangelized. We believe the Pennsylvania Baptists offer a solution which will work if the plan is pushed and if the atmosphere is kept warmly evangelistic. We soon lose the evangelical faith when we lose the evangelistic passion.

THE churches are confronting a problem in their evangelistic work which was practically unknown a year ago. Then the time-honored series of special meetings, with or without the leadership of the professional evangelist, was harvest time for the average church. It was not difficult then to secure the attendance of goodly numbers of unconverted people.

Times have greatly changed. With few exceptions in towns and cities, the church is finding it difficult to secure any noticeable attendance of unconverted people at its series of evangelistic meetings. In these campaigns most of the professed conversions, those who unite with the church, come from the Sunday schools.

Pastors are finding it easier to raise hundreds of dollars to pay an outsider to do their evangelistic work than to get the members within the church to give an aggregate of hundreds of hours to personal evangelism. It is easier to sing, "Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing my great Redeemer's praise," than to use the one we have in witnessing for Christ. It is easier to sing "Had I a thousand lives to give, Lord, they would all be thine," than to give a little part of the one little life we have in telling to others the glories of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

In these days of changing conditions certain things are immutable. The love of God, the concern of Christ, the seeking Holy Spirit and the eternal Evangel remain unchanged. The things which distract saint and sinner have greatly multiplied. Many of our methods are outworn. With new methods or rather with modern applications of the methods of the primitive church, wonderful ingatherings are the result.

A Presbyterian pastor of a metropolitan church for fifteen years has seen an average of 250 added to his church each year without outside evangelistic help or special meetings. Scores of his church members give a maximum of three hours a week to personal work among the unconverted and unchurched.

A pastor in Oklahoma City organized a band of personal workers, composed largely of the officers of the church, its organizations, and its Bible school. For ten consecutive weeks they met prior to the mid-week prayer meeting. The Ladies' Aid Society served a meal to the band, enabling them to come directly from their daily work to the church. They studied how to use their Bibles in personal work. They listed the ones for whose salvation they would pray and work. Then they went forth to win them for Christ. As a result of this ten weeks' campaign about 300 united with the church, most of them by confession of faith.

A Methodist pastor in a recent six months' period added 532 to his church fellowship. Instead of special meetings and outside leadership, the pastor secured the cooperation of a host of his church members. They went out two by two to all the constituents of the church. There was not a single Sunday in six months when there were less than twelve added to the church. Neighboring churches caught the inspiration and followed the example. In a list of 1000 added to the church through the personal work method, fully 80 per cent were adults.

A Baptist village pastor tried the same method. With a score of personal workers they won ninety for Christ, eighty of whom were baptized. Another pastor organized a band of his men and met with them once a week for prayer and conference. In a short period they won sixty for the church, most of whom were the Sunday-school pupils.

In the old method we expect the sinner to come to us. In the modern application of the pentecostal method, the believers go where the sinners are. A Pennsylvania pastor was anxious to shoot a bear. He thought he had persuaded a party of hunters to take him with them. They were going to a hunters' lodge or camp up on the mountain. They engaged a cook and were to take with them an abundance of good things to eat and some things, not so good, to drink. Since some of them felt that they could not take both the preacher and the "booze," they threw overboard the skypilot at the last moment. The preacher was much discouraged. A fellow townsman met him while he was in this disturbed condition and encouraged him to believe he could get a bear, even without the hunting party's company. He traced out on a slip of paper the roads he must take from the town to the hunting country and showed him on a map "the run" in the woods where the bear could be found. He gave the preacher the bear's address. Next morning the preacher took his flivver and his gun and started for the bear's home. By noon he was back in town, covered with mud from head to foot, but the proud possessor of a bear. He was the hero of that town. He got the bear because, having the bear's address, he went where the bear was.

The party of hunters spent three wonderful days on the mountain. They enjoyed the eating and drinking, the cozy fire and the gay companionship. The bear had their address and kept away at a safe distance. At the end of three days the hunters returned without even having seen a bear. So, too, with many churches. The church members sing out of a rich experience:

"I'm dwelling on a mountain,
Underneath a cloudless sky;
I'm drinking at a fountain
Which never will run dry;
I'm feasting on the manna
From a bountiful supply;
I dwell in Beulah land."

And the saints marvel that sinners should stay away from such a happy band of comfortable Christians. But the sinner keeps away from them especially when they have their open season for saving souls.

The department of evangelism of the Pennsylvania State Mission Society, cooperating with the American Home Mission Society, has outlined the Keystone program of evangelism. This program does not deem it necessary to have an outside evangelist, but the program can be adopted for services conducted by an evangelist and for follow-up work. The Keystone program is being pushed vigorously all over the Keystone state. It is as follows:

Objective: "A soul-winning effort in every Baptist church in each convention year."

Preliminary preparation for groups of churches. The program, after thorough discussion in an evangelistic conference, should be agreed upon by all the pastors. It should then be presented to the local churches for their adoption. It will be found helpful for all pastors to exchange pulpits on the first Sunday, speaking on personal evangelism. On the second Sunday pastors could preach the same sermon to their own people. The detailed program for each of the local churches is as follows:

All the Way

By Ida May Dennison

"ALL the way my Saviour leads me"
Guileless sang the little child,
Thinking not her future pathway
Might be through the desert wild.

"All the way my Saviour leads me"
Thoughtfully the maiden sings,
Trusting in his loving kindness
Faith soars high on radiant wings.

"All the way my Saviour leads me"
Sung at setting of the sun,
Jesus led her through life's journey
"All the way till work is done."

An evangelistic program for the local church. Six weeks preceding the campaign boost the attendance at all the services of the church and Sunday school. Make the mid-week prayer meetings practical preparatory evangelistic conferences. A program of studies, especially prepared for this ministry is to be found in "A School of Evangelism," published by the department of evangelism. Enlist or draft every church officer and every Sunday-school teacher for these six prayer meeting conferences. Early in this period have a special evangelistic conference for Sunday school teachers, officers and key pupils. Use "Pressing the Work of Evangelism in the Bible School" as the basis for discussion in such a conference. (To be had from the department of evangelism.)

The Intensive Campaign

First week: For the reviving of the church, expressed in a deepened spiritual life and in the placing upon the laity the responsibility of reaching the unsaved and the unchurched, especially those whose names are on the constituency roll of the local church. See study No. 2 in "A School of Evangelism" on how to make up such a roll. Cottage prayer meetings will be found helpful during this week, enlisting a praying band in each district to pray for the constituents in their districts.

Second and third week: This period, including three Sundays, should be devoted to a personal work campaign, with no extra church services. Where possible, have two or three luncheons in each of these weeks, at which time instructions on approaching people could be given, experiences exchanged and prayers offered for personal workers and prospects. New assignment of names should be given out at his time. The luncheon should be over at 7:30, enabling the workers to go out that same evening. Personal workers should go out two by two and in these two weeks should visit every constituent of the church; that is, every unconverted or unchurched person in the Sunday-school classes and in the families represented in the Sunday school and church, and all others with whom the church has some point of contact. Prayerfully, lovingly and tactfully each one should be urged to take Christ as his Saviour, to make him their Lord and to unite with the local church. This intensive campaign is the greatest method in modern evangelism. It reaches people where they are and has yielded marvelous results. It reacts in revival blessing on the local church. It is a difficult task, but can be done.

Fourth week: Have decision services in every service of the church and Sunday school. See outline of decision day service in leaflet, "Pressing the Work of Evangelism in the Bible School." On this Sunday have all who made a decision for Christ in their homes make public their confession of faith at one of the church services. (Note. For a number of Sundays prior to this decision Sunday give on alternate Sundays in the Sunday school a brief story or statement on denominational distinction, doctrines, history, etc. On the other Sunday give a striking gospel narrative. The department of evangelism will furnish such material whenever requested.)

Fifth week: Public evangelistic services for the training of the new converts and others in the privileges and responsibilities of the Christian life and of church membership. During this week special effort should be put forth to reach those of the constituents as yet unreached. Wherever it is deemed advisable, "disciples" classes for prospective church members, especially from the Sunday school, could be started during the week. The department of evangelism, on request, will commend suitable courses.

Fifth Sunday: Baptism and reception of new members. A program on how to conserve the results of such a campaign will be furnished by the department of evangelism whenever it is so requested.

Foreign-Speaking Groups in the United States

Czecho-Slovak Baptist Convention of America

THE past year has indeed been a fruitful one in the life of our convention. Several new missions were added to our list and many new members have been brought into our churches through baptism. This has also been the first year that the convention had a general missionary of its own in the field.

But those are perhaps not the outstanding achievements of the year. We are glad to report, that at the last session of our convention a new organization was born—the Czecho-Slovak Woman's Baptist Mission Union. We have faith in this new organization, for women have a great enthusiasm for the missionary cause. They have already taken steps toward supporting a woman missionary in Czecho-Slovakia.

The other that we consider an outstanding achievement happened within the last few days when in the session of our executive committee, final arrangements were made toward supporting a missionary pastor also in Czecho-Slovakia. No! Our churches have not withdrawn from the New World Movement. But in spite of the fact that there is only one self-supporting church, our record shows, that during the past fiscal year over $3000 were paid in to the Board of Promotion. It was above our pledges that money was received, so that the convention may do some sort of missionary work of its own.

It has been said, that one cannot live on his own reputation. Neither do we expect to live in the future on the achievements of the past. These we consider as the beginning of great things which are to come. We are hoping, that the desire of our young people will be realized and the organization, for which steps have already been taken, completed at our next session in Cleveland. Organized young people is our expectation. That we hope will be another missionary unit in the life of our churches. Most of our churches have adopted the regular B. Y. P. U. program for their young people, and what they now need is a "united front" for the kingdom among their kind.

Of course we have some needs. We need some more pastors—several of our churches are without pastors. It is with great hope that we are looking toward International Seminary, where several of our young men are now preparing themselves for the task.

We need more publicity. We are now publishing a monthly paper. It is a great help to us, but has proved to be yet very insufficient for the great need. The pastors in different cities are devoting whatever time they can spare from their own pastoral duties, to give to this paper. We need greatly to improve this periodical so it may become a missionary as well as an educational tool in the hands of our people.

Above all, brethren, we need your interest in us and your prayers for us. So that the Lord of the harvest would thrust forth the laborers into our Czecho-Slovak field, and help them to deliver the message that our Master would have them to deliver.

Chicago. E. CATLOS.

The Italian Baptist Association

IN spite of serious situations in connection with some of our fields we are confident that if we keep at our task with loyalty and devotion our problems are destined to lead us out into some far-reaching results. The past year has been marked with considerable progress both spiritual and material. The accessions by baptism were over 400; the contributions for all objects, have amounted to nearly $40,000. We can report also three new places of worship, two already dedicated and one nearing completion. There are Monson and Hyde Park, Mass., and Newark, N. J. It is expected that ground will be broken this spring for three more edifices, two in Providence, R. I., and one in Waterbury, Conn.

The outlook for the coming year we believe will lead to the placing of greater emphasis upon the attainment of our fifteen goals—one of them being self-support. Complete freedom on the part of our churches to work out their destiny can come only with financial independence.

Our needs are: 1. A summer camp for our Italian young people where the choicest of them may receive training and inspiration for leadership. 2. We are desperately in need of an adequate subsidy for our denominational Italian paper in order that we may have an effective evangelization medium among the people who do not attend our services regularly. Other denominations are making ample provisions for this important means of making known the gospel of our Lord and Saviour. 3. A most valuable contribution would be made to the life of our workers if our association were in possession of a good-sized home with some land in New York, New Jersey or Connecticut. Such a property would enable our men to enjoy the brief vacation which is usually granted them, and it would offer also the possibility of an occasional spiritual retreat.

The officers of the association are: Pres., Antonio Mangano; vice-pres., Arturo Ventura; secy., Bendetto Pascale; treas., Vincenzo Coletta; editor of Aurora, Antonio Perrota.

The General Conference of German Baptist Churches of North America

WE feel that we have had an important share of the work of the kingdom of our Lord. About 100 missionary pastors and assistants have been supported, homes have been sustained, publication work carried on, students prepared for the ministry, aged ministers aided and a pension fund stimulated. The pension fund has reached $90,000. Widows and orphans have been helped. The A. B. F. M. S. has been aided materially.

In ten different European countries about ninety missionaries have been supported, wonderful revivals were reported, $2500 was spent for Bibles in Russia. These are the forces that work for peace in Europe.

Ten new students have entered the German department of Rochester Theological Seminary, making a total of fifty-five now studying for the ministry.

The great distress in Germany has caused a considerable influx of immigration to our country and many of the city churches are experiencing a new vision of their responsibility to them. Already accessions by conversion and baptism are frequent. In a little over a year's time $207,496 was raised for missionary purposes. Of this amount about $60,000 was spent for relief in Europe.

The Baptist Herald has entrenched itself among our young people, a monthly paper in the language of the country and edited by Rev. A. P. Mihm. Over 3000 subscribers already won and 2000 more is the aim for 1924. The work among the young people is encouraging.

But we need more consecrated, educated men for the ministry, men with common sense and ability to speak well in two languages.

We need a deeper sense of the lost condition of the masses around us and the passion of Christ constraining us to help, lift and to save.

We need the spirit of intercessory prayer and devotion in the homes.

We feel that if we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all other problems would adjust themselves more readily.

Chicago. C. A. DANIEL.

Hungarian Union

THE Hungarian Baptist Union of America is composed of forty-seven churches and preaching stations distributed over the land as follows: Connecticut, 4; Illinois, 2; Indiana, 3; Michigan, 2; New Jersey, 8; New York, 4; Ohio, 11; Pennsylvania, 8; West Virginia, 3; Virginia, 2.

Our churches are active in preaching the gospel of good-will to counteract the work of the radical socialists among the Magyar speaking people. We live among our people and we know from first hand information the great need of the preaching of the Word among them. As the result of our missionary zeal we baptized during our convention year 10 per cent of our total membership. The different organizations in our churches are good agencies in developing the church and Christian life among our members.

In the Hungarian department of the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J., we develop a useful ministry by training our young men to be not only ministers of their churches but to be able to serve as connecting links between our churches and our denomination at large.

Our pressing needs are: Financial help to establish mission stations in every Hungarian settlement in this country; In our churches well-trained girls as missionaries, but we need to see to it that they are not trained away from their own people who understand them and are willing to cooperate with them in the work.

We have great problem concerning our young people. Our problem is not how to keep them in our churches, but to keep them away from those zealots who want to take them away from us after we lead them to Christ. Our young people are with us and we will keep them in our churches because we need them in the future. We wish to call the attention of those good brethren who are anxious to Americanize the foreign churches, that the natural way is to keep the young generation in these churches.

We would like to see the missionary organizations so well supported by our American churches, that by their help we may be able to extend our work according to the great commission of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ.

East Orange, N. J. STEPHEN OROSZ.

The Swedish Baptist General Conference

THE past year has not been signalized by momentous decisions, but rather by a quiet growth in numbers and strength and in the development along the line of our own spiritual genius.

The spirit of self-help, the willingness to bear our own burdens in the strength of God, and to develop our own denominational life in such a way as best to serve our own people through the means placed in our hands has been most marked, and has probably been strengthened by the increased number of immigrants from the Scandinavian countries, young men and women who sorely need spiritual ministration in their own mother tongue. In line with this development is the policy adopted at our Chicago conference last fall to urge our churches to use our own headquarters as a clearing house for the distribution of all of our missionary funds.

The outlook for 1924 is good. A strong spirit of evangelism is manifested in our churches, an evangelism which is emphatically reacting from the mechanical contrivances of modern professional revivalism and returning to the New Testament plan of simply preaching the gospel in the power of the Holy Spirit. An encouraging sign in connection with our future work is the increasing number of young men entering our theological training school. This implies a promise of more workers for years to come.

Needs—there are many, but the most outstanding among them just now is for an adequate endowment fund and a more perfect equipment for our Bethel Institute. Limited dormitory facilities tend to retard the growth of this splendid institution. The greatest need of all, however, is along spiritual lines. With a perfect dedication of ourselves, our lives, and our means, all the rest of our problems will have found their solution.

Chicago. J. O. BACKLUND.

The Norwegian Baptist Conference of America

YOU ask: "What are the outstanding achievements of the past year?" "Seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" have been experienced by several of our churches. True revivals come from God on his conditions—the faithful work of the churches. Some of them are laboring under trying conditions. The true spirit of Christian sacrifice has been so clearly manifested.

The outlook for the new year is as bright as the promises of God. We have a God-given opportunity for service. And that opportunity has never been greater.

Surely our needs are mostly the same as the needs of other real Christians. Surely we are not in need of the so-called modernists program of doubt and destruction. Two languages, Norwegian and English, are used in all our churches. We are greatly in need of workers who have the required education and can use the two languages in a satisfactory way. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." How much we need more workers and leaders sent from God. We are praying "the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." We are workers together with God. We are going into the new year confident that God will lead us to victory as we trust and obey.

Minneapolis. O. BREDING.

Roumanian Baptists in America

THE eleventh annual conference of the Roumanian Baptist Association was held in the First Roumanian Baptist Church of Detroit, Mich., Sept. 1-5. Nineteen churches and missions, with a membership of 650, made reports through their delegates. The financial report was $16,358, a gain of $3100 over the preceding year. The number of baptisms was thirty-eight. A new mission in Detroit was reported. This new work shows great possibilities for good. It makes the fourth center of work in Detroit.

The association made a progressive step towards better work in 1924 by electing Rev. J. Ardelean of Akron, Ohio, as its general missionary. Besides his regular pastoral work, he is ministering to those churches and missions where there is no permanent worker. The association voted to raise the money to support this expanding work.

Another bright outlook for 1924 is the possibility of new work in Trenton, Roebling and Florence, N. J. There are about 3000 Roumanians in these three cities. The Roumanian department of the International Baptist Seminary of East Orange, N. J., is expecting to open this work with the help of the New Jersey Baptist Convention and the Home Mission Society.

Our chief need for the present and the future is more workers, particularly trained workers. Only seven of our churches have permanent workers. Our students in college and seminary will help to meet this need, but they are not enough. In order to develop the churches and missions already established and to reach more of the 250,000 Roumanians in America, we must have more workers. May God bless our American brethren who have cooperated with us in giving the gospel to the Roumanians.

East China Mission

A SUMMARY of the outstanding achievements of the past year in the East China mission should certainly include the following:

Four new chapels for out-stations churches have been erected during the year almost exclusively with funds collected from the churches.

Mr. C. S. Miao has returned to the service of the denomination having taken his Ph. D. in Chicago in the department of religious education. Doctor Miao is temporarily designated as director of religious activities in the Shanghai College.

Rev. T. C. Bau has completed his first year as general secretary of the Baptist convention. The executive committee of this convention receives in a lump sum the total expenditure of the mission for evangelistic and primary school work. Last week in the annual meeting for the disbursement of these funds there were present eight Chinese, five of whom were ministers and graduates of the Shanghai college and theological seminary.

The mission has just celebrated the eightieth anniversary of the beginning of work in East China. This celebration has taken two forms, extracts from a

THE MERCHANT MARINE AND THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY

The merchant marine and the Christian ministry are not so closely related that one can read without a pleasant sense of surprise paragraphs concerning the one that, with slight changes, might be used of the other.

William McFee, in the Atlantic Monthly, October, discusses the question "Why is it, that in spite of the prodigious efforts being made to sell the merchant marine to the American public, young Americans refuse to go to sea?" His reply, and solution of the problem are suggestive of answers to the query "Why do not more young men enter the ministry?"

Says Mr. McFee, "It may be taken as an axiom that the youth whom we need most in the merchant marine, youths whose parents occupy positions of reasonable affluence and responsibility, have the most difficulty in persuading those same parents to regard seafaring with favor.

"We are advertising our merchant marine as an indispensable and glorious adjunct of our new dignity as a maritime power. We need very strongly youths of good professional stock to officer our ships, and we have to convince the parents that the possible prospect of three hundred a month at forty years of age is adequate remuneration for their sons.

"It is not an easy problem. The young fellow is not getting three hundred but perhaps one hundred or less a month. This of course is 'all found.' But the problem at once arises whether such a scale does not tend to promote celibacy, and whether the sort of men we desire to produce can be evolved on a wage that compares so unfavorably with that of the plasterer and such highly paid organized labor.

"In a country where individual labor meets with so generous response, where none start so low that they may not hope to reach the highest position in the enterprise, the life of a ship's officer is not attractive. In common parlance there is nothing in it. Yet they are unable to avoid a feeling of regret that so honorable a calling should not carry with it remuneration more in keeping with the type of men it demands.

"That is our first difficulty, and it seems insuperable. It remains to propose an alternative. The present writer does this in the full consciousness that it conflicts with the prevailing unspoken creed of all grades in America. But the only possible way to build up a merchant marine, independent of foreign assistance, is the formation of a class of men dedicated to the sea, and the enlightenment of the general public as to the true future of the shipping business. The cost the country must pay is the dedication of a class of men to service of the sea as a calling and not as a means of acquiring wealth.

"The young man needs a very definite call to his profession since he is not likely to come from a seafaring family. He will quite likely find his family benevolently antagonistic and his sweetheart, if he has one, is not likely to consider a ship otherwise than as a rival. He has to cultivate, in spite of these distractions and the inconvenience of a modest salary, a spirit of loyalty and never ending vigilance. He must in most cases resign the great prizes of business life to those who select other careers.

"What is commonly known as character not only is indispensable but is the main requisite for success. It becomes mysteriously apparent to all on board as soon as its owner arrives. Men so illiterate that the very word psychology would defeat them in a spelling match are instantly cognizant of the subtile implications in a gesture, a tone of voice, a turn of a phrase, a glance of the eye. It is singular how this principle of rectitude extorts respect from most unpromising material."

These paragraphs, interesting as they are in their own connection, become doubly interesting when read with the mind intent not upon gaining material for officering the American marine, but for manning the American Christian ministry and the missions dependent upon it. Reread, substituting "ministry" for "marine" and we have fine material for solving the question "Why do not more young men enter the ministry?" Mr. McFee's solution of the whole difficulty is not in attempts to reconcile parents to their sons entering the profession; nor in efforts to force salaries to a higher level; but securing a class of young men dedicated, dedicated by their parents evidently, as well as by their own consecration to the proposed service. Men who have a definite call to this profession, willing to sacrifice much for it, men of rectitude that will extort respect and affection from even unpromising material.

Still the problem remains, how shall such a class of young men be secured? Parents, dedicate your sons to it. Young men, consecrate yourselves to it. Christians, pray the Lord that He will send forth laborers into his vineyard.

THE CONSTRUCTIONIST'S HOUR.

My friend Dr. C. H. Hobart of California once delivered a most suggestive address on "The Constructive Power of Great Convictions." I told him I should like to hear also another, on "The Convincing Power of Great Constructions." Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up. The religious world is crying out at this hour for silent, building forces. Blasting makes a noise, but not the sound of a hammer was heard in the building of Solomon's temple. We are overstocked with obstructionists and destructionists; let us patronize the constructionists. We hear always of the radicals and the conservatives. The distinction, if the measure of their usefulness to the kingdom of God is thought of, is not sound. The vital distinction between the various types in church life and doctrine is not to be made between the progressive and the reactionary, between the fundamentalist and the evangelical; the distinction that counts in the long run lies between the builder and the wrecker, between the "watch-us-grow" and the "watch-it-go" type of man. Less mallet and more trowel. "Hang-Theology" Rogers gained his sobriquet in a tense moment in a great convention contemplating a splendid advance in Christian service; the discussion divagated into politico-economical and theological fields; and Rogers, his whole soul boiling with Christ-like fervor for immediate action, leaped to his feet and cried: "Oh, hang theology and hang political economy, and let's get to work!" He won the day and a title which clung to him through life. There is a strange tendency in human nature to substitute debate for action. In the meantime, the boat is nearing the falls.

We have reached a critical hour. In the presence of an indifferent and pleasure loving world, the church of Christ faces a widening breach in her own walls. What Jonathan and his armor bearer saw at Michmash, our aching hearts witness in our own camp: "They melted away . . . every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture." What will the future hold for the church for which Christ died, if this sort of thing keeps on? An eminent Presbyterian in New York said recently that his denomination —which in some respects is the strongest body in American Protestantism—is threatened at its core. The Church of England is suffering the pains of hell in doctrinal strife. The thought alone that God standeth behind the shadow, that he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh at the efforts of men to control or mar the future of his kingdom, bears up our oppressed spirits. The great patient body of the church stands as a buffer for opposing camps of extremists, with neither of whom dwells its sympathy, while over its bowed head fly the bullets, daily with a lower and more deadly range. One of the most pathetic sights in the battle fields of Europe is the wreckage of ruined cathedrals. Shall a man take fir

Lesson Notes for February

THE FAILURE AT KADESH
Lesson Text: Numbers 11:1-10.
Golden Text: Numbers 14:9

By John Earl

The Failure

The failure at Kadesh was a failure to interpret the past, to trust competent leaders, and to believe reliable testimony. People who had been providentially delivered from the greater power of Egypt now failed to interpret that deliverance in the face of the lesser power of Canaan. The many applications of this failure to interpret the past will readily occur to every student of the lesson. But the failure also expressed itself in the impulse to discard tried leaders like Moses and Aaron, and to appoint untried leaders who would order a return to Egypt. Under the spell of panic this failure to trust competent leadership always happens. It is not far from the failure to trust leadership to the failure to believe testimony. This last failure was the glaring disgrace of Israel at Kadesh, and the consummate crime of those who compassed the crucifixion of Christ—a crime in which all participate who fail to have the faith that adventures.

The Fear

The failure at Kadesh was due to the fear at Kadesh, and the fear was fear of imaginary troubles, fear that resorted to foolish measures, fear that culminated in violence. This is always the history of fear. Individual fears and group fears when traced to their source rise in the mists of untutored imagination and are fed by the turbid streams of the morbid moods of men. Forty years later the Israelites entered Canaan and found no such things as their fathers feared at Kadesh. The second question smiles at the fears of its fathers. How the fear of these simple people at Kadesh echoes in the wars of history! Fear is still prompting men and nations to do foolish things and to resort to violence as the last argument of force. Only perfect love will cast out fear, for there is no fear in love.

The Faith

It was not all failure, it was not all fear. A few people kept the faith. Joshua and Caleb demonstrated the faith once for all delivered to the saints, faith in the facts of experience, faith in the presence and promise of a trustworthy God, faith in the eternal principle that those who are loyal in their obedience to the revealed will of God are invincible. These two men believed what they had experienced in the promised land and they courageously stood up for it in the face of the violent threats of a reactionary crowd. They also had profound faith in the goodness and reliability of Jehovah who had promised to lead them out of bondage if they would only follow. But the climax of the faith of Joshua and Caleb was their indomitable conviction that progress and not reaction was the way to victory. The failure and fears of cowardly Israel are still in evidence among God's people while faithful minorities keep alive the courage that goes forward.

Kondiah Digs a Well

By S. D. Bawden

KONDIAH is one of the three young men for whom Mr. Smith of Nellore has succeeded in getting five acres of land each from the government on which to start their agricultural work, after receiving their training in the Nellore high-school agricultural course. He is one of our settlement boys, and one day I drove out in the car to see him on a matter of business. The three were just finishing their day's work with a gang of coolies and I watched them with deep interest.

They had dug a wide hole in soil of which the first six feet is clay on top of sand. Then they had built a caisson edge of hard wood, and then a layer of lateral stones, tied on with palmyra fiber ropes, other thicker ropes being wound around and around the circle of stones to hold them together. When I arrived there were two layers of stones above water level, the latter being about six feet from the surface, and there were eleven layers of such stones each a foot high, tied in a cylinder about twelve feet across, with the wooden edge beneath and the weight of the stones helping to sink the well as well as to furnish the wall for it when finished.

They laid across the well from edge to edge two palmyra tree trunks, with other planks across them for the coolies to stand and work on. Two bamboo ladders tied together also lay across the hole with rope running down inside nearly to the bottom. Four men were diving under the ten feet of water and filling baskets with sand from the center, which, after the men came up, were pulled to the top of the well, the sand dumped and shoveled off to one side by two coolies. Then two men dove down with spades and cleared the sand from under the edge, and after coming up to get their breath, four of them together made several trips down and with their hands together worked that whole wall down evenly till only one layer of stone appeared above the surface. The next procedure would be to tie on another row of stones and repeat the process till they had the well nearly twenty feet deep, when they expected to have a plentiful supply of water. It was one of the most interesting things I ever saw—that well slowly sinking while the four men were out of sight beneath the water.

WE hurry almost everywhere else. Imagine us coming in at the end of the first half of the big football game or even after the first act at the theatre! Occasionally, perhaps; but only occasionally.

Now the public worship of the church is more than a sermon. The sermon is of great importance; but it can not be of the greatest possible importance unless the worshiper enters into the full spirit of the entire service, thus preparing the mind and the heart to think and feel as in an "innermost chamber," freed from external conditions which always becloud certain parts of our thought life.

Could we not be present for the opening of the service if we tried a bit harder? Another suggestion: If unavoidably late could we not be careful to come into our places between the "Gloria" and the first hymn or between the scripture lesson and the anthem?

into his bosom, and his clothes not be burned? It is the day of Sanballat. Herod and Pilate are become friends.

What shall be the attitude of the man who is neither radical nor reactionary in his beliefs, the man who belongs to the six millions out of the seven millions of our denominational body? Will his demand that he be let alone to serve and pray be met with contempt and sneers? Will he be forced into one of two positions, both doctrinally abhorrent? It is the constructionist's hour. A somewhat extended knowledge of our churches and the average church member, on whom the hopes of the future depend, brings the overwhelming conviction that he looks for, and will go a long way down the road to meet, the leader that will hold up before his eyes an all-sufficient Saviour for his sins, an all-absorbing task for his hands, a glowing hope for his consolation. The world war has been followed by a period of unexampled home building. Oh, that the sound of doctrinal battle may yield to the music of saw and hammer! Shall the children ask for a fish and be given a serpent? Arthur S. Phelps.

One More Day's Work

IT had been a day of utter pain. Wracking. Exhausting. And just as dusk was closing down on the weary room her little Guardian Angel came in on tiptoe, leaning over the foot of the bed to say in her beautiful tranquil voice: "My dear, I bring you such good news. You are to have only one more day of this to endure...."

She gasped. It was so sudden a warning that her ears seemed to boom with a roar of mighty oceans. She seemed to feel herself sinking, then rising again.

"How——do you know all this?" she managed to ask, finally.

But in that moment of utter weakness the little Angel had departed, and she was alone with herself. Herself, and that——Fact.

Plainly, she was startled and horrified. "This will keep me awake all night," she complained, in her worried invalid fashion. And then, with a crooked wincing smile, she remembered: there would be all eternity now to sleep in. Why worry about this one last night: "I can afford to stay awake! Indeed, I had better, for there is so much thinking to be done...."

But because she was not worrying about sleep that night it came to her—deep and sweet and comforting. She seemed to walk through cool green meadows with her hand in the hand of Some One.

"I wish this need never, never end," she confided in him, "for tomorrow I have to die."

"In that case it will not end," this Other One said. And she awoke with a contented sigh. Awoke to life, and the—Fact.

It was a Fact which required much thinking about. For she was not ready to die. "To tell the truth," she said to herself, "I haven't done half the things I've always been intending to do. How I shall have to hurry if I'm to get everything done before evening! I shall certainly have to sift away the non-essentials and choose the big glaring oversights to be cared for before I—go."

Waves of self-pity rushed over her: "I never, never, never, can do it all in one day! I ought to have had more warning than this! One more day? Why, it's not nearly enough. But I'll make a list, and perhaps if I hurry—

She took pencil and paper. What particular thing haunted her most deeply? It was baffling how many ideas surged all at once through her mind. Out of the host, she selected the Poor Old Lady.

You see, she had always meant to call. She had always meant to lessen the tedious cheerlessness of the Old Lady's meager lonely days: There were dozens of tiny kindnesses, mere nothings really, but they would have lifted the dullness by their coming—a note now and again; a glass of jelly; magazines; a gay basket of jolly red apples; a quaint little box of hard candies. Oh, a matter of five minutes a week would have done it, probably. But somehow, she never had had time free for old ladies. Until now, facing eternity, this particular Old Lady seemed so absurdly prominent. Why choose her, among all the horde of undone tasks? She had no least idea; but she drew out her checkbook and wrote in an order for a dollar payable to a certain popular woman's magazine. "She'll be distracted once a month from the darkness of her surroundings," she said; and on a separate slip of paper suggested the dates and the small remembrances she wanted sent. "Bless her sweet old soul! She'll know now that I do appreciate the depression of invalid days, one on the heels of the other, uneventful, hopeless. And now, what next?"

Letters! Letters! Letters!

She wrote them eagerly and penitently. "My dearest Jane: It isn't that I haven't been visualizing you daily on that hateful ranch with all your abominably ravenous men-folks to cook for and a wilderness of prairies hemming you in, but I've been too rushed to write...." Then cousins. Nieces in college. A nephew who was a sailor. Another school friend. Her pastor—to thank him for all those splendid sermons she had always meant to put into practice, but had never gotten around to attempting until now, when, on the brink of eternity, it seemed too late. "How I wish there were two of me!" she wrote to him, and even her pen seemed to sob.

Two of her? She held the telltale pen suspended—did she mean it? Did she want an Alter Ego? What was it this same pastor had often preached about a Christian's "other half"?

Whole phrases and sentences came flocking into her mind, pell mell: money, money was her Other Half! Had she earned it? Then it was simply her minutes and hours and days transmitted into something tangible, concrete. Something current in the realm, to be held in her hand and fondled. Something of which she could say proudly: "This is myself. My brain wrought it. My particular bent of ability earned it. My labor has not been in vain for at so much an hour I can now hold it coined into dollars and cents. Behold, my Other Half!"

Over the backs of pews, out across the miles of ether between her church and her home she suddenly heard the Voice from the Pulpit reading a verse addressed to ancient Jews, and therefore doubly addressed to her modern Christian self: "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments . . . lest thou say in thy heart, my power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord—thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth."

And: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me."

It was a decided shock to her to find that her Alter Ego had really never joined the Baptist church! She herself could sing on a Sunday morning about her Baptist missionaries: "Speed away! speed away!" and "O Zion Haste!" but her Other Half lay silently deposited down town somewhere, in a bank.

Face to face with death, she felt the insincerity of this unvocal idle part of her. She thought for hours, and then she made three memoranda:

"Quite definitely, I want my town to be the better for my having lived in it. I think there may be a Christian worker badly needed whose salary I can supply. I therefore herewith bequeath...." She had a moment's satisfactory glimpse of this unknown person climbing tenement stairways, going through dim hallways, knocking at some door. "She's mine! Mine! Mine!" her heart sang happily.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

THE mighty master Michelangelo
While working with his chisel, oft was known
To place above his head a candle prone,
That every stroke should be within its glow,
That he across his art should never throw
The shadow of himself, but carve each stone
In free accord with promptings from the throne
To his responsive genius here below.

So may thy love above my forehead shine
That neither shadows of a weary mood
Nor dark reflections sorrow brings to mind
Shall mar the lives God wills me to refine;
But ever may thy radiant spirit brood
O'er all my daily toil for humankind.

—The Outlook.

Next she wrote, with infinite thought: "I realize that in just a few hours now I shall be going like an immigrant from earth to heaven. I feel a cold uncertainty about it—will I be happy there? I know no one. Where will I live? What will I do? Who will there be to care for me? The way is so dark! I'm wondering now if that is not the way newcomers feel on landing in this country. I've never welcomed them. I've meant to. But now it is too late, except as this bequest of money can help the Christian Americanization program of my denomination. A queer neighbor to mankind—a useless citizen I have been, to be sure."

The hours were ticking relentlessly by; already the setting sun was flooding her west window. She wrote once more: "I have had much pride of race and family, and now I am suddenly wondering if a white skin and a delicate breeding are sufficient recommendations for God's favor. Surely yellow men have this pride, too. And black men. Red men. They all can trace back to successful ancestors. Suppose, when I leave this white envelope behind, that I begin to look, in that spirit world, just like the people who had a yellow envelope, or a black, or a red. Suppose the Creator says fondly: "There, my dear children, are your brothers and sisters; what have you done to help them?' Imagine answering: 'Nothing Lord; nothing!' "

While the twitter of nesting birds filled her ears she wrote in the gathering gloom: "To help mankind find God I give to the missionary work of my denomination——dollars."

"Thank God for my Other Half!" she ejaculated, for now that the last moment of her day had come she was still dissatisfied, but at least she had undertaken some of the King's business. "If only I could have one more day's work," she sighed regretfully, as, weary beyond belief, she went to bed and lay down. She folded her hands. Quiet filled the room. She had meant to pray, but she was too exhausted to form words. She lay there in the dusk—a little fearful, but waiting.

And while she waited she began to feel deliciously rested. A peace that passed understanding came into her soul. "The beauty of holiness," was the phrase her mind unconsciously formulated to express the utter loveliness of her sensations. In complete surprise she found herself saying: "I am dead! That is what has happened to me—it is all over, and I am dead. How easy it was! I am dead, and this is heaven."

Like the sound of many waters she heard the kind voice of the Lord God saying while she was still a great way off: "This my daughter was dead, and is alive again; she was lost, and is found."

"Alive?" she repeated, mystified. "But I thought I was in heaven."

Her little Guardian Angel had come in on tiptoe to lean over the foot of the bed: " You are!" she said in her beautiful voice. "For the kingdom of heaven is in you, my dear! All day you have been creating it as you brought to pass the prayer which the Saviour taught: 'Thy kingdom come—on earth, as it is in heaven.' All your life you have been dead, and behold! you are alive forevermore."

"And will God give me one more day's work tomorrow?" she asked eagerly.

Into the quiet of that tranquil room the little Angel, departing, whispered: "God always gives the dawn of a tomorrow."

And she who had thought to die, closed her eyes in perfect peace and slept. He giveth his beloved sleep! While through the silent watches of the night I think there sounded an old familiar hymn:

"One more day's work for Jesus,
One less of life for me,
But heaven is nearer
And life is dearer
Than yesterday to me."

To the Chimney Corner Readers,

By a curious coincidence, while I was writing "One More Day's Work" a letter was on its way to me from Doctor Earl to say that the management of THE BAPTIST feel it would undoubtedly be for the best interests of the paper to have more news notes, and in order to get the necessary space this page would be omitted beginning with the next issue, Feb. 2, the children's columns only being retained.

I realized that I had, literally, only "one more day's work" to do for this particular page which has given me through the past three years such a pleasant opportunity to come to your individual chimney corners to tell you the things which have been in my own mind and heart during the seven days since we last met! I began wondering if it would not be better to write another article to close my work, since parting words ought to carry both a significance and a benediction. But when I read the article over, in the light of a final message, I found that the sincerest beliefs of my entire life were embodied in it! It is the autobiography of a soul: will you not accept it as a valedictory?

I am deeply grateful to the hundreds of you who, though unknown to me, have yet sent forth your wonderfully encouraging letters to discover the route to my front door. Before we close this three-year-chapter, may I not pass on to you the verse from Ecclesiastes which has been on my desk influencing the choice of the various messages for this page? "He hath set the world in their hearts." To make that verse an actuality in all our hearts I find that of our 156 adult articles, twenty-eight have been on home missions, twenty-nine on foreign missions, and thirty-one jointly home and foreign—eighty-eight on our "world," the remaining seventy-eight on other topics.

It has been a joy to know you, and it is in the hope that the best is yet to be that I sign myself

Very faithfully yours,
MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH.

Wanted: Bigger Young Reserves

Dear Young Reserves,

I have just learned that next week you are going to be the whole Chimney Corner, doesn't that make you feel important? Doesn't that show you how highly the editor regards you? And that he is undoubtedly expecting you to grow up into the biggest kind of Baptists that can be made? In case you don't know how to begin, here's rather a good recipe:

One upon a time in the Land of the N. B. C. a reward was offered for the biggest Baptist boy or girl who applied between the hours of ten and twelve on a certain Saturday morning. You never saw such measuring as went on, or such feeding! All the little Malnutrition Girls and the Underweight Boys began drinking quarts of milk and eating pecks of spinach and vegetables until the grocers wore smiles exactly five inches across. For once you could see even their wisdom teeth. That was on account of the big bills; the parents were not looking nearly so jolly over those bills, although each of them wanted Jim or Jane to win. Jim or Jane wanted that, too.

The tapemeasures in town grew positively limp from overwork. "Half an inch, half an inch onward," coaxed the fond mamas, as their pet Jims tried tiptoeing, deep breathing, pompadours, high heels and everything else imaginable right up to the 9:55 on the fateful morning. Then they tore pell-mell to the place where the judges were seated in a solemn row. Or at least they tried to be solemn, but their sleeves were in continual gales of laughter (for judges, of course, must only "smile up their sleeves") on account of the amazing things concealed to make each contestant seem larger: Air cushions—pocketsful of pennies—books buttoned inside blouses—even stilts! For nobody knew quite what "big" meant, whether weight or height.

And then, at 11:59, in walked Y. R. A titter went around, for he was so nearly too late and so entirely too small. Dozens were taller! Dozens were heavier! But he was haled up before the judges who by this time had quite normal sleeves, for they had no more smiles for fakes.

Judge Number One turned Y. R.'s pockets inside out: "What? No concealed pennies or nickels. Why, boy, where is it?"

"Well sir," said Y. R. "there's an offering in our church tomorrow and I

Topic for February 10

"100 PER CENT FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH"

Romans 12:1-13; John 9:4

Read Romans Twelfth Chapter and John 9:4 (Revised Version)

By Robert Van Meigs

Get eight young people—assign one topic to each, as follows: 1, Purity; 2, Humility; 3, Ability; 4, Divisibility; 5, Indivisibility; 6, Responsibility; 7, Dependability; 8, Magnanimity.

Attention! American World War Veterans! Were you 100 per cent American? Note the embarrassment, visible on the faces of the interrogated soldier boys. Hear them answer—"We did our bit. Tried to do our duty. Were ready for the supreme sacrifice. Visit Belleau Wood, Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel, Argonne Forest. Read some of the feats of American divisions and individual heroes in air, on sea and land. Stand us beside other soldiers in American history. Be it far from us to boast, but be it further from us to deny that less than 100 per cent loyalty was our ambition, to the last drop of blood and spark of life." The torch of life for 235,000 soldiers went out, and the late President Harding's tribute to the Unknown Soldier justly ascribed 100 per cent loyalty to such amid the acclamation of our whole population.

Attention! Soldiers of Jesus Christ! Are you 100 per cent for Christ and his church? Let thine embarrassment be likewise visible. For humility is next to the first characteristic of 100 per cent Christianity. Christ calls through Paul for 100 per cent loyalty and devotion. Romans 12:1, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice." That means body, and soul, for there is no "living" sacrifice without the soul. Though cramped for time and space let the first speaker elaborate on:

1. Purity. Verse 1—"Holy," not by personal claims—through the redemption of Christ. Read also verse 2, and recall the president of Princeton University's statement that some young people "are ruled by the goddess of fashion and folly," and be transformed from such.

2. Humility. Speaker two: Read verse 2, "So think, not too highly, but soberly." Not absolute denial of any worth, but humble estimation.

3. Ability. Speaker three reads: Verse 3, "As God hath dealt to each one a measure of faith." "What I can do—by the grace of God I will do." My twin is:

4. Divisibility. Read verse 4, All the members have not the same office, but each has some office. The work of a great army is divided among units, down to the individual. So also the church.

5. Indivisibility. Read verse 5 "We who are many, are one body in Christ." Shout B. Y. P. U'ers. Let the angels and archangels of heaven join with us in hallelujahs over the indivisibility, solidarity and unity of the church, the "body of Christ." No Christian is 50 per cent for Christ, who is not 50 per cent for the church. As well say that you are your father's son, and stay away from home; as well say that a deserter is an American soldier. Hundreds of thousands of our soldiers died in the World War, but the American army remained an indivisible unit achieving a world victory. Christian heroes may die, church shirkers quit, but the church continues glorious and victorious.

6. Responsibility. (Verses 6-8). Recall 4 and 5, and note that we are responsible according to our gifts, whether we prophesy, minister, teach or direct. Some may do all, but all can do some, if it's only to "exhort," "encourage," or just give, do that "with liberality," at least the tithe. When we exceed a tenth of our income, we may begin to claim "liberality."

7. Dependability. B. Y. P. U.'ers, can you measure up to your opportunity, responsibility, and ability, whether you are an intellectual giant or school boy, a banker or newspoy, a seamstress, stenographer, or superintendent? Can the Lord and his church depend on you if all others fail?

8. Magnanimity. Read verses 8-21. From "showing mercy with cheerfulness to overcoming evil with good." Honor the other fellow, be patient, steadfast, etc., a lover of peace, a believer in the overruling providence of God; then (John 9:4) avoid delay. "Do it now"—"in the days of thy youth." Youth may be all I'll ever have. "We must work the work of him that sent us, while it is day. "The night cometh," life may end, and our work be undone.

Say the eight words over again thoughtfully: Purity, Humility, etc. Now stand up for 100 per cent devotion to Jesus Christ, and his church and kingdom.

The Reward

Work in every hour, paid or unpaid; see only that thou work, and thou canst not escape the reward; whether thy work be fine or coarse, planting corn or writing epics, so only it be honest work, done to thine own approbation, it shall earn a reward to the senses as well as to the thought; no matter how often defeated, you are born to victory. The reward of a thing well done is to have done it.

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Setting Up a Target

Janesville (Wis.) B. Y. P. U. has this for its 1924 goal:

First, a doubled membership.

Second, every member a trained worker.

Third, religious education an attractive opportunity for every young person to receive instruction.

Fourth, teach and practice stewardship of service, self and substance.

Fifth, promote an evangelistic program among our young people.

Sixth, be well represented at our state assembly and national convention at Denver.

Seventh, become more familiar with the entire program of our Northern Baptist Convention.

Eighth, develop more fully the spirit of Christian fellowship with those who are strangers in our church and in our society.

Ninth, be an asset to the life of our community.

Tenth, deepen the spiritual life of our organization so that whatever we may do collectively will tend toward the development of a better Christian character for the individual.

"Put It Over"

"Thought plus talk equals 'put,'" so says the Young People's Baptist Union of Brooklyn and Lond Island. They express it in their year's slogan this way—"We've thought it over—talked it over—now let's put it over! The biggest union year." This was the spirit they put into the Bible and missionary conference for Brooklyn. Seven of the eighteen members of the General Board were from the ranks of this organization, several of whom headed such committees as "pep," "publicity," "registration" and "arrangements." Every Baptist church in the association had at least one B. Y. P. U'er. who was innoculated with the Bible and missionary conferences and went after and got registrations. Is it any wonder a large part of the 1400 registration included the active young people?

Our Own Folks

Colonel Edward H. Haskell

By Charles H. Watson

By the death of C. H. Haskell at Pasadena, Cal., on Jan. 8, the New England Baptists lose, in many respects, their foremost layman. Although in his seventy-ninth year, he had all the ruddiness, vigor, abundant interest and enthusiasm of a man of fifty. He was full of worth-while interests, and every one of them seemed to demand that he do something about it, hence he was always actively doing, largely giving, and striving to incite others to share his enthusiasms. Like the soldier he was, his place was at the front. There where the struggle was hardest, and the most of spirit, courage and substance had to go into it, there you would find him.

Sometimes by other men of more calculation, and of less generous self-abandon, a man like Colonel Haskell is neither appreciated at his real value, nor accurately rated or understood. His deeply engaged and ardent enthusiasms are mistaken for the luxury of prominence and self-assertion. Many a really modest, yet great-hearted man, whose earnestness breaks down reserve, and sweeps aside cautious calculation, has to take the risk of being misinterpreted. When death comes and the accounts are all in we get his true Christian perspective. But fortunately thousands of us loved our New England Baptist "Greatheart" long before his sudden death brought a great sorrow.

He Gave Himself Also

Among our comparatively few large givers, Colonel Haskell not only gave large checks, but he without stint, also gave his own large self. Fifteen years ago, the writer came upon him in China, where he was studying with keenest interest the mission hospital. How many times since then he has bound the world with long errands of Christian compassion, and poured out princely gifts, that those agencies of mercy might be stabilized! He was a hospital man, entirely without provincial accent or local color. For sickness and pain he had a pity that was always expressing itself. For healing and nursing he had affection, and wanted for them the most perfect conditions, and the highest skill.

Among business men he was consummate. How he could so successfully launch and guide large enterprises, and at the same time give mind, spirit, personal presence and pressure to so many Christian movements, and enterprises of mercy, no one knows. Yet always he took time to be kind, courteous, and brotherly. And always where a good cause needed help, he was a pusher..

His enthusiasms came to him early, and they kept growing to the end. Nothing was more characteristic than when a "Gloucester boy" of sixteen he should spring into the great battle for freedom in '61. Since then only his Christian interest has exceeded his patriotism.

His Chief Interest

Colonel Haskell's large benefactions, widely bestowed, are well known to Baptists, and the generous terms of his will further accentuate them. But his chief interest was the New England Baptist Hospital. That was his favorite child; and he more than any one else reared it, saved it, and helped to secure for it a fame that has become national. There is something beautifully consistent and complete in that monument of his on the crest of Parker Hill, that will go on generously and tenderly healing, nursing and blessing long after its great-hearted builder lies low. It is the monument that he would modestly have chosen for himself, and the one that we also would choose, complete, and develop for him.

After all, how can we better measure a life, than by seeking for sustained elevation of purpose, and the enduring work it has completed? By this test, Edward H. Haskell is disclosed to us as an unusual man.

Oregon Letter

By Leonard W. Riley

The work of the Oregon churches seems to be quite generally progressing. The church building operations would not seem to indicate particularly hard times. The pastors, whether strong or weak in the pulpit, are certainly proving themselves good business administrators. This letter presents items concerning churches in various parts of this great state.

Rev. D. Q. Barry has recently resigned the pastorate of the Bethel Baptist Church at Gresham in order to accept the call of the Oregon City Baptist church to become missionary in Clackamas County. Pastor Barry did a good work at Gresham, materially increasing the membership, building and paying for a parsonage costing $4000, and leaving a good deposit in the bank toward a new church building.

September completed the first year of the pastorate of Rev. Daniel Bryant at Corvallis. Here is located the Oregon Agricultural College, which has 150 Baptist students enrolled among its students. The auditorium of this church was destroyed by fire about two months ago. The loss, which was approximately $7000, was fully covered by insurance. The repair work is being pushed and it is expected that the new auditorium will be ready for use again about Feb. 1. Pastor Bryant recently conducted a three weeks' revival service in the First Baptist Church at Eugene, which resulted in a number of additions to this important church. Mr. Bryant is the grandson of the Rev. Daniel Bryant who was so well known in Ohio during the pioneer days of that state.

Burns is the county seat of Harney County, which is larger than many of our eastern states. No railroad as yet reaches this community. The pastor of our church at this point is Rev. C. A. Waterhouse. In connection with his work he is issuing the Burns Church Promoter, a twelve-page monthly, which contains not only the news of the church, but some excellent reading material. A revival meeting is now in progress. Pastors at such points as Burns are necessarily deprived of the fellowship usually enjoyed by pastors and should be remembered by those who pray for the workers in the kingdom.

Preaching at Eighty-eight

Rev. Mark Noble, now in his eighty-eighth year, preached at La Grande on the last Sunday of the old year. Brother Noble was for many years pastor of various churches in both Oregon and Washington. He is a product of Spurgeon's school and a remarkably sweet-spirited servant of the Master. He now resides at 1579 Newman Street, Portland, Ore., and would doubtless appreciate hearing from some of his old-time friends and associates.

In addition to his work at Linfield College, Dr. William J. Sly is acting pastor of the Baptist church at Monmouth. The Oregon Normal School

The following verses were written by one who was a subscriber to The Standard for two generations and is now reading The Baptist with eagerness and profit. He is 89 years old.

"The Place of Prayer"

Is there a place, a restful place,
Where faith secures redeeming grace,
"Where heaven comes down our souls to greet,
And glory crowns the mercy seat?"

It is the place of secret prayer,
And contrite hearts are often there,
Where Jesus gives his saving grace,
And greets the suppliant face to face.

Lord, help us each from day to day,
In prayer to walk the narrow way
To live for God and do the right,
To work and pray with all our might.

Then when our course on earth is run,
When glory crowns life's setting sun,
We'll shout with joy for victory
And evermore we'll happy be.

with its 600 students is located at this place. This church has a community house equipped with many conveniences for the use of the students. The congregation is largely composed of the professors and students of the normal school. Professor Sly is using this church as a laboratory for Linfield students in Sunday school, young people's, childrens' and brotherhood work. In December the evangelistic band of Linfield College held special services which were largely attended and quite successful. In connection with the Ministerial Association of Linfield College plans are being made to have every church and Sunday school in the county observe "college day." Doctor Sly's class in religious education recently made a survey of Lafayette community in the interests of the churches there.

On Sunday, Jan. 6, the remodeled house of worship at Pendleton, Ore., was dedicated with appropriate exercises. Dr. O. C. Wright preached the sermon and offered the prayer of dedication. Reports indicate that the remodeling has provided a first class church plan with nine class rooms and three departmental rooms. This church was organized on April 2, 1876, and has ever since rendered excellent service under twenty-two different pastors. The first pastor was Rev. W. H. Pruett, brother of the founder of the church, Dr. James M. Pruett. The church is now engaged in special meetings under the leadership of "Bob" Moore and his singing son Gordon, of Chicago. The city of Pendleton has secured a place under the sun because of the three days' "round-up" staged there annually. The present popular pastor is Rev. Franklin G. Huling.

A Queer Case

Sometimes things happen which give us a striking example of how not to do things. A case of this kind has recently come to the writer's attention. A promising church in an important city in a western state, feeling that the time had come to launch out in its work, decided to do the adequate thing. The already good parsonage was so remodeled as to make it better than when new. They decided to pay twice the salary ever before offered. Thinking that all good things come from the East, after several months' negotiations, a call was extended to a brother who seemed to be of the type desired.

The enthusiastic officers met him by auto at the cosmopolitan center fifty miles distant and whirled him away to a reception awaiting him at the church. Here all seemed lovely. The next day our brother from the East made the rounds of the newspapers, inserting his notices and giving out all information concerning his becoming the pastor of this particular church. Sunday morning he preached a sermon and all rejoiced over the securing of such a strong man. A telegram was delivered to him Sunday afternoon. For some reason the evening sermon did not measure up to expectations. At the close, upon his request, a meeting was had with the men of the church, in which he stated that he would expect them immediately to proceed with a $100,000 building program; that he would expect an increase in salary at the end of the year, and also expect them to provide him with a stenographer and pay his expenses annually to the Northern Baptist Convention. All this, following such a large increase in the financial agreement necessary to secure him, "took the wind out of their sails." Our brother from the East then went home with his host, visited with the family until eleven o'clock, "retired without saying anything about leaving for the East the next morning, which he did between five and six o'clock, so that now we have no pastor." No word has since been received from him.

Comment upon such a performance seems entirely unnecessary. The church may have been unwise in some respects, but even so, such conduct is not becoming a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ.

New York—Brooklyn—Vicinity

By Henry G. Weston Smith

Dr. Geo. E. Horr, president of Newton Theological Seminary, was the guest and speaker at the opening meeting of the year for the ministers' conference, Jan. 7. The theme upon his heart was that the work of the church is not to be and cannot be done purely by ministers, but rather by consecrated and willing and capable men and women who are simply Christian, and therefore consider it their privilege to live for more than their immediate business enterprises. Under the head "A Chapter in Lay History" he presented the life and influence of the Baptist trader, John Kiffen, as a leader among the London non-conformists of the seventeenth century and as one whose influence was later felt in the creative group that centered around such names as that of William Wilberforce and Hanna Moore on Clapham Commons.

Immediately after the conference about twenty-five enthusiastic and jovial Newton men gathered in Lorimer Hall of the Madison Avenue Church, where the conference is usually held, to lunch together and to greet President Horr. Rev. Claude E. Morris presided. After short introductory speeches by Rev. Arthur E. Harriman of the Salem Baptist Church of New Rochelle, and Dr. Lemuel Call Barnes, Dr. Joseph C. Robbins gave a brief picture of the Student Volunteer Convention recently held in Indianapolis. It will be recalled that Doctor Robbins presided at this great convention. The guest of honor was Doctor Horr and his informal talk was filled with wit and wisdom. Claude E. Morris was re-elected as president of the New York Alumni Association, and Herbert Cawthorne was elected secretary.

The Marcy Avenue Baptist Church, of Brooklyn, Dr. John M. Moore, pastor, believes that it has "discovered a willingness to quarrel about Christianity, to argue about it, to praise it, but not a sufficient purpose to try it as a way of personal and social living." Accordingly it announces a series of Sunday evening services on the general subject "Try Christianity." The members of the church are voting on the topics to be treated. Doctor Moore will invite well-known leaders to participate in these discussions. The series opens with an address by Dr. Samuel Zane Batten of Philadelphia on "Why Not Try Christianity?"

Greetings Versus Good-will

An interesting feature of the recent remodeling of the Harlem Baptist Church by its sponsoring organization, the New York Baptist City Mission Society, was the use of a glass announcing sign and new windows without the accustomed steel gratings in the front of the church. Some years ago the protection was necessary to save the building from the hostile street gangs of opposing races and sects, who were accustomed to bombarding the doors with cans and to otherwise defacing the property. The iron fence about the building was retained only to protect passers-by from falling into a dangerous scuttle. The steel gratings have all been removed. Good-will in the hearts of the neighbors of all races and creeds has taken their place, and flower boxes have taken the place of the wire screens in the windows. The chief factors in the conversion of suspicion to good-will have been a weekly motion-picture concert with songs and stories, established for the children of the neighborhood by the late pastor-emeritus, Adam Chambers, and a day kindergarten for the children, conducted by Miss Theodosia Hazen.

FIRST CHURCH, WATERLOO, IOWA, DEDICATED JAN. 5.
R. E. WILLIAMSON, PASTOR.

This Harlem mission is located in a section which was found by a recent survey of the New York World to have the most crowded block in New York City. It is in the heart of the upper East Side and close to one of the worst saloon centers. Yet services of beauty and a life of high spiritual tone have been developed in its midst. The ministry in this field is carried on by Rev. Frank W. Lorimer, Rev. Frank W. Herriott and Mrs. Mary McIntyre. They are showing what can be done with young people when wisely led.

200,000 people visit New York daily, so the experts tell us. And at least many hundreds of them (if not many thousands) each day visit Chinatown. Who would think that he had "seen New York" if he had not eaten chop suey in a Chinese restaurant on or off from Doyers Street? But the bewitching fascination of the Chinatown of fifteen years ago is no longer there; for much of the blatant wickedness is gone. Rev. Lee To, the pastor of our Chinese Baptist Mission, at 13 Doyers Street has been an important factor in bringing about this marked change. Mr. Lee's picture is carried on the front page of the current issue of the Metropolitan Baptist Bulletin, and many interesting facts concerning his life and work are given. He was born in Canton, China. He says: "I came to this country to get gold; never satisfied. I found Christ; was satisfied." His conversion took place in San Francisco in 1890, and his education in China and America followed. He began his pastorate of the Chinese mission here in 1904. "The members for the most part stay here only a short time, going back to China and there bearing effective witness to their Christian faith. Besides being a missionary to his own people in New York City, Mr. Lee is their leader in politics and in social movements. Under his leadership Chinatown has burned its idols." As president of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, with headquarters at 16 Mott Street, he is "practically the head and mayor of the Chinese colony." "A jury sits with Mr. Lee, who presides over all trials. Decisions made by him and the jury are usually final."

J. Mervin Hull

By Charles H. Watson

In the death of John Mervin Hull, Dec. 12, 1923, in his old home town of Ludlow, Vermont, we lost one of the most radiant souls in the Baptist ministry. It was amazing that a man on so slight a margin of physical health, for twenty-three years could produce so much wholesome and informing literature, and shine so far as he did. He wrote a wealth of short articles, and stories, in our denominational periodicals, and in the Youth's Companion, and every one of them was as sweet as honey, and cheerfully kindling to the minds and hearts of our young people. Now and then there would be a book, like "Judson the Pioneer," chock full of everything that would appeal to the best in a boy. In the years of his own desperate struggle with weakness, he was strengthening others right and left, and was prodigal of Christian optimism. His own inward sunshine kept him seventy years. In his earlier pastorates at Windsor, Vt., Kingston, and Weston, Mass., he was a singing, shining minister. Then came the long "pastorate" of twenty-four years of invalidism, during which he took our boys and girls into his heart. He was valedictorian of his class at Middlebury College—a scholar and a poet, and carried with him the light of old "Newton Hill." In his last little poem given at a home celebration among the hills that he loved, was this final stanza—its note no sweeter than that of his whole life:

"Yet often in the distance
I see the heavenly hills;
The sight, with sweet insistence,
My soul with gladness fills.
For soon those hills supernal
Shall nearer, nearer be,
At last in peace eternal,
The Hills of Home for me.."

Barron

Barron is the county seat of Barron County, up in the northwest part of the state. Barron is a country town, surrounded by a prosperous dairy community. The Baptist Church there is a splendid type of a country town and rural church. Pastor Fred F. Parsons has been on the field for two years. Rev. Ralph Barry held a meeting with the church in October, which resulted in six being baptized, with others to come later. During the holidays a gospel team of four young men from the University of Minnesota visited the churches of Barron, and their visit was an uplift to the Baptist church. They indicated to the people that it was possible for one to come out of a great university with his faith intact and his love for the gospel of Jesus still warm. The Christmas entertainment this year was unique. A supper was served to the children at 6:30, followed by one for the young people and grown-ups later on. After the supper hour a program was given. About 300 people were present.

Hillsdale

A few miles south of Barron is the little hamlet of Hillsdale where Rev. S. R. Dunlop is on his second pastorate. For awhile he was at Omro, but the Hillsdale people called him back, and he is having a great time in his second pastorate. Associated with Hillsdale is West Dallas. Several weeks ago Pastor Dunlop arranged to have the choirs of his two churches, Barron and of the Swedish Baptist church nearby give an entertainment at Hillsdale. A large crowd filled the church to the doors. On Dec. 16 he and Pastor Parsons exchanged pulpits, and the churches were delighted with the opportunity of hearing these men. Why do not Baptist pastors exchange pulpits oftener? We tried it here in Milwaukee recently and the folks liked it very well. The brethren at Hillsdale followed the same plan at Christmas as did Barron.

Fond du Lac

Pastor Robert Gordon manages to keep himself busy in this important field. He is in much demand as a community speaker, besides preaching from four to six times on Sunday. The local paper gives him space each Saturday for a sermonette. He is running this under the head, "Sunshine for Shut-Ins," and on Monday gets considerable space in the local papers for his sermons. During recent months the evening congregations have picked up so that now the church is nearly always filled on Sunday night. He recently spoke at the father and son's banquet at Waupun, and gave the address to the district Masonic gathering. One of the things this church is blessed with is a splendid choir, and at Christmas they put on a cantata entitled "Lord Of All." Mr. Gordon is using the group leader plan for visitation.

Community Christmas Tree

Milwaukee has had a community Christmas tree for a number of years. This year it was given a write-up in the Dearborn Independent. Two years ago the feature of broadcasting a message and a musical program each night beginning with Christmas and ending with the new year, was inaugurated. This year Rev. Robert W. Shaw, of the South Baptist Church, gave the Christmas message; Rev. Rollo Spear, of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, gave one of the addresses during the week, and the choir of his church furnished special music. This is putting Christ into Christmas in a real way.

Some Other Notes

Supt. A. LeGrand has been resting during January at Mounds Sanitarium at St. Paul. The work has been quite heavy during the past year, but Doctor LeGrand has hung on and "carried on" even to the detriment of his own health. He is getting into shape and will be back in the harness the last of the month.

Rev. R. A. McMullen began his work as pastor of the First Church, of Janesville, Jan. 1.

There will be an evangelistic conference held in Milwaukee Jan. 1. The team which will be present will be headed by Dr. C. L. Goodell. The afternoon and evening will be given over to a general conference on evangelism. The various denominations will meet in groups during the early hours of the day, Dr. H. F. Stilwell will be present for the Baptists, and the evangelistic committee of the convention is arranging for a conference and a noon luncheon with him. It is hoped that many outside the city will come in for this important meeting.

MAINE

FAIRFIELD: May 1, 1923, Rev. Alexnder Henderson, who for three years had been a successful director of religious education for the Baptist churches of Maine became pastor of the Baptist church in Fairfield. The annual meeting of the church was held last Thursday evening. The reports from departments of the church work all showed progress, substantial attainment and great promise. The financial affairs of the church were in better condition than ever before, the solicitors reporting that considerably more than the budget for which they went out had been subscribed. All bills for the year were paid and substantial sums were left in the several treasuries. The Sunday school, always efficient, has greatly increased; its new superintendent Mr. Worthbrown is proving the right man in the right place and one of the problems ts to find space for the enlarged departments of the school. Scout Master Major Hendee, made a plea for better accommodations for his troop. The problems of the church are the problems of success. With an enthusiastic and able leader, who is putting on a broad program of real service, and with a loyal church that desires to make the most of its opportunity, great things may be expected at Fairfield.

WATERVILLE: The community school of religious education began its sessions Jan. 7, finding admirable quarters in Coburn Institute. A large number of teachers and others from Waterville and surrounding towns were in attendance. Rev. Fletcher H. Knollin, director of religious education for the Maine convention is the dean of the school and is assisted by an able faculty.

REV. JOHN A. SWEETNAM, recently of St. John, N. B., begins his pastorate with the First Baptist Church of Bath with encouraging outlook.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE BAPTIST Convention meets with a great loss in the death of Henry A. Yeaton, who has served as a member of the board since 1894 when he became president of the convention. Since 1894 he has not only served on the board but has been a useful member of the finance committee of the convention. Mr. Yeaton was born in Portsmouth, Aug. 6, 1840. He was baptized into the membership of the Middle Street Baptist Church in Portsmouth in 1859. He had been a life-long resident of Portsmouth and had become a prominent citizen and business man. He was president and director of the Piscataqua Savings Bank and a director of the First National Bank. One of the large interests of his life was the welfare of the New Hampshire Baptist Convention.

REV. JOHN MANTER HAS RESIGNED and will close his successful pastorate with the Ashland church about two months hence. Mr. Manter has been more than usually prominent in church work in New Hampshire. Just previous to the union of Baptists and Free Baptists, Mr. Manter was serving as the state agent of the Free Baptists. Since the union of the two bodies Mr. Manter has served efficiently on the board of the United Convention. He is the first vice-president of the convention. The convention will suffer a distinct loss in the going of Mr. Manter from the state.

REV. M. H. WAKEFIELD HAS resigned as pastor of the Newmarket Church and has accepted a call to the Trinity Church of Providence. He closes his pastorate in New Hampshire, Feb. 1.

ANNUAL MEETING OF MANY of the churches occur at the beginning of the year. Not a few of our churches have had a most successful year financially. The Peterboro church reports such as does also the First Baptist church of Manchester.

Colgate

Colgate University opened the new year with a series of religious meetings arranged by the University Christian Union and conducted by Mr. Sherwood Eddy, who has recently returned from a trip around the world on which he visited twenty-two countries, including Russia, Germany, the Ruhr, China and Japan. Speaking on "The Challenge of the Present World Situation," he brought to the students of Colgate a message of thrilling interest.

The opening meeting was held the first Sunday afternoon of the year in the Colgate Memorial chapel. Pres. George B. Cutten presided, and there was a very large attendance of students and members of the faculty. On days following Mr. Eddy gave addresses at the regular chapel services held each morning with the entire student body in attendance. He had opportunities also for meeting smaller groups of students in fraternity houses, and many sought him for personal interviews. Throughout the meetings Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world was presented, and his program was offered as the only solution of the problems of the world and the problems of the individual. At the closing meeting, when an opportunity was given for expression of purpose, 187 men signed cards that they would "seek by the help of God to live a Christian life, and in cooperation with others to seek Christ's solution of the problems of life." Sunday afternoon discussion groups have been organized as a result of the meetings, with an open forum conducted also on Sundays. At the meeting of the forum held Sunday, Jan. 13, Pierrepont Noyes, '92, formerly American commissioner in the Rhineland spoke on "The Bok Plan for Peace."

NEW JERSEY

THE NEW MONMOUTH CHURCH, Rev. A. S. Sutphin, pastor, recently held its twenty-first annual roll-call. It was an afternoon and evening meeting with between 350 and 400 present. One hundred and sixty responded to the roll call. The offering amounted to a little over $300. Encouraging reports were given by the various departments of the church.

WEST VIRGINIA

THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, Charleston, has added another member to the staff, Mr. W. Hobart Hill, director of religious education. Mr. Hill is a graduate of Oberlin College having done special work in religious education and is a graduate of the Older Boys Conference of Lake Geneva and for the past few years has been a member of that faculty. During the past three years he has been superintendent of the young people's division of the West Virginia Sunday school Council of Religious Education when he led the state from seventh to second place among the states of our country in that work.. The Temple now has the following staff: Clarence W. Kemper, pastor; Ralph C. Ostergren, director of pastoral work and church extension; W. Hobart Hill, director of religious education; Mrs. W. C. Porter, secretary and director office work. At the January communion service Pastor Kemper welcomed twenty-two new members who came into the church during the month of December. Mr. Kemper and Dr. John C. Killian of the First Church, Parkersburg exchange for evangelistic services during the weeks following.

ILLINOIS

PALMYRA HAS CALLED as pastor Rev. Joseph Jenkins of Jerseyville. Mr. Jenkins will continue to live at Jerseyville and serve Palmyra for half time. He is one of our strong pastors who has held some of the best pulpits in the state and is now giving his superior talents and deep consecration to some of our smaller churches.

CHENOA DEDICATED its rebuilt house of worship Jan. 6 in the midst of the coldest weather Illinois has seen for several years. The attendance was good all day and the addresses by Dr. A. E. Peterson and Rev. L. C. Taylor were greatly appreciated. The financial end was directed by Rev. J. W. Merrill. The $2000 sought in cash and pledges was assured notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. Rev. Frank Woodhull of Cordova offered the dedicatory prayer and is now following in an evangelistic campaign. The cost of rebuilding was about $6500. Pastor Westerfield and his people are to be congratulated on the fine outcome of their effort.

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Springfield Association, is a country church near Monticello—six members, dirt roads, pastorless for four years, supplied bi-weekly for the past year. It has been praying and planning for a meeting which began Jan. 1, with Rev. C. W. Kerst to help. Mud, rain, ice, 20 degrees below zero, snow and every other kind of weather—but there have been twenty-eight conversions and many reconsecrations; the membership will be more than quadrupled. The weather does not hinder a revival when the people have the Spirit. There were a half dozen faithful, capable people there who for five years have been preparing the way for this gracious ingathering into the kingdom.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Chicago, held its annual meeting, Jan. 9. Among the notable achievements of the year were the ninetieth anniversary celebration, the laying of the corner stone of the new Bible school and community house, a survey of the neighborhood, an every-member canvass and the organization of a men's club. The membership showed a net gain of thirty over the previous year and of the new members added thirty-one were adults. The total receipts for the year amounted to $35,000. The survey committee found in the immediate neighborhood of the church 1095 Jewish, 465 Protestant, 376 Catholic, and 111 Christian Science families. Three new Jewish synagogues are being erected within a very short distance from the church. It is a difficult neighborhood and the problems are not easy of solution, but it is the conviction of pastor and people that here in the heart of this great city, souls may be won for Christ. A spirit of unity and hopefulness pervades the membership.

A COUNCIL COMPOSED of representatives of the Wabash Valley Baptist Associations, also Dr. A. E. Peterson, superintendent of missions of the Illinois Convention, Dr. N. J. Hilton, district superintendent, and Rev. L. H. Koehler, superintendent of religious education, convened at the call of the Second Church of Mt. Carmel, Jan. 8. After listening to a report of the organization of said church and inquiry into its doctrinal beliefs and practices, it was voted unanimously by the council that it be recognized as a regularly constituted Baptist church and recommended to membership in the Wabash Valley Baptist Association, and the Illinois Baptist State Convention. The church has called Rev. W. H. Coonce of Shelburn as pastor.

THE WOMAN'S MISSION UNION (Chicago Association) held its regular meeting on Jan. 8, in the Rogers Park Church, with an attendance of over 400. The program for the day included a demonstration by the Children's World Crusade Band of the Rogers Park Church, the introduction of new pastors and their wives in the Chicago Association, and closed with an address by Dr. Ralph A. Jensen, of Second Church, on "Missions and the Reign of Righteousness."

THE CENTRALIA CHURCH held a Harvest festival for the Hudelson Home. Over $200 was received in cash and the supplies donated amounted to about $800.

THE NOKOMIS CHURCH dedicated its new church building in December. Rev. J. A. Ishmael has led the church progressively and efficiently. On dedication day District Superintendent N. J. Hilton was present and preached the dedicatory sermon and had charge of raising the money needed. About $5000 was subscribed—sufficient to cover all outstanding obligations. The Klu Klux Klan appeared at the evening service and presented to the pastor an envelope containing a $100 bill to apply on the building.

OHIO

LA GRANGE CHURCH, under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. Chester E. Tulga, is engaged in a constructive and practical program of activities in order to serve the all-round needs of its people and to be a more powerful factor in the community. The basement walls have been finished, and a room for young people's meetings, dining-room and kitchen have been provided for. It is planned to have a missionary supper each month; also to resurrect the tennis court in the spring and open it to the community. Books to the value of $75 have been added to the Sunday-school library, besides 100 donated volumes. A book club for the community, practically a circulating library has been organized under the auspices of the church. Plans are being made for a three-weeks' evangelistic meeting in February, with special evangelist and singer.

W. H. THOMPSON, Litchfield Church, has a good revival.

WELLINGTON CHURCH CLOSED a prosperous year with money in all treasuries.

ELYRIA FIRST CHURCH is still hearing pulpit supplies.

ONE OF THE FINEST examples of the small village church with efficient and consecrated pastoral leadership is to be found at Otsego, eight miles from the pavement, in the hills of Muskingum County. Here is found every variety of human problem, and character studies enough to write a library. Every phase of theological deposit also may be found in the religious consciousness of church people and sinners alike. Nor does the pastor find it convenient on "blue Mondays" to meet with the ministers' association for fellowship and mutual encouragement. The mud is axle deep from December until April. No Kiwanis, nor Rotary, nor Lions nor Saturday Lunch Club for him. Through these months he has to go it largely alone. The plucky pastor, Rev. W. E. Hayden, a graduate of Denison University and a southern Baptist seminary, and his good wife, from week to week are having the time of their lives ministering to their people. The new consolidated school building will soon be ready for occupancy, with its auditorium and every modern facility to serve the needs of the community. The young people have regular mid-week meetings for social good times, and on Sunday evenings conduct a religio-literary program preceding the regular evening worship at the church.

THE WORK OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Lima, Warren L. Steeves, pastor, is showing steady growth. The average attendance in the Bible School has increased over 100 during the past year. The reports read at the quarterly business meeting show all bills paid and a substantial balance on hand in every department of the church. During the past two years there have been 240 members received into the fellowship of the church. A strong committee of young laymen are behind a movement that publishes a weekly paper in the church with a sermon by the pastor.

THE BAPTIST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE of the Ashtabula Association, met at the Y. M. C. A., Ashtabula, Jan. 7. The meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. Wm. H. Hunt of Conneaut. Rev. E. R. Fitch of the Ashtabula Church gave a talk on "The Preparation of the Pastor for Evangelism." Rev. Wm. H. Hunt spoke on "The Preparation of the Church for Evangelism." The pastor of the Jefferson Church, Rev. Ivan W. Wanner, read a paper on "The Preparation of the Community for Evangelism." Some time was given to discussion of further plans for the coming simultaneous evangelistic campaign from Jan 27 Feb. 12. The next meeting of the ministers' conference will be held at the Ashtabula Baptist Church, Feb. 4.

MICHIGAN

THE CHURCH AT SOUTH HAVEN is giving evidence of splendid vigor. Since last September the organization of the church has been modified in several particulars, making it more nearly conform to the efficient church of today. For this year the largest budget in the history of the church has been adopted and the recent canvass practically provided for it. An offering of nearly $140 was given for Japanese reconstruction. Evening congregations are fully as large as the morning, and often larger. A chapter of the W. W. G. has been organized and has voted more than its quota of the continuation campaign fund.

SOUTH DAKOTA

VIBORG: This church recently celebrated its golden jubilee with several big services and jubilee banquet. Former pastors Rev. H. M. Anderson, Rev. W. J. Andreasen and Dr. C. E. Peters gave addresses, and the church choir rendered a program. Rev. Arthur J. Hansen, director of religious education of Minnesota, son of the late Rev. Markus Hansen, a former pastor of the church, preached the sermon at the first service on Sunday morning, and Rev. Lewis Jacobsen, pastor of First Church, Sioux City, Iowa, delivered the jubilee address at the big banquet on Monday night. Mr. Jacobsen is a son of the late Rev. Laust Jacobsen, the first Danish-Norwegian general missionary, who came to this field when the church was passing through a very severe crisis, and rescued the situation. A jubilee souvenir booklet, written by the pastor, Rev. I. Fredmund, and containing photos and historical sketch was issued and presented to the members and friends of the church.

WISCONSIN

THE FIRST CHURCH OF SUPERIOR, WIS., has opened its new house of worship after being for eight years without a church home. Several years ago a site 100 by 140 feet in the heart of the residence section of the city and near the business section was procured and on this the church built. While the building is not entirely completed, the auditorium and some of the Sunday-school rooms are and will be used until need is felt for more Sunday-school rooms. The plans were drawn by Architect Merrill of the Home Mission Society and are highly satisfactory. In addition to the auditorium and Sunday-school rooms there is a large social room. Rev. E. A. Deake was pastor during the building of the church but has resigned, the resignation to take effect March 1. There is a big work here—as it is the only English Baptist church in this city of 40,000.

IOWA

REV. R. N. MCDONALD WHO spent four happy, successful years at the Garfield Park Church, Chicago, has been at the Walnut Street Church, Waterloo, for a year and a half. The annual meeting, Jan. 1, disclosed that all departments of the church are in a healthy condition. The Sunday school had an average attendance around 400. It is lined up with the "better and bigger Baptist Bible school" program again this year. There was spent for local purposes $11,247.12. The church was redecorated and repaired at an estimated cost of $3000 and there was raised for benevolences and missions $8682.96. The church has paid its pledge to the New World Movement in full and expects to add an additional substantial sum before the books close in the spring. There have been additions to the church by baptism, letter and experience. A great revival meeting is being planned beginning March 16, with the Harry O. Anderson party in charge. A unanimous vote of confidence in Pastor McDonald was passed expressing hearty cooperation for the New Year and looking forward to a great ingathering and upbuilding during 1924.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Year's Work

DURING THE CALENDAR YEAR closing Dec. 31, the total receipts of this convention were $194,257.50 with total expenditures of $211,667.84. The difference between the receipts and expenditures is due to obligations incurred by the board on the basis of the pledges to the New World Movement. In order that the convention may meet all of its obligations, therefore, it will be necessary to secure approximately $15,000 additional funds.

The work has increased considerably since the New World Movement, particularly among foreign-speaking people. This means much when it is considered that California has more nationalities than any other state in the Union excepting New York which has ten times the population. One church has been organized among the Mexicans with a constituent membership of 119, a mission built for one of the out-stations among the Mexicans and preaching services opened for them in ten communities. Two active missionaries give full time to the Mexican work. During the New World Movement period there has been started a flourishing church for the Japanese with a full-time missionary among the Japanese at Sacramento and vicinity; also a flourishing work among the Portuguese and a missionary working full time.

The negroes are coming into California in large numbers from the Southland. Sixteen churches have been organized among the negroes, most of them needing assistance from the convention both for church edifice and pastoral support.

During the past year eighty-six missionaries have been employed in this field. Six English-speaking churches have been organized during the New World Movement period. In the interior of the state land is being subdivided and put under irrigation and towns are springing up. The Baptists are first in the field in some of these communities and with more adequate funds could organize and sustain more preaching stations.

The convention office has received 2148 callers during the past calendar year. It has moved to more convenient quarters in the Humboldt Bank Building, San Francisco.

The church building at Yuba City was recently dedicated. Yuba City is a town of about 2500, 30 miles north of Sacramento. The church was organized ten months ago with ten members. Rev. and Mrs. J. O. Bovee have been on the field four months. The building has a seating capacity of 150. There is also a five-room parsonage. The total value of the property is about $6000. The convention has invested $1300 and the balance is to be provided by the church members which now number twenty-two. An every member canvass is now being made for the support of missionary enterprises. The church does not believe in giving suppers to raise money for the Lord, but in the practice of tithing.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH of San Joaquin, A. J. Price, pastor, has closed the best series of meetings in its history. They were conducted by Rev. J. L. H. Hawkins, of Exeter, evangelist and Rev. C. Aaron King, of Orosi, singer.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE FIRST CHURCH of Long Beach, had a good year according to all reports. The church now has the second largest Baptist Sunday school in the state. It has its B. Y. P. U. organization graded, so there is a society for every age. Seven meetings are held every Sunday evening. They are now putting on mission study courses. The church added 238 members during the year, forty-four by baptism. The membership now is about 1400. Last year the church gave over $28 per member for all causes; $17.80 per member was for New World Movement. In addition to this giving the church has been paying $11,000 for a lot on which to build a mission church, and has ordered the going forward with a building that is not to exceed $15,000. Of this sum $3000 is to be paid by the edifice fund of the state convention. The woman's missionary society this year made a thank offering of over $2000. The White Cross Society sent out $3000 worth of boxes to various missionaries. In September Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Silke were secured to direct the religious education work of the church and to help with the young people. Dr. George D. Knights is now rounding out his twelfth year as pastor.

HOOVER STREET CHURCH, Los Angeles, had the most prosperous year in its history. Ninety-five members received, twenty-seven of these by baptism. Large audiences every Sunday, especially Sunday nights. An intermediate society organized during the year, and flourishing; junior C. E. reorganized; have a senior B. Y. P. U. Sunday school growing, average attendance 220 last year. Women's work larger than ever before. W. W. G.'s doing fine work. The men's brotherhood is the big marvel of the year,—organized last February with nine members, now has 140 members; ninety men were present at the December meeting; planning even bigger things; also planning a great men's Bible class. J. A. V. Pieters is pastor.

ference this year was two series of addresses by Dr. G. Campbell-Morgan, one on the general theme "Studies in Grace," the other on the general theme "The Man of Nazareth." Reserved seat tickets were issued for the use of ministers, public school teachers and the aged. On a recent Sunday morning in spite of the fact that it is in the midst of a very costly building campaign with its membership heavily pledged from three to five years in advance the church devoted its Sunday morning service to raising $10,000 to purchase property in the rapidly growing northeastern part of the city. A lot 200 by 178 feet was secured. A mission Sunday school will be started in the not distant future and eventually a fourth Baptist Church will be organized at the new location.

Obituary

Mr. C. A. Prout, for many years a resident of Wheaton, Ill., where he was a faithful, useful and greatly beloved member of the First Baptist Church, and for nearly seven years a resident of Gary, repeating his Wheaton record in the Baptist church of this city, passed away at the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, Thursday evening, Jan. 3, and was buried at Wheaton, from the First Baptist Church, Jan. 5, Doctor Ford, the pastor, and Mr. Prout's Gary pastor, Rev. O. B. Sarber, officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Prout spent Christmas with their son Harold at his home in Oak Park, where Mr. Prout was taken suddenly ill the day following. He was hurried to the Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago, where pneumonia developed.

Mr. Prout came to Gary in early summer, 1917, in the employ of the Gary Land Company as draftsman in the engineering department, which post he filled till his passing. He was a "pillar" in the truest sense of the word in the Baptist church, serving as deacon, clerk, Sunday-school superintendent and in many unofficial ways. His devotion to his Master's service and his very marked faithfulness to his every responsibility won for him a very unusual degree of love and esteem. Two churches and communities mourn his loss most sincerely. Of his immediate family Mrs. Prout and son Harold B. Prout of Oak Park survive him, and are joined by a host of friends in a deep sense of personal loss.

Rev. John Morgan Gardner was born in Proctorville, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1887, and died in Rocky Ford, Colo., Dec. 24, 1923. He was a graduate of the Moody Bible Institute and had taken some work at Granville, Ohio. From there he was ordered West for his health. He held pastorates in Michigan, New Mexico and Rocky Ford. The funeral was from the First Church, Rocky Ford, of which Mr. Gardner was pastor. It was conducted by Mr. L. P. Cassel. Mr. Gardner is survived by his wife and two children.

Our Book Shelf

The Hero of the Filipinos by Charles E. Russell and E. B. Rodriguez, New York: Century Co. $3.

Nothing is more inspiring than biography written in such a way that the reader is able to visualize the one whose biography is written. This has been well done by Charles Edward Russell and E. B. Rodriquez in their common attempt to tell the story of Jose Rizal the greatest man the Malay race has produced. When one has read the thrilling account of his life he is ready to say that Rizal was one of the greatest men of all races. He was a congenital genius born with powers far beyond the ordinary—powers which appear in the story of his adventures as a patriot and in his unparalleled ability to create literature, produce statues, contribute to science, and engage in a reform to which he gave his life as a martyr at the age of thirty-six. The book contains specimens of his art, samples of his poetry, plots of his novels, and deals in a most interesting way with the significance of Rizal's life upon the Far East.

The Magic Gift. Boston and Chicago: Pilgrim Press. $1.

Stories for children woven about the Stars and Stripes and told with a vividness and zest that holds the interest of the reader from beginning to end.

Home Handicraft for Boys. New York: Doran.

No more practical book can be put into the hands of a boy than "Home Handicraft For Boys." It is profusely illustrated with drawings of countless articles a boy likes to make with careful description of the thing to be made and how to make it. Radio sets, water motors, lamps and lamp shades, bird houses, things for mother's room, and many others, constitute the headings of the chapters. It is a constructive guide to a boy's activity and ingenuity.

Children's Native Story Sermons, by Hugh Kerr, New York: Revell.

Another of the excellent story-sermon series from the facile pen of Dr. Hugh Kerr The title is taken from the first two sermons in the book; as for the other story sermons they are ulled from a range of suggestive material. But from whatever source taken, the material is always condensed, clear and wholesome.

Practical Lectures On the Book of Job, by Frank E. Allen, New York: Revell.

This is an expository and homiletical study of the Book of Job given in a series of twenty-three lectures. In a most pleasing style and scholarly manner the author deals with the different problems of the book. He sets forth clearly the various philosophies of life held by its leading characters and follows this with practical applications to every day living. The whole presentation is made with the common reader in mind to create a broader understanding and more intense interest in this most interesting and revealing book. The chapters are grouped successively under appropriate themes thus making a good book for class study or use in the prayer meeting. Job is a real character in the mind of the writer and he takes the viewpoint that this is not an allegory but the account of a real personal experience. One wishes that the author had taken time to work out an index to various thoughts that appear from time to time in the work, thus making it more desirable as a reference work, but this is a common fault of most present day books on religion. The busy pastor or teacher likes to run through a theme without having to read a whole chapter or work to find what an author has to say upon it.

Fresh from the Field

The gospel team of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago is now serving for the fifth year in special Sunday-school evangelism. It has conducted services in thirty-six churches in the Chicago Association. George Norton, J. Grafton Parker, Roy Parker, Miss Elsie Hopkins and Miss Bessie B. Sue are the members of the team.

The "Living Church" asks: "Does any minister of the Protestant Episcopal church desire a jack-knife free of charge —a regular high-grade knife, with two high carbon steel blades?

"We ask, because a circular is being received through the mail by a number of the clergy, proceeding from a couple of doctors in Indianapolis, in which the offer of such a knife is made in return for the names of one or more persons who, to their knowledge, are now afflicted with cancer, lupus, or tumor. It seems incredible that such an insult to the clergy of any religious body that educates its clergy could be a paying investment. Is there anywhere a religion whose ministers would sell the names of sufferers from this dread disease for a jack-knife? Can it be possible that the returns from such advertising can pay? Perhaps, however, a single name will prove profitable enough to the advertisers to justify the whole expense of sending this material to thousands of ministers. The Living Church offers two jack-knifes for positive information as to any clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal church who has earned a jack-knife in this way. What will it profit a preacher if he gain a jack-knife and lose his own self-respect?

We should not forget our chaplains in the army and navy. One of these is Lieut. W. R. Hall, who is attached to the receiving ship at San Francisco. He has 745 men under his care. He is a member of the First Church, San Francisco.

The ministers and missionaries benefit board at Christmas time sent a small check to every one on its beneficiary list. This was in addition to the regular grant. Together with the check there went a card expressive of the love and interest of the entire board. The response which the board received has been almost overwhelming and the best part of it is that the keenest appreciation of the recipient was for the expression of personal interest and regard. The loneliness of old age is appalling and explains the warmth of the universal response. Some of the gifts which the board received at Thanksgiving time were used in this way to add to the regular grants and at the same time assure our aged workers that they were not entirely forgotten in the joys of the Christmas time.

Young Reserves

thought maybe I'd better fill my envelope before I spent any of it today."

Judge Number Two thumped his blouse: "What? No concealed book. What have you done with it?"

"Over at my church they were telling about 6,000,000 Americans who had never had a Bible, so I gave mine to one of them, and now there's only 5,999,999 without Bibles!"

The Judges suddenly put their heads together and buzzed importantly.

"Y. R., what is your full name?"

"Young Reserve, sir."

"Young Reserve, step forward and receive the prize, my boy, for we have discovered that you are a giant by every inside measurement."

"The biggest hope of your denomination is the church member who pays his pledges first and then goes to his pleasures," amended Judge Number One.

"And you are worth your weight in gold if you feel impelled to pass on to others the Book which has made you what you are," added Number Two.

"So here is the prize."

I think it was a happy heart, don't you?

Your friend,
MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH.

Beyond the Seas

historical paper read at the annual mission meeting and a full half day given to the anniversary service. A more practical method of celebration has been the launching of a campaign for $60,000 gold to be raised from Chinese for the hospital in Ningpo. Over $35,000 of this amount has already been pledged.

During the year union has been effected in two high schools, one for girls and one for boys, both in Ningpo. This union, which has been under negotiations for several years, secures that the financial support of two missions, the Presbyterian and Baptist, shall be behind these two schools and thus a higher quality of work will be insured.

A frank appraisal of the results of the New World Movement period in East China will not furnish very pleasant reading. There was first a period of high expectation, then followed a crystalization of opinion specially on the part of missionaries that the mission would be very fortunate if it should be able to hold its own along the line of financial results. The last stage recorded a net reduction in appropriations with an announcement that appropriations must remain on this reduced basis for the next five years. The net result upon the Chinese has been confusion in their thinking as to the situation in America and we are hoping that the churches will be thrown a little more upon their own resources in their plans for the future.

The outlook for 1924 is hopeful, but not specially so. Political conditions in China were never worse. There is necessarily some confusion and hesitancy in making plans for the future in religious work as in commercial activities. But the convention and the mission are both organized for work as never before and have a strong leadership which furnishes ground for large hopes.

The most pressing need of the East China mission which the giving constituency in America can supply is for a stabilized budget sufficiently elastic to meet the changing needs on the field. We could easily use far more money than we are getting. We can, if necessary, get along with the funds we are now receiving provided these funds come regularly with the prospect of a small normal increase each year and provided the giving constituency is willing to trust the board and the missions sufficiently to allow all the funds available to be used in accordance with the best judgment of these responsible bodies. The determining factor in the use of mission funds should be the demands of the developing work on the field and not the exigencies of the effort of the denomination to raise funds at home. Give your money without strings or conditions and trust your missions and you will in the end get far better results.

Baptist Progress in Poland

DURING the year of 1923, our denomination in Poland has been blessed more than we expected. The Evangelical Christians, a denomination one with, ours in principle, has been united with the Baptists. From June 9, 1923, when the union was effected, we have been one, working under one constitution and managed by one missionary committee. By the said union, the denomination has increased by twenty churches and over 1000 members. The two conferences, the Polish and the German-speaking, have baptized during the year 3183 converts. We have reported in the Baptist survey for 1922, 8314 members in Poland. This year we have 12,185 members. The statistics of our churches for 1920, show forty-three churches. In 1923 seven more churches were organized, and twenty more were added by our union with the Evangelical Christians. We now have seventy Baptist churches in Poland.

The Baptist publication society "Compass" has moved from its small printing shop to a large new four-story building. Its efficiency to print and distribute the gospel among the Slavic people, Poles and Russians, has been recognized by the leaders of our denomination in America and England. The American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society has recognized the work of this missionary enterprise by a contribution for the increase of its efficiency. Our Baptist paper, Nowe Drogi (New Paths), has received from the government, for a Baptist paper, an unprecedented recognition in Europe.

We hope that this year will be more encouraging than the last has been. This we base on the fact that the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has increased its contribution to the advancement of the kingdom of God in Poland. We depend mostly upon the fact that the religious awakening among the natives of Poland makes every man and woman a missionary. As Jesus said to Mary after his resurrection, "Go and tell your brother and my brothers"—so they go and tell to others of their religious experience. In this way groups of believers are appearing in entirely new villages, and the gospel is talked of all over the country.

The Baptist work among the natives began in 1920. At present the Polish conference has forty-three churches, only three of which existed before the war. Only five have their own buildings for worship and thirty-eight are homeless. This shows the need of churches. Nineteen of these churches are in cities where the need for buildings is very appealing. In the past the collecting and saving for churches has been impossible because of the depression of Polish currency. Saved money has practically melted away. In the beginning of 1921 the exchange has been 400 marks for $1, at the end of 1923 it was 6,000,000 for $1. This shows that without outside help, in the immediate future, the churches will not be able to secure property for their spiritual needs. We hope that this year some help from the outside will enable us to establish and build homes for worship in the most needed places.

A theological seminary for Poland is a most appealing thing. We have only a few men who have a short theological training in Germany, and two have been trained for missionary work in the United States. All of the other preachers are untrained and some of them cannot intelligently sign their own names. If the denomination should awaken respect in the Polish nation it must be enabled to have intelligent and earnest leaders. A nation with a population of over twenty-seven million as Poland has, and with such a prospect for the future as has been proved in the past few years, should awaken more interest and earnest prayer for its evangelization.

The Philippine Mission

THE year 1923 brought a distinct advance in the cause of Christ in the Philippines. The number of baptisms has been far greater than in any previous year. The opposition is realizing that the youth of the land is turning towards the truth, and uses every method to hinder the spreading of the Christ message. Great political unrest reigns, independence is the cry of the hour. Now is the time to enforce freedom from religious foreign yoke in attacking the opposition, and also to stress independent support of our own churches in propagating our own work. The outlook for 1924 is bright. This year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of Protestant work in these islands. Glorious conquests for the Christ have been made. And we see the Christ conquering in the years to come. Nevertheless, we ought to have adequate housing for the work. Most stations demand new structures, as dormitories or homes. The new Central Philippine College ought to receive greater financial help, to erect new buildings, and to replace the old school buildings. Would that the home constituency might realize the great spiritual returns out in these islands for its insufficient financial aid!

Fresh from the Field

San Diego Baptists are not standing still. They recently ordained A. B. Apra and organized the First Mexican Baptist Church of San Diego. Rev. F. O. Belden, pastor of the First Church, presided and Rev. E. R. Brown, superintendent of our Mexican work, preached the sermon.

A communication from Rev. O. B. Sarber, pastor at Gary, Ind., calls our attention to the change in name of the First Church of that city. It will now be known as the Central Baptist Church of Gary. The reason for the change was the confusion due to the fact that Gary had two first churches. The negro church was the first organization of Baptists in that community and assumed the name of First Church. The fact was ignored when later white Baptists organized a church.

The First Church, Ottawa, Kan., has a life service league of fifty or sixty members. This group of young people, who desire to give themselves to some line of definite Christian service, have been meeting with the student volunteers and ministerial association of Ottawa University. Dr. Warren P. Behan of the college is their adviser. The life service league has undertaken some very definite work. One group holds a gospel song service in the "streets" of the Mexican box-car village just north of the city. A Bible story hour is held for the children. More than thirty of these met in two small unfurnished rooms. The league has asked the railroad to furnish a box car for these meetings. It is the plan of the young folks to extend the work to include classes in English and various activities.

Much editorial discussion has been provoked by the general attitude and actions of the more than 7000 delegates at the International Student Volunteer Convention recently held in Indianapolis. Some observers declare that the meeting at Indianapolis indicates the oneness of mind and purpose of the students of the world; that it was clearly shown that the coming leaders will not be subject to the political, social and religious order which they find ready made for them. Dr. Harrison S. Elliott, head of the department of religious education at Union Theological Seminary, says: "The young men and women of America appear prepared to take the bit in their teeth." He said that for the first time students of all races met on common ground. He continues: "The development of a league of youth in revolt against racial discrimination, economic injustice and international strife may well be the outcome of so representative a group of students, the leaders of a generation ahead." Our profound conviction is that we can trust the students of today to take up their responsibilities to their own day and generation. Should they not be permitted to begin where we leave off rather than where we began?

On the Saturday before Christmas, Dec. 22, the Boston Herald carried thirteen pages of church news and advertising. Commenting on this fact Unity says: "We believe this to be unprecedented in the history of either religion or journalism, and to mark an achievement in constructive enterprise which is to the credit of both." And if church news was not read the Boston Herald would not devote thirteen pages to it. What is true of this journal is in a large measure true of newspapers generally. Religion is on the front pages. Let us be thankful even if the "news" is not all we could wish. Adverse criticism is to be preferred to indifference and neglect. What has this to do with denominational journals? Much in every way. Especially does it increase the need for a wider reading and a more vital interest in the plans and accomplishments of one's own church body. The daily paper can only give general religious news. In addition to this general information we specialize on those matters which make for intelligent, co-operation in kingdom enterprises.

WHAT THE MONEY ACCOMPLISHED

What was accomplished after 28 Board members and 587 missionaries had spent $2,104,622.99 last year? Let the following facts form the answer to this question.

EVANGELISM. Throughout the year the expenditure of this sum carried forward an aggressive evangelism that sought to win men to Jesus Christ and resulted in the baptism of 18,415 converts on profession of faith. This is the largest total ever reported in a single year in the history of the Society.

MEDICAL SERVICE. This money also helped to carry forward the healing ministry of the Great Physician. Last year 54 medical missionaries assisted by 260 American and native nurses in 31 hospitals and 54 dispensaries furnished medical and surgical treatment to 224,968 patients. Through this healing ministry thousands of patients for the first time heard the story of the Gospel.

EDUCATION. An extensive educational work was also made possible. On the ten mission fields are 3,169 schools of all grades giving Christian instruction to more than 115,000 pupils. In all these schools evangelism receives proper emphasis and each year thousands of pupils become followers of Christ. In Shanghai Baptist College in a recent Senior class all members were Christians.

OTHER RESULTS. These facts do not tell the whole story. Many results are being achieved which cannot be reflected in statistics. Whole communities are being transformed by the Gospel; womanhood is being elevated; men are learning the dignity of honest toil; thousands of children are being taught a new way of life; multitudes are slowly but surely being brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Under the blessing of God these achievements have been made possible by the expenditure of the funds which as announced previously came partly as gifts from the living, represented by YOU and thousands of other Northern Baptists. YOUR CONTINUED SUPPORT IS NEEDED THIS YEAR.
